
Or maybe you were lucky and just got to watch. You only saw the people who lined the doorways and subway stations as you went to and from some city. You were only the friend of someone whose broken glasses never got fixed. Maybe.

No one could have lived through that decade without deep — perhaps hidden — scars, without the realization that everything could be blown away in less than eighteen months.

Inside, each of us knows that we are going to have to work harder than our parents to maintain the standard of living that they enjoy. We must become concerned with ourselves — as both individuals and a group — in order to survive. If anything, this last decade has shown us how unfair life can be, how much we do need to care for each other. Few people at Williams could be called apathetic: one who studies and works the way most of us do is not apathetic.

Insecurity was for ten years the dominant fact of American life and it may still be. We live with uncertainty that our parents would not have even believed possible. These people, emerging into the outside world between 1948 and 1964, and the most idealistic of all time. Like us, they were busy living their lives day in, day out. The 1960's fielded plenty of cynics. The essential values that lay behind psychedelic wonderlove are little different from ours.

If John Canty has observed, in his Op-Ed ("Is our generation selling out?") in the February 25 Record, a return to their expression, perhaps it is because of the economic upswing and the end of the American impotence. Society has historically become more tolerant, more compassionate, more adventurous, and more concerned with humanity during the "good times."

But perhaps this recent activity is a result of the fact that mass egotism is an unstable condition. All of us feel the need for human contact, to reaffirm ourselves through others, to accept life and all that is life. Good, bad, gay, straight, Black, White, Asian, Catholic, Jewish, or whatever distinction you impose or accept: we have solidarity in our love and fear, in our dreams and in our desperation, in our loneliness and in our triumphs, and, most of all, in our humanity. We must be together.

John Lennon is dead with two bullets in his chest. But we must remain, and live. Perhaps there is hope.

No one could have lived through that decade without deep — perhaps hidden — scars, without the realization that everything you have could be blown away in less than eighteen months.

Amnesty campaign

The Williams chapter of Amnesty International kicked off its part of a campaign against the South African pass laws last week when President Francis Oakley and Dean of the College Stephen Fix signed symbolic pass books to be sent to South African President Pieter Botha.

The three and one-half month campaign protests the South African pass laws. The pass laws require blacks to carry passbooks limiting their travel within areas of the country designated as white areas. Failure to carry a passbook can result in a jail term for black South Africans.

The campaign also will include intensive letter-writing concerning South African prisoners of conscience, according to Dave Walters '88 of the Williams chapter.

Amnesty International is a worldwide nonpolitical organization working for prisoners of conscience and against the death penalty, according to Walters.

Krouse lecture

Richard Krouse, associate professor of political science, will speak on "The Logic and Limits of the Liberal Welfare State: John Stuart Mill and the Origins of the Political Theory of Welfare-State Liberalism," Thursday at 4:30 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Krouse's talk will conclude the spring Faculty Lecture Series.

Krouse will discuss the views of 19th Century liberal political theorist John Stuart Mill. Krouse said Mill's vision of a just, property-owning economy is not, as many scholars maintain, an early vision of welfare-state capitalism. Rather, Krouse believes, Mill criticizes the injustice of existing capitalism but, at the same time, opposes all but the most minimal forms of welfare-state provision.

Mill's view of an ideal political economy, with a widespread dispersion of property rights in productive resources, Krouse said, "is far more egalitarian than welfare-state capitalism in any of its usual conceptions."

Krouse began teaching at Williams in 1975, after earning master's degrees from the University of Chicago in 1971 and Princeton in 1973, and his doctorate from Princeton in 1978. Krouse has written a number of articles on liberalism, democratic theory and the family in the history of political thought.

Prof. publishes

Henry W. Art, chairman of the biology department, has published A Garden of Wildflowers: 101 Native Species and How to Grow Them. Art is also director of the Hopkins Memorial Forest.

According to Garden Way Publishing, which published the book, it shows how to bring the beauty of wildflowers from nature to the home landscape. Publishers Weekly, said "The clear, inviting text contains notes on the propagation of the wildings and their special attraction for butterflies and hummingbirds, suitability in a fragrance garden, as colorful ground covers and companions in a rock garden."

Campuses across New England erupt in anti-apartheid protests

by Debbie Snyder

The growing desire among some college students for immediate divestment of their colleges' holdings in companies that do business in South Africa has prompted forms of protest — such as takeovers of administration buildings, hunger strikes and the construction of shanties — at many New England colleges.

In Northampton, Mass., 200 Smith students blockaded College Hall from Feb. 25 to March 2, after a sit-in received no opposition from Smith College President Mary Maples Dunn.

The protest began after the trustees of the college voted to divest $500,000 from U.S. Steel, a company that has not agreed to sign the Sullivan Principles, and to divest by May 1987 from companies that had signed but did not follow the Sullivan Principles.

Prior to the trustees' vote, the faculty and students had both passed, by a majority of approximately 75 percent, a proposal supporting total divestment. The trustees, who were expected to respond to this majority vote, voted to divest only the half-million dollars in the college's $22.3 million investment in companies with South African ties.

Radical action

"It wasn't even a token divestment to appease the students and faculty," said Cami Graham, a junior at Smith. Graham, who helped occupy the administration building, said she believes only radical action will force the trustees to divest. She said many Smith students now realize, "We can't make the assumptions that our words will change their minds."

The occupation of College Hall ended when both demands of the protesters were met: a teach-in will be held about the situation in South Africa and a group of trustees will attend the teach-in. Twenty-five Smith students are on a juice-only fast, and a small number of students are still conducting a sit-in.

Students at Brandeis University occupied the administration building last Wednesday, marching through the halls, chanting slogans, and answering the college's phones with the words "Nelson Mandela University." The occupation was

Continued on Page 9

Panelists listen to a question from the audience at the panel discussion on the Strategic Defense Initiative held last week. (Ward)

Panelists lambast Reagan plan for weapons in space

by Jocelyn Shadforth

More than 100 people gathered in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall last Thursday for a panel discussion on the Strategic Defense Initiative. Members of the panel oppose the SDI, also known as "Star Wars," a defense program that will attempt to destroy nuclear weapons in flight.

The panel was organized by the Lecture Committee, the Department of Political Economy, the Williams Disarmament Forum and the Williamstown Nuclear Weapon Education Center. None of the speakers asked to participate are in favor of the SDI proposal.

Professor of Political Science James MacGregor Burns '39 moderated the discussion. The panel consisted of Assistant Professor of Mathematics Kim Bruce, Assistant Professor of History William Wagner and Rosy Nimrody, Project Director for the Council on Economic Priorities.

'Beyond reach'

Bruce gave a talk claiming "Star wars software is beyond our reach." Bruce said a separate computer is needed for each of the five stages of the system. He quoted a Jan. 28 New York Times article by Tony Ralston, director of the Association of Computer Machinery, which said "The computer software systems required is the weakest link in the SDI network. Most computer scientists believe (its development) is impossible."

Bruce said the largest software system created to date is 500,000 lines and the system reqired for SDI would need at least 10,000,000 lines "with no typos."

Bruce compared the development of this type of software from that existing today to the technological jump from the Model T to the Space Shuttle, pointing out some of the difficulties that arose in the Shuttle's computer systems.

Bruce said, "My biggest fear is that the U.S. government will decide that the system works well enough and use the 'Star Wars' system. Then the U.S.S.R. will reduce the boost stage to 100 seconds. This will leave the decision to a computer because there won't be time for a human decision."

Arms control

Wagner, a specialist in Soviet history with an emphasis on pre-revolutionary Russia, said "The Soviets seem genuinely interested in an arms control agreement limiting nuclear weapons. SDI impedes progress toward this goal."

The three points of Wagner's argument were the Soviet admiration of American technology, the Soviet need to respond to breakthroughs in American weapons systems, and the Soviet fear that the emphasis on technological break-throughs in defense will divert scarce resources from needed economic renewal programs in the USSR.

Wagner said the Russians may become increasingly reluctant to negotiate with the United States as a result of the development of SDI. He pointed to harshness at the most recent Party Congress and

Continued on Page 11

CC approves funding proposal for College MASSPIRG group

by Harwell Wells

The College Council voted last Thursday to support the MASSPIRG's two-year trial status at Williams with a negative funding mechanism on the term bill. The Council also discussed the Theme House proposal and approved additional money for the Record.

The meeting began with an announcement of Secretary Eric Vincent's temporary withdrawal from the College. President Anza Mammen '86 named Nancy Shore '89 acting secretary until after elections this week.

The meeting then addressed the question of funding for the proposed Williams Chapter of the Massachussetts Public Interest Research Group, a group that will involve students in consumer advocacy work. The council's primary concern was the proposed funding system, required by the statewide MASSPIRG, which will require a check-off to avoid paying the organization's $3 fee on the term bill. Mammen announced that no discussion on the issue was necessary, because of discussion at the meeting two weeks ago.

The Council accepted a proposal giving MASSPIRG a two-year trial period, accepting the organization's two petition drives that garnered a majority of student signatures, and rejected a resolution criticizing the funding mechanism, Ian Brzezinski '86, a College Council member, said, "We just politicized the term bill."

Supplemental money

The Council then moved to a request by the Record for $250 in order to print extra pages containing statements written by the candidates for president, vice president, secretary and treasurer. Dave Applebaum '86, treasurer and chairman of the Finance Committee, explained that the committee had voted against the request because of budget limitations. "It didn't seem right to give the Record money to print something that was in the interest of the College," he said.

After a discussion, Applebaum announced that the money could be found despite FinCom's recommendation, and the Council voted to approve the money if FinCom changed its recommendation.

Theme houses

Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber, Gaudino Scholar, spoke to the Council about the proposed theme house.

Tauber said theme houses are common on American college campuses. He said the houses could be cultural, intellectual or artistic, and that the intellectual emphasis of the house had been misstated.

Tauber also explained how the house would involve the campus in its theme. He encouraged the Council's support, citing the houses as a very inexpensive innovation and pointing out that, if the theme house doesn't work, "nothing is lost." He was supported by Gaudino Committee member Mike Weber '87.

Compartment?

Suzanne Biemiller '87 questioned the Gaudino Committee's aims, asking "Why do you believe Williams is compartmentalized?" She said her own experiences had been more positive. Tauber replied, "You have your experience. Mine is different. To me (a division) is unnatural, unless you're schizophrenic."

Assistant Professor of Classics and Gaudino Committee Member Meredith Hoppin said, "Lots of faculty and students have discussed this problem. They don't have faculty over to dinner; they don't want to appear grade-grubbing."

Tauber also complained of what he saw as misrepresentation of the committee's publicity attempts, citing CUL reports and Record op-ed pieces. "People chose not to be interested," he said.

The Council will vote on a resolution concerning theme houses next week.

Profile

Coach Peter Farwell

by Jeffrey Somers

According to Pete Farwell, it is important that every athlete, from the extraordinarily gifted to the complete klutz, give everything he or she can to the sport. "By putting yourself on the line, (you are saying) nobody else can do it for you," he explained. "You have to work at it, set a goal and the steps to carry it out, toward the day you set a record." As the men's cross-country and distance track coach, Farwell has helped many runners achieve their records.

Farwell is not only concerned with running in general, but more particularly, running at Williams. His first view of Williams was in the fall of 1969 as he entered the class of 1973. There were a few more mountains and forests than in his hometown of Northbrook, Illinois. At the very least, he thought it would be a good place to run.

While at Williams, he was intensely involved in athletics and his achievements have demonstrated his dedication. At that time, the freshmen had a separate team for cross-country runners. In the fall of 1969, the freshman team was undefeated. The next year Farwell was one of the top three varsity runners. In his first varsity meet, he won the race and smashed the Williams course record. The team kept the momentum up and finished the season with an undefeated record.

Some of Farwell's fondest memories are of the remarkably low-key running program in which he was involved. For example, he remembered a close meet against Middlebury during his junior year. He had finished the race and tallied up the score. Williams had barely won. He walked up to his coach and informed him that Williams had won by one point."Oh. I thought we lost," he replied. This kind of attitude has left an impression on Farwell. "He was totally unconcerned about winning. He was content that everyone had run well." Later, as a coach, Farwell said he has tried to continue this tradition and concentrate on the individuals, not the wins.

An excellent student

Farwell also excelled at his studies. He had no particular concentration but instead "ran the liberal arts gamut." He graduated as a philosophy and economics major and as a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

By running well in the 1975 Boston Marathon, Farwell was able to qualify for the Olympic trials. Unfortunately, he was unable to run in them since he was still recovering from a bone operation. Nevertheless, he has no regrets about the time spent in training for the trials. "I think that if I didn't enjoy the training and the experiences, it was not worth it," he said.

Training is still worth it to this coach. Farwell has run a total of 29 marathons including six in the year after he graduated from Williams. At one point in his career he ran two marathons within eight days (but those two were "not all out," he hastens to add). At present his goals are to run one marathon per year under two hours and 40 minutes and to stay under 10 minutes in the two mile.

Farwell trained and worked in Illinois for four and a half years before deciding he needed a change. Quite a major change, in fact, since he moved back to Williamstown and became outdoor track coach at the local high school. In 1978 he became an assistant men's cross-country coach at Williams.

Since 1978, Pete has assumed the jobs of distance coach for the men's outdoor track team

Continued on Page 9

The Gaudino Committee: what is it?

by Caroline Koeppel

Professor Kurt Tauber is the current chairman of the Gaudino Committee. (Ward)

The office is cluttered. On the shelves are papers and books concerning political science, and on the desk a large cannister of Barking Dog Tobacco. The man behind the desk states that he is a professor of political science, a Gaudino Scholar, and the chairman of the Gaudino Committee. Unlike Superman, he can hold all of these positions without sprinting into a phone-booth. He is Professor Kurt Tauber, the one with the answers to the Gaudino affairs.

Tauber described the Gaudino Committee, saying "It is an informal committee of faculty and students whose job it is to aid the Gaudino Scholar." He defined the latter term as "a designation for one of the faculty members whose mission it is to generate programs, ideas, and suggestions in the light of the pedagogical legacy of Robert L. Gaudino."

Robert L. Gaudino was a professor of political science at Williams who Tauber described as "arguably the equivalent in the 20th century of what Mark Hopkins meant to Williams College in the 19th." Greatly influenced by the Chicago School of Political Philosophy and particularly Leo Strauss, Gaudino made invaluable contributions to Williams that stemmed from his own intellect.

"He was able to engage everyone, both faculty colleagues and students, everywhere and under all circumstances in meaningful ways that illuminated and provided new insights no matter how banal the occasion was," recalled Tauber. "He'd make a reference to last night's basketball game, for example, and within one minute have you thinking in terms which go well beyond the game."

Gaudino was widely known for his theory of experiential education and founded such programs as Williams-in-India and a unique program called Williams-at-Home which placed students into contact with unfamiliar situations such as living in poverty areas or staying with a steel worker's family. Both programs aimed to promote self-understanding in addition to the social benefits they produced.

Gaudino fund established

After Gaudino's death in 1974, current and former students collected money for a memorial fund. Richard Herzog '60, a former student of his, wrote a piece summarizing Gaudino's educational theories on self-learning. This stimulated alumni of Gaudino's classes to organize a meeting, which was held in New York in 1981. A Gaudino Scholar was nominated and appointed.

Raymond Baker, the first Gaudino Scholar, developed and instituted the Williams-in-Calro program. In 1984, Tauber was nominated as his successor. "When I took over the job, I had certain ideas as to what this campus might usefully need to make it a more exciting place," said Tauber. "Rather than for me to sit in the privacy of my office and write great thoughts, it is much more productive to have a committee of students and faculty and work with them," Tauber explained.

The committee was formed by students who were asked by Tauber to participate and others who were interested and stepped forward. "I was very much concerned with the intellectual climate on this campus. I thought it was not as vibrant or as exciting as the extraordinary, high-caliber student body would lead one to expect. With people with this kind of intellectual competency and capacity, one would expect a much more lively discourse," Tauber reasoned, explaining his motivation to create the committee.

The committee is comprised of faculty members Meredith Hoppin, David Smith, and Brian Levy, seniors Nadra Franklin, Melissa Perkins, and Christina Sayler, juniors Ed Stein, Mike Weber, and Ann Bechan, and sophomore Chris Myers. Concerning the selection process, Tauber commented, "I took an enormous amount of time to select in terms of divisions, gender, year, main intersets, and disciplines within the divisions; students were also partly selected by the kind of contacts they had — for example, for their involvement in art or dance. I also wrote a letter asking people to come forward." The committee meets every week or more, and open meetings are held.

Both the Theme House and College-Within-a-College proposals were conceived with the intention of encouraging diversity, Tauber insisted. "The committee feels that this communal bit has become a fetish around here. For the sake of this community we are unwilling to

Continued on Page 8

Baha'i Faith seeks to unite mankind

by Eric English

Baha' Ullah died in Iran less than 100 years ago. Today he is considered the latest messenger of God by more than four million people living on every continent of the world. Williamstown is one of the places where his followers live.

Those who profess faith in Baha' Ullah and accept his teachings are called Baha'is, and among them are two Williams faculty members: Donald House of the computer science department, and Peter Farwell of the athletics department. They are members of the Baha'i Club at Williams, whose meetings sometimes attract as many as 20 people, according to Farwell, though there are,to his knowledge, no Baha'is among students at the College.

The Baha'i faith is based on the belief that the teachings of Baha' Ullah are God's latest words to mankind. Earlier prophets, from Abraham to Buddha to Muhammad, are nonetheless not denounced by the faith, and Baha'i worship includes recitation of the scriptures of all religions.

The Baha'i teachings condemn prejudice and superstition, promote unity with science, advocate equal rights and priveleges for men and women, and call for compulsory education and the elimination of extremes of poverty and wealth. These, and other Baha'i principles, are aimed at the unification of mankind.

The purpose of the Williams Baha'i Club is "to introduce people to the ideas of the Baha'i faith," said Farwell. In this way, the club is an important link in the network of Bahai's all over the world.

"Find a purpose for your life"

In addition to its regular meetings, the club tries to organize some sort of larger event each year. Last year, Club members put on a workshop during January, the purpose of which was "to find a purpose for your life," according to House. A panel on world peace is planned for April of this year.

"Spiritual enlightenment will make world peace inevitable," House contends, "in the same sense that it is inevitable that a 12-year old boy will grow to be a man." Cautioning that there is necessarily an element of question, he insisted that the world is on the brink of maturity, and that human society cannot continue to exist without peace.

The obligations of the Baha'i faith include a fast from sunrise to sunset on 19 days of the year. In addition, abstention from narcotics and alcohol is essential. According to Farwell, smoking is also frowned upon. He says such rules involve commitment, yet argues that they serve a positive role. "They are a rational thing, not a matter of whipping yourself."

Such rules might be seem to discouraging some from becoming Baha'is and therefore possibly limit the effectiveness of the world-wide scheme. House, however, defends them as an integral part of the Baha'i faith. "Religion is not a philosophy, it is a way of life," he explained, "Religious laws are inseparable from the teach-

Continued on Page 8

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight at 8:00, The Swarthmore College Singers will present a free concert in Chapin Hall featuring Elizabethan madrigals as well as works by Copland, Debussy, Thompson, P.D.Q. Bach, and others .....At 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, independent filmmaker John Terry will present a film screening and discussion in Room 231 of Lawrence Hall regarding his movie "Streets in Paris," made in 1975 for an M.I.T. architectural project.....On Friday morning at 10:00, Terry will also show his 1980 film "Made in Milwaukee" and discuss urban and architectural documentary filmmaking, also in Room 231 of Lawrence Hall.....Friday afternoon at 5:00, Marianne Carlano will give a talk on Velvet Weaving in Italy at the Clark Art Institute.....Also on Friday, the Berkshire Symphony will give a concert at 8 p.m. in Chapin Hall featuring piano soloist Christopher O'Riley playing Ravel's Concerto in G Major and Rachmaninoff's Paganini Variations. The program will also include works by Shumann and Porter. Admission is $3.50, free with Williams ID.....There will be a theatre performance of Cold Harbour, a production based on the life of Ulysses S. Grant, presented by the Mabou Mines from New York City on Friday at the AMT Mainstage at 8 p.m. Tickets are $2, $1 with Williams ID..... For more music information call the Concertline at 597-3146.

College Council Elections

Amy Jeffress/ Suzanne Biemiller

We believe that we are the most experienced and best qualified candidates for the offices of president and vice president. Both of us have served on the College Council and the Committee on Undergraduate Life and have been involved in campus issues throughout our years at Williams. This experience will enable us to be strong leaders of College Council, as we are familiar with how College Council works and with how both the students and the administration make decisions and take action.

The College Council has expanded its agenda in the past year; we intend to continue this increase in activity, both on and off the campus. First, we will ensure that the College Council has a stronger voice on decisions affecting the campus. The College Council serves as a link between the students and the administration, representing student opinion to the administration and seeing that our opinion plays a major role in its decisions. We will be commited and active leaders of College Council, ensuring that students are informed and heard on all issues.

Second, we want to promote more active student participation in many different areas. The "Poverty in America" project over Winter Study encouraged and enabled many students to become involved in local issues and community action. We believe that College Council can play an important role in promoting student activity, on and off campus, and as officers we will take the initiative to do so.

In light of the above general goals, we have some specific ideas for the College Council. One proposal is to publish a "tenure letter" to the students: to compile a list of faculty being considered for tenure next year and distribute it to the students, so that we will know about tenure decisions and be able to write letters and talk to department chairmen. This will make student opinion a more important part of tenure decisions.

A second issue we would like to address is the Junior Advisor selection process. If there is widespread student support for modifications in the system, we feel that College Council should propose these changes.

A third idea is to find ways of promoting more student-initiated education, such as the "Nonviolence and Social Change" course. We hope to eneourage students to have more input in the curriculum through similar innovations.

These are only a few of many other ideas we have for the College Council. We also intend to be more responsive to ideas from the student body as a whole, so we hope that anyone with a concern will speak to one of us. We don't have slogans or catchy phrases, but we do have the commitment, drive and experience to lead a strong and active College Counell.

Amy Jeffress: Viee President of College Council, Chairman of Elections Committee, Member of Commitiee on Undergraduate Life, Member of College Council 1983-1986.

Suzanne Biemiller: Member of College Council, Member of Committee on Undergraduate Life, Log Committee.

Martin White/ Steve Ames

We have a vision to transform College Council. As president and vice president, we will strive to enhance our social culture, to affirm our commitment to diversity and assert our leadership in establishing the Council as the forum and active advocate for issues that affect us here at Williams, and that we at Williams affect.

Furthermore, our perspective is different. We recognize that sexism, racism, homophobia and problems with social life are issues which do exist and must be dealt with. Too many organization have had to drain their resources proving such problems exist. Organizations will find College Council a supportive resource and not a drain.

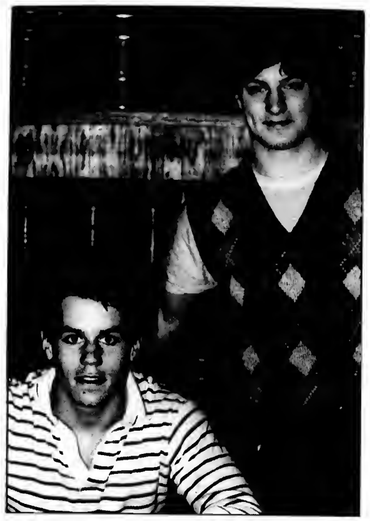
1) To begin with, we would make the Council less bureaucratic, more accessible and effective by: printing CC minutes in the Record; having officers visit snacks for input on issues to be addressed; and impleimenting a bi-annual evaluation of CC officers, representatives and their performance.

2) We would address a broader spectrum of ideas such as social life at Williams, poverty in the community, racism, sexism, sexual orientation and the upcoming curriculum review. Some problems of particular concern to us are the need for more tenure positions for women and black faculty and facilitating panel discussions on a broad range of issues such as divestiture and the ideas mentioned above.

Voting

Ballots will be distributed in the dining halls Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

GET OUT AND VOTE!



3) We would address the relationship between the administration, the student body and the College Counell. To do this we would follow-up on issues of importance to the student body, rather than let them drift out of slght. We would also revisc the role which the administration assigns to the College Council. In other words, why does the administration patronize and then ignore the Council?

We want College Council to, as our constitution states, "create a sense of community to which everyone belongs and in which everyone participates."

Our experience shows our dedlction and ability to implement effectively the ideas we hold:

Martin White: College Council member at large, 1984-86; WCFM Board and Community Affairs director, 1984-85; WBSU coordinator; junior advisor, Williams A; Political Selence Llalson

Steve Ames: College Council member, Dodd Tyler housing group, 1985; Tyler house representative, 1985; Committee on Priorities and Resources, 1985-86; Housing Committee, 1985-86; Williams Feminist Alliance.

Mark Tompkins/ Gary Sheff

What the College Council needs is an eloquent, and above all, effective spokesperson. An individual with the ability to carry your ideas and convictions to the administration. There is a difference between individuals who simply state your opinions and those who will represent you with energy and resolve.

When the administration makes a decision that affects the student body, it relies on input from the College Council not only for the opinion of the students but, most importantly, for their degree of concern over the issue. If a spokesman expresses an opinion without the proper sentiment behind it, he invites compromise. This is not because the administration is overbearing, but because the spokesman didn't truly express the nature of the issue. Although the ultimate decision on any issue lies with the administration, the deans are greatly affected by student opinion; this sentiment is expressed only through the College Council leadership. We feel that this type of real communication has not been present in the past, and it is in this capacity that we will be most effective.

When we express an opinion to the administration that is not met with immediate approval, a second stage must be put into motion. This stage is what we call "creative ideas aggressively pursued." This involves shaping strong opinion into feasible and attractive proposals. An example of this "creative ideas" approach concerns the Log. At an ad hoc meeting regarding the fate of theLog, the gathering was addressed by the leadership of the College Council. Their recommendation was to propose an increase from the current two-beer limit to a four-beer limit because this was the only plan that had a chance of passing. To which we replied, "Wait, we have the collective intelligence, energy and creativity within the student body to draft a proposal that will demonstrate our resolve to the administration and convince them to revoke the limit altogether."

The proposal was written and passed by the deans. Imagine if we had listened to the initial recommendation and failed to pursue aggressively a more ingenious solution. It is within this framework of "creative ideas aggressively pursued" that we will work to effect positive change in all issues of coneern to the student body.

The student body of Williams College is characterized by active and able individuals. It is therefore surprising that this enthusiasm has not, in our experience, been carried over to the College Council leadership. And this is our reason for running. In the final analysis, issues are meaningless unless the leaders you ehoose have the enthusiasm and the moxy to represent effectively, and implement, the will of the student body. Vote for a change. Vote Goat (and Gary).

Mark "Goat" Tompkins: Gladden House College Council Representative 1986, Log Committee Member 1985-1986, Armstrong House Secretary 1985, Schedule Coordinator WRFC 1985-1986

Gary I. Sheff: Treasurer WRFC, Member NYSSO

Secretary

WENDELL CHESTNUT

I am very enthusiastic about running for the College Council. I think it is a very rewarding position to have, especially when the ideals of the student body are heard. I also have the desire to contributc new ideas as well as effectively carry out the responsibilities of the secretary.

Such responsibiiities I plan to hold are taking minutes on College Council proceedings, informing the student body of what occurred in those proceedings, and finally taking part in the executive council which formulates the direction College Council should be going.

I think this third point is of great importance, because this is where I shall get a chance to speak directly with the president, vice-president and members of the administration on issues that directly affect the student body; issues such as MASSPIRG, theme houses, etc., that effect the entire body, not just a select group.

I worked on many committees as well as student council in high school and I am currently a member of the executive board of Armstrong House. So I am not entirely without experience. I know the students want to speak to the administration and I would like to help bring many new perspcctives and issues to the College Council. I hope I am given the chance by the student body to represent them on the Collegc Council as secretary.

HENRY JONES

I believe that I am a suitable candidate for the position of secretary of the College Council for the following reasons.

I am a student who is very concerned with student "power." I want, at some point in the future, a College Council whose power and voice is of and for the students. I also wish to bring to the student council a viewpoint both as a student and a minority. I think my viewpoint as a minority student here at Williams and a minority in general, is essential to the Councii.

I am also concerned with the "power" of publication. I'm an English major. In my understanding, the job of secretary entails developing a letter of College Council endeavors to the community. Being in charge of this task is a responsibility I would not take lightly. I would report as accurately and clearly as possiblc.

But my main objective would not only be to report the issues discussed in Council. I would usc whatever I develop (i.e. letter, pamphlet, etc.) to raise a student consciousness. I believe student consciousness is more important. And I would hopc to obtain this consciousness through discussing informative issues in the Council and them rcporting them in as thought-provoking a manner as possible.

The job of secretary, to me, is a job that is out of the light, so to speak. I do not think that I am ready to do anything else. But I will add that I think that I have the qualities and energy that it would take to generate 1) student consciousness, 2) student participation and 3) a College Council secretary who would be devoted to maintaining nothing less for and from the students.

In high school, I was very involved in student government. I represented the minority students. I organized and led all meetings on problems that were taking place in the community at the time. I was well respected by both the students and administration. I feel that I am also well respected here at Williams. This would be my first involvement, on this level, in student government. In conclusion, I would like to say that I am concerned, dedicated, experienced, and I want to do the job.

NANCY SHORE

This year as freshman representative and just recently as acting secretary to the College Council, I have gained the necessary exposure to how the Council operates. This exposure has also taught me the precedures which are required in becoming an effective and efficient secretary.

By co-chairing various activities — i.e., a soup kitchen for the needy in North Adams — and by drafting proposals — i.e., the final proposal concerning MASSPIRG, which granted them a two-year trial basis — I have also gained experience in areas which go beyond the specific tasks of a secretary. Not only is experience important in ensuring positive results, but so are certain characteristics. These characteristics, which I feel I possess, are dedication, creativity, enthusiasm and energy. Beyond experience and these essential characteristics, I also possess the invaluable desire to represent the student body on the College Council.

If given the opportunity to serve the student body, some of the issues which I feel need to be resolved are: theme houses, the Log and meatless meals. Without a doubt, I would always be ready to help resolve any other issues which are of concern to you. Not only will I be available to listen to your suggestions, but I also will use campus-wide surveys to gain an even better sense of common concerns.

So please give me the chance to serve you and vote Nancy Shore for College Council secretary.

Treasurer

ALEC DAWSON

This year, the Finance Committee was forced to reject or cut a large amount from virtually every group's budget request. Next year's treasurer will enjoy the luxury of a raise in the Student Activities Tax. Therefore, I believe, it will be important for the treasurer to honor requests from new groups we were unable to accommodate this year, and to re-inflate the budgets of larger and more established groups such as WCFM, the Record and the Student Activities Councii.

As a member of the Finance Committee and having served on the College Council over the course of the last two years, I am qualified to aliocate funds to where they can best benefit the campus. It will be important to strike a balance between small groups and those with large memberships. The treasurer will also have to deal regularly with members of the administration and be well organized in order to facilitate the delivery of money to student organizations. I think that I have the experience and ability to be a good treasurer, and I am willing to put in the time it takes to be one.

PAUL MAHONEY

The College Council treasurer plays an important role in student life by guiding, and sometimes dragging, the Finance Committee through the perils of funding, and so must be a competent and creative administrator. I feel that I can perform that role well. My goals include making funding requests more comprehensive and accurate by clarifying the procedures by which funding is granted. Too many people have misperceptions of this, which makes the process tedious. We should also encourage new and interesting, even if short-lived, clubs, and evaluate older organizatlon in terms of their continued salience to the campus.

We should not stifle student energies by rigidly adhering to false tradition. The four years we spend here should be a stimulating as possible. I would also like to see more funds reserved for late-year requests, to increase flexibiiity, permitting clubs to take fuller advantage of unexpected opportunities. I would also like to see FinCom members take more active reviews of the groups they monitor.

Moreover, the treasurer is a voting member of the Council, and I would bring a wide range of experience to the office, having been a house representative for almost three terms, a house president, and an active member and president of several student organizations. This gives me insight into both the giving and receiving aspects of campus finance, plus widening my experience of this very complex place we call Williams.

I believe that my combination of technical ability and practical experience, added to a genuine desire to serve the Williams community, would make me a very effective treasurer for the College Council.

SUE ANN MERVINE

As a member of Finance Committee, I have been actively involved in College Council funding since my freshman year. During these three years, I have worked with different treasurers and have learned a great deal about budget allocation. As current business manager for the Record, I have spent the last year working very hard to put the Record's finances in good shape. My service with the Record and the Finance Committee has given me extensive experience with funding request and allocations.

My reason for running for this position is quite simple. I am dedicated to allocating our student funds through the fairest means possiblе. It is my goal to have Finance Committee decisions reflect the true interests and diversity on campus. I believe this can be accomplished by selecting a more diverse group of students to serve on the committee than have been selected in the past.

Since allocation of funds is becoming more difficult because of the increasing number of groups requesting funding, it is imperative that next year's treasurer be dedicated to unbiased allocation of student funds. I am confident that my familiarity with the administration and mechanics of Finance Committee, coupled with my dedication and fair-mindedness, would ensure a responsible funding process, to the mutual benefit of all campus interests.

Interview: Presidential tickets discuss the issues

Members of the Record editorial board interviewed the three tickets for College Council president and vice president, giving the candidates an opportunity to express their stances on issues of concern to students.

What policy would you advocate for regulating drinking at campus parties, in response to the change in the Massachusetts and Vermont drinking ages?

•MARK TOMPKINS/GARY SHEFF: I think we have to keep the campus sacred. I think students on the whole at Williams are responsible. One of the planks in our platform is to hold the line on party policy. I don't think you need the bartenders; that's an insult. We're more mature than that, I think.

•AMY JEFFRESS/SUZANNE BIEMILLER: We hope that there's not going to be any change. in fact, the College Council has a proposal that's been in the Deans' Office for a while saying that we don't want there to be any change in party policy. When Vermont goes to 21, hopefully we can still keep the College the same.

•MARTIN WHITE/STEVE AMES: We have to see how people feel. I don't think we should rush into implementing a plan that will alienate lots of people. College Council should diseuss and decide to make drinking not a problem on campus. We don't want people to feel like they can only drink in private. There shouldn't be just an arbitrary decision that people aren't responsible enough. We're all adults, even if not in the eyes of the law. Making people responsible for their guests would be better than an arbitrary limit.

What do you think of the junior advisor selection process? Would you make any changes?

•TOMPKINS/SHEFF: I tell you, those guys on the committee work very hard. There's 150 people that could do that job (be JA's) very well. Of course you're going leave out someone somewhere. I wouldn't institute any changes.

•JEFFRESS/BIEMILLER: We feel that if there is widespread student support for changes in the system, then College Council is in a position to make those changes, (such as) breaking down the self-perpetuation of the system. Right now over half of the committee is composed of last year's JA's, and we feel that that's a little much. The changes at first should be moderate to see how they work out. Fewer of that class's JA's. Maybe more sophomores, more peers, and more freshmen and juniors (who are not JA's) so that there's a more diverse array of opinions going into the decisions. The process could be better, and it could be worse. We think that by changing the system it could probably be improved.

•WHITE/AMES: I'm undecided about what should be done. I think it should be looked at and maybe changed. We should make sure black people are represented on the JA selection committee. It's important to have JA's who are sensitive to issues that come up in entries, like racism and sexual orientation. I'm not advocating huge changes. I think there could be more black JA's, but i don't see an under-representation.

Recently, the quality of Williams life for blacks and women seems to have become an issue. How much priority would you place on these concerns, and do you have any specific plans?

•TOMPKINS/SHEFF: It surprised me, as I think it did a lot of people. It wasn't an issue until I read the story in the Record. It is an issue. I don't see it actually, but it is a problem. Anything that people are concerned about and speak to me with conviction about will be an issue in my administration.

•JEFFRESS: One of the reasons why life at Williams is hard for minorities and women has to do with a real white male orientation. And part of it is among the students, but another part is the faculty. One of the things we want to do is get people on the College Council to find out what professors will be up for tenure next year and publish this list to the students and get more student opinion into the tenure decisions. Students are aware of these concerns. Unfairness to women, women not getting tenure, is a personal pet peeve of mine. The College Council has worked with the BSU. I think that our record is very favorable in terms of what have we done about minority rights.

BIEMILLER: There is a male dominance, perhaps, but I think Williams has gone co-ed better than a lot of other

Continued on Page 10

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Lanny Lim; photographs by Jeff Somers.

The Record recently asked freshmen "Where do you want to live next year and why?"

"My roommate and I don't like anything else but Dodd — especially Mission because the hallways are like airplane bathrooms." — Erik Marks '89

"I would like to live in the row houses, especially Spencer or West because they are closer to the Science Quad, and they have nice, quiet rooms. I also like Dodd, but I don't want to get stuck in Tyler." — Grace Park '89

"Mission is the only place to fit six people. We had no choice. However, I think that Mission will be more popular than Greylock next year." — Gordon Goodell '89

"There is no other place that I want to live except Greylock. Also, I don't want the chance to get stuck with my present roommate." — Pete Sepe '89

"The Row Houses are my first choice because I like the rooms, the atmosphere, and I want a single." — Jim Simmonds '89

"I'm not sure where I want to live next year. I like the social situation in Greylock and Mission. However, the rooms in the other places like the BBQ and Dodd may be too good to pass up." — Mark McDermott '89 confront or be honest with ourscives or othcrs. There's a dcnial of differences, such as the way white students take umbrage at black students sitting together at a table," Tauber commented. "Williams should not be merely an extension of high school; the College-Within-a-College would provide a shockingly different experience. Freshman would be in a living situation in which they would begin to take each other scriously, one thing which Williams students don't do," the professor said.

Gaudino

Continued from Page 5

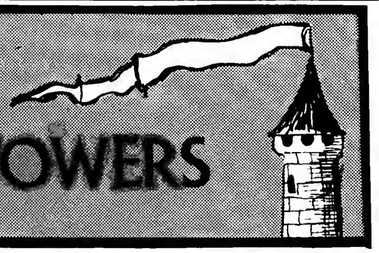
The Gaudino proposals will come before the faculty later this month and will be decided upon without the vote of the student body. Tauber explained this procedure, stating "Students do not have a say in whether or not these proposals will be passed any more then they have a say in whether to add another Senior seminar or major."

Concerning the controversy that has resulted from this policy, Tauber responded, "I am glad that students have roused themseives to any kind of controversy, especially over this." Tauber contends that the committee has not only worked through the normal channels of President, Trustees, and student committees, but also through public meetings and the Record. Copies of the proposal were also placed in the library.

According to the April, 1985 "Intellectual Life At Williams: Proposals From The Gaudino Committee," "Education is being consumed, it is not being lived, it is taken out when needed to fulfill certain requirements and then put away again as soon as possible. Accordingly, our proposals are designed to draw together the various spheres of Williams life, thus strengthening and rendering more meaningful the Williams education. We have generally focused on proposals to introduce new structure and modify existing ones."

Baha'i



Continued from Page 5

ings."

Baha'i teachings contend that America has a "spiritual destiny." House pointed out that the United States has lived up to much of this expectation and is considered largely responsible for the spread of the faith in the world. He said, however, that the country's destiny is hindered by racism, a problem that he called "the blot on our society." "It cannot go unresolved," he said.

House summed up the role of the Baha'i Club at Williams as "what this one cell in a body is doing to maintain the body [of the Baha'i following as a whole]." The club strives, he said, to increase people's awareness regarding Baha'i beliefs. "We want to provide a forum for the discussion of principles of the Baha'i faith. We hope to provide an opportunity to learn."

in other IVORY TOWERS

Dartmouth

Despite the general increase in black applicants at Ivy League schools, Dartmouth has seen their black applicant pool drop by 25 percent this year. Only 300 blacks finished their applications, down from an average of over 400 in past years. By contrast, Princeton has experienced an increase of 14 percent in black applications for the class of 1990.

The Dartmouth admissions office has responded to this dramatic decrease by urging black students with incomplete applications to finish the process. Their efforts, however, may be suffering from the burden of recent publicity concerning unrest on campus. As the Dartmouth Director of Admissions Dick Jaeger said, "I do think that a lot of the unrest that was in the press caused a lot of the students who would normally complete (their applications) between January and February not to."

The decline in black applicants is seen against a background of general decrease in the Dartmouth applicant pool; the total number of applicants has dropped about 1,000 since last year's record high.

Wesleyan

An article in the Wesleyan Argus describing the availability of drugs on campus may have resulted in the reduced amount of drug dealing on campus, due to the reaction of a concerned parent.

The article in the November 12 issue of the newspaper stated that "At the moment we are in a strange situation where it is easier (if you are underage) and cheaper to buy acid on campus than it is to buy alcohol." A disturbed Wesleyan parent responded to this article by writing to the State Attorney's Office in Middletown, which in turn contacted the Narcotics Division of the Connecticut State Police, the Middletown Police Department, and the Wesleyan administration.

Despite the fact that the Connecticut State Police denied it was taking any action on the complaint, a rumor spread that narcotics agents were on the Wesleyan campus posing as "January frosh, exchange, and transfer students." According to the Argus, many student drug dealers became more cautious and several stopped dealing altogether.

Many new students were allegedly harrassed as suspected narcotics agents. College administrators stated it was "highly unlikely" that narcotics agents were enrolled as students. The college also denied spreading the rumor to diminish drug use.

Siena

The Siena College Indian reports that one of the major controversies on their Albany campus involves an issue close to the hearts of most college students: hot water. Evidently, students in one of Siena's dormitories woke up one morning to a chilling experience; there was no hot water for their showers. Such a rude awakening left students upset and demoralized. The newspaper voiced a feeling of distinct loss and said, "Like a good breakfast, a hot shower in the morning almost makes the 8:30 classes worth going to."

A deluge of student protests pointed fingers at numerous individuals in trying to pin the blame on someone. The result of the Indian's investigation, however, identified mechanical, not human error as the cause of the problem. Indeed, the article showered praise on the college's physical plant director and credited him with a cooperative attitude. In the final analysis, student protest's were drained of their basis when the guilty boiler was quickly repaired.

Swarthmore

The Dean's Office of Swarthmore College is considering a proposal to prohibit student organizations from charging admission to all-campus parties. In addition, the plan would bar the mention of alcoholic beverages in any party advertisment. The two factors that led to the proposal are the more stringent enforcement of alcohol laws by authorities and a reassessment of the legal responsibility of the Dean's Office in the role as a "broker between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the student body."

The College fears that by charging admission to parties, student organizations may be guilty of selling alcohol in the "dry" community of Swarthmore. The deans would also like stricter adherance to the rule that "all public student-run activities be free of charge."

The deans are also concerned about student discretion in advertising. They worry that by advertising the availability of alcohol at a party, students open them selves to "unnecessary invitations for response from the State or the Swarthmore community."

Franklin and Marshall

As Williams freshmen are now agonizing over their housing choices, it is helpful to keep in mind what housing concerns are faced by students at other colleges. For example, Franklin and Marshall College hopes to have adequate housing for all of its students next year. This hope has not been possible in the past.

This optimism is due to two factors. F&M is expecting a smaller freshman class next year, and a recent addition to dorm space has made more rooms available.

The college is also pleased about its "very successful" coed halls, which came into existence in the 1985-86 school year.

Skidmore

Six Skidmore students recently grabbed local and national attention by kidnapping a likeness of an advertising celebrity. These brave adventurers absconded with a cardboard cutout of "Herb", the fictional character created by Burger King.

As one student put it, "We wanted a mascot for our floor, and since we love Herb, we could not resist." While one student created a diversion by ordering at the front counter, two students grabbed Herb and carried him out the front doors, which were being held by two other students. The sixth culprit drove the getaway car. The otherwise perfect crime was foiled by a Burger King employee who noted the license plate number of the car.

The forces of justice were quick to pursue these flagrant law violators. Within an hour, the New York State Police, aided by Skidmore Security, captured the six villians without a fight and hauled them off to the police station. The culprits were photographed, fingerprinted, and finally released at 4:00 a.m.

The incident was covered by three local television stations as well as the Associated Press. The students, however, have learned the cost of such illgotten glory. Although Burger King dropped its charges, the state of New York plans to prosecute. If nothing else, the students will have to pay a combined legal fee of over $2000.

In Other Ivory Towers, written by Record reporter Jeff Somers, was compiled from various campus newspapers.

Anti-apartheid

Continued from Page 4

the culmination of a month of increasing protests to divest.

Fifty students built a shantytown in the sociology quad of the university last month. After the Justice, the Brandeis student newspaper, received a letter threatening the shantytown, it was manned 24 hours a day for three weeks. Students relocated the shantytown on the administration quadrangle March 2, where it remains.

On the night of March 3, the students built a wall barricading the administration building except for a small entrance. People were required to show a passbook to enter the building. The administration said the wall broke the rules of protesting, because it interfered with the wheelchair ramp. Buildings and grounds crews tore down the wall the next morning while protesters watched.

Eighty students then blockaded the front doors of the administration buildings early March 5 for one hour. When they tried to enter the building as a group, campus police forced them to leave and locked the doors. The students were permitted to enter the building one at a time after they asked why they were not allowed in a public building.

Then the studcnts converged at the president's offlce and occupied the lobby for 45 minutes. They left after marching through the building. Brandeis' advisory committee on shareholder responsibility will announce its decision on divestment in two weeks.

Brandeis will probably divest in South Africa but will not change its portfolio on any other moral grounds, according to Steven Saltman, news editor of the Justice. "We're a very, very liberal university," he said. "I don't know why we haven't divested yet."

Protests at Williams have so far been much milder. Tom Williams, a spokesman for the Williams Anti-Aparthied Coalition, said he thinks the situation has not yet been reached at Williams where a mass sit-in or occupation of the administration building is necessary, because trustees are still discussing divestment with students.

"There will probably be protests next year," Williams said, "because lots of juniors are going to be coming back, and they will want to be more active, and basically the ACSR (Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility) told us it has gone as far as it's going to go."

Crime

Continued from Page 1

Andrew Hoddick '89 and Philip Knccht '89, according to Director of Security Ransom Jenks.

Robbers foiled

Five minutes later, Gemma Burgos, a freshmen living in Sage F, reported to Security that she had heard sounds in the living room of her suite. "I was in my room reading, and I heard noises," Burgos said. She said at first she thought it was just entry noise, but when it continued, she opened the door and saw two men putting her roommate's stereo into bags.

The two thieves fled, dropping the bags, one of which had Union College written on it and the other of which had the team name "Admirals" on it, Jenks said.

The Williamstown police were unable to find any suspects at the time.

At 4:35 p.m. on the same day, Eric Velazquez '88 reported that his wallet was missing from the drawer where he had placed it between 11:00 and 11:30 the previous night. He said he had not been able to find the wallet in the morning but had not worried too much about it.

In the afternoon, however, he said his parents received a call from American Express as a routine check because $1,700 had been spent on Velazquez's credit card in the Albany area that day. His parents cancelled the card and called Velazquez at Williams, who then reported the theft.

The American Express card and Velazquez's driver's license were recovered late that afternoon when the thieves tried to purchase a stereo at a store in Albany called Dizzy Izzy's. According to Velazquez, the clerk called American Express to authorize the purchase but apparently did not understand the code that was given. He added that the clerk called the manager, and, "When they (the thieves) saw that things were going down behind the counter, they left the license and walked out."

Investigation trail

Jenks said he felt from the start that all of the thefts were related. "The time frame is what made us think they're connected. I don't think that there are that many thieves around here," he said.

He added that the bags recovered in Sage provided a starting point for the investigation. Jenks said he contacted Pierce Fitzgerald, the assistant director of security at Union. According to Jenks, Fitzgerald claimed at the time there was no connection between the bags and any Union College student, and suggested that Jenks try Siena College.

Jenks said several days later he received a call from a dean at Union who asked for information on the thefts. He added that later that day Fitzgerald called back to inform him that they had a suspect. "The deans apparently found out about a person who had been shooting his mouth off about stealing a Sony TV from Williams," Jenks said. He also said the student had gone to a prep school with the team name Admirals.

Coordination

Jenks said he then contacted the Williamstown police who scnt an officer to Schenectady to work with the police there. After questioning several people, the Schenectady police arrested Flanagan, Guerrieri and Hazelton. They also recovered all of the stolen property and everything that had been purchased with Velazquez's American Express, according to Ranucci.

Officer Edward Morin of the Williamstown Police Department said, "They've got to take their lumps in New York first; then they'll be brought to Williamstown." He explained that the three will face charges in New York first because they were arrested there and then will either voluntarily return to Massachusetts or be declared fugitives.

The court proceedings in the two states can go on simultaneously, according to Morin, but he stressed that any sentences handed down will be served separately. Jenks and Morin both said that credit card fraud charges are especially serious in the state of New York.

Jenks said, "The lesson to be learned is 'lock your suite doors.' The last thing we want is to be known as an easy mark."

Farwell

Continued from Page 5

and both men's and women's indoor track. One measure of his success is the number of Williams track alumni who continue to run. He is quick to point out, however, that he doesn't make running enjoyable. Rather, running makes itself enjoyable. "Anything that's fun draws its own emphasis," he said.

This view holds true for the slower runners as well as the record holders. He believes that everyone who wishes to compete at Williams should be able to do so. He also believes nobody else can run a race but the individual running it and nobody can push that runner if he won't put in the effort. He speaks emphatically of how an athlete must discipline himself and learn to budget time, to have self-confidence, and to get the best out of himself.

For Farweil, one of the tough parts of being a coach is dealing with a runner who is "just there" and will not make a conscious effort to improve his or her performance. His goal as a coach is to see every one of his runners work harder to better their ability.

Virtually all of the runners who have had Farwell as a coach are agreed in their respect for his as a coach and a person. To them he is "Pete", not "that coach" or "Farwell." "Pete's the balls. He's really involved and he cares about everybody," said Jon Fisher '87. "You know he's your coach, but he's not distant. He's easy to get along with," explains Bob Kane '88. "He's a hell of a guy," says Ed Tonelli '86, "but he can be a little harsh."

Farwell can be harsh concerning the student body at Williams. He feels that too many students are not questioning enough and that they are too interested in choosing courses that will increase their earning power later in life. His view is that courses should be interesting, and he has been practicing this belief by sitting in on various religion, art, psychology, and language courses.

While Pete Farwell enjoys continuing his education and coaching at Williams, he is concerned about becoming complacent. "It's too easy to stay in one thing that's comfortable," he said. He renews his contract with the college on a yearly basis, and he speaks of possibly travelling more or moving to another country.

Summer at Brandeis University

Session I—June 9 to July 11 / Session II—July 14 to August 15

- Liberal Arts
- Premedical Sciences
- Computer Science
- Theatre Arts
- Near Eastern and Judaic Studies
- Foreign Languages
- Costume Field Research in England
- Archaeological Field Research in Israel

Small classes taught by Brandeis Faculty
Information, catalog and application
BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL
Waltham, MA 02254 617-647-2796

VOTE!

DAVID RAKONITZ '88

For

Honor and Discipline

Sponsored by
The Rakonitz Action Committee

Summer or Fall 1986
Summer 1987

WASHINGTON OR LONDON INTERNSHIPS

SUMMER SESSION ONLY
at Wadham College
of the University of
OXFORD

Accredited courses in government, economics, journalism and pre-law by an outstanding faculty.

Full Academic Year Programs at the London School of Economics, St. Andrews Universities, for Qualified Juniors and Seniors

All credits transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, Virginia (Founded in 1776)

Inquiries to:
Mrs. Janet Kollek, J.D.
Admissions Director
The Washington International Studies Center
212-724-0804 or 0136
(EO/AA)

JOSEPH E. DEWEY 9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

West Package & Variety Store
663-6081
Mid-way between Williamstown and North Adams on Rt. 2

Labatt's Beer & Ale. Always $11.98 per case + Deposit	Grolsch $14.95 per case + Deposit
Friendly, Courteous, Almost Professional Service!	Dean's List Special Summit Merlot 1.5 liter $2.99 Quality Guaranteed.

Interview

Continued from Page 7

schools. Could two women run for College Council president and vice president at Dartmouth or Amherst and be taken seriously?

•WHITE/AMES: It's definitely a high priority. We want to transform Williams so that it's more affirming of difference and diversity. We're not here to question the subjective experiences of people. We want to deal with these questions. Tenured black and women faculty should be expanded. The College fails sadly in attracting black and women faculty. We are not here to question whether racism, sexism and homophobia exist at Williams.

Would you support divestment of all companies doing business in South Africa? Would you support some sort of College Council sponsored protest to force the issue of divestment?

•TOMPKINS/SHEFF: We support divestment of companies not conforming to the Sullivan Principles 100 percent. It takes a lot of research to figure out which companies are conforming to the Sullivan Principles. It's not a process of just cut and go. I think the College is committed to it.

•JEFFRESS/BIEMILLER: A majority of students are in favor of divestment, and we feel that more should be done about that. As long as student opinion favors more activism, that's something that we're anxious to promote. We feel that in the past much of the action has been undertaken by a very small percentage of the student body, and we wonder why. We'd like to see the activism broadened. We favor divestment of all those (companies) doing business in South Africa. We definitely feel that College Council should play a greater role in activism.

•WHITE/AMES: We support divestment. We'd like to see College Council follow through on that and get our decisions implemented by the College administration. This shows how ineffective College Council has been in the past. College Council can certainly serve as a catalyst for seeing that divestment is an issue.

Why should we, as individual voters, vote for you?

•TOMPKINS SHEFF: We can mobilize opinion, put opinion into proposals. Put energy behind issues. Make issues. We are going to be your advocates. We will argue your case with the administration instead of just telling you what the administration's views are. We're not talking about confrontationalist tactics; we're talking about communication.

•JEFFRESS/BIEMILLER: We are the most experienced, best qualified candidates. We believe that since both of us have had involvement in student issues, we know how decisions are made on campus. I think our experience shows that we've both been committed in the past. We've both been responsible, and I think we have some good ideas.

•WHITE/AMES: We represent a different perspective. We are a part of College Council but not a part of the status quo. We want to transform College Council to be more responsive to students and issues. We think it can be done. In that sense, we're changing the self-enclosed bounds in which College Council deals with issues.

Four receive NEH grants

Four Williams professors have received fellowships for study next year from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The recipients are Lila Abu-Lughod, assistant professor of anthropology; William Darrow, assistant professor of religion and assistant dean of the College; Sherron Knopp, associate professor of English; and Patricia Tracy, associate professor of history.

Abu-Lughod plans to write a cultural study of an Egyptian extended family, A Beduin Family: Ethnography "In a Different Voice." Abu-Lughod said this study, based on field research in Egypt, will differ from conventional ethnographies along lines suggested by recent inquiries in feminist theory.

"It will center on Beduin women's experiences and interpretations of the central institutions of their changing society — tribal politics, religion and kinship and marriage," she said.

Darrow will pursue a literary and historical study of religious plurality in the medieval Muslim world. His project will be titled Placing the Other: Explorations in Religius Plurality in the Medieval Muslim World."

Darrow said he hopes his research will provide "a synoptic view of the evolution of issues of religious plurality in Islamic society."

Knopp will use her grant to complete a book on Geoffrey Chaucer and medieval literary theory. Tentatively titled, Chaucer and the Dilemmas of Fiction, the project concerns medieval indictments of poetry, which claim that the images of poetry are illusory and untrue and that the emotions they arouse are sinful and immoral, Knopp said.

Her study will examine Chaucer's development as a poet within the constraints and limitation of this poetic theory.

Tracy will work on a detailed profile of individuals who moved to new towns in Connecticut and Massachusetts when that region was still the frontier and will study the community institutions they established.

Her NEH project, New England Frontier Settlement: A Demographic and Economic Study of Pre-Revolutionary New Towns, will re-examine assumptions that the frontier was the home of economic individualism and political democracy.

Leadership

Continued from Page 1

patronizes the Council and the students."

Martin and Ames' campaign pledge is to open up the Council to more student participation. Describing the current system as too bureaucratic and not accessible , they advocate better publicity for the Council's agenda and minutes and more encouragement of direct student input.

For White, a coordinator for the Black Student Union, and Ames, a member of the Feminist Alliance, the key issue seems to be tolerance of diversity on campus. White said he wants to attack the problems of racism, sexism and homophobia. "The College Council has spent all its resources proving these issues exist," he said. "Our perspective is different. We recognize that sexism, racism, homophobia and problems with social life are issues that do exist and must be dealt with."

White faulted the college's policy on investing in companies that do business in South Africa. "We'd like to see College Council follow through on that (divestment) and get our decisions implemented by the College administration. This shows how ineffective College Council has been in the past," he said.

Advocacy politics

Tompkins, the Gladden House representative to the Council, and running-mate Gary Sheff '87 are running because of what they see as a student-held sentiment that the College Council is ineffective. Their platform is built around the slogan "creative ideas aggressively pursued." Arguing that students' ideas have not been conveyed with conviction, Tompkins said, "We are going to be your advocates. We will argue your case to the administration."

"What distresses me most about them (the current officers) is that they are increasingly becoming spokesmen for the administration instead of spokesmen for us," Tompkins said. "You don't go in there (the deans' office) and say here's what the students think. You go in there and argue the students' case. I don't think that's been done."

Jeffress and running-mate Suzanne Biemiller '87 have billed themselves as candidates with experience. Both are members of the Committee on Undergraduate Life, and Jeffress has sat on the College Council for three years and is the vice president, as well as chairman of the Elections Committee. Biemiller is the Armstrong representative to the Council and, like Tompkins, served on the Log Committee.

Jeffress defense

Jeffress praised the Council as an effective institution which has acted in students' interests. She defended the Council's action on the Gaudino proposal to put a theme house in a senior co-op. "They (the deans) did not come to College Council and ask us what we thought about it. And once we heard that they were going to take immediate action, we took action and stopped it from being implemented."

She rejected charges that the Gaudino Committee has unchecked power and influence even though it submitted its proposals for a freshmen college and theme house directly to the deans for approval, without being required to come before the Council. "It was a fault of the deans not to come to us because I think that would have served the idea better. I think they recognize that now," she said.

Jeffress defended the institution saying, "We have been an active College Council." She claimed students approve of the Council's resolution criticizing the administration for not consulting the student organization on the theme house idea. She also said students appreciated the Council's effort to repeal the two-drink limit at Log.

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue Williamstown
458-3704
In House Specials for St. Patrick's Day
Ballantine 16 oz. returns $7.99/case
Tijuca $10.99/case
Nordik Wolf Light reg. $22.00/case, now $14.99/case
Guinness $17.99/case, $4.99/6-pack
Heineken $16.99/case, $8.50/12-pack
ALL PLUS DEPOSIT

ATTENTION
CLASS OF 1989
While they last — FREE MUG!!
There are 40 of you who have not picked up your free mug - a gift offered to you in September from The Cottage, 96 Water St. Wmst. Come in and get one before they are gone!

Harvard this summer.
June 23-August 15, 1986
Harvard University Summer School, America's oldest summer session, offers open enrollment in nearly 250 day and evening courses, in more than 40 academic fields and pre-professional programs. The diverse curriculum includes courses appropriate for fulfilling undergraduate and graduate degree requirements, as well as programs designed for personal and professional development. The international student body has access to Harvard's outstanding libraries, museums, athletic facilities, and cultural activities, with the additional benefits of the Cambridge and nearby Boston communities. Housing for students is available in Harvard's historic residences.
Offerings include pre-medical and pre-law courses, undergraduate and graduate instruction in foreign languages, business, computer science, visual and environmental studies, anthropology, fine arts, education, psychology, the sciences and more. We feature a college-level program for secondary school juniors and seniors, plus special programs in Health Professions (for minority students), Dance, Drama, Film Studies, Writing, and English as a Second Language.
Further information is available by returning the coupon below or by calling: (617) 495-2494 (24-hour catalogue request line), or (617) 495-2921.
Harvard University Summer School
Please send a Harvard Summer School catalogue and application for:
☐ Arts and Sciences ☐ Secondary School Program ☐ Drama
☐ English as a Second Language ☐ Writing ☐ Dance
☐ Health Professions Program
Name
Street
City State Zip
Harvard Summer School
20 Garden Street, Dept. 397
Cambridge, MA 02138 U.S.A

Seven ski at Nationals, Ephs slide to 12th spot

The ski team traveled to Stowe, Vermont last week to compete in the NCAA Division III championships. The University of Utah was the overall victor, while the Ephs finished 12th.

Wednesday's giant slalom was contested on Mt. Mansfield's north slope. On the men's side, Helge Weiner '87 placed 25th while senior Tim Hill finished 32d. In the women's race, Mari Omland '89 completed only three gates of the first run before she ran into trouble. Omland lost both her pole and glove after planting her pole at the fourth gate.

In the second run, late afternoon shadows contributed to Omland and Amy Duncombe '89 falling at difficult gates. Omland managed to get up and finish the course in 34th place.

In Thursday's 10K women's individual nordic race, Kathy Wolf '88 and senior captain Beth Schmidt skied what they termed a disappointing race. Head coach Bud Fisher felt that Wolf's 30th place finish and Schmidt's 32nd were not indicative of either skier's potential.

In Friday's slalom race at Little Spruce ski arena, the strong Eph trio of Weiner, Hill, and Martin Magoun '87 fell victim to a challenging first run. Hill was disqualified for straddling a gate, while Magoun hooked a tip and fell. In the second run, Weiner skied one of the more competitive times of the day to move up seven places to finish 18th.

SDI

Continued from Page 4

disagreement over the date of a new summit as evidence of these problems.

Nimroody described Star Wars as the biggest hoax of the 20th century, claiming only Reagan thinks it is possible. "(It) fends off the pressure to freeze nuclear weapons."

Economic effect

In Nimroody's opinion, the main problems with SDI lie in the way contractors exert influence to get the system passed, creating lucrative contracts for themselves, and in the research colleges and universities are doing for the government to help develop the system.

Nimroody also said SDI will impede economic growth. Her other concerns include a potential brain drain during SDI development, the low rate of job creation entailed by SDI and a change in the nature of research and academic freedom.

The way to stop SDI research and funding, she said, is to create independent review panels and elect congressmen against SDI funding.

Oxford

Continued from Page 1

O'Connor said he does not think the grades should count toward the Williams G.P.A. and has recommended to the Committee on Educational Policy that this be changed.

O'Connor acknowledged that the Williams students tend to be isolated from British students. He believes there have been some unexpected benefits, however, because the group has developed the same kind of close bonds found in a freshman entry.

Nationals ahead for young swim team

by Kurt Oeler

In capturing the New England championship last weekend, Coach Carl Samuelson's men's swim team showed why they consistently dominate rival teams. Underclass aggressiveness carried the team to a convincing win and promises future success.

Freshmen Mike O'Malley (top ten finishes in the 200, 500, and 1650) and Jeff Reardon will join junior Scott Robinson in filling graduating Steve Delano's role. Robinson's teammates on the champion 400 free relay, Dean Pomerleau '87 and Dave Brown '89, will aim to replace anchorman sprinter Will Andrew '86.

Chris Kirwan '87 (top six in the 200 and 400 IM and 200 breast), Mark Canuel '88, and Chris Giglio '89 stand ready to replace Bill Couch '86. Couch capped his fine career by winning the Bob Muir award at the New Englands, given to the meet's outstanding senior.

Jim Jordan '87 (fly) and Scott Healy '88 hope to match Dom Kulik's '86 success (top six in the 100 and 200 fly and 100 breast) while Beau Everett '87 made his mark by winning the 100 back and leading the medley relay.

Andrew, Couch, Kulik, Everett, Kirwan, and Robinson will travel to Canton, Ohio for nationals in two weeks, where coach Samuelson hopes to improve on last year's ninth-place finish.

Cho fences to 5th at sectionals

Earlier this year, two fencers from the Williams fencing club, Tae Cho '87 and Yuji Shinozaki '88, competed in the North Atlantic sectional qualifying event in Poughghkeepsie, New York. Cho placed fifth in the foil competition and qualified for the sectional championships to be held later this spring.

Cho easily survived the first round, but was placed in a tough group which contained two finalists for the second round. He moved into the finals from that tough group, suffering only one defeat. Shinozaki didn't make the second round, but placed well among the junior USFA members.

In the opening round of the finals, Cho faced division champion Bruce Milligan of Vassar. Cho's lightning-fast attacks caught Milligan by surprise, and he blazed to a solid 5-3 win. This was Milligan's only defeat as he went on to win the gold medal with only one loss.

In his next bout against fleet-footed Tod Benton from SUNY-Albany, Cho fought back from 4-2 down to tie it at four, but lost the final point on a technicality. In his next match, Cho again lost by 5-4. This loss put a medal out of Cho's reach in the eighth hour of competition.

The club will next be involved in a team meet against area colleges on March 29 at RPI. Later this spring come the U.S. Fencing Association competitions.

Men's basketball

Continued from Page 12

is perhaps the Ephs' most explosive offensive player but has had problems defensively. Stubblebine is simply the only Williams player not consistently overmatched by larger opponents.

Other than Walsh, the biggest presence in the Eph program this year was the schedule; they played five games against ECAC tournament teams and "one of the toughest schedules in Division III," according to Sheehy. Victories against Trinity, Amherst and Norwich were highlights, but what really hurt the Ephs and upset Sheehy were losses to lower-ranked teams, such as WPI and Conn. College.

Sheehy talks of moving the Eph program "to another level," and speaks of this year as moving toward that goal. "I was glad that we had a chance to determine our own destiny," noting that a victory in the last home game against Tufts would have put the Ephs into the ECACs.

Men's hockey

Continued from Page 12

Even though their record doesn't show it, there are reasons for optimism in the Eph picture. This season hinged on some early-season disappointments, such as holding Division I Princeton to 3-2 into the third period in the 6-2 loss, and some tough overtime losses to AIC, Norwich, and Holy Cross. Highlights included an upset victory over powerhouse Geneseo State in the Hamilton Christmas Tournament championship.

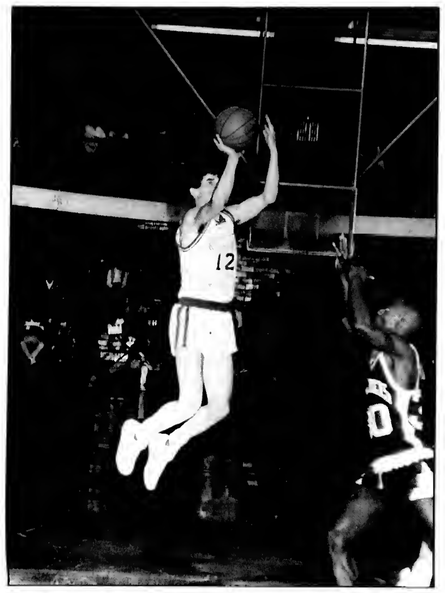
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • PUBLISHERS
SALE
the Co-op
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

THE CLIP SHOP
HAIR! HAIR! HAIR! HAIR!
Keep it looking great. Make an appointment for a trim or cut today.
For extra body and shine, bring this card with you and receive $1.00 off FIZZ— the better styling mousse.

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary
125 North St., Bennington, VT 802-442-9823 or 802-447-2648
49 Spring St., Williamstown, MA 413-458-9167 or 413-458-8585
122 North St., Pittsfield, MA 413-442-6903 or 413-447-9576

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE



This week's recipient is senior Bill Couch, an All-American on the swim team. Bill won the Bob Muir award as his team won the New England title last week. The award represents the oustanding four-year swimmer in the meet. Bill, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!
GENUINE

Walsh all-NE as hoopsters finish 12-11

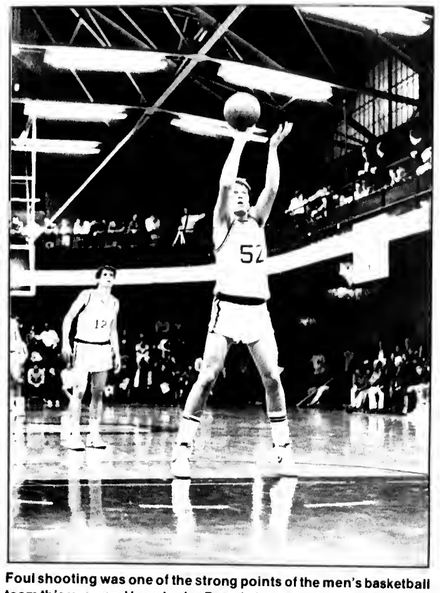
by Cliff Peale

"Towards the end of the year, every game we played was a big game. That gets to be a little hard on the team." That statement by men's basketball coach Harry Sheehy sums up the whole year, in which the team started quickly before losing three straight to end the year at 12-11. The team did win the Little Three title for the second time in three years, but failed to make the ECAC playoffs, one of Sheehy's major goals.

Any talk about this squad must start with senior point guard Tim Walsh. His consistently excellent offensive play all year long earned him All-New England honors with such talents as Greg Davis of Tufts and Ken Abere of Trinity. Walsh averaged 22 points a game while shooting 50% from the field, as well as playing nearly 39 minutes per game. "Timmy's definitely one of the best players we've had here," said Sheehy. "Offensively, he's as good as any guard on the Division III level. His career stands on its own."

All-New England honors fell senior Tim Walsh's way this year, as he led the hoopsters to a 12-11 record. Here he shows his form against Brandeis. (Mead)

Several other players gave Sheehy outstanding efforts this year, including juniors Brandt Johnson, John Ciulla, and Greg Lang. Johnson turned in an excellent year statistically, averaging 17.6 points and 8.7 rebounds per game, as well as shooting 58% from the floor. Defensively, he deferred to his partner inside. Lang had what Sheehy called "a great year," pulling down almost five boards a game while playing his usual great defense.



Ciulla shot the ball well most of the year, keeping the Ephs in such early games as Springfield with his long-range bombing. He, too, averaged in double figures, popping in 13.1 points per game.

The future of the Eph program, however, probably lies with freshmen Bill Melchionni and Mike Masters and sophomores Henry Jones and Rob Stubbiebine. Masters earned his coach's praise for his heady play; "we need to get the ball in Mike's hands more," said Sheehy.

Melchionni came on strong late in the year, and played a tremendous game in the season-closing 91-84 Eph loss to Wesleyan. His hustle and work on the boards earned him more and more time as the year progressed.

Jones and Stubblebine each had up-and-down years. Jones

Continued on Page 11

Foul shooting was one of the strong points of the men's basketball team this year, and here junior Brandt Johnson demonstrates how it's done. (Phillips)

Final Basketball Stats

Player	FG%	Reb.	FT%	PPG
Tim Walsh '86	49	4.1	88	22.4
Brandt Johnson '87	58	8.7	85	17.6
John Ciulla '87	49	1.3	67	13.1
Greg Lang '87	67	4.7	60	4.1
Mike Meadows '86	41	2.9	68	5.3

Final Hockey Stats

Player	Games	G	A	Points
Will Putnam '89	23	8	14	22
Mike Swenson '89	23	4	16	20
Denny Wright '87	23	8	10	18
Chris Conway '89	23	6	12	18
Guy Kurtz '87	23	10	6	16

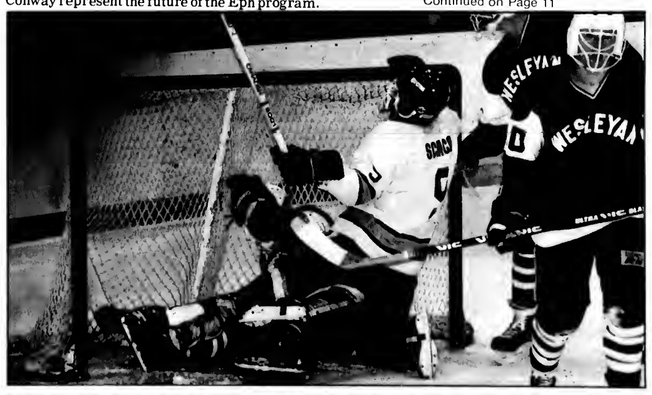
An Ephman tries to give his team the lead in their 2-2 tie with Wesleyan this year. (Mead)

Icemen end injury-riddled year

by Jamey Gallop

The men's hockey team ended their season this year with a disappointing 3-17-3 record, hardly helped by the rash of injuries that struck the squad. Of the six seniors, only two were able to last the entire year, goaltender Marty Collins and Dave Fritz. Captain Chris Pappas, Joe Sciacca, Scott Karmozyn, and Eric Knutzen all fell to injury.

The most critical aspect of this group of injured is that three of them were defensemen. This put a great deal of pressure on the less-experienced players and forced coach Bill McCormick to make some changes, such as moving Fritz and freshman Walter Hoffman from wing to defense.



The injuries forced the younger Ephs to mature rapidly in college hockey, indicating a bright future for Williams. All of the top ten scorers will return for another year; the top three are all freshmen. Will Putnam, Mike Swenson, and Chris Conway represent the future of the Eph program.

Juniors Denny Wright and Guy Kurtz also had outstanding seasons, accumulating 18 and 16 points, respectively. Freshmen Tim Frechette and Chris Donato and juniors Craig Cheevers, Chris Traggio, and Mike O'Connell also contributed offensively, each scoring at least five points.

The core of the defense watched most of this season from the bleachers. Pappas was sidelined for all but six games due to knee and back injuries. Karmozyn dressed for only seven games. John Booth '87 and senior Knutzen also suffered shoulder ailments which allowed them to play only nine and 14 games, respectively. Junior Tim McKone and Taylor Watts filled in well, as did freshman Frechette.

In addition, sophomore Mark Morrison will be back for another year of strong goaltending. Morrison had a disappointing record of 3-13-2, but registered a respectable 4.5 goals-against average.

Continued on Page 11

Senior Joe Sciacca tries to eliminate the Cardinal goaltender the hard way. His team finished 3-17-3 this year. (Moe)

The Williams Record

VOL. 99, NO. 18 [19] USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE MARCH 18, 1986

Jeffress and Tompkins in C.C. run-off

by Harwell Wells

The election for president and vice president of the College Council ended inconclusively Friday, with none of the tickets receiving a clear majority and only an 18-vote gap between the two leaders. Amy Jeffress '87 and Suzanne Biemiller '87 will square off against Mark Tompkins '87 and Gary Sheff '87 in a run-off today and tomorrow.

Other races to be decided in the run-off are the treasurer and four at-large seats on the Council.

More than 900 students voted in the election. A resolution to grant voting privileges to minority representatives to College Council and make the positions elected passed overwhelmingly.

Gary Sheff '87 (left) and Mark Tompkins '87, candidates for College Council vice president and president. (Khakee)

The run-off for Treasurer will be between Alec Dawson '87 and Sue Ann Mervine '87. The only officer elected so far is Secretary Wendell Chestnut '88.

Tompkins said he welcomed the run-off as a sign that people are taking his candidacy seriously. "(College Council) should not be passing resolutions against proposals that have already passed," he said, citing the freshman college within a College.

Jeffress emphasized that she and Biemiller are "committed to forcefully representing student opinion." Jeffress and Biemiller sent a letter to students' mailboxes Monday, in which they supported total divestment and administration-funded party security.

All five candidates running for their housing category's seat ran unopposed. Elected were the Berkshire Quad's John Horowitch '87, Dodd/Tyler's Tim Hamilton '88, Greylock's Beth Bernheimer '88, Mission Park's John Booth '87 and the Row Houses' Coleman Yeaw '87.

At-large

The six at-large positions were hotly contested, with more

Continued on Page 6

Amy Jeffress '87 (left) and Suzanne Biemiller '87, candidates for College Council president and vice president. (Khakee)

Two Hopkins floors condemned by Card

by Anne O'Malley

The College will lose the classroom space on the top two floors of Hopkins Hall during the next two years because of insufficient fire-safety provisions. The space can still, however, be used for offices.

As of September, 1986, Williamstown Building Inspector Michael Card will no longer certify the top floor of Hopkins Hall for classroom space, and effective September, 1987, the third floor will no longer be certified for classroom use.

The fourth floor now houses four classrooms, and the third floor contains three.

According to Winthrop Wassenar, director of the physical plant, Card's decision was based on the fact that there is no proven fire enclosure around the open stairwell in the building. Also, some of the classrooms do not have a satisfactory means of exit if the staircase is blocked by fire.

Wassenar stressed that this was not a sudden decision. He said Card had been warning him about the problem for several years, and that he had advised the administration to renovate the building. He said, however, the process had been delayed by the administration changes of the last year.

Still offices

The top two floors will still be certified for office use because the public safety code for office space is different from that for classroom space. According to Wassenar, the alumni news office, now located in Mears House, is scheduled to move into the top floors of Hopkins Hall this summer.

He further speculated that increases in administrative personnel, because of factors like the upcoming bicentennial fundraising drive, could eventually fill all of the available space in the building.

According to David Westall, assistant director for architectural services, "The whole building will be looked at and redesigned." An elevator and handicapped access will have to be added to bring the building up to current code requirements. Wassenar said the Hopkins Hall renovation will be something like what was done to Jesup. He expects that the design process will take at least a year.

He also said, "The building will probably have to be emptied out," during construction. Because people will not want to move during the academic year, the actual construction work will not begin until June, 1987, he said. The renovation is projected to last about a year and a half.

Alternate space

Westall said, "The building inspector (Card) has been cooperative with the phasing schedule," in order to give the College some

Continued on Page 7

Freshman college given faculty approval for fall

by Debbie Snyder

The faculty approved by voice vote a two-year experimental freshman "college within the College" at its meeting last Wednesday. It also confirmed courses changes in each division and the two courses that will be taught as part of the freshman college.

According to President Francis Oakley, Dean of Freshmen Robert Kavanaugh is heading a committee of faculty and administrators to implement the freshman college. Oakley said that, after it has been implemented by this committee, he will appoint a faculty member to run the program for the two years.

Professor Thomas Jorling, chairman of the Committee on Educational Policy, presented the proposal and explained it was being submitted to the faculty for approval because of its educational implications.

Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber, Gaudino Scholar and chairman of the Gaudino Committee, which originally proposed the freshman college, opened discussion by urging support for the idea. He called the proposal a modest experiment and highlighted the four aspects of student life the experiment is intended to improve.

Enhancing lives

Tauber said the experiment will try to enhance the students' academic lives because the two courses will be interdisciplinary, team-taught and intensely practical. Secondly, he said the experiment is designed to change the way learning takes place by counteracting a "tendency on the part of students to separate learning from living."

In an attempt to improve faculty-student relationships, the professors who teach the two courses in the freshman college will also be freshman advisers for those students, Tauber said.

The fourth area of student life Tauber said the freshman college will try to improve is students' relationships with other students. Upperclassmen will be involved with the freshman college as junior advisers and teaching assistants.

Tauber concluded by emphasizing that the experiment will only involve 10 percent of the freshman class, saying, "Students will in no way be segregated from any other freshmen."

'Positive Bias'

During the faculty discussion, Professor Stephen Lewis, chairman of the economics

Continued on Page 4

Nathaniel Lawrence: teacher/scholar

by Jocelyn Shadforth

Nathaniel Morris Lawrence, professor of philosophy and former chairman of the department, died Wednesday night at the North Adams Regional Hospital following a heart attack he suffered at his home last Monday. He was 68.

Lawrence came to Williams in 1960. He was named Massachusetts professor of philosophy in 1976 and served as department chairman from 1960 to 1976 and from 1981 to 1984.

He was a leading scholar on the philosophy of Alfred North Whitehead, writing a number of books on the subject including Whitehead's Philosophical Development, published in 1956, and Alfred North Whitehead: A Primer of his Philosophy, 1974.

In recent years, Lawrence had become interested in the philosophy of time. He attended the triennial meetings of the International Society for the Study of Time. This society, almost 20 years old, discusses studies and researches on the philosophy of time.

Active writer

Lawrence co-edited recent volumes of The Study of Time, the publication which documents the Society's proceedings. Lawrence also co-wrote Philosophical Themes in Modern Education (1973), and Philosophers on Education: Six Essays on the Foundation of Western Thought (1963), with Robert Brumbaugh.

He was co-editor, with Williams-in-Oxford Director Daniel O'Connor, of Reading in Existential Phenomenology (1967), a contributor to many professional journals and a member of the Metaphysical Society of America and the Society for Phenomenology and Existential Philosophy.

Lawrence graduated from Stanford University in 1938. He earned an S.T.B. in 1942, an M.A. in 1946, and his Ph.D. in 1949, all from Harvard University. Before coming to Williams, Lawrence taught at Wellesley College, the University of Illinois, Louisiana State University, Harvard, UCLA and Yale.

Oakley speaks

In a statement released Thursday, President Francis Oakley said of Lawrence, "By an alchemy one can only admire without being able to emulate, Nathaniel embodied the age-old Williams ideals of teacher-scholar, and did so with a rare degree of completeness. He will be sorely missed, not only by those of us who were proud to call ourselves his colleagues, but also by a host of former students whose lives he touched and deeply enriched."

Lawrence was teaching two courses this spring. Philosophy 204, History of Philosophy, Locke to Hegel, will be taught by Chairman of the Philosophy Department Laszlo Versenyi. Lawrence's Philosophy 228, The Sense of Beauty, will be continued by Paul Tong, Prof. Tong's husband and a professor of philosophy at Glassboro State College in New Jersey.

Lawrence is survived by his wife, Mary Wood Lawrence, and their children, Mary Ellen of New Haven, Nathaniel of Cambridge, and Roger of Warren, Rhode Island. A memorial service was held at St. John's on Saturday and another is planned for later this week.

The family asks that no flowers be sent. A memorial fund is being established in Lawrence's name to be administered through the President's Office. All donations should be sent there.

March 18, 1986

Who cares!

Can anyone explain why Williams students, supposedly intelligent, driven, interested men and women, seem to march through their college years with such narrow vision?

Why, for example, wouldn't a single student care enough to address the problems of racial integration on campus in an op-ed or letter to the Record. This problem — and it is a problem says everyone from the president to the admissions office — was the subject of three articles in the Record, a key thrust behind Martin White's College Council presidential campaign, and a constant concern of the Black Student Union. That no one at this tolerant, enlightened institution wanted to explain, deny, or interpret the decline in black applications or the complaints of blacks here was hard for us to take.

But then an op-ed by freshman David Vann about "scoping" women sparked three letters alone this week.

These two examples may not alarm everyone, and we know that a self-righteous peroration on student apathy will benefit no one. Yet this trend leads to the unpleasant question, "Is the Gaudino Committee right?" Are students numb to the problems of the campus and the world? Does intellectual life exist here only in the classroom?

The Record and the College Council have taken offense at Gaudino's proposals for a freshman college and a theme house, ideas predicated upon the assumption that intellectual life needs rapid resuscitation lest it die. Yet if those two student-run organizations are your only voice of protest about a decision by the deans or a proposal by the Gaudino Committee, you're in trouble. With no one responding to Record articles or editorials and the College Council voting to oppose a Gaudino proposal a day after the faculty authorized it, it's no wonder that decisions on this campus are made without student input.

If the administration and the special committees hoping to better the College environment really want to enact popular policies, they have to listen to the small supply of interested students. Those who have demonstrated no interest in the College's intellectual future and are only here to prepare for a lucrative Wall Street job have no right to complain when a new policy becomes an inconvenience during their four years at Williams.

Letters

Column

To the Editor:

Please give Edward P. Tonelli his own column, so we'll know where not to look each week.

David L. Wagner '86

Coors

To the Editor:

Last Friday morning I read Steven Shapiro's article in Germinal: "Coors: Adolph's Beer." That evening I attended the Octet concert at the Log not only to find many Williams students drinking Coors beer but to find that the Log has a special on Coors.

I write this letter to urge Williams students to read Shapiro's article which illustrates that the makers of Coors beer use racist, sexist, anti-Semitic and unfair labor practices in their company, and to stop supporting these intolerable practices by buying this beer.

Although Edward Tonelli in his letter to the editor of March 11 undermines Shapiro's article by stating only one point of the article, a reading of the article or an investigation on your own will demonstrate that the issue is much larger than simply "KKK rallying" (which to me is intolerable unto itself).

I do not believe as Shapiro does that we should stop frequenting the Log until they stop selling Coors, but I do believe that when we go to the Log or whenever we drink beer anywhere we should completely avoid Coors.

To me this is not a conservative/liberal issue or simply "moral masturbation," as Tonelli would like you to think, but an issue of human rights; an issue of human rights that are violated and against which we can easily and painlessly take a stand.

Susan Fine '87 (Exchange)

"Scoping"

To the Editor:

We disagree with David Vann's article condemning "scoping." It is not necessarily "limiting" or "oppressing" to admire the aesthetic beauty of the female form. As long as one understands that physical beauty is but one facet of a woman's being, then "scoping" is not dehumanizing. In fact, it can spark social interaction, the first step to a deeper relationship.

Furthermore, we disagree that "many (women) really do feel hurt by the scoping." We find many women are actually flattered by the attention. Certainly, this is the way we intend it. We sincerely apologize to those women we do offend — we don't mean to be dehumanizing, nor do we believe we are, as this letter indicates.

Finally, one point which Vann fails to consider is that men are not the only sex "guilty" of this heinous "crime". Women frequently engage in this activity. Does this mean women are "one-track minded"? We think not. Williams women are truly well rounded individuals. They possess considerable talents and abilities not apparent to a roving eye. As long as there are beautiful women at Williams College (what adjustment scale?) we'll keep on "scoping".

Arty Xanthos '86
Tom Kuntz '86

Honor

To the Editor:

I would like to honor Nathaniel Lawrence on the occasion of his surprising death this past week. Professor Lawrence was perhaps known most keenly by those who heard him to repartee with other philosophers, or by those who spent time in upper level classes, such as his class in Existential Philosophy.

Professor Lawrence was impressive in the breadth of his ability to fine, knowledgable conversation. Whether telling sometimes subtle, sometimes amusing anecdotes of explicating philosophers like Kant, Hume, Kierkegaard and Sartre, Professor Lawrence proved always a valuable person to know. I am sure that many at Williams will remember him with affection and respect.

Catherine Ruckley '86

Accuracy

To the Editor:

I would like to take a moment to ask a favor of you on behalf of many students who have appeared in your feature called "Man on the Quad."

My picture appeared in this feature in this last issue of the Record along with a (mis)quote. I am not in any way offended by what was printed, as it was based upon what was actually said (although the meaning of my words was somewhat twisted) and because the matter is so trivial in this case.

After talking to a number of students and finding that they have experienced similar moments of surprise upon reading what they supposedly said, I feel it is only fair to students who are willing to be interviewed in the future (a category of which I am no longer a member) that you either print an accurate quotation (the person interviewing me did not even write down my exact words) or exclude the quotation marks from your feature.

I do not wish to imply that "Man on the Quad" is not a good feature. Quite the contrary, it is usually interesting and relevant to the rest of the issue. All I am requesting is a little more journalistic accuracy.

Gordon Goodell '89

Courageous

To the Editor:

We applaud David Vann's courageous opinions in last week's Record. As males on this campus, often we have reflected on the need for someone of Vann's stature to boldly address this urgent issue. His insight has inspired us to reject the sexual stereotypes here at Williams and to strive for more productive interaction.

We anticipate that our feelings of rejuvenated sensitivity are secretly shared by many others. Bravo Dave!

Thomas Higgins '88
William Ryan '89
Kurt Oeler '88 and the Crow's Nest

"ED-ict"

To the Editor:

Perhaps we are speaking of saving only nickels and dimes, but we've found a basically expendable item on the College Council's budget which it could probably do away with without much difficulty.

Continued on Page 7

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and J. R. Schafer
NEWS ..... Virginia Demaree
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Eric Hanson and Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Nik Khakee
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Andrew Mayer, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT FEATURES/ARTS ..... Corinna Lamb
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff, Frances Lashen
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright
GRAPHICS ..... Penny Schenk
ADVERTISING ..... Martin Furey, Lisa Klem
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma. and reentered at Williamstown, Ma. March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267

Reagan's SDI is misleading, dangerous and unworkable

by Mary Keller '87
and Charlie Cochran '88

We would like to address President Reagan's speech of Wednesday, Feb. 26, in which he urged the American public to support an eight percent increase in the military budget, and specifically to support his Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI or Star Wars) budget. In his essay "Politics and the English Language," George Orwell stated, "Political language has to consist largely of euphemism, question begging and sheer cloudy vagueness" because "there is a gap between one's real and one's declared aims."

Reagan's argument is misleading and self-contradictory. He creates a non-existent military gap. The real gap present in Reagan's speech is not between Soviet and U.S. military forces, rather it is between Reagan's drummed up paranoia and the truth. And though he claims we must not evade our duty to insure our children's security, his SDI elixir is naive in its strategy and promises.

Reagan states "... my highest duty as President (is) to preserve peace and defend these United States." From here the question begging begins. Of course he is referring to the Soviet military apparatus, but Reagan goes on to build it into something that it is not.

He provides us with a listing of the superior number of Soviet combat aircraft, submarines, tanks and artillery pieces. "We have begun to close some of these gaps, but if we are to regain our margins of safety, more must be done." American technological and strategic superiority makes up for lost numbers. Professor Thomas Jorling and William Miller are two of the experts that have claimed that U.S. and Soviet forces are relatively equal, and there has never been a military leader who would ask to change U.S. forces for Soviet forces.

In the face of this widely accepted opinion that relative parity exists, Reagan is comfortable creating the impression that we are in need of restoring lost strength.

He tells us that the Soviets "respect only nations that negotiate from a position of strength." How much more strength could a nation really need than to be able to destroy its enemy eight or ten times over?

The problem is not that we lack strength or must achieve greater levels of strength in order to tame the Russians. The problem is the nature of the arms race itself. There will never be an end to technological development. There will never be the ultimate weapon. There will always be new windows, gaps, and compromise positions while our nations pursue technological fixes instead of dealing as cohabitants of the earth.

Reagan claims that SDI is "America's last, best hope for negotiating real reduction in nuclear arms." He is saying we must build more arms to reduce arms. This is like saying that two plus two equals five.

Can he really believe that there will not be other alternative proposals or negotiations? How different is this "last best hope" from the MX missile which was to be the final solution to the window of vulnerability?

He then calls defense budget cuts arbitrary cuts. How are they different than cuts in Medicare/Medicaid, aid to dependent children, nutrition programs, and reducing clean air and clean water programs?

We would posit that an educated citizenry is our best asset in the defense of our nation. Three years ago, the President's Commission on Education reported on what it called "A Nation at Risk." It said, as pointed out by Jim Wright in the Democratic response to the President, "If an unfriendly power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre education performance that exists today, we might have viewed it as an act of war."

Yet President Reagan's defense budget will perpetuate the problem by depleting funds from much needed programs.

SDI is not feasible — it cannot be tested, it can be fooled, and in any event it will only be bypassed by new innovations in the continuing spiral of the technological arms race.

Alcohol and divestment: is there a connection?

by Hart Murphy '88

Forgive me; I realize these ideas are passe, having been, after all, among last semester's topics. By raising them again — and together — I violate, among other things, the unwritten Williams code which says that the college can think about no more than one political issue at a time, and for no longer than three consecutive issues of the Record (after a grace period of at least two semesters, an issue may be allowed to resurface).

Concern about issues at Williams dies out as quickly as it appears not necessarily because things are resolved or otherwise get better (in this case, they have unquestionably gotten worse), but because we are the generation of the MTV attention span. Our politics here are a jump-cut montage without music: The Log, nose-biting, divestment, black life, Gaudino Committee. And the more things change ...

At Williams, divestment, curiously, seems to be perceived as a far-left cause. And at a time when even the stodgily conservative British Economist concludes that, "five years ago, there was a case for "constructive engagement" ... But Mr. Botha has come just about as far along the reform path as he voluntarily can. Subtle persuasion looks very much as though it has run its course."

True, when the debate degenerates to the level at which it is assumed that not to support divestment is to favor racism, little is gained. And there can be no doubt that many divestment protestors are more agitated by the prospect of getting their picture on the front page of the Record than by the fate of Nelson Mandela.

But, by the same token, if we are in fact, as Jay McInerney '76, the first authentic voice of our generation in literature, puts it, the "blank" generation, perhaps there is more to it than that. Granted, part of what makes us "blanker" than previous generations is our refusal to fill in blanks with counter-culture stereotypes and knee-jerk political affiliations. My worry, however, is that maybe we're blank — and shudder at the mere thought of protest — because we think we can empty our lives of things like choice and commitment and cause.

On one level, it isn't finally so strange that active opposition to the most racially oppressive government on the planet has somehow become identified as a far-left cause. Its most conspicuous adherents, the would-be Marxist fanatics who think politics is everything, sadly seem to be almost the only young people left today for whom politics is anything.

The fact is that our lives are irreducibly — though not exclusively — political. By trying to ignore that fact, we don't escape it. We merely hand over the power to decide what it means over to someone else.

Take the drinking age. Even the most ostensibly apathetic Williams student won't refuse a beer. But for most of us, thanks to recent legislation, drinking a beer is now an overtly political act. An outright crime, in fact. Do we care?

Sure, we whined briefly about the law's effect on beloved social traditions (i.e., the Log). But although the inconvenient consequences of the new drinking age are being loudly registered, next to nothing has been said about the injustice of the law itself.

Even mainstream press and academic studies have had more to say about how bogus the new alcohol legislation is. Besides the fact that banning alcohol for one age group in order to stop drunk driving is a little like banning french fries in order to cure heart disease, the most optimistic study before President Reagan's injunction was the National Safety Council's estimate that 730 lives might be saved with a national drinking age of 21. More recent studies, such as that by Case Western University, predict no change in the number of drunk driving deaths.

But even if 730 lives would be saved, prohibiting alcoholic beverages altogether would surely save many more. So where does one draw the line? Why not at the point at which one becomes a legal adult, responsible in the eyes of the law for his actions and privileged, supposedly, to all the rights attendent the status "citizen"?

Indeed, after that point, the arbitrary revocation or suspension of any rights —however minor, however troublesome —should, logically, not even be a question. (Which perhaps might also be a useful thought for an administration which likes to talk in "experiments," like the Log's two-drink limit, as if we were some sort of lab animals).

The point is not that excessive drinking cannot become a vice and a danger to the rights of others. The point is that college, like most important institutions in history, has never occurred without alcohol (and, behind the hypocrisy, no one seems to expect it to). And approximately 99.4 percent of 18-to-21-year-olds are not involved in alcohol related traffic accidents every year.

So how did such stupid legislation get passed? Why do the law books of Massachusetts now include a law which is patently, congenitally unenforceable? A law which thus subverts the very notion of the rule of law — by making an ascendent class of society that much more comfortable with the idea of breaking it? In a word, MADD.

In the case of a law — no matter how senseless — presented as a measure for saving lives, if the groups affected don't stand up in opposition, no one will. Thus on the basis of sheer emotionalism, the rights of an entire class of society have been abrogated. The mothers of the victims of drunk driving should no more be allowed to decide who can and cannot drink in our society than shareholders can be expected to weigh with undiluted, dispassionate reason the complicated moral pros and cons of engagement with South Africa when that engagement is winning them a profit.

In comparing these two issues, I do not mean to equate them in magnitude. Far from it. But perhaps that disparity can call our attention even more dramatically to one very real connection: Divestment protests are unpopular on campus for the same reason a raise in the drinking age was possible. No matter their numbers, 18-to-21-year-old Americans are a completely passive political constituency. And lawmakers know better than to fear the willfully impotent.

Perhaps this kind of analogy to self-interest is what is needed to finally rouse us from our celebrated apathy.

NEWSBRIEFS

Rally

Ten thousand students from many New England colleges are expected to participate in a march and rally in Boston on April 4 to protest apartheid, according to organizers here. The march will start at Northeastern University at 3 p.m. and will end at the Boston Commons, where the rally will be held.

There are a minimum number of seats reserved for Williams students on a bus from North Adams State University to Boston, but organizers need to be contacted to reserve additional seats. For more information, call Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition members Mary Keller '87 at x6101 or Willa Morris '88 at x6900.

Lecture

Ray Hooker, a member of the Nicaraguan National Assembly, will speak tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

Hooker, president of the Foreign Affairs Committee, will discuss the current political situation. His lecture is relevant in light of the Congressional vote on aid to the contras .

THE CLIP SHOP
HAIR! HAIR! HAIR! HAIR! HAIR!
Keep it looking great. Make an appointment for a trim or cut today.
For extra body and shine, bring this card with you and receive $1.00 off FIZZ—the better styling mousse.

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary
125 North St., Bennington, VT 802-442-9823 or 802-447-2648
49 Spring St., Williamstown, MA 413-458-9167 or 413-458-8585
122 North St., Pittsfield, MA 413-442-6903 or 413-447-9576

CC knocks proposal on freshman college

by Allison Wertheim

At Thursday's meeting, the College Council passed a proposal, by 19-5-4, opposing the "college within the College" experiment that will be implemented next year. This conflicts with the opinion of the faculty, which voted Wednesday afternoon to institute this new program.

The "college within the College" experiment will start next year and run two years. Incoming freshmen will be informed of the program through the freshman informational packet. Freshmen may choose this program as a housing option, and 50 students will be chosen randomly from all who apply.

These students will live together and enroll in an interdisciplinary course each semester. In addition, the professors teaching the courses will be the freshmen's advisers.

According to the proposal, any intellectual advantage which may accompany the program will not outweigh the fact that these 50 students will be isolated from their peers during freshmen year. The proposal also includes a request that in the future the Council be consulted before the administration decides on issues so closely related to student life.

Adjustment problems

Additional arguments Council members made against the freshman experiment stress that the difficulties of adjusting and fitting in during freshman year would only be hindered by such a program. Representatives also said they feel insulted by the faculty's insinuation that intellectual discussion does not take place in the present freshmen-entry system.

It was pointed out that, in many freshmen entries, students inevitably enroll in some of the same classes and that this not only fosters discussion, but stress, tension and competition.

"Incoming freshmen will not be making an informed choice," Mark Tompkins '87 said. "They should really know what they're getting into."

Suzanne Biemiller '87 pointed out that the pamphlet describing the program might sway freshman the wrong way and prove misleading.

The majority of Council members agreed that, because Williams is a small school with an already divisive freshman housing system, it would be pointless to narrow the scope of 50 additional

Continued on Page 7

Experienced travelers agree:
DON'T GO WITHOUT "LET'S GO"®
They're the most comprehensive budget guide books available today—with up-to-date information on where to stay, what to eat, what to see, and how to get there. It's the only guide you'll ever need.
"Unique and uniquely appealing... The more I read other guidebooks, the more I like LET'S GO."
—Time Magazine
"Interesting and lively...the coverage extends far beyond the beaten path."
—TWA Ambassador Magazine

LET'S GO
Harvard Student Agencies, Inc.
EUROPE • USA • BRITAIN & IRELAND • FRANCE • ITALY • ISRAEL & EGYPT • GREECE • MEXICO • SPAIN, PORTUGAL & MOROCCO • CALIFORNIA & PACIFIC NORTHWEST
$9.95 each (Europe, $10.95)
ST. MARTIN'S PRESS

Faculty—

Continued from page 1

department, said the program should be presented to incoming freshmen with a positive bias. Jorling agreed, saying whoever writes the letter to incoming freshmen will try to attract as many freshmen as possible in order to be able to choose a diverse group.

Professor of Economics Gordon Winston asked, "What does the Gaudino Committee or the CEP see as the ultimate outcome of a successful experiment?" Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said determining the outcome now is unnecessary. Oakley commented, "It is a two-year experiment that ceases in two years. Anything that follows should be presented in the third year."

Professor Charles Dew, chairman of the history department, objected to such an experiment taking place during freshman year, noting "freshman year works remarkably well here." He said that, of the students he had talked to, the freshmen were most opposed to the idea. Dew said, citing the opinion of students with whom he talked, "Parents are going to see it (the freshman college) as a high-powered group at a high-powered college and push their kids to get it."

Associate Professor of Classics Meredith Hoppin, a member of the Gaudino Committee, said, "People tend to hold very dear to whatever experience they had," which she believed could explain the reluctance of students, particularly freshmen, to support the experiment.

Oakley concluded the discussion by supporting the idea. "I attach very great importance to the willingness to experiment and to learn from the experiments," he said.

Man on the Quad

The Record recently asked students "Are you going to study over Spring Break?"

Interviews by Mary Iliff; photographs by Richard Ward.

"I don't think I'll fit any studying in while I'm playing rugby in England." — Craig Kirby '86

"No, I don't think I should." — Mike DeSenne '89

"Yes, I am ... unfortunately. I have to catch up from the aftereffects of exams." — Hope Cookis '88

"Study for what?" — Alex Gregory '89

"No way. All my mid-terms are over before Spring Break so I'm taking a break in the Bahamas." — Molly O'Bourn '89

"There is no way in hell I'm going to study over Spring Break. I'm going south to get a savage tan." — John Servin '89

Student's help down on the Farm

by Midori Sonoda

Williams College and the Berkshire Farm Center and Services for Youth have sustained a long and fruitful relationship. There has been a connection between the two dating back to the earliest days of Berkshire Farm, due to the relationship between former Williams President Franklin Carter and the Burnham family, which founded the center. This year marks the centennial of the Farm, which has grown in several areas without losing sight of its original goal: to serve male adolescents who are experiencing difficulties at home and/or in their communities.

Adjudicated boys from 12 to 16 years of age receive therapeutic care at the Farm's Residential Treatment Center. Not all of the boys have been assigned there through the legal system, though. Some, for example, come from families which were unable to deal with them.

Located in Canaan, New York, about 28 miles from Williamstown, it is an open setting with boys divided into residential units called cottages. The program gives therapeutic treatment in a residential environment. In addition to the regular staff which ranges from cottage coordinators and group leaders to psychiatrists and social workers, there is also an important volunteer program.

Such a program has been going on formally for about seven years, though Williams students have been visiting boys for roughly 90 years, according to Director of Volunteer Services Nancy Tela. Each year the Farm employs about 25 volunteers from Williams. The strong enthusiasm of these volunteers is evidenced by the fact that there are two Williams graduates who are now full-time employees at Berkshire Farm.

Volunteer creativity

When students first volunteer, Tela explained, they fill out a skill sheet that is used to assist the Farm in choosing the appropriate student for each boy. Usually students visit cottages or tutor boys individually, but the volunteer program is quite flexible. In the past, students have been very creative in performing their volunteer duties. Some developed mini-courses and initiated activities such as pizza-making, roller skating, and going out to dinner. Currently a few students are involved in a sex education course which deals mainly with contraception. Kate Keenan '86, one of the leaders of the course, said "The boys take it very seriously. They're receptive and treat it with respect."

There are many reasons why students chose to volunteer at Berkshire Farm. Keenan cited her interest in psychiatry and social work in explaining her interest in the job. Other students were interested by the chance to volunteer, meet people from different backgrounds, and also to get away from the campus. Volunteer Cindy Soohoo '88 said "I love Williams but it's unreal — there are a lot of other people out there."

The volunteers seem to enjoy their work at Berkshire Farm, although some are a bit uncomfortable when they make their first visit. Soohoo admitted that she was uneasy the first time she went to the Farm and didn't know how to react when the first boy with whom she spoke told her how he had broken into a mall and began listing the kinds of drugs he had done. She soon learned to cope with this initial fear in developing a sensitive attitude toward the boys.

"Working there keeps one aware that people are people," Soohoo commented. "Once you talk to them you realize that they're not hoodlums like you might think." Meredith Miller '87 recalled the guilty feelings she had when she began working at the Farm which resulted from her realization that the kids weren't there because they were simply bad people, but because they did not come from the same privileged background that most Williams students enjoyed. Although she tutors, Miller believes that the most important part of volunteering is actually talking with the boys.

Not everyone is completely satisfied with the system, however. Another volunteer, Heidi Wagner '87, thinks that the Berkshire Farm is too institutionalized and does not do enough work with the families of its residents. She believes that the administration is too out-of-touch with the kids. Even with regard to herself, she said, "I couldn't communicate

Continued on Page 6

Grant's life

Mabou mines president's odyssey

by Elizabeth Skorcz

In a performance Friday at the AMT MainStage, Mabou Mines, an experimental theatre group based in New York, combined the pure sensuous excitement of music videos with the intellectual and emotional challenge of genuine drama to produce Cold Harbor, a provocative interpretation of the life of Ulysses S. Grant.

Bill Raymond and Dale Wolsey, who conceived and directed Cold Harbor, decided to make the former general and president the subject of an upcoming exhibit at a historical museum. In this context, Grant's life is not reenacted but rather recounted by Grant himself, who comes alive and steps out of a display case to tell his own story. His monologues play off of the scenes in which the two curators, played by Greg Mehrten and Rosemary Quinn, catalogue the artifacts which trace Grant's career, as both public figure and private man.

Bill Raymond gives an impeccable performance as the loquacious, crude, and humorous Grant. In fact, his characterization is so consistently convincing that he appears to be a reincarnation. Raymond plays Grant as the man he was, not as the hero that historical imagination makes of such figures. Raymond's Grant is a racist, a drunkard, a man in love with an ideal instead of a real woman, and a warmonger who always regretted the last assault on Cold Harbor, where Union forces did not inflict losses on the enemy equal to their own.

In spite of all these undesirable attributes, however, Raymond's Grant has the appeal of an indomitable fighter, and he is human enough to be able to reflect, "What has your pride become now?" after telling the horrifying story of the Union siege of Vicksburg.

Effective commentary

The special effects used in the production provide aesthetic interest, but they also function as commentary on the relationship between Grant and his wife Julia, and at a deeper level, on the inevitable impulse to create history from a collection of discrete articles and facts.

The tableaux vivants, for example, emphasize the extent to which Julia was a statue on a pedestal rather than a real woman for Grant. Depicting concepts such as "love," "virtue," or "moral courage," the tableaux were visions, lit dreamily and revealed for a few moments at a time. The series of slides relating to Grant's life and the spot-lit, glowing, glass display cases holding his artifacts provided a clear contrast to the flesh and blood Grant.

As good as Raymond was, Cold Harbor could have been improved by the existence of a more active role for the two curators. If they had been fully developed characters instead of facilitators for the slides, recorded monologues, and music, the message of the play would have been clearer. At the end, the viewer was left unsatisfied, wondering whether Cold Harbor's creators meant simply to demystify and explore a particular historical character, to comment on the brutality of the Civil War, to question common assumptions about the construction of history, or to provide a vehicle for a very talented actor.

O'Riley sparks orchestra with virtuosity and vigor

by Tim Harbold

With guest soloist Christopher O'Riley at the piano, the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra presented its third program of the season under the baton of Julius Hegyi.

The symphony opened its program with a charming rendition of Quincy Porter's Dance in Three-Time. Although the orchestra's performance often lacked rhythmic excitement, the solo woodwinds carried the piece with their sensitive melodic lines.

Unfortunately, strong soloists were unable to iron out the inconsistencies in the next work, Shumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat — Op. 38. Despite some truly delightful work, notably in the contrasting trios of the Scherzo movement and in the flute solos throughout by Tara Kazak '86, the performance lacked overall coherence. The orchestra did not always play together and the interpretation was often uninspiring. Led by the strength of the brass, however, the symphony opened and closed the piece with authority.

Dazzling pianist

Certainly, the highlight of the evening was the performance of pianist Christopher O'Riley, who dazzled the audience with his sensitive lyricism and impressive virtuosity. In Ravel's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, O'Riley's interpretation was exquisite and his technique impeccable. Only in the difficult Presto movement was O'Riley forced to sacrifice his thoughtful interpretation somewhat to the technical demands of Ravel's music. Although the orchestra failed to match the color and excitement of O'Riley's playing in the two fast movements, they played the thickly textured Adagio assai with great sensitivity. With O'Riley's plaintive melodies and Carl Jenkins' delicate English Horn solos, the entrancing Adagio assai was the evening's greatest success.

The last work on the program, Rachmaninoff's Rapsodic on a theme of Paganini for Piano and Orchestra — Op. 43 was a well-chosen finale. The strings were at their best when they played Rachmaninoff's soulful than 20 candidates vying for the positions. Two of the seats were won outright by Hans Humes '87 and Jim Reicheld '87. A run-off will be held for the other four spots between Don Dagnoli '87, Henry Jones '88, John Rumsey '88, Anne Shulman '88, Pete Washburne '87, Jeff Weinstein '87 and Ho Yoon '88.

Continued on Page 6

Elections

Continued from Page 1

The motion to allow elected, voting minority representatives on the College Council received the required two-thirds majority of votes. Bcause more than 50 percent of the student body voted, it will go into effect with the run-off election this week. Until now, the posts were self-nominated and chosen by the Election Committee.

According to Council minority Representative John Calderon '87, the vote was significant. "I do think the change can make a difference. Several times this year (College Council votes) have come down to a tie." He also said he believes the change will encourage minority participation in the Council.

Calderon says the Admissions Office minority criteria will define who can vote to elect the representatives, but in general cited blacks, hispanics, Asians and Indians as eligible. As of Sunday, no candidates for the position had been announced.

Committees

John Canty '88 won the only position open on the Advisory Committee for Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR), emerging from among six candidates.

Three positions were open to rising seniors on the Committee for Honorary Degrees. One seat went to Malcolm Smith, while the other two spots will be decided in a run-off between Averil Clarke, Geoffrey Smith, and George Welch.

Two spots on the Honor-Discipline Committee were open in each class. The class of 1987 chose Reicheld and Jeff Heilman, and '88 chose Theresa Lee and Sarah Benioff. The class of 1989's spots will be run off between Evan Davis, Doug Gilbert, Leslie Jeffs, Jim McNulty and Blair Newton.

Wendell Chestnut '88, the new secretary of the College Council. (Khakee)

Alec Dawson '87

Sue Anne Mervine '87

Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank

CUSTOMER INFORMATION FROM GENERAL MOTORS

HOW TO AVOID THE DANGERS OF COUNTERFEIT AUTO PARTS

INFERIOR PARTS COULD THREATEN YOUR SAFETY

Today, a counterfeiter no longer has to print phony twenty-dollar bills. Selling imitation automotive replacement parts—packaged to resemble products from legitimate manufacturers—is big business.

For people who buy and use counterfeit auto parts, though, the consequences can be costly. For example, body panels may require expensive labor to bring their finish quality up to the rest of the car. Bogus oil filters have failed after 200 miles, causing unprotected engines to seize up, requiring their complete replacement.

Inferior transmission fluid has solidified at 0° Fahrenheit, ruining transmissions. And counterfeit antifreeze has eaten right through aluminum parts.

The failure can be safety-related. A fatal 1985 bus accident in Britain was attributed to the installation of counterfeit brake parts. Ill-fitting counterfeit gas caps can fall off, increasing the risk of a fire in a roll-over accident.

Here's how to make sure you receive parts that are made to work best in your GM car. Your most reliable source is your GM dealer. He can supply any part for your GM car or truck. Buying popular brand parts from reputable stores or garages is another way to improve your chances of getting the right part. But wherever you buy, be suspicious of discounts that seem too good to be true.

Some tip-offs that a part might be counterfeit:

Flimsy packaging.

Lack of name-brand identification such as AC-Delco.

"Look-alike" graphics or a change in the spelling of a recognized trade name. In this way counterfeiters can avoid prosecution under the 1984 Trademark Counterfeiting Law. So examine the package carefully.

If a replacement part doesn't fit easily, you should probably return it. A reputable distributor will almost certainly give you a refund or credit.

General Motors is taking strong measures in the U.S. and overseas to put a stop to parts counterfeiting. GM is trying to stop the problem at its source. So far we've helped U.S. marshals confiscate parts in raids on 29 counterfeiting operations. Another eight operations have been uncovered and prosecuted in foreign countries.

GM is also developing a hologram identification device, much like those becoming popular on credit cards, to improve security in our parts distribution.

After all, General Motors has a tremendous investment in GM parts that work together to give our customers safe, reliable cars and trucks. We want our customers to be confident they can maintain their GM vehicles at the same level of high quality we build them.

This advertisement is part of our continuing effort to give customers useful information about their cars and trucks and the company that builds them.

GM
Chevrolet • Pontiac
Oldsmobile • Buick
Cadillac • GMC Truck

Symphony

Continued from Page 5

Russian melodies, and the work was a wonderful showcase for O'Riley's virtuosity and playful versatility.

Apparently inspired by the guest pianist's stunning performance, the orchestra played with a great deal of character. O'Riley's display of virtuosity, particularly toward the end of the work, was astounding, and the whimsical closing measure was delightful. Certainly the lengthy standing ovations were well-deserved.

Boy's Farm

Continued from Page 5

with them very well; there was an amazing culture and language barrier no matter how much I wanted to help or understand."

Mutual respect

For the most part, however, the relationship between the volunteers and the Farm's participants is very productive, according to those involved. The situation is aided by the fact that the students don't talk down to the boys and treat them like delinquents. David Koota '87, the Williams coordinator of this volunteer service, said "We give individual attention, otherwise there is a lack there since it's possible for them to get treated like the masses."

Koota explained that the presence of the volunteers, who represent members of mainstream society, in the boys' living environment at the Farm helps to show the boys that they can get along with people outside their immediate world. The concern shown by the volunteers is also important.

There is also a reciprocal relationship in which the residents learn as much about the students as the latter do of the boys. Daniel Anderson '86 said, "It's good for them to be exposed to us. We dispel myths; they thought college was like Animal House." Tela concurred with this view in stressing the value of the volunteers to the program. "Students add tremendous dimensions to our kids," she said. "They act as positive role models and share a type of life which they would not have been able to be exposed to otherwise."

Hopkins

Continued from Page 1

time to find alternative classroom spaces.

Plans have already been made to replace the lost fourth-floor classrooms with additional classrooms to be added to the basement of the Bronfman Science Center. According to Wassenar, the addition will include three general classrooms, two small rooms for psychology department research, and a computer science classroom.

One of the classrooms, with a capacity of 50 students, will be tiered and have a projection booth to meet audiovisual needs. Pittsfield architect Terry Hallock has already drawn the plans, and bids are now being accepted for the construction work, which is expected to take place this summer.

Bronfman's stairwells were extended down to the basement level (one floor below the auditorium) last summer, in anticipation of the project.

No construction

Wassener is a member of a Classroom Study Committee, which will try to identify classroom spaces to replace the third floor Hopkins Hall classrooms. He said he does not expect another construction project to be necessary because he believes many classrooms are currently being under-utilized and there are other spaces on campus which could be converted to classroom use.

He pointed out that the Physics Department has been able to find enough classrooms for their courses even though the physics building has been closed for renovation this year. Thus, he believes the re-opening of the Physics Building next year will make extra classroom spaces available.

Council

Continued from Page 4

students by isolating them in such a project.

Other Council business included a proposal in favor of the development of theme housing "to enhance the intellectual atmosphere of the campus." Although the motion passed by a large majority, some representatives felt the theme houses would create an intellectual clique and would be too similar to a fraternity.

Snack bar billing

The Council also voted unanimously in favor of a billing system at the snack bar whereby students would be able to charge items rather than pay by cash or check. This plan would involve a bi-monthly billing system, and students would have two months to pay before losing the charging privilege. One suggestion for the system is to use the same computer as in dining halls so students could use their I.D. cards.

According to the Council, students would benefit from this system because they would no longer have to carry cash or write checks for small amounts. Members of the Council said they believe the snack bar would profit because more students will purchase food because of the convenience and Food Service will no longer have to pay fees to cash such a large number of checks.

The College Council also decided to donate $100 to a scholarship fund started in memory of Professor of Philosophy Nathaniel Lawrence, who died last week.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

Why not eliminate the more tiresome and uninformed sections of the Record, (i.e., Letters, Sports, News, and Features), and replace them with 8-10 weekly pages of Ed Tonelli's enlightening verbal masturbation. The "Record" should simply be named the "ED-ict" and could include such popular (Ha!) new features as the EDitorial pages, the Op—ED section, and our personal favorite, "ED on the Quad."

We could go on, but WE know when to stop. Get the point?
P.S. "Hey Ed, this Coors' for you!"

Dave Shoultz '89
Tim Shaw '89

FINAL DEADLINE: FRIDAY, 11 APRIL SEE DEAN SPEAR FOR APPLICATIONS

Fall or Spring Semester

AMERICAN MARITIME STUDIES

Accredited by
WILLIAMS COLLEGE
Taught at
MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM

Ecology
Economics
Biology History
Literature
American Studies
Public Policy
Oceanography
Off-Shore Research

WILLIAMS-MYSTIC PROGRAM • MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM, INC. • MYSTIC, CONNECTICUT 06355 • (203) 572-0711 Ext. 359

How to buy shades.

With the American Express® Card you can buy everything from new spectacles to some pretty spectacular clothing. The latest in audio equipment and the latest albums. The Card is the perfect way to pay for just about anything you'll want during college.

How to get the Card before you graduate.

Because we believe that college is the first sign of success, we've made it easier for you to get the American Express Card. Graduating students can get the Card as soon as they accept a $10,000 career oriented job. If you're not graduating this semester, you can apply for a special sponsored Card. Look for student applications on campus. Or call 1 800 THE CARD, and tell them you want a student application.

The American Express Card. Don't leave school without it.™

TRAVEL RELATED SERVICES

© 1986 American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc.

The track team will try to regain the Little Three title they lost for the first time in five years last season, and senior John Ellison will lead the way in his final campaign. (Finnemore)

Tracksters run to ECACs, Div. I Nationals

by Stewart Verdery

The women's track team was well-represented at the ECAC Division III meet last weekend at Colby. Sue Northen '89 topped the Eph effort by placing fifth in the triple jump at 34'10 1/4". This leap not only set a school record, but also earned the only two points for Williams in the meet.

Four other school records were set, but did not place in the highly competitive meet. Dawn MacAuley '89 became the best in Williams history in both the 55 meter hurdles (9.21) and the 400 meters (61.02). Becky Conklin '87 surpassed the old 1500 record with her time of 4:54.07, and the 3200 meter relay team of Sara St. Antoine '89, Anne Thompson '89, Sarah Pierce '88, and Conklin bettered the old mark at 9:59.59.

In early March, a small contingent from the men's team went to the Division I championships. John Servin '89 and Andre Lopez '87 ran in the 800, but could not overcome the tough Division I competition to place. However, the two-mile relay team of Tom Pingree '86, Ed Tonelli '86, Servin and Lopez completed a sterling race in a time of 7:49.88, placing fourth and setting a new school mark.

Junior Steve Belsito tries to tag out an opposing runner last season, as the squad went 7-18 on the year. After losing only catcher Mike Coakley and DH Phil Lusardi, the hardballers will try to improve on that mark. (LeBauer)

Lady Ephs place 8th

Falling a bit from their dominance of recent years but still placing well with only four Ephs scoring points, the women's swim team took eighth place in the Nationals this week.

As has been the case all year, Joan Horgan '87 and senior Captain Kathy Kirmayer led the way. Horgan took two third places in the 200 Back and 200 IM, and then swam a 1:01.22 to secure fourth in the 100 Back. Kirmayer ended her college career with a 10th place in the 200 Free (1:57.91), a seventh in the 100 Free (54.12) and a sixth place in the 50 Free (24.91).

Four other swimmers and two divers accompanied Horgan and Kirmayer to the competition. Lani Searfoss '87 and Judy Skidd '88 joined Horgan and Kirmayer to take fifth in the 400 Medley Relay with a time of 4:07.19. The same four then combined to place ninth in the 200 Medley Relay with a 1:54.11.

Junior Jennifer Raymond in swimming and divers Jennifer Campbell '87 and Emily Parker '86 all went to the Nationals off to fine performances at the New Englands. However they were unable to place in the tournament.

"I thought with only four people scoring, to get eighth in the Nationals is extraordinary," said Coach Carl Samuelson.

Junior Jim Sperry and several Lord Jeffs appear to be off the mark as the ball bounds away during their matchup last year. The squad finished 6-4. (Scheibe)

Correction

Last week's issue of the Record contained an error in relation to the ski team's 12th-place finish at Nationals. The race was the Divison I Nationals, instead of Division III as the article stated. The ski team is one of only two teams, along with squash, that regularly play on the Division I level.

Bed & Breakfast

BATCHELDER 1871 HOUSE

OLD VICTORIAN HOME
CLOSE AND CONVENIENT
REASONABLE RATES

Routes 7 & 346
Pownal, Vermont (802) 823-5335

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

Summer or Fall 1986
Summer 1987
WASHINGTON OR LONDON INTERNSHIPS
SUMMER SESSION ONLY
at Wadham College
of the University of
OXFORD

Accredited courses in government, economics, journalism and pre-law by an outstanding faculty.

Full Academic Year Programs at the London School of Economics, St. Andrews Universities, for Qualified Juniors and Seniors.

All credits transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, Virginia (Founded in 1776)

Inquiries to:
Mrs. Janet Kollek, J.D.
Admissions Director
The Washington International Studies Center
212-724-0804 or 0136
(EO/AA)

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipients are all those who participated in the 6-hour charity relay last Saturday. The competition was won by a Dodd-Bryant team, raising the most money for various local charities. Runners, this Bud's for you!

GENUINE GENUINE

thisBud'sforyou!

THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON SOVIET STUDIES of the American Council of Learned Societies and the Social Science Research Council

PRESENTS

Professor William Taubman, Amherst College

BETWEEN TWO SUMMITS:

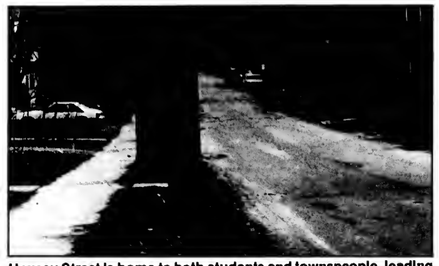
GORBACHEV, REAGAN, AND THE IMPORTANCE OF SOVIET STUDIES

FOLLOWED BY A ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION OF GRADUATE TRAINING POSSIBILITIES, CAREER OPPORTUNITIES, FELLOWSHIP AND FOREIGN STUDY PROGRAMS LED BY:

Blair Ruble, Staff Associate, Social Science Research Council

Steven A. Grant, Acting Chief, Office of Soviet Research, U.S.I.A.

TUESDAY, MARCH 18
7:00 PM - 10:00 PM
DRISCOLL LOUNGE



EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
SALE
the Co-op

LEVI'S

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

The Williams Record

VOL. 99, NO. 20 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE APRIL 15, 1986

Hoxsey Street is home to both students and townspeople, leading to town and gown conflict. The Williamstown Selectmen addressed the issue at their meeting last week. (Albright)

Selectmen address Hoxsey St. dispute

by Virginia Demaree

Several residents of Hoxsey Street labeled Williams students living in apartments on that street "rude" and "obnoxious" neighbors during the Williamstown Selectmen's meeting last week.

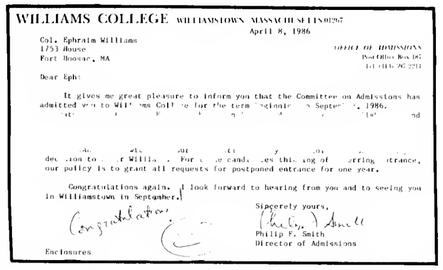
Pointing to alleged noise from late-night parties and congestion on the street resulting from illegal parking, Dagmar Bubriski of 42 Hoxsey St., called for disciplinary action against the students by police, the College or the students' landlords.

The result of the meeting, however, was acceptance of a good neighbor policy, designed to increase communication among the students, landlords and townspeople, and a pledge from Dean of the College Ste-

Continued on Page 8

1,138 admitted for Class of 1990

by Jim Hartnett



Last week was a busy one for the Admissions Office, as 1138 applicants for the Class of 1990 were accepted and an "Inside the admissions office" news story was broadcast for PBS's McNeil-Lehrer Newshour.

The news segment, which appeared in the final 15 minutes of the April 9 show, revealed how admissions officers deliberate over students' applications. To film the story, McNeil-Lehrer was allowed to bring its cameras into admissions conferences and record the officers reviewing applications and voting to accept students.

Assistant Director of Admissions Tom Parker said, "The story represents the first time ever that news cameras were allowed in a college's admissions office. Overall, the story was very good for the College, and all the feedback received — from high school guidance counselors to alumni — was overwhelmingly positive."

Parker also admitted that, although no school names were mentioned in the piece, the first names of all the students mentioned were real.

In addition to making the television appearance last week, the admissions officers had to face the phone calls of many irate applicants who received rejection letters. The 1,138 students who were accepted came out of a pool of 4,658 applicants, which is one of the fourth or fifth largest pools in Williams' history, according to Parker.

WILLIAMS COLLEGE WILLIAMSTOWN, MASSACHUSETTS 01267

April 8, 1986

Col. Ephraim Williams
1753 House
Fort Hoosac, MA

OFFICE OF ADMISSIONS
Post Office Box 161
(413) 597-2211

Dear Eph:

It gives me great pleasure to inform you that the Committee on Admissions has admitted you to Williams College for the term beginning in September, 1986.

[illegible] decision to [illegible] Williams. For [illegible] candidates thinking of deferring entrance, our policy is to grant all requests for postponed entrance for one year.

Congratulations again. I look forward to hearing from you and to seeing you in Williamstown in September.

Sincerely yours,

Philip F. Smith
Director of Admissions

Enclosures

More men than women

The acceptance rate for both males and females was 24.4 percent, but since nearly 800 more men applied than women, there were 196 more men accepted. The 1,138 acceptances are 88 fewer than last year.

Parker said the admissions office expects to see a higher percentage of accepted students deciding to attend as a result of the College's number one ranking by U.S. News and World Report. However, he said that the effect of the article will not be felt in an increase in the number of actual applicants until next year.

Parker said "The College expects to get 515 students accepting admission, making the class of 1990 the largest in Williams' history." In addition, the admissions office also plans to admit students who were put on the wait-list. Last year, no

Continued on Page 8

Committee announces JA decisions

by Jocelyn Shadforth

After six weeks of deliberation, the Junior Advisor Selection Committee has selected the 54 JAs for 1986-87. The applicants were notified of the decision on March 20. A number of students were placed on a ranked wait list in case some of those selected turn down the position.

This year, as in the past, there was a disproportionate number of applications from male students. This imbalance is nothing new, according to President of the JAs and selection committee member James Reicheld '87. "(That's) the way it is pretty much every year. It just makes it a lot more competitive for men than for women," he said.

Reicheld said, "It (the selection process) is an intense thing. For the first 15 days of the semester we had meetings 13 nights, and the meetings were two-and-a-half hours minimum. I was really impressed, really happy with the amount of time (the committee members) put into it."

The 24-person committee is composed of 13 former JA's, five current JA's, and seven at-large members chosen through College Council. The JA selection process is divided into roughly three stages. First, the peer and JA recommendations and personal essay from each applicant are briefly read and discussed, followed by a non-binding vote.

Closed Vote

The next vote is a binding "hold or reject" vote. The application is read aloud in summary and must receive two-thirds of the committee's votes to be placed on the final ballot. Finally, the members of the selection committee vote individually to select 54 candidates from the ballot.

The Dean's office plays no role in the selection process except for the initial structuring and advising the members about criteria, goals and guidelines. However, Dean of the College Stephen Fix and Dean of Freshmen Robert Kavanaugh do hold veto power over the selection of students.

This year the College Council circulated a questionnaire concerning attitudes towards JAs and the selection process. Reicheld said, "The questionnaire came too late to do anything major in the way of changing (the selection process), but it's pretty clear that the process is being looked at. College Council has it under examination."

Reicheld and Selection Committee President Thomas Goodspeed '86 said the major complaints about JAs are that they are too busy and are not receptive to all members of the entry. Goodspeed commented, "A lot of people said that they (the JAs) are around at the beginning of the year and then just take off the second semester.

Questionnaires helpful

In general, Goodspeed said, "The questionnaires should

Continued on Page 8

William Boyd	John Canty
Nils Christoffersen	C. Lewis Collins
Sean Cook	Philip Culhane
Peter English	Brooks Foehl
Christopher Gascon	David Glendon
Steven Gutterman	Michael R. Harrington
Andrew Harris	Thomas Higgins
Jonathan Hollenberg	Thomas Hudgins
Ross Jannotta	Christopher Jones
Matthew LaPointe	Sean Logan
Joshua Mellon	John Robinson
John Rumsey	Stuart Staley
Joseph Thorndike	Christopher Tyler
Tobey Wheelock	Pavlos Yeroulanos
Carter Zinn	Amy Asadourian
Britta Bjornlund	Christine Boddicker
Abigail Burbank	Amy Catala
Theresa Cavallere	Anne Cordova
Allson Denne	Suzanne Falcone
Carey Francis	Kathryn Gerber
Kimberly Hatch	Claire Hsiang
Maureen Kelleher	Michele Lowe
Lisa Mandl	Julie Medalis
Nicole Melcher	Ellen O'Connell
Elise Phillips	Katherine Saunders
Amy Searight	Anne Shulman
	Lorri Williams

Trustees approve 7.8 percent hike in tuition

by Andrew Mayer

At their annual spring meeting last weekend, the Williams College Trustees approved a 7.8 percent tuition hike for next year. This brings tuition to $10,850, putting total fees over $14,000.

The trustees' weekend began Thursday with an informal gathering with students and ended Saturday morning with the full board meeting.

The trustees also approved, upon recommendation of the Committee on Appointments and Promotions, making Robert Suderburg a full professor of Music and composer-in-residence and making Jing-Heng Mah an associate professor of Chinese. Both had previously held visiting posts.

Trustees Andrew Heineman '50 and Wayne Wilkins '41 confirmed reports that Seely House will become offices of the Economics Department and that the newly formed "Freshmen Residential Seminars" will be housed in the freshmen quad (according to Dean of the College Stephen Fix, in either Williams C or D.)

In addition, the trustees approved a proposal to accept bids to build an eight-lane track on Weston Field, to be named in honor of former Williams track coach Tony Plansky.

Crowded dorms

Heineman and Wilkins said they are particularly concerned about crowded dormitory space, citing students living in designated living rooms in Mission Park as one example. Heineman said this problem comes partially from a decrease in the number of students living off-campus. He suggested that one way to ease cramped rooms would be to accept fewer transfer students.

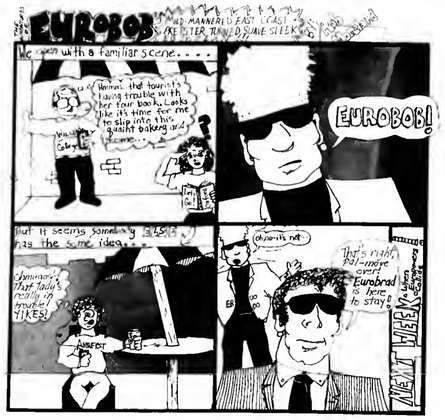
Heineman, chairman of the Trustee Development Committee, said the trustees did not have any reason to change their policy towards companies with dealings in South Africa and will to continue to insist that the College only invest in companies which have signed the Sullivan Principles. Heineman said, "(The South African situation) is a horror and one we'd like to find a solution to."

Heineman also discussed alumni support of the College and the continued planning for a donation drive through the College's bicentennial in 1993. He pointed out that 66.9 percent of the alumni donate money to the College, annually paying for 10 percent of operating costs. Heineman lauded recent graduating classes as especially strong givers.

Both Wilkins and Heineman urged students to contact the trustees, whether they want to provide input on issues or just talk. Wilkins said, "Students have a lot of opportunity for input and I encourage them to use this." They pointed to their four annual gatherings, in June, October, January and April, as times when the are most available to hear student opinion.

Wilkins said, "The trustees are always anxious for student input, as is the administration, but I don't think the students understand that." Wilkins said he found the Thursday night meeting especially helpful and recommended to the full board that meetings of this type be continued in the future.

April 15, 1986



Lead, don't follow

Though we have been critical of the College Council in the past, we contragulate Amy Jeffress for her election as president and wish her the best of luck in reviving the student government. She starts with a clean slate, and we give her our unqualified support, but we would like to offer the following advice to the College Council leadership: take the initiative, press for changes in the status quo, and do not let the administration control the agenda.

The initiatives of the Jeffress-Biemiller platform were a good first step. The faculty tenure and JA selection processes need revision with the College Council leading the way. But there are many problems that have allowed to fester and need to be addressed.

•The unpopularity of the Berkshire Quad among freshmen. Over the past two years, only about 2% of the freshmen have requested the Berkshire Quad. The problems — or preceived problems — of the Quad must be addressed. In a college this small, one of the housing categories cannot be allowed to be written off as undesirable or outside some narrow mainstream.

•Black life. Responsible minority students have voiced serious enough grievances to merit a long look at the problems of racial integration at Williams. That there is only one tenured black faculty member, that black admissions applications are down, and that many minorities do not feel a part of the student community is a problem for us all.

•Committee accountability. The progress, or lack of progress, by committees should be monitored by students who should report directly and regularly to the College Council. In the past, student committee members have not been held accountable and have not kept the Council abreast of developments. This will give the student leadership the chance to see exactly where the real power of decision-making lies.

Obviously, these are difficult problems, perhaps well beyond the scope of the College Council, but the new student leaders have to raise the questions in order to have any input in formulating the answers.

Letters

Contradictions

To the Editor:

Did the Record just contradict itself in back-to-back issues? On March 11, the editors wrote "Williams students have opinions. Their representative body (College Council) must step forward to present these opinions and make sure they are taken into account." The next week, the editors accuse Williams students of "narrow vision," and ask, "Are students numb to the problems of the campus and the world?" Moreover they imply that students shouldn't rely on College Council.

First, it strikes me as somewhat myopic for the editors to claim that students are apathetic simply because Record pages have been barren of race-relations Op-Ed pieces. It doesn't surprise me that students on an intimate campus are reluctant to air their views on touchy issues.

Second, why doesn't the Record consistently hold College Council accountable for representing the students? As they said on March 11, "A burden and responsibility rests with those who are elected." Surprisingly though it may be, the Administration or whoever usually does consult with students in the same manner before they make decisions. Gaudino was no exception (no Council members attended its open meeting last spring). So please, no more editorial headlines like "Gaudino Bypasses Students."

A coda: Williams college issues — "intellectual life," housing, the flume — can be pretty boring, especially in the setting of long-winded committee meetings. But unlike the more attractive national and international issues, the decisions are made in Williamstown and affect students. If the officers of College Council aren't going to keep track of the various issues under discussion and lobby for the students, who is?

Jan van Eck '85

Arrogance

To the Editor:

In his essay, "The 'Great Sadness': perceptions and ignorance," (March 11), David Vann displays the confusion of male a young man who discovers that his present situation is not ideal but cannot decide what he wants. Although he declares that "no scale ... should exist at all" and that "checking (a woman) out" blinds a man "to her as a person," he maintains the stance that "there is no need for an adjustment scale at Williams because there are beautiful people here" and states his hope that male students "will no longer unfairly and cruelly iable Williams women as 'ugly'."

Vann does not question these, his own firmly ingrained beliefs — that there is a generally recognizable 'beautiful woman' and that it is rude, but not irrational, to deplore the fact that most women differ. Although he may consciously try not to "scope," I am convinced that Vann could rate his female acquaintances and point to those that have been found seriously deficient in 'feminine' qualities, (i.e., those who did not fulfill his sweetest expectations by wearing make-up and shaving their legs, as even less-than-10s must).

For Vann, concerned with the "ignorance" of "scoping," does not make the logical leap in his argument: that "scoping" is a perfect example of the arrogance of men's "dominant role." He simply assumes that it is natural for men to create the standards; men are the evaluators "because of their dominance."

Vann asks only that the master consider the "alienation" inherent in whipping the slave, but not the "alienation" inherent in owning a slave, in considering oneself superior to another human being, "a person with hopes, dreams, fears and pains." He places women in the position of slave, dependent on the whims of her masters for her livelihood, collectively owned and manipulated by all men.

Following Vann's logic, although a woman may be "fully herself around others" her entire "life is discounted" by men's (mis)interpretation. His essay questions some of these misinterpretations, but not men's right to hold such power. I believe that women's self-expression is not only limited by man's interpretation of her but, more significantly, by this belief that she must be interpreted by and through him, according to his standards. Vann, representing the "dominant" sex whose perceptions may, unfortunately, be critical to our selfhood (if not our livelihood), is offering women a subtler sexism, trying to appease the slaves with better (less "dehumanizing") conditions, but his concessions are not enough for a woman who wishes to realize her full freedom.

Heather Stephenson
(accepted for the class of '90)

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Virginia Demaree
FEATURES ..... Eric Hanson
ARTS ..... Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ASSISTANT ..... Tom Ewing
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Nik Khakee
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Andrew Mayer, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT FEATURES ..... Corinna Lamb
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright
GRAPHICS ..... Penny Schenk
ADVERTISING ..... Martin Furey, Lisa Klem
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267 POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to J. R. Schafer, The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267

Inclusion

To the Editor:

It may be time that somebody did about the freshman inclusion process. In fact, this year there are at least forty freshmen who probably wish that somebody had done something about it last year. In any event, the fact that well over something 300 freshmen each agree on their fifth choice is beginning to look inevitable. There are probably a lot of different reasons for this trend, but it really doesn't matter why it happens.

What matters is that it exerts an unfortunate pressure on the inclusion process, a pressure which seriously impairs the ability of that system to accomplish its professed goal (in effect, to make as many people as happy — and as few people as unhappy — as possible). It is a pressure which, in my opinion, the system — without at least minor reform — cannot withstand indefinitely.

I'm not trying to be an alarmist. I just think it is becoming increasingly clear to an increasing number of people that we can design a better program. One which attempted to minimize fifth choice inclusions instead of maximizing the satisfaction of first choices might also have the added advantage of helping to dissolve the anxious unanimity which tends to surround the Berkshire Quad. But it has been suggested before.

Hart Murphy '88

An Appeal

To the Editor:

I hope as you read this, the words will convey the sincerity and urgency of my heart. I'm presently confined in prison here in London, Ohio, being a long away from home, and no one to share my honest and open thoughts with, my only recourse is the hope that you may help me. I made a mistake I must pay for — there's no bitterness there — but the pain of being rejected and forgotten all because I wish to change my life is becoming more unbearable with each passing day.

When I made it known to friends that I no longer wish to engage in crime-life, I was forsaken as a holy-rully, a coward, and the like. But the truth is, I just want to live a better life. I know I've made the right decision, but the loneliness of this isolation has become a cruel and heartless way to exist. So I ask that, if possible, you would find room to print this and let it be known that I am one man that truly needs a friend — someone that will write and share their day with me.

I am 34 years old, black, and trying to gain some pride and self-respect, but I also need the help of honest people.

H. Fidal Whitehead 164-080
P.O. Box 59
London Corr. Inst.
London, Ohio 43140

Why Williams needs a Gay and Lesbian awareness day

By John Malcolm

The Williams Gay and Lesbian Union sponsored the first annual Lesbian and Gay Awareness Day today. The day's events included a lunchtime information table in Baxter Hall, an afternoon rally on the steps of Chapin, a seven o'clock showing of the documentary "The Life and Times of Harvey Milk" at the Log, followed by a reception at Hardy House. All Williams community members were encouraged to wear white shirts symbolizing their support for lesbian and gay rights.

In anticipation of the question, "does there really need to be a gay awareness day at Williams?", we woud like to share with you why we would answer "yes!"

Most importantly, we in the GLU see this day as an opportunity to affirm our pride in the campus gay community, one which is diverse, vital, and significant. Further, by focusing today on awareness, we hope to loosen that silence which maintains our community's invisibility. Our wish, then, is not only to celebrate the accomplishments and aspirations of lesbians and gays, thereby encouraging others struggling to "come out" to take the plunge, but to provide spaces in which all Williams folk, regardless of sexual preference, might gather for the purposes of learning and of expressing their support.

We emphasize learning because it has been our experience that a profound ignorance of lesbian and gay concerns often underlies the apparently "liberal" attitudes of many students, professors and staff members. Due to the hush veiling issues of sexual preference (and sexuality in general) at Williams, many gay people here are not recognized as such, an oversight which contributes to the myth of lesbians and gays as an easily stereotyped tiny minority.

On the contrary, today's rally exemplified the diverse, and sometimes divergent, ways that gay people arrive and perceive their sexual/emotional selves. We "faggots, witches, and dykes" are united, however, in our experiences of homophobic oppression. Even at Williams, queer jokes and verbal (even occasionally physical) harassment are not unheard-of, whereas subtler forms of oppression, in the shape of gender-specific dress codes and social behavior pass unremarked.

Put a little liberation in your liberal arts experience and join us in the effort to forge an enlightened and aware Williams community. Come celebrate diversity.

John Malcolm '87 is a member of the Gay and Lesbian Union.

Amnesty International

An appeal to Pres. Botha

To the students:

Please sign this letter, tear it out, and either put it in the marked box in the mail room, or send it to S.U. 1506.

Dear State President Botha:

You and other members of your government have been addressed frequently about prisoners of conscience, detention without trial of political prisoners, procedures in trials of political prisoners, torture and the use of the death penalty in South Africa. However, abuses of human rights continue daily and have increased markedly over the past year. I respectfully call on your government to:

1. Release immediately all prisoners of conscience.
2. Abolish immediately the pass laws which restrict movement on the basis of race.
3. Curb police powers of arbitrary arrest and detention without trial.
4. Act immediately to stop torture and ill-treatment of detainees.
5. Investigate thoroughly all cases of killings of civilians by police to establish whether they constituted extra-judicial executions.

Yours sincerely,

Name

Home address

What role should students have in making decisions?

by Kate Elliot and Edward Stein

In the view of recent developments concerning the Gaudino Committee proposal, we, the College Council, as elected representations of the student body, express our wish that the Administration consult the College Council on matters affecting the student community, as part of the process of implementation. (College Council Resolution, passed February 20, 1986).

This recent College Council resolution is an ill-conceived remedy for a legitimate problem. Students do need to play a greater role in the policy and decision making processes that go on at Williams.

But this resolution takes the wrong approach. Not only is the Council's suggestion unrealistic, but it also undermines a number of far more appropriate ways for students to be involved in shaping policy decisions.

That the administration should consult the College Council on every matter "affecting the student community" is simply an absurd demand. If the administration were to wait for the Council's sanction of every matter which "affected" the student body, the administrative functions of Williams College would grind to a halt. The college has administrators to make scores of decisions every week — ranging from trivial to substantial. The Council, whether for lack of time, expertise, or interest, is ill-equipped to participate in many of these.

Certainly there are major policy decisions which do merit consultation with the elected representative body of the students. And we agree that the Council should play a greater role in such decisions than it has. But this neither should nor can take place by direct consultation between the administration and the whole Council on every question. There already exist channels which ought to be — and if properly used, would be — much more effective. These are the Council-appointed student/faculty/administration committees.

Committees like the CUL and the CEP, and less-publicized committees like the Food Service, are the students' most direct link to policy decisions. Most major policy decisions are handled through these committees, not by the Dean's Office or the President's Office directly. It is primarily through the students on these committees that the College Council and the student body should affect policy.

Student representatives to these committees are chosen by the College Council, and are responsible for conveying not just their own views, but the Council's own views as well. When a committee is discussing a particular issue, the representative should meet with the Council to obtain its opinions, and represent these in the committee's discussions. It is because the College Council has neglected to make the fullest use of this committee system that the members of the Council have come to feel that their voice is not being heard.

These committees actively encourage input from the student body at large. Many sponsor open meetings and/or ask for students to submit written comments. Students rarely take advantage of these opportunities to convey their opinions on important issues. The College Council helps to perpetuate the underuse of the committee system, in part, by ignoring these methods, and, more seriously, by undermining them, through its own claim that the Council as a whole should be the students' only voice on campus.

The College Council has an obligation to see that its appointed student members properly convey the student body's view. If the committee system is not working in the student body's interest — if the Council feels that their views are not represented to the committees that make policy decisions — it is because the Council has not encouraged student members of committees to meet with the Council and to discuss its views on important issues.

College Council's disregard for the committee system has made the influence of certain "special interest groups" appear disproportionately large. These groups — like WAAC, the BSU, Purple Key, the Gaudino Committee, and Gargoyle Society, to name a few — admittedly have their own particular agenda amd their own concerns about policy. Although they do not claim to represent the interests of the "whole student body," and have no direct power to implement college policy, such groups provide the long-term, focused approach to policy issues that College Council, by its very nature, cannot. The Council can and should work formally or informally with these groups. In recent years it has falled to do so.

These special interest groups should not be the only channels for students to affect policy. The committee system, if properly used, could provide the most important channels for input from the general student body. But in order for the student body to make use of these channels, it must be informed of the issues and proposals that are currently being considered. In recent years they have not been. For this we hold the Record to some degree responsible. The Record editorial board seems to consider itself immune to the apathy and short-sightedness which its March 18 "Who Cares?" editorial imputes to the majority of the student body. To this we can only reply "Physician, heal thyself." The Record's one-sided news stories, fact-barren op-eds and purely negative editorials have been one of the chief sources of this apathy and this short-sightedness.

Rather than waiting to report on issues until after they have exploded, the Record should follow committee proceedings with regularity and consistency. Record reporters may get more kicks from buttonholing bystanders in Baxter lounge about inane "Man-on-the-Quad" topics, than from following the often dry proceedings of the Housing Committee or the CEP. But the Record, like the College Council, would serve the interests of the College community far better if it devoted serious and regular attention to the continuous workings of these committees, instead of reporting on those few committee decisions which it deem important with sensationalized and sporadic attention.

Kate Elliot is a senior; Edward Stein is a junior.

NEWSBRIEFS

Ex-VP Dies

Foehl

Charles A. Foehl Jr. '32, formerly treasurer and vice president for administration of Williams College, died March 20 at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston after a long illness. He was 76.

After retiring from Williams in 1973, Foehl lived in Boca Grande, Fla. and Hyannisport, Mass.

Foehl was a member of the Williams administration for 23 years under Presidents James P. Baxter III and John E. Sawyer. He came to Williams as treasurer in 1950, and was named vice president for administration and treasurer in 1966. He played a major role in the new construction and the renovation of old buildings, which took place in the 1960s and early 1970s when the College phased out fraternities, took over the housing and feeding of all undergraduates and became coeducational.

Williams President Francis Oakley said, "Charlie's wonderful record of cheerful service to Williams cannot but elicit from all who knew him unstinted admiration and warm affection. If we mourn his loss, we celebrate his unanswering commitment to the College he loved so much."

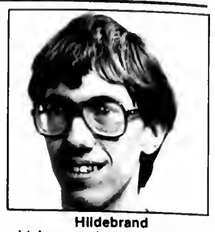
Born May 15, 1909, in Sewickley, Pa., Foehl graduated from The Hill School in 1928, received his B.A. from Williams in 1932 and his LL.B. from Harvard in 1935. From 1935 to 1950 he practiced law in Newark, N.J., becoming a partner in the firm of Young, Shanley, Foehl and Fisher.

Foehl served in the Army during World War II. He was discharged as a lieutenant colonel after serving as a member of the War Department's General Staff on Civil Affairs.

As an undergraduate at Williams, Foehl won varsity letters for three years as a member of the football and baseball teams. He was a member of Gargoyle, the senior honor society, and Alpha Delta Phi fraternity. In 1965 he was awarded the Rogerson Cup, given annually to a Williams alumnus for service, loyalty and achievement.

Foehl leaves his wife, Mary Mason Foehl; four sons, Charles Allen III '56, William C., John H. '64, and Stephen M.; and 12 grandchildren.

Watson Fellows



Three Williams College seniors have been awarded Watson Foundation Fellowships for travel and independent study abroad. The $10,000 awards were made to seniors Regina Kelly, Elizabeth Marr and Anne Southworth.

Kelly, a theater major, will use her fellowship to study the actor's contribution to the tradition of fantastic realism. She is interested in the freedom of actors as it relates to the art of acting in general. She will work in London, Germany, France, Spain, Yugoslavia and Poland as an actress or stage technician.

Marr intends to study the changing life patterns of pastoralists in southern Peru, northern Norway or northern Nepal. A geology major, Marr will study these cultures' relationship to their difficult habitat and the effect technology has had on their lives. She will spend six months in each country, studying Peruvian Indians and the Lapianders of Norway.

Southworth, a contract major in environmental studies, proposes to study the Common Tern population in Brazil, then follow their migration to breeding grounds in Great Britain. She will then go to Nigeria to work with researchers already studying non-breeding terns.

The Watson fellowships are awarded to graduates of 37 small colleges in the United States. They are administered by the Thomas J. Watson Foundation, named for the founder of IBM.

Hildebrand

Putnam Fellow

Martin Hildebrand '86 has received one of the five highest scores in the annual William Lowell Putnam Mathematical Competition. This ranking, which earns him $500 and the title "Putnam Fellow," is the highest honor an undergraduate individual in mathematics can receive in the United States.

A total of 2,079 students took the six-hour exam structured to test both originality and technical knowledge. The other Fellows attend Caltech, Harvard and the University of Chicago.

Commenting on his award, Associate Professor of Mathematics Olga Beaver said Hildebrand has "an extraordinarily quick mind and unusual mathematical maturity."

Hildebrand, a double math and physics major, was in the top 100 scores of last year's Putnam test. He was Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year and has won a Horace F. Clark Fellowship from the College for graduate work. After graduation, Hildebrand will pursue a doctorate in mathematics.

CC meets, announces theme house delayed

by Debbie Snyder
and Andrew Mayer

The College Council met for the first time with its new administration last Thursday night. Elected before spring break were President Amy Jeffress '87, Vice President Suzanne Biemiller '87, Treasurer Alec Dawson '87 and Secretary Wendell Chestnut '88.

Jeffress announced at the meeting that the College administration had decided to postpone theme housing until the 1987-1988 school year. "It's not because it's not a good idea," said Jeffress, "but the proposals were not what they (the committee) were looking for."

Dean of the College Stephen Fix said the administration still feels theme housing is a good idea and believes there is now a campus-wide consensus that the program can succeed. According to Fix, the educational benefit of theme housing was not discussed enough and the outcry from students who felt they deserved consultation obscured the real issue of the merit of the proposal.

Only one proposal

Fix said the theme house committee only received one proposal. He explained this as a result of how the proposal was introduced to the students and the intense discussion which ensued.

Continued on Page 8

Frosh inclusion gives 83% choice 1 or 2

by Anne O'Malley

The results of freshman inclusion into the upperclass housing system were announced this week, with 83 percent of the class of 1989 assigned to either their first or second choice housing category, compared with 71 percent of the class of 1988.

Freshmen submitted upperclass housing affiliation applications in early March and the inclusion process was completed during spring break.

As in the past, freshmen were allowed to apply in groups of up to four (seven if applying to Mission Park first choice). Each group ranked the five housing categories in order of preference, and was then randomly assigned a number. Then groups were assigned to a particular housing category, starting with the group with the lowest number, in a process which maximizes first choices. Once all the applications had been placed in a housing category, each was randomly assigned to a specific house within that category.

One hundred twenty-two of the freshmen were assigned to houses in the Greylock Quad, 162 to houses in Mission Park, 82 to the Berkshire Quad, 79 to Row Houses, and 62 to Dodd-Tyler. Fifteen of 16 students who received fourth choice and all 40 who received fifth choice were assigned to the Berkshire Quad.

Higher choices

William Darrow, assistant dean of the College, attributed the higher percentage of students receiving either their first or second choice categories to a more even distribution of first-choice preferences. Greylock was once again the most popular choice, but only 204 students selected it first, compared to 281 who listed it first last year.

Dodd-Tyler and Mission Park were both more popular this year than last. One hundred twenty-one freshmen selected Dodd-Tyler as their first choice, compared to 75 last year, while 99 students chose Mission Park first choice, compared to last year's 38. The Row Houses declined in popularity, receiving 71 first choice preferences, compared to 103 last year.

The Berkshire Quad was chosen first by 12 students, compared to eight last year. Another change is that 62 percent of this year's freshman listed the Berkshire Quadrangle as their fifth choice.

Continued on Page 9

Physicist Dyson talks on Star Wars

by Meg Thomas

Noted physicist Freeman Dyson, professor at the Institute for Advanced Study, spoke about the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) to a near-capacity crowd in Brooks-Rogers auditorium last Thursday. SDI, popularly known as "Star Wars," is a plan for a space-based missile defense.

Noted physicist Freeman Dyson lectures on the Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as Star Wars. (Ward)

Dyson said at the outset that he would have liked to conduct the talk as more of an open forum for discussion of SDI but that the large crowd prevented him from doing so.

He began his speech by saying that any missile defense must have three parts: detection of enemy missiles, coordination and planning of reaction, and actual destruction of the missiles. Dyson said, in his mind, there was far too much emphasis on destruction compared to the first two areas. He blamed this mis-emphasis on the hype caused by governmental secrecy.

Dyson said he believes de-classification of the program would do much to lessen tension both nationally and internationally. He said he believes, "(SDI) would fall flat on its back in a year or two" when the government realized it was a waste.

Defense improbable

He said that, while the parts of the program that focused on land-based systems are worthwhile, the alleged super-defense systems are, at best, improbable. He said there is no way gains from technology could compete with the number of nuclear weapons now in existence. He further said, "The reason that 'Star Wars' is so overemphasized is due to...the actor mentality of the current administration."

Dyson said what is needed is a combination of arms control and defensive technology. He remarked that the most important part of the fight against nuclear weapons is a non-first-use rule and a weapons test-ban. Ultimately, he said, what is needed is for society to "change the political value that nuclear weapons are supposed to have."

Affectionate displays lead to suspension for students

by Karen Costenbader

On April 5, a quiet, orderly demonstration by about 150 Pittsfield High School students protesting what they perceived to be unfair disciplinary action taken against other students erupted into an embarrassing display before television cameras.

Students were protesting a new rule which decreased the amount of permissible "public affection" in the Pittsfield High School corridors. Rumors of the rule, and of student suspensions and detentions for infractions such as kissing and hand-holding, had circulated among the students throughout the preceding week.

Pittsfield High School Principal William P. Coan denied that there was such a new policy. According to Coan, three male and three female students had been placed in detention hall that week because they continued to ignore repeated warnings against their passionate public displays, which made other students incomfortable.

One other male student was was suspended for insubordination when he allegedly ignored a teacher who asked him to stop kissing his girlfriend and enter class, and then refused to go to the principal's office.

In Coan's opinion, the rumors were the result of miscommunication, his absence from school due to a knee operation, and spring-like weather. Three groups of students, none of which had consulted the administration, organized independently to take action. One group, head by senior Philip Daoust and junior Douglas Twining, circulated a petition, requesting an evaluation of the rule.

Students call press

A second group of students organized a peaceful demonstration

Continued on Page 9

Profile: Philip F. Smith

by Alison Jones

Every Williams student has seen some evidence of Director of Admissions Phil Smith's artistic flair — the smiley face that adorns the bottom of each acceptance letter he signs. Most of you probably thought you were the only one to get such a personal welcome to Williams... until September, that is, when you found that you were in good and numerous company.

Yet Smith does do much more than this simple artwork. He has been an integral part of campus life for over 30 years in the capacities of both student and administrator. A member of the class of 1955, Smith majored in what was then called American Literature and History, currently known as American Studies. The following year he received his M. A. in Arts and Teaching from Harvard University. Smith began his career in education at the Governor Dunbar Academy where, for one year, he taught French and English. He spent the following two years at the Deerfield Academy teaching French, English, and cooking.

In 1959, Smith returned to Williams for what he thought would be a two-year stint in the admissions department. He had wanted to become a headmaster and felt that by interviewing the students that each secondary school produced, he would be able to pick the one he liked best. The admissions department was much smaller at that time. Smith was assistant to Director of Admissions Fred Copeland; together with a secretary, they comprised the entire staff.

Even though Smith chose to stay on in Admissions after the initial two years had passed, he did not abandon teaching. For 20 years he taught a Modern American History course here, and also coached men's soccer. In the 1960s Smith directed the Williamstown ABC (A Better Chance) program which brought underprivliedged, inner city children to Williamstown in the summer.

Significant changes

Many would cite coeducation and the near doubling of the size of the student body as the most significant changes Williams has undergone in the past 30 years. Smith agrees that these changes have done much to alter — and, he thinks, to improve — the atmosphere at Williams, but he points also to other changes which he has noticed in his position as director of admissions.

For example, when Smith went to Williams, there was only one black student in his class of 315. Now the admissions department aims for a minimum of 15% American minority representation in each class.

Coeducation has brought with it "many happy by-products," said Smith. He feels that today's Williams student takes greater advantage of the school's cultural and artistic offerings — remembering that when he was president of the Choral Society it was rare to see more than two or three students in the audience during one of their performances.

When Smith was a student, social life revolved around the fraternities and "flick squad" hitch-hiking trips to the movies in North Adams. Smith also feels that Williams' admissions has become more selective since the 1950s: today's applicants average 50 points higher on the SAT tests than those who applied 30 years ago, even though nationally these scores have declined. The geographical distribution of students also has changed to include many more students from the West Coast and foreign countries, most likely because of improvements in transportation, he explained.

Continued on Page 6

Survey finds little change in student sexual attitudes

by Corinna Lamb

The more things change, the more they stay the same, or so it would appear from a survey taken in both 1986 and 1972 concerning women at Williams.

Women's attitudes about sexual relations have changed very little in the past 12 years, according to the survey. Women are still more conservative than their male peers who have become increasingly liberal about sex over the past decade.

Men at past — and present — day Williams who responded to the survey indicated that they have had more sexual experience than have Ephwomen. Half the women who answered the questionnaire distributed this past Winter Study responded that they have had sex while at Williams, the same percentage as the women in 1972. Yet a substantial majority of men at Williams (75%) said that they have had sex, a percentage that is slightly higher than that of their predecessors of the '70s.

Furthermore, almost half the women from both surveys admitted they would be con-

Continued on Page 7

	1986	1972
I have had sex at Williams	M 75%	M 65%
	W 50%	W 50%
It would bother me if people knew I were having sex at Williams	M 0%	M 15%
	W 40%	W 44%
I would consider having sex if I was attracted to the person	M 80%	M 75%
	W 45%	W 40%
I would consider having sex if I were in love with the person	M 88%	100%
	W 92%	W 92%
I would only consider sex if I were married to that person	M 11%	M 30%
	W 11%	W 15%
There are things on campus I would not do to protect my reputation	M 60%	M 50%
	W 85%	W 45%
I have roadtripped occasionally or at least once	M 55%	M 70%
	W 35%	W 25%
The best male-female relationship 1:1	M 96%	M 65%
	W 75%	W 45%
There is no difference in the studying amounts of men and women	M 69%	M 35%
	W 66%	W 75%
There is no difference in the amount of gossiping between men and women	M 60%	M 65%
	W 60%	W 80%
Women are more inhibited by what is considered acceptable	M 50%	M 50%
	W 64%	W 55%
Men are more inhibited by what is considered acceptable	M 4%	M 3%
	W 7%	W 5%
There is no difference in inhibitions	M 46%	M 47%
	W 28%	W 40%

Fun in the sun

Spring Break '86

by Eric Reath

Springtime in Williamstown is a special time of year. No, not because of the 30-degree, overcast days or the snow flurries but because of the return of the element that makes this institution live and breathe. The reference is, of course, to the student body, and its annual post-spring break showcase.

Featured is the multitude of beaming, bronzed faces and strutting, suntanned legs that parade the campus. At no other time of year do you see the myriad of bright-colored apparel that so nicely highlights tanned flesh.

And then there are the stories. These are the memories that will live on long past the quickly fading tan, tucked away for future moments of nostalgia.

Daytona Beach, one Florida hot spot, offers more student bodies than you'd ever want to see, and their cars. The fact that it is legal to drive on the beach is just one of the many facets that make Daytona so special. Nothing like that sea breeze and those fresh carbon monoxide fumes on the beach. Topless bars, wet T-shirt contests, best bikini (meaning least bikini) contests, and coed dance contests are also main attractions.

The most touching aspect of Daytona, though, is the openness and frankness in the manner that people interact. Inhibitions are at an all-time low. Men and women feel free enough to approach each other with lines such as, "Do you have dates?" Some even feel free enough to penetrate such personal subjects like preferred forms of contraception, right out on the street.

Sandy salvation

Fort Lauderdale, another popular spot, features beaches so crowded that people practically have to fight for their sunlight. However, a unique characteristic of the Lauderdale beaches is that you can be saved while you sun. Fort Lauderdale has its own local evangelist, who can easily be spotted on the beach as the only person carrying a ten-foot cross. For those with more liberal religious inclinations, there is also a preacher from the Christian Nudist Church recruiting members on the beach.

This year Fort Lauderdale also unveiled a new special attraction for spring breakers: the Fort Lauderdale Police Department. The F.L.P.D. provides a nice one-night bed and breakfast package for underage and especially enthusiastic college students.

It's experiences like these that provide college students with an opportunity to relax and unwind a little before returning to the academic rigor of this high powered institution, not to mention the first-week-back beach parties.

Man on the Quad

The Record recently asked students "What do you think of the dating situation at Williams?"

Interviews by Corinna Lamb; photographs by Nik Khakee

"I think that women scope men, and they strip me of my personality. I just don't feel like a person ...." — Rob Coakley '86

"There's a wider horizon for sexual opportunity here. No, just kidding." — Britty Shaw '89 and Sue Camp '89 in a collaborative effort.

"Well, What are you doing this Friday night?" — James Martel '86, Mark Andrejevic '86, and Scot Brannon '86 (after a quick huddle)

"The problem with dating here is that too many other people know about things before the couple does." — Karen Glazier '87

"All the women are frigid wenches." — Jon Edie '88

"All the guys here are ugly. I hate men!" — Jane Amidon '88

"This year the dating situation for me has taken a step in the right direction. For the other plebes, it's generally very hard to have a normal one to one date here, because everyone's so gossipy." — Lewis Collins '88

Berkeley

The University of California at Berkeley has recently been the scene of considerable protest: a group of students organized by the University of California Divestment Community (UCDC) staged a protest at the new campus computer store objecting to the sale of International Business Machine computers. Representatives of the group explained their action by alleging that IBM products play a crucial role in the South African government's apartheid system.

In a statement submitted to Berkeley's chancellor I. Michael Heyman, UCDC called the decision to open the store a "blatant insult to UC students, faculty and staff who support divestment."

Heyman's responded that the university supports the right of students, faculty and staff to decide for themselves whether to purchase certain products. "Boycott is an individual right of protest," Heyman maintained.

No one was arrested after protestors were removed from the store. At least four UCDC members, however, indicated that they would file a complaint alleging that excessive force was used in removing them.

A later anti-apartheid demonstation had different results: 91 protesters were arrested, and 28 civilians or officers were injured. "The violence was about as bad as anything that happened in the '60s," Heyman said.

(Compiled in part from The Christian Science Monitor.)

Palm Springs

Whatever the inhabitants of Fort Lauderdale might think, Florida is not the only Spring break Mecca for college students. One West coast spot of particular popularity is Palm Springs, California which attracts thousands of high school and college students each year during the seasonal vacation period. This year, these students had a week of sometimes debauched and violent spring revelry. One particular Friday, beer-guzzling youths went on a rampage that included rock and bottle throwing and the disrobing of unwilling women.

Following the disruptions, the resort town was relatively quiet. According to one policewoman, however, "Some students were still trying their best to be jerks." The officer refused to be identified.

(The Stanford Daily)

Harvard

An April Fool's joke at Harvard gathered much attention, but didn't appear to fool many people.

Posters blanketed Harvard Yard advertising a speech by Clint Eastwood at 4 P.M. an April 1. The poster announced Eastwood's speech on actors in politics, to be presented by the mysterious group S.W.A.C., which does not exist at Harvard.

"We're going to hunt them down and cut their right arms off," said President of the Undergraduate Council Brian C. Offutt '87. Although the poster was labeled as council-approved, Offutt said that he never authorized it.

There were many students basking in the sun at the site of the speech, but no one seems to have come to see Eastwood. One freshman said, "I think most people caught on."

Dartmouth

Ten students previously suspended from this Ivy League school for dismantling anti-apartheid shantles, receleved lessened penalties after their case was reviewed by alumnus Walter Peterson, president of Franklin Pierce College and former New Hampshire governor. Four of the students who had previously been suspended for two to three semesters had their suspensions reduced to a single semester. The other six students had earlier been suspended for one semester and their penalties were reduced to in-college restrictions.

Last Friday afternoon, twenty members of the anti-apatheid group that originally built the shanties protested the lighter penalties by occupying the library bell tower.

(The New York Times)

More Dartmouth

The anti-apartheid shanties are not the only things causing controversy in this Ivory Tower. In its quest for the controversial "Women of the Ivy League" issue, Playboy Magazine has attracted the interest of over 100 Dartmouth women and the denunciation of several campus women's groups. A Playboy advertisement requesting models appeared in every Ivy League newspaper except The Harvard Crimson.

At Dartmouth, one member of the Women's Issues League said, "The photographer should expect some trouble when he gets here."

The 1979 Women of the Ivy League issue was one of the most popular possessions at Dartmouth's library that year. The library copy was kept at the reserve corridor on two hour reserve, and library personnel had to count pages upon its return to guard against stealing and vandalism.

compiled from various campus and commercial newspapers by Martin Hildebrand

Smith

Continued from Page 5

The acceptance and rejection letters for the class of 1990 were mailed out last week, but things won't slow down in the admissions department until sometime in late June, a time at which Smith says there is a three-day lull before the cycle begins again. The entire admissions staff spent the past four weeks in committee making the decisions. The job, however, doesn't end with sending the letters.

"Damage control"

At the moment, Smith says the admissions officers spend their days answering phone calls from frantic teachers, parents, and guidance counselors who want to know why their child or protege was turned down. Smith calls this part of his job "damage control." "You spend a lot of time talking to people, explaining how we made the decision. You know," he continued, "you don't have to ask them to agree with it, but you do want them to understand that you've been careful."

Williams' admissions process was covered recently in a McNeil-Lehrer television news report. The eight members of the admissions staff were filmed while in committee as they reviewed the applications for the class of 1990. Smith was generally pleased with the way the report presented the committee. "One can always hope for more in-depth, substantive follow-through, but what television tends to do is focus very quickly; you look at it and say 'those are nice people'. I think we came off as nice people." Smith noted that all the calls he has received concerning the report have been positive.

Having spent over half his life at Williams, Smith has an interesting perspective in relation to the students he see here now. He said, "I have tremendous respect for today's Williams students, for their capabilities and for what they are doing. I respected my class, obviously, and liked the people I was with, but I'm not one who thinks the younger generation is going to Hell in a handbasket."

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight at 8:00, Professor John Rupert Martin of Princeton University will present the first of the Julius S. Held Lectures entitled "Rubens, Rembrandt, and the Medical Profession"; the lecture will be given at the Clark Art Institute.....Wednesday brings the reappearance of Princeton's Professor Martin on the Williamstown cultural scene: At 1:30 p.m. in Lawrence 231, he will lead an art seminar and discussion on "Amsterdam and Antwerp: Two 17th Century Cities of Art".....Thursday at 4:15 p.m., Adrienne Sirken will give an informal piano recital in Brooks-Rogers as part of the Julius S. Held Lecture Series; she will play a major Schubert sonata and a contemporary work.....Professor Martin of Princeton will present another art lecture, this one entitled "Rembrandt and the Science of Anatomy"; he will speak at 8 p.m. in the Clark Art Institute.....Ruml Kurosaki '86, assisted by members of the Williams Dance Society, the Department of Music, and Cap and Bells, will present Mai, a music thesis with choreography; admission is $1 and the performance will be given at the DownStage theatre.....Friday night at 8:00, the Williams Ephlats will perform with the Bates "Deansmen" in Brooks-Rogers Recital hall; admission is $1.....For more music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146.

Summer Fall Spring
WASHINGTON OR LONDON INTERNSHIPS
OXFORD SUMMER 1986
Full Academic Years In
- Oxford University
- L.S.E.
- St. Andrews, Scotland

U.S. credits will be transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, founded in Virginia by James Madison in 1776. Graduate work is an option. The Director of Studies for the Center for Quality Education Abroad (in Britain) is the Rt. Hon. The Lord Beloff, D.Litt. (Oxon.), Fellow of the British Academy, Professor Emeritus of Government and Fellow of All Souls, Oxford.
INQUIRIES TO:
JANET KOLLEK, J.D., Admissions Director CQEA/WISC, Rm 53, 158 W. 81 St., NY,NY, 10024.
(212-724-0804/724-0136).
(EO/AA)

COLLEGE GRADUATES of 1986
interested in teaching learning and study skills, travel to schools and college throughout the U.S. Strong liberal arts background, creative, independent, car needed, start mid-August. Training with salary, send resume to: Mrs. White, P.O. Box 439, Greenwich, CT 06830

HEADING FOR EUROPE THIS SUMMER?
Jet there anytime for only $160 with AIRHITCH® (as reported in Consumer Reports, NY Times, Newsday, Harvard's "Let's Go" Student Travel Guide Series, Good Housekeeping, and on national network morning shows). For details, call 212-864-2000 or write:
2901 Broadway, Suite 100A, NY, NY 10025.

EPH of the MONTH
This month's Big Ephs are Robert Manago '86 and Erol Onel '88. They organized last weekend's phone-a-thon which raised $2,900 for the American Heart Association. Rob and Erol will share a $50 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. Keep up the good work!
Presented by
GOFF'S SPORTS Spring Street Williamstown

Survey

Continued from Page 5

cerned if people knew they were engaging in sexual relations at Williams. The men, on the other hand, seemed to be totally unconcerned if people on campus know of their sexual activity, with 100 percent answering that they would not be bothered.

Women, according to the survey, seem to be more concerned with their reputations on campus than do men. They are also more concerned about how they are perceived by others than they were 14 years ago. The vast majority of women in 1986 replied that there were things on campus that they would avoid doing in order to protect their reputations, whereas less than half the women in the previous survey showed a concern for this matter. Men were a little more concerned with their reputations than were their predecessors, but not drastically so.

Why sex?

Today's Williams women cite reasons for having sex that are similar to those of former Eph-women. Women are considerably less likely than men to consider sexual relations with someone simply because they are attracted to the potential partner. Slightly more women in the recent survey said they would consider having sex with someone simply on the basis of physical attraction, but the percentage is still less than half.

Men's reasons for sexual activity were also virtually unchanged over the 14 years. The majority of them (80%) said they would consider sexual relations with someone to whom they were attracted on a purely physical level, compared to 75 percent of men surveyed in 1972.

Both sexes answered almost unanimously that they would consider sexual relations if they were in love with the other person. Men who answered the 1986 survey were slightly less likely to consider sex if in love than were women, and also less likely than the men in the 1972 survey.

Judging from this survey, very few men and women at Williams feel that they must be married in order to have sexual relations with someone. Only about 10 percent of the women said they would have sex only if they were married, a figure which has not changed significantly over the past 14 years. Men, on the other hand, seem to have become more liberal about pre-marital sex. Fourteen years ago, 30 percent of Williams men said they would consider sex only if married, twice as many as the amount of women in the same survey.

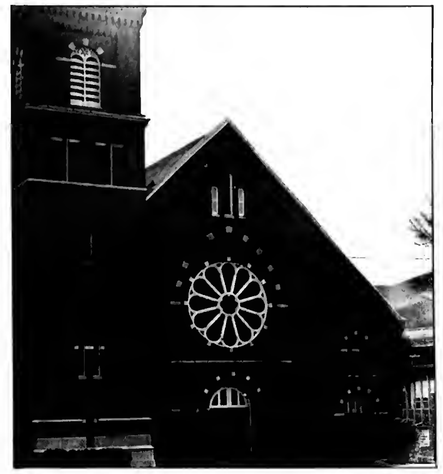
Ideal ratio changed

The ideal ratio for most students in 1986 has changed. In 1986, the majority of both sexes favored a one-to-one ratio, while a majority of women preferred a higher ratio of men in 1972. Even today, a quarter of the women surveyed said they favored a campus with more men than women, although almost none of the men did.

Women today seem to have better opportunity to make friends with other women, something which many of the women who answered the earlier survey (30%) had found problems with. Women have also become more aggressive recently in making social visits to other area colleges. Fourteen years ago, road-tripping was a male prerogative.

A survey was conducted by Record report Corinna Lamb. The Record surveyed 75 men and 75 women. The answers are based on the replies of 35 men and 40 women.

Church rededicates century-old cornet



by Doug Phillips

The year was 1901. Local newspaper reviews of the Jubilee celebration for the North Adams First Congregational Church's 75th anniversary were full of acclaim. In particular, lavish praise was given to a beautiful cornet made by the Boston Musical Instrument Company, which was played by A.J. Wheeler at the Jubilee. It was described as a fine instrument that contributed much to the ceremony.

In early 1985, the sexton of the same church was routinely cleaning the church basement one day when he discovered a mildewing leather case in one corner. After removing the dust, he opened the case and discovered a silver horn tarnished with age. In the dim light he read the inscription: "Made by the Boston Musical Instrument Company. Presented to the First Congregational Church of North Adams by Wm. S. Blackington - 1875...." The priceless cornet, lost and forgotten for nearly a century, had been found.

"This church has always been very interested in music," said Neil Giroux, a lawyer in North Adams and a member of the church's music committee. "We are very proud of our cornet, and hope to hear it many times in the future," he commented.

This past Sunday, the cornet, newly-polished and reconditioned, was "rededicated" by the First Congregationl Church of North Adams during the regular service. Sophomore Eric Hanson was given the honor of playing the cornet. Along with trumpet player George Forgea, he performed duets by Heinrich Biber as well as Henry Purcell's "Voluntary in C."

The First Congregational Church of North Adams was the site of Sunday's cornet rededication. (Albright)

Eph entertainment

The Williams Brass Quintet, composed of freshmen Paul Brainard and Sean Timmons, sophomores Kerri Kazak and Eric Hanson, and senior Tim Harbold, played the postlude to the service, which was broadcast on North Adams radio, and entertained the congregation afterwards at a pancake breakfast.

The church was founded in 1827 by Williams faculty member John Yeomans. Initially very small, many of its members were Williams students. But the church expanded rapidly, and in 1865 it was moved to its current location on Main Street.

Ties between the church and Williams music groups have always been strong. Many times in the past Williams students have played for the church's members. "We hope to continue hearing from the fine musicians of Williams College," said Mr. Giroux.

YOUR PARIS APT...
WAITING FOR YOU WHEN YOU STEP OFF THE PLANE!
STUDENT HOUSING SERVICE
70 West 7 St. - Suite 1 C
NY, NY 10023 - (212) 769-1170

Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank

Summer at Brandeis University
Session I—June 9 to July 11 / Session II—July 14 to August 15
- Liberal Arts
- Premedical Sciences
- Computer Science
- Theatre Arts
- Near Eastern and Judaic Studies
- Foreign Languages
- Costume Field Research in England
- Archaeological Field Research in Israel

Small classes taught by Brandeis Faculty
Information, catalog and application
BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL
Waltham, MA 02254 617-647-2796

FINAL DEADLINE: FRIDAY, 11 APRIL SEE DEAN SPEAR FOR APPLICATIONS
Fall or Spring Semester

AMERICAN MARITIME STUDIES
Accredited by
WILLIAMS COLLEGE
Taught at
MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM
- Ecology
- Economics
- Biology
- History
- Literature
- American Studies
- Public Policy
- Oceanography
- Off-Shore Research

WILLIAMS-MYSTIC PROGRAM • MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM, INC. • MYSTIC, CONNECTICUT 06355 • (203) 572-0711 Ext. 359

Aggressive and Articulate?
Apply your strengths in one of the world's most highly paid professions: Selling securities for a leading investment bank.
The Lanyi Division of Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. seeks highly motivated senior graduates for stockbroker positions. No required major. If you can sell, send resume to:
John Delikanakis
The Lanyi Division
Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co.
540 Madison Ave.
New York, NY 10022

Admissions

Continued from Page 1

one was admitted from the list, and, according to Parker, "By not admitting students off of the wait-list two years in a row, the College runs the risk of losing credibility concerning the list."

Parker said this year's pool of applicants "has the best academic qualifications of any pool ever before, and is the most ethnically diverse of any group in Williams' history." Parker added, "Many excellent athletes were also admitted — especially football players — despite the restricting anti-recruitment measures that Williams must obey as a member of the East Coast Athletic Conference and as a Division III school."

Council

Continued from Page 4

Applications will be accepted next year for theme housing in the academic year 1987-88, but where the theme house will be, how it will be implemented, and the terms of the application process have yet to be finalized.

In other business, President of the Junior Advisors James Reicheid '87 briefly discussed the JA selection process. He suggested some changes in the process including offering a pre-application orientation for sophomores to alert them to some of the problems JAs encounter, because he feels people are often unaware of the counseling skills required of a JA.

More sophomores

Reicheld also proposed increasing the number of sophomores and decreasing the number of junior and senior JA's on the selection committee, because, he said, "Juniors don't know the candidates."

Jeffress said the main goals of her administration are to consolidate student opinion and create a more active student body. She commented, "We believe student input is very important but not the only consideration, because certainly there are others."

Jeffress listed divestment, student input into faculty tenure decisions and the JA selection process as three main issues that will be dealt with in the future. She also said her administration will stress the importance of the College Council liaisons to the Committee on Undergraduate Life and Committee on Educational Policy.

In other results of the run-off elections held before spring break, Katie Anthony '87, Henry Jones '88, Anne Shulman '88 and Peter Washburne '87 were elected to at-large seats on the Council Council. Averil Clarke '87 and George 'Gipp' Welch '87 were elected to the Honorary Degrees Committee. Blair Newton '89 and Jim McNulty '89 were elected to the Honor and Discipline Committee.

Hoxsey St.

Continued from Page 1

phen Fix to stiffen the College's requirements for granting permission to move off-campus.

The controversy involves Williams students living in apartments at 71-73 and 81 Hoxsey St., owned by Elaine Hantman and Pamela Baker, respectively.

Reviewing the history of the conflict, Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zoito said police had responded to 40 calls from Hoxsey Street residents since May 15, 1985. He said most of the complaints were of loud music, noise on porches or illegal parking on the street, and that, for the most part, students had complied with police requests to quiet down.

"Police are not just passing this over," Zoito said. "The majority of the students are very cooperative."

Hantman proposed the good neighbor policy in a letter to the Selectmen. In this letter, she agreed to screen potential residents before granting leases and to set up meetings between students and residents. Hantman said, "The good neighbor policy should be in effect right now," although some aspects will not go take effect until next fall.

Hantman said she had organized a meeting between neighbors and the students who will live in the houses next year. "I've gotten a lot of positive feedback from members of the selectmen and townspeople," Hantman said.

Mitchell Burgin of 70 Hoxsey St., expressed doubts about the success of such a policy, saying a good neighbor meeting called last October had not produced results. Burgin said he was kept awake by noise from a student party until after 2:30 a.m. less than one week after the good neighbor meeting.

"The good neighbor policy is a way to distribute burdens and have landlords reap the benefits," Burgin said. Bubriski agreed, saying, "It's difficult to be good neighbors with people who keep you up all night and are abusive and rude."

Some of the students, however, said that Bubriski had been hostile to them from the beginning of the year. Jonathan Kraft '86, a resident of 71-73 Hoxsey St., said Bubriski started off the year by telling the students, "We hate you all."

Bubriski said Baker and Hantman, the owners of the two buildings, are only interested in making money. By renting to students, they close townspeople out of needed housing, according to Bubriski. Bubriski, who also owns an apartment building on Hoxsey Street, claimed, "I rent to people, not students."

Bubriski later admitted that three Williams students, all of them women, live in an apartment on the top floor of her building.

Selectman John O'Brien Locke called for more than a slap on the wrist for the students, labeling them a public nuisance. "People need to learn through experience that there are consequences for illegal actions," he said. Locke asked Town Counsel Patrick Rondeau what powers the Selectmen or landlords had to discipline or evict the students.

Paul Williamson '86 said he believes residents of his house, 71-73 Hoxsey St., are willing to cooperate in the good neighbor policy. "I'm not a rude person," Williamson said, adding that he hoped students would be allowed to toss a baseball in the street this spring.

Bubriski responded that students have the entire campus in which to play baseball.

JAs

Continued from Page 1

help. Any look at JAs should address the freshmen, however. It does seem that a lot of sophomores and juniors change their opinions about JAs in reflection."

Responding to the idea that fewer JAs should be on the committee, Goodspeed said the idea has some merit but, "I really don't think they understand what's involved in being a JA until they've been a JA themselves."

Goodspeed emphasized that the Committee looks at each applicant as an individual. He said an attempt is made to get a good cross section of students on the committee so that who the applicant knows and where they live on campus do not become an issue.

Goodspeed said, "This year we had a good pool (of applicants), a big pool. It did seem limited on the number of minorities, which is always a rough issue to address. I think that's a function of the school, though, and not of the JA process."

Experienced travelers agree:

DON'T GO WITHOUT "LET'S GO®"

They're the most comprehensive budget guide books available today—with up-to-date information on where to stay, what to eat, what to see, and how to get there. It's the only guide you'll ever need.

"Unique and uniquely appealing... The more I read other guidebooks, the more I like LET'S GO." —Time Magazine

"Interesting and lively...the coverage extends far beyond the beaten path." —TWA Ambassador Magazine

LET'S GO

Harvard Student Agencies, Inc.

EUROPE • USA • BRITAIN & IRELAND • FRANCE • ITALY • ISRAEL & EGYPT • GREECE • MEXICO • SPAIN, PORTUGAL & MOROCCO • CALIFORNIA & PACIFIC NORTHWEST

$9.95 each (Europe, $10.95)

ST. MARTIN'S PRESS

AVOID CONFUSION:
PARIS BANK ACCTS.
OPENED AND WAITING FOR YOU IN ADVANCE OF YOUR ARRIVAL OVERSEAS!
FOR ONLY $35
Mail your name address and fee today
STUDENT HOUSING SERVICE
70 West 71 St. • Suite 1-C
NY, NY 10023 • (212)769-1170

Summer Fall Spring

WASHINGTON OR LONDON INTERNSHIPS

OXFORD SUMMER 1986

Full Academic Years In

- Oxford University
- L.S.E.
- St. Andrews, Scotland

U.S. credits will be transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, founded in Virginia by James Madison in 1776. Graduate work is an option. The Director of Studies for the Center for Quality Education Abroad (in Britain) is the Rt. Hon. The Lord Beloff, D.Litt. (Oxon.), Fellow of the British Academy, Professor Emeritus of Government and Fellow of All Souls, Oxford.

INQUIRIES TO: JANET KOLLEK, J.D., Admissions Director CQEA/WISC, Rm 53, 158 W. 81 St., NY, NY, 10024. (212-724-0804/724-0136).

(EO/AA)

Affection

Continued from Page 4

in which students were to sit in the school lounge, hold-hands, and sing a song before homeroom meetings Friday morning. The third group called in the press.

As the sit-in began on Friday, 200 to 300 onlookers assembled and two television cameras appeared. Many students pressed to the front of the crowd to wave and perform antics. When an enlarged group of about 400 students moved outside the school building a little before 8 a.m., approximately 150 students left the school grounds, and headed down North Street, the major commercial throroughfair of Pittsfield. Many of this band were reported to have jumped on parked cars, but the only damage was the breaking of a already cracked window in Brook's Drug Store.

Police arrived at the school when the principal was unable to get the group back inside the building and succeeded in herding many of them inside. Many others returned to class on their own between 8:00 and 8:45. Throughout the day and much of the next week, the school was flooded with calls about the noisy walkout. Coan estimated that he spoke to most of the radio, television, and newspaper reporters within a 200-mile radius, including a representative of NBC's "Today Show."

On the next Monday, Coan met with the student council, as well as with an assembly of other homeroom representatives, and an open forum was held after school to discuss the demonstration and to clarify the issue. Coan said, "(There was) a good give and take at all of the meetings."

M. Rugby

Continued from Page 11

mauls at will. A strong and steady push was provided by seasoned veteran Sean Brennan '87 and newcomer Ken McCleod '86, who replaced the injured Pete Dawson '86.

Harvard drew first blood early in the first half on a penalty kick, as the Killer B's were not playing their brand of technical rugby. But the Ephs began to force the ball into the Harvard zone, where most of the first half was played. The line kept the pressure on, led by Greg Norton '86 and Charlie Lazor '87. The B's were trailing at half by 3-0.

In the second half, the B's came out smoking. Several times the scrummies joined the line, catching Harvard off guard. Using this, Williams pushed the ball deep into Harvard territory, pushing Harvard to the edge and drawing a penalty. Andy Harris '88 hit the kick, and the score was tied at three.

The momentum was now all with Williaims, as they took the kickoff and began to move toward the Harvard try-zone. Hooker Mike Curtin '86 pulled the ball out of a maul, drawing the Harvard defense in, and then dished the ball to fellow scrummie Brennan. Brennan jolted past three Crimson defenders and continued his jaunt into the try zone. The conversion was missed but the four-point edge was all Williams needed to secure the victory.

This Saturday the Ephs will host an eight-team tournament while preparing to play another Ivy League opponent, Dartmouth, next week.

Inclusion

Continued from Page 4

ice while 82 percent of last year's freshmen listed it as their last choice.

Darrow said he believes the freshman inclusion process is "as fair and random as it could be." He noted that he made a suggestion at the beginning of the year to change the system so that it would minimize fifth choices rather than maximize first choices, but the program remained unchanged.

Less negative reaction

Darrow indicated that student reaction to freshman inclusion results, particularly on the part of students assigned to their fifth-choice category, has been nothing like last year. He said this stems partially from efforts made by Berkshire Quad residents to counteract the misinformation and stereotypes that came out as a result of last year's inclusion results.

He said a waiting list for housing will not be started until after the individual houses have completed room draw.

Darrow said there will be 31 beds available in Thompson Infirmary once renovations are complete, but that the housing committee has decided it is too small to be an independent residential house. There are currently about 15 students living in Thompson, several of whom were over-included into Carter House.

Darrow said he has given the current residents squatters' rights and will allow them to stay in the former infirmary as long as they maintain continuous residency. He expects to fill the rest of the available rooms in Thompson next year with Mission Park affiliates and anticipates that it will be a desirable housing option for Mission Park seniors. Darrow said the Mission Park house presidents will devise an equitable way to assign these rooms.

Baseball

Continued from Page 12

Lawry '87 earned the win, pitching five innings and giving up only three hits. He was helped out by Mike Barbera '89, who picked up the save with an impressive showing in the eighth and ninth innings, retiring six of the seven batters he faced.

The game was close through the first three innings, as Southern Vt. edged out to a 3-2 lead. But in the fourth inning, Williams erupted for nine runs to take an insurmountable 11-3 lead. Duquette and Rick Hedeman '87 were the offensive leaders for the day as they each went 2-5 and combined for five RBI.

The team opened its northern portion of the season at home against the hapless Trinity Owls, defeating them for the third time this year by a score of 13-5. Morris picked up the victory for the Ephs as he held Trinity to four hits and three runs in seven innings of action.

As the team's 11-4 record suggests, the Ephs have demonstrated proficiency in all areas of the game. The offensive attack has been superb, as evidenced by a team batting average of .364. Pachus leads the team with a .524 avg., followed closely by Duquette at .517. Collins leads the team in rbi, with 18, while Duquette has scored a team leading 25 runs. On the mound, Morris is 4-1 with an ERA of 2.42, while Muider is 3-0.

The Ephs see action today at Castleton State before traveling to Wesleyan Saturday for a single game.

EST. 1901

Williams Co-op

IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS

the Co-op

LEVI'S

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

JOSEPH E. DEWEY

9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267

SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

Syracuse University

STUDY ABROAD

SUMMER 1986

Consider a 6-credit Program in England

France
Italy
Ireland
Spain
Switzerland

Division of International Programs Abroad
119 Euclid Avenue, Syracuse, NY 13244
Tel. 315/423-3471

DESIGN ARCHITECTURE MUSIC EDUCATION LAW SOCIAL SCIENCE

PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS ART HISTORY MANAGEMENT LANGUAGE & LITERATURE

Navy Gold:

Forged in a Tradition of Excellence

Because the Officers wearing it are the best in the world at what they do ... they have to be

It takes a special breed of aviator to meet the challenges of Naval Aviation. Strong, dedicated professionals who can control the world's most sophisticated aircraft. There's no room over the oceans for aviators that are second-best.

Beneath the surface pulses a unique environment few will ever challenge. Only an uncompromised standard of excellence earns a submariner his dolphins. The Navy's Nuclear Propulsion Officers wear them.

Now Interviewing Juniors

To find out if you're qualified, see the Navy Representative that will be in the Campus Center on April 17, 1986 or call collect (516) 462-6119.

Minority Students Encouraged to Apply

Navy Officers Get Responsibility Fast.

TO MAKE IT TODAY YOU NEED A COLLEGE DIPLOMA, A GOOD SUIT AND PLENTY OF DRIVE.

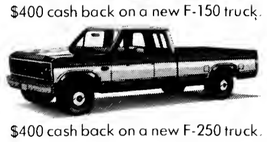
If you've received your bachelor's degree from a 4-year college, or a RN or graduate degree from an accredited institution between October 1, 1985 and September 30, 1986, you can qualify for Ford's Graduate Assistance Program.
We can give you pre-approved credit and $400 cash back on your new Ford.
Only if you buy one of the new Ford cars or trucks listed below and only if you take delivery by August 31, 1986.
For more information, call this toll-free number: 1-800-321-1536. Or see your local New England Ford Dealer today.

$400 cash back on a new Escort.

$400 cash back on a new Escort EXP.

$400 cash back on a new Tempo.

$400 cash back on a new Thunderbird.



$400 cash back on a new Mustang.

$400 cash back on a new Aerostar.

$400 cash back on a new Bronco II.

$400 cash back on a new Ranger pick-up.

$400 cash back on a new F-150 truck.

$400 cash back on a new F-250 truck.

Ford
NEW ENGLAND FORD DEALERS
NOBODY GOES FURTHER.

Rugby whips Harvard

by Mike Curtin

After returning from a Spring Break trip of the United Kingdom, the Williams Rugby club took two games from the Harvard Crimson this Saturday. Using a modified game and an extended repertoire of plays and players, the WRFC taught Harvard the lessons that they learned—the hard way—in England and Wales. 35 ruggers had gone to England over break; the trip saw hard times on the pitch but much experience and knowledge gained.

The A-side opened the season with a 9-6 victory in a brutal and hard-hitting game. A bit nervous at the outset, Williams' play was a little sloppy. Although the defensive play was strong and Williams was moving the ball, they would not break anything open. Sloppy kicking and momentary and unexplainable lapses in concentration led to two successful penalty conversions by Harvard. The score at the half was Harvard 6, Ephs 0.

Determined not to lose, Williams came out for the second half inspired. Three Harvard players had to leave the game, and the Crimson was everywhere—except in the Eph try-zone. The pack was led by the infamous seniors Paul Hogan and George Clemens, who rucked and mauled with reckless abandon.

Showing great versatility and stellar athletic prowess, Eugene Mazzaro '87 dispelled all rumors that scrummies cannot catch or run the ball, as he joined the line several times. This strategy, which WUFO learned in the U.K., gave Williams the extra burst necessary to move the ball deep into enemy territory.

The first points for the Ephs came towards the middle of the second half, when newly appointed kicker Clemens hit a penalty kick, cutting the Crimson lead in half. The Eph line was working extremely well as a unit, while relying heavily on the feet of captain Ed O'Toole '86 and classmate Tim Faselt, making his debut at fullback.

Senior scrum captain Paul Hogan leads the white dogs against Harvard during their 9-6 victory on Saturday. (Khakee)

With three minutes left in the game, winger Mark Tompkins '87 broke into the open field. He passed it to Geoff Kass '86, who lumbered ten meters before deftly dishing the ball to standoff Craig Kirby '86, who gave it to Faselt. The final man to get the ball was Peter Aiken '86, who galloped the remaining few meters for the score. Clemens hit the conversion and Williams led 9-6, which stood as the final margin.

B-side on fire

Not to be outdone, the B-side took the field with fire and determination. Although they fell behind early in the first half, they did not give up, scoring seven points in the second half while shutting out their oppenents.

The pack worked well together and provided constant support for the line. Sophomore Sean Cook and junior Jeff Heilman were powerhouses on loose play, pulling balls out of the

Continued on Page 9

Netmen lose to Tufts, win pair

by Mark Via

Starting their season in great style, the tennis team won two out of three matches this week, topping Middlebury and Clark 7-2 before being shut out at Tufts 9-0 on Saturday.

In the Tufts match, Eph first singles player Chris Clarey '86 faced last year's New England champion, losing 6-2, 4-6, 6-2 in a hard-fought match. The Ephs could take only two more sets from the Jumbos during the day. Sophomore Steve Kargere, playing sixth singles, fell by a score of 6-1, 3-6, 6-0, while the number one doubles pairing of Clarey and senior co-captain Tim Peterson fell in three sets.

The match with the Jumbos was far different from the Ephs' performances earlier in the week, especially the victory over Clark on Thursday, as the top four singles players and all three doubles pairings emerged victorious. Clarey won in three sets, while Peterson battled back after losing the first set to win by 3-6, 6-4, 6-0.

Sophomore Hoyt Ludington dominated Clark's Adam Peretz in the third singles match, losing only one game. Meanwhile, fellow sophomore Robbie Hallagan breezed in fourth singles, taking the match 6-0, 7-5. The second doubles team of senior Tom Goodspeed and Hallagan won, as did the third doubles pairing of Ludington and freshman Drew Sawyer.

The Tuesday match with Middlebury was very similar, as the same teams won their respective matches.

Men's lacrosse

Continued from Page 12

The group of midfielders had trouble at the beginning of 1985, but came on strong late in the year, leading the offensive threat. Seniors Matt Dunne, Michael Stoddard, and Andy Jeffrey will join junior two-year starters Steve Patterson and Rob Miller to try to ignite that same offensive charge. They will be immeasurably helped by last year's co-MVP Jon Edie '88.

O'Connell, the other co-MVP, will anchor the attack which performed so well against Westfield. The group also includes co-captain Chris Toll '86, Sperry, and last year's JV sensation Bill Boyd, as well as sophomore Russell Workman.

"Most of our key kids are back," said coach Renzie Lamb. "We had some injuries in Florida, but things are looking real good now."

WUFO whips Amherst 21-17

by John Bellwoar

This weekend the Williams Ultimate Frisbee Organization set off to Amherst to play its first tournament of the spring. Williams started the tourney by losing to the Hampsters of Hampshire College by 15-13.

The next game, however, was the big one: Williams v. Amherst. The game was extended to 21 points because of the intense rivalry. The first ten points were back and forth; sophomore Chris Jones led WUFO with his great play. Hans Humes '87 abused his body with graceless dives all over the field.

At this point in the game, WUFO became noticeably tired. Amherst had more subs, so they were putting in fresh players all the time. Amherst took advantage of the meeting by taking the lead 17-15.

To counteract this Amherst advantage, WUFO switched to a zone defense, which confused the Lord Jeffs. From then on it was all WUFO, as they stuffed Amherst's offense and ran off six straight points to crush the Jeffs by four, 21-17. Key players included tall people Don Oosterhaus '88 and Bill Connick '88, and also juniors Mark Via and Paul Vigneaux. Freshmen John Bellwoar, John Berger, Brian Cameron and Phil Jordan also played well against more experienced players. The ubiquitous David Levine added experience to the team, and Erin Levine and Anne Carson '88 represented women's WUFO.

Crew

Continued from Page 12

seconds to a boat from Conn. College with a time of 6:30.6.

While the varsity heavyweight boat finished third, the freshman heavyweights provided the highlight of the regatta by topping WPI for the men's only win. The freshman lightweights lost to Conn. College to complete the race.

Next weekend all of Williams College will have the rare opportunity to see the crew, both men's and women's, at their only home regatta of the season, the Little Three. On Friday at 4:45, there will be a christening ceremony for a new Charlie Cost '87 boat, and the race will start at noon on Saturday.

Bed & Breakfast
BATCHELDER 1871 HOUSE
OLD VICTORIAN HOME
CLOSE AND CONVENIENT
REASONABLE RATES
Routes 7 & 346
Pownal, Vermont
(802) 823-5335

Camp Counselors
Top Camp, Berkshire Mts, Mass.
seeks top people over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Tennis, Football, Weight-training, Waterskiing, Swimming, Lacrosse, Sailing, Camp Radio Station, Camp Newspaper, Computer Programming, Video, Theatre Arts, Ceramics, Photography, Pianist. Good salary plus room, board, laundry.
Write Winter office: M. Moss, Lenox 270-14R Grand Central Pkwy, Floral Park, NY 11005

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE GENUINE

This week's recipient is Jim Duquette '88, who has led the baseball team to an 11-4 record, while averaging .517 at the plate. Jim, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

Baseball tops RPI in 10, boosting record to 11-4

by Al Mottur
and Stewart Verdery

Off to its best start of this decade, the baseball team continued its fine play Sunday by edging RPI 11-10 in ten innings, pushing its record to an impressive 11-4. The team went 6-4 in its trip to Florida over Spring Break.

After trailing 10-7 heading into the ninth on Sunday, the Ephs mounted an inspirational comeback against the Engineers. The rally was highlighted by a clutch pinch-single by Chris Pachus '88, his sixth consecutive hit, and an inside curve which hit shortstop Lewis Collins '88 on a two-strike, two-out pitch to force in the tying run.

In the tenth, Bill Ryan '88 and Bob Hussey '86 combined to set RPI down; and Hussey picked up the win when catcher John Shaw '87 tripled home third baseman Steve Beisito '87, who had previously singled.

Jim Duquette '88 sparked the potent Eph offense with three hits, three runs, and two RBI. Beisito and Shaw also collected two hits apiece for Williams to go along with the eleven walks issued by the generous Engineer hurlers. Scott Garfield '88 threw six quality innings in his start, allowing four earned runs.

The game was closely-contested through the first five innings, until RPI manufactured a four-run sixth off of only two hits. Sloppy fielding in the eighth gave the Engineers two more runs, but right fielder Dickie Hollington '86 and Duquette drove in runs in the bottom of the inning to set the stage for the ninth inning rally.

Showing his home-run rip, junior Rick Hedeman swings for the fences in recent baseball action as sophomore Steve Holsten looks for an opportunity to come home. (Khakee)

Sophomore Jim Duquette just barely gets back to the bag as the opponents try to pick the sophomore star off first. (Khakee)

On the previous day, the squad faced its first true test of its northern campaign as it traveled to Medford, Mass. to play the Tufts Jumbos in a doubleheader. The Ephmen responded to the task by sweeping their opponents, winning 8-3 in the opener and prevailing 5-3 in the nightcap. Senior tri-captain and staff ace Kevin Morris picked up his fourth win on the season, while classmate Pieter Muider went the distance for the win in the second game.

In the first game, the Ephs peppered the Tufts' defense with thirteen hits as they built up a 5-1 lead after three innings. The Jumbos threatened with a brief two-run rally in the top of the fourth, but the Ephs countered with two runs of its own in the bottom half of the inning. Tufts failed to score for the remainder of the game as Morris clamped down, striking out six and allowing only two more hits.

Tri-captain Rob Coakley '86 paced the Eph offense, going 3-5 with two homeruns and five RBI. Duquette rapped out three hits in four plate appearances, scored three runs, and stole two bases.

The second game of the twinbill proved to be a closer game, as Williams held off the Jumbos for a tough 5-3 victory. The Ephs scored all five of their runs in the second inning behind hits by Beisito and freshman catcher Chris Donato, both of whom drove in two runs on the day.

However, it wasn't the Williams offense but the excellent pitching performance of Williamstown resident Mulder which secured the win. Mulder allowed only four hits and struck out one, as he pitched a complete game, upping his record to 3-0.

Earlier in the week the team recorded a sloppy 15-8 victory over Southern Vt. at Weston Field in wintry conditions. Seth

Continued on Page 9

Tracksters win meet in last event

Tom Pingree '86 and Andre Lopez '87 caught up in the third and fourth legs of the 4X400M relay, giving the men's track team an 86-85 victory over Trinity on Saturday. Meanwhile, the women runners, despite fine performances from junior Gail Henderson and senior captain Mel Mahoney, fell to Trinity and Connecticut College, scoring 57 points to lose by only four.

Going into the final relay, the men's team knew that whoever crossed the finish line first would take the meet. They had gotten in that position due to Pingree, who had taken the 800m, John Ellison '86, winner of the 5000m, and a fine overall meet from senior Bill Leininger, who won the pole vault and took fourth in the shot put.

Other winners were Brandt Johnson '87, who took the long jump, and sophomore Henry Jones, who won the triple jump, took second in the long jump, and took part in the winning 4X100m relay, along with Fred Pehrsson '89, Will Hooper '89, and Lopez. Pehrsson ended up being the other star of the day for the Ephs, as he placed in both the 100 and 200 meters. Joe McGinn '88 took the hammer throw and Lopez took the 400m to round out the Eph winners.

Women fall short

Henderson won the shotput and the discus competitions before taking second in the 100m to lead the Williams effort in the women's meet. She was ably supported by co-captain Mahoney's victory in the high jump, third place in the triple jump, and fourth place in the long jump. But the efforts fell short as Conn. College scored 61 and Trinity tallied 59 to the Ephwomen's 57.

Freshman Dawn MacCauley and sophomore Jody Davis followed up with excellent overall performances. MacCauley took second in the high hurdles before winning the 400 hurdles, while Davis placed second in both the 200 and 400m. Junior Becky Conklin rounded out the list of Williams winners by taking the 3000, as well as finishing second in the 1500.

"I thought the kids all performed well when they had to," said coach Richard Farley. "It was very competitive on both sides. It was a good win psychologically."

Ephwomen routed by Tufts after edging Spring. by 9-8

Starting off by splitting their first two games, the women's lacrosse team topped Springfield in a squeaker by 9-8 on Wednesday before falling in a rout to Tufts on Saturday by a 15-4 count.

On Saturday, the Ephwomen were only down 6-3 at the half, but according to senior co-captain Laura Rogers, "things just didn't come together in the second half. They're probably the best team we're gonna see this year."

The Springfield game was exciting, "pretty much even all the way," said Rogers. Rogers and co-captain Carrie Cento '86 tallied three goals apiece, while Lisa Tenerowicz '88 hit for two.

The team as a whole looks good this year, according to Rogers. Returning veterans are Rogers, Cento, Lee Wierdsma '87, and sophomores Lisa Phillips, Mara Burnett, Beth Bernheimer, Chris Boddicker, and Lee Briggs '87, as well as junior Lisa Dorian in goal.

"The fact that we beat Springfield says a lot about how good we can be," said Rogers. "We should be better than last year, certainly."

Lady Ruggers scrum in battle with Vassar

by Anne Schmutz

The cold weather numbed the fingers, but not the spirits of the women's rugby club as they opened their spring season against Vassar.

In an exciting A-side game, Williams held their talented opponents scoreless. Although Vassar threatened to score several times, crushing tackles by freshman scrum-half Kerry Kilander, in her first A-side game, and Jody skidd '88, thwarted their efforts.

Unfortunately, the home team could not score either, despite stellar efforts by juniors Mary Peterson and Ann-Marie Plankey and senior lines Becky Haile and Sara Suchman. The two five-minute overtimes were not successful, so the game ended in a scoreless tie.

The B-side did not fare as well, although the team played well together. As Vasar could not field two complete teams, the Williams B-side played Vassar's A-side. Although the final score was a lopsided 30-0, several players displayed good game-sense and offensive ability.

Beth Schaefer 'Ex went wild, as she broke through Vassar's tackles time and time again. Sophomores Janet Mansfield and Jody Abzug showed some heads up playing while junior Anne-Noel Jones kept her head down as she tackled opponent after opponent.

With just one more week of practice on the pitch, the women ruggers have high expectations for their game against Radcliffe next Saturday.

Laxmen lose to Jumbos by 11-4

After playing to a 1-1 record, a 17-2 blasting of Westfield State and an 11-4 loss at Tufts on Saturday, the men's lacrosse team and coach Renzie Lamb are optimistic about the upcoming season, which may provide the best chance in several years to gain the Little Three title.

In the Tufts game, Mike O'Connell '87 scored two goals and had one assist, but the Eph defense simply could not hold back the Jumbos. But last Thursday, the defense presented no problem as the Ephs, recently rated 10th in New England, scored six goals in the first period and rode four goals from junior Jim Sperry to a 17-2 pasting of ninth-rated Westfield State. The Ephs outshot their opponents 52-20.

The defense, however, has long been the strength of Eph lacrosse teams, and this 1986 version looked no different. The back line starts with senior co-captain Brad DuPont, who will try to live up to his All-New England goalie status. Juniors Jamie Gallup and Taylor Watts lead a hard-hitting corps of defensemen, backed up by sophomores David Cromton, Eric Churchill, Jimmy Walker, and Tom Newhall.

Continued on Page 11

Crew pulls at Lake Quinsigamond

by Lisa Mandl
and Kate Saunders

In a neck and neck race on Lake Quinsigamond against Connecticut College and WPI, the women's varsity eight fell as Conn. College pulled out in the last 500 meters to win by less than three seconds, beating WPI by over 14 seconds, as the crew team competed in Worcester.

The morning of the race was a tense one for the women's J.V. boat because Sarah Loebs '88 was unable to row due to a sudden illness. Freshman rower Meg Boyle was substituted at the last minute, and found herself in the unenviable position of having to row her first race ever.

The J.V. boat leapt off the starting line, gaining an early lead which they never relinquished. Conn. made a valiant attempt to come back in the last 500 meters, but the Williams boat held them off for their first victory of the season.

Men race also

Meanwhile, the men's team competed in the same race. The varsity lightweights finished second, losing by only four

Continued on Page 11

The Williams Record

VOL. 99, NO. 21 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE APRIL 22, 1986

CC, Fix talk communication

by Karen Olson

Calling consultation with students a "simmering issue" and "something we've got to work out," Dean of the College Stephen Fix met with College Council last Wednesday to discuss recent communication problems between the Council, committees and the administration.

The meeting came in response to apparent College-Council dissatisfaction with the decision-making processes that culminated in administration approval of the freshman residential seminars and theme housing, although theme housing has now been postponed. Complaints were voiced then that the process had bypassed Council members.

In his opening comments to the Council, Fix voiced administration concerns about the breakdown of the liaison system between College Council and standing student committees, such as the Committee on Undergraduate Life and the Committee on Educational Policy.

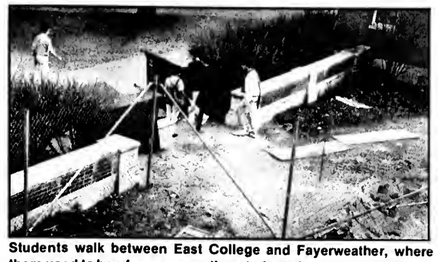
Fix said, "My main point is that it is a concern of the administration to urge you strongly, in order to increase your power, influence and prestige, not to undermine the CEP and the CUL. To be candid, these committees have legislative power, while the College Council has virtually none."

Weekly meetings

Fix went on to tell the Council that it has "a crucial role to play in articulating how students feel about issues," and expressed the administration's desire to work with the Council. Fix also stated his hope for weekly meetings between himself and new Council President Amy Jeffress '87.

Fix described the Williams administration as being in a unique position, on account of the small size of the College. He said, "Everyday activities of the administration are being guided by student reactions and criticisms in ways not obvious to official groups like the College Council, the CUL and the CEP."

Much of the nearly two-hour discussion centered on the actual role of the College Council in relation to committees. Gladden House representative Mark Tompkins '87, former Council presidential candidate, voiced doubt as to whether students on committees actively seek and represent student opinion.



Tompkins further questioned whether the decisions of student committee members are reflective of the prevailing mood on campus, and said, "student opinion should be the starting point for committee members." He cited next year's freshman residential seminars and administration decisions about the Log as points of contention.

Respect intelligence

In response, Fix warned that Council members must respect the intelligence of fellow students. He said, "The Council would do a disservice to itself and students on committees if they are made to feel like second class citizens." He also asked Council members to leave open the possibility of disagreement between themselves and committee members.

The Council called for more structure in the liaison system between the Council and committee members. Dennett House Representative Jon Hollenberg '88 suggested, "Liaisons should come to College Council meetings." In response, Jeffress said, "College Council will work on the information process and will try to deal with genuine conflict whenever it comes up."

Continued on Page 7

Students walk between East College and Fayerweather, where there used to be a fence preventing students from walking through the construction at the Williams College Museum of Art. (Somers)

Fence torn down

Construction hindered

by Anne O'Malley

A fence erected in the Berkshire Quadrangle during the first week after spring break, designed to direct student traffic-flow and protect students from construction at the Williams College Museum of Art, was torn down sometime during the weekend of April 12.

Norman Quinn, director of Building Trades and Grounds, and Robert Fowler, assistant director for Administrative and Housekeeping Services, decided to build the fence after hearing complaints from custodians that mud from the construction site was being tracked into East, Fayerweather and Lawrence Hall.

In addition, the contractor at the construction site reported students were walking directly underneath cranes while the cranes were in operation. Quinn said construction work was being interrupted "a million times a day" by students walking through the area.

Continued on Page 7

Edwards of biology to join deans' office

by Debbie Snyder

At the faculty meeting last Wednesday, Dean of the College Stephen Fix announced the appointment of Assistant Professor of biology Joan Edwards as assistant dean, the faculty discussed the funding of MASSPIRG, and Dean of the Faculty John Reichert named the recipients of a minority fellowship.

Edwards will begin as dean in a newly created position this August. She has no specific role as of yet, except that she will deal with contract majors. "I enjoy working with students, and I think that a dean gets to see a different aspect of students and of the College than an academician (does)," she said.

Edwards has been at Williams for 7 years, and she received tenure last July. She began her undergraduate education at Duke University and transferred to the University of Michigan, where she went on to receive her Ph.D. in biology.

In other Deans' Office changes, Fix said Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta will be returning from a year-long sabbatical and her temporary replacements, Assistant Deans Roberto Ifill and William Darrow, will leave the office to return to full-time teaching.

MASSPIRG questioned

Professor of psychology Andrew Crider opened a brief discussion on the nature of the funding for MASSPIRG by ask-

Continued on Page 8

Students hit Chapin beach to enjoy springlike weather. (Somers)

Speakers at GLU rally call for honesty

by Jocelyn Shadforth

Between 150 and 200 students, many wearing white shirts, attended a rally last Tuesday to promote awareness and acceptance of gays and lesbians at Williams. John Tyler '89 summed up the atmosphere at the rally, a celebration of honesty and acceptance, by saying, "We're all really glad to be here."

The Williams Gay and Lesbian Union sponsored the rally as part of Lesbian and Gay Awareness Day. Students were asked to show support for gay and lesbian rights by wearing white shirts and were invited to attend a variety of programs.

Speaker John Malcolm '87 referred to the rally as an affirmation. He said, "We're trying to show that it's not only OK to be gay. It's great and we're proud." Malcolm said the rally was held for the benefit of all, but added, "We are trying to reach ourselves, members of the gay community, those grappling with their own sexuality, and those who support us and are not gay."

Strength demonstrated

Amelie Zurn '86 said, "(I feel) honored to be a part of the strength demonstrated today." She spoke of her need, "(As) a straight person, to evaluate my personal position ... and draw into question my own sexuality."

Will Hollands '87 described the difficulty homosexuals have living in a society grounded in heterosexuality. He pointed specifically to yellow posters listing illustrious homosexual and bisexual men and women, saying, "We all find support in that history today."

Katie Kent '88 spoke of her personal experience with her own sexuality. She said the rally had demonstrated to her that the personal is political. She dedicated her speech to "all of the women who deliberated over wearing a white shirt ... and to all of those who found an excuse not to come, and to those who did come."

Professor Wendy Brown addresses the audience at the GLU rally last Tuesday. (Khakee)

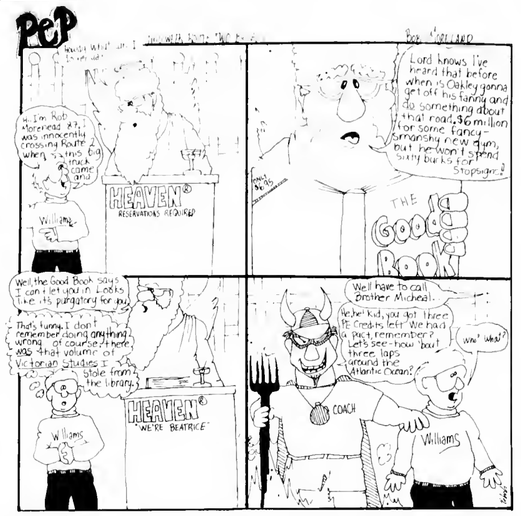
Kent discussed how she revealed her homosexuality to three people in her entry last year, one of whom is her present roommate. She said she felt that her roommate, who is not gay, might suffer from possible "guilt by association." Kent explained that her roommate had said, "That's fine. It's all right." She then concluded, "I want to thank everyone who came today, especially my roommate."

Assistant Professor of Political Science Wendy Brown quoted poet Adrian Rich's statement, "Silence is a pond where drowned things live," explaining "(there is) a particular silence for lesbians."

Brown said the accepted ideas that, "Sex is something men do to women and love is what women live for, to get from men, makes the desire and passion between women ... ontologically impossible." She called society's external silence about lesbians "unimaginable" and "invisible." "It's an eerie silence that makes you feel unreal," she said. "Breaking silence means not telling lies."

Assistant Professor of Political Science Tim Cook explained that he is weary of people who act as though they are friends

Continued on Page 6



Someone talks, someone listens

The decision by the administration to reverse itself and not take a Dodd satellite house for freshman housing next year is worthy of commendation. The idea was faulty; students voiced opposition; and several freshmen proposed an alternative that was accepted.

What is unusual about this episode is not so much that the administration wisely reconsidered a decision but that individual students were responsible for the resolution. The administration does weigh student sentiment, and just like suspending the theme house, will back down when student support does not exist.

Individual students rarely provide the voices the administration wants and needs to hear — fewer than 10 students even attended the open forum where the theme house was first discussed last spring. Several freshmen, however, actually reacted to the unfortunate prospect of 10 or 11 freshmen living apart from their class, and came up with a list of singles that can be converted into doubles in current freshman houses. These students, who had no personal stake in the decision, are to be applauded for their initiative as is the administration for its reversal.

As the Record has pointed out in the past, worthwhile student input into decisions is sporadic at best, and often seemingly nonexistent. When students finally stir themselves from apathy, the administration will respond, if grudgingly. When someone speaks, there is someone there to listen.

Letters

A Rose

To the Editor:

A rose by any other name would smell as sweet, but Williams' century old basketball court, as it disappears into the maw of the giant new gym, is in peril of having no name at all. To keep its memory alive, we suggest Airwick Hall, redolent at once of Tudor baronial exteriors and the perfumed propinquity of Purple players.

S. Lane Faison, Jr. '29

Equality?

To the Editor:

Imagine a system where some individuals were given a greater voice in the government because of the color of their skin. Perhaps you are irritated by the thought of such racism, or perhaps you see through this thin disguise and think to yourself that this system is not necessarily bad. By doing so you avoid condemning your own college, which now has such a system. In the recent College Council elections, the students voted overwhelmingly to give two minority representatives a vote on the College Council.

In the first place, I vehemently disagree that past inequalities can be corrected by more inequality. I am not a racist. I would not take an equal voice away from a Black or any other minority. I resent that that is what my fellow students have done to me. Why should I have less than an equal voice because of the color of my skin?

Secondly, I believe that this system will benefit only certain minorities. If a black student representative is elected, will he/she equally represent the views of the Oriental students? Some might object that having just two College Council minority representatives is fair because all of the minority students would have an equal vote in the election of these representatives. Well then, what is wrong with all of the students all having an equal voice in the election of all of the representatives? The new system at Williams will be unfair, not only to whites, but to some minorities.

Thirdly, I believe that the new system will tend to add to the problem that it was presumably enacted to eliminate. Imagine this scenario: shortly before the elections, Bob and Bill, both white students, are eating lunch in Baxter. Joe, a black student who is running for College Council Member at large, happens to walk by. When he has passed, Bill asks Bob "Are you going to vote for Joe?" Bob replies, "Why should I? They have their own representatives." While such a reaction may be wrong, I believe that it is neither unnatural nor unlikely. Thus, the minority representatives will add racial seperatism to the Williams campus.

Lastly, I would disagree that we have a significant racial problem on campus (although we could create one). Many people feel that we do have a racial problem on campus and that the new representatives will help to correct the discrimination that exists. Even if there is a racial problem, and even if the new system wasn't unfair, and even if the new system didn't create racial seperatism, I would still disagree with the resolution adopted by the students. It is an attempt to bandage a symptom of a disease rather than curing the cause of the disease. We can apply as many bandages as we want, but by doing so we will not have cured racism.

Because I am a conservative W.A.S.P., some people will say to me "you just want to keep Blacks from being equal." This statement could not be further from the truth. I want equality. I would be equally, if not more, upset if blacks were not allowed to vote for certain College Council members. Still, the system that the students have so heartily endorsed is unfair to both whites and some minorities, will create new problems, and, at the very best, is an improper solution that can only mask an important problem.

Matthew McQueen '89

Extremism

To the Editor:

Last Thursday the Navy set up a recruiting table in Baxter during lunch. A certain student protested their presence there by making a complete fool of himself. He used string to mark off their table with a "Line of Death." He hung signs all about with such sarcastic statements as "Kill a Commie Terrorist Today!", "Feelin' Lucky, A-rab?" and "Don't Shoot 'til You See the Black of their Skin." Throughout the lunch period this student stood alongside the two Navy recruiters acting like a silly barker — "Step right up, step right up! Sign up today and you too can bomb terrorist babies!"

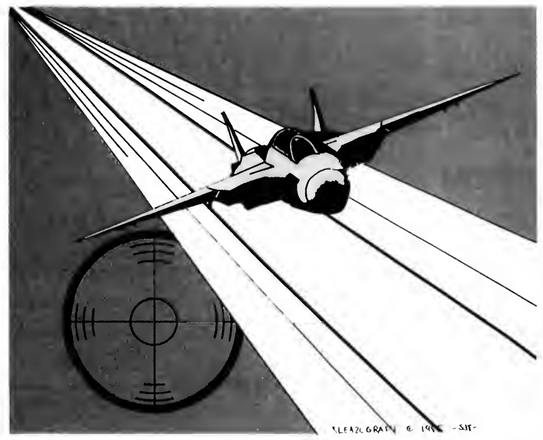
The Security officer who removed some of the student's material made it clear that the authorities did not object to the student's right to protest. Their only concern was that he do so properly and politely. Most on this campus — even the 'Left community' — would probably agree with this position. It's OK to demonstrate one's objections, but, as one student standing by said, "isn't this a little extreme?"

Yes, the action was certainly "a little extreme." Yes, the student made a fool of himself. But what's important is that this student also succeeded in making a mockery of the Navy recruiters as well. Few dared to associate themselves with such a public scene by approaching the recruiters. That was a victory.

Under the current administration, the U.S. military has materially suported and directly perpetrated countless acts of international terrorism. The U.S. has brazenly violated international law by waging undeclared war against the sovereign nations of Grenada, Nicaragua, Angola, and now Libya.

President Reagan claimed that this latest U.S. terrorist bombing was in retaliation for the West Berlin "disco bombing" that claimed the life of Sgt. Ford and injured 230 others. May we see some evidence please? After the naked lies about Nicaragua's "invasion" of Honduras two weeks ago and Secretary Schultz's public admission that the previous encounter with Libya was intentionally provoked by the U.S., we cannot accept on faith bald assertions by this administration. And besides, when has this administration chosen to even care about the Berlin bombing? When has it ever given a damn about poor blacks from Detroit like Sgt. Ford?

President Reagan is the true "mad dog." His administration is cynically manipulating our servile media to whip up public support for his shameless, even boastful, slaughtering of innocent civilians around the world. The military recruiters who seek to enlist us in such acts of terrorism should be made to feel uncomfortable wherever they go.



That student's protest action last Thursday no doubt won over very few to his position. Some might argue that peaceful, sincere, human-to-human persuasion would have been more effective in dissuading other students from patronizing the Navy recruiters' table. Baloney.

One look at that scene — the neat, uniformed officers and their fancy brochures (prominently displayed amongst their propaganda was an issue of Time Magazine with the cover, "Striking Back at Terrorism"), and a scruffy civilian — and it's obvious who's in control. How is anyone to break through that, to gain the inner-ear of an individual's critical faculties in such a charged and fleeting moment? It is simply impossible for peaceful persuasion to prevail in such an authoritarian situation. That only works

Continued on Page 3

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Virginia Demaree
FEATURES ..... Joe Thorndike
ARTS ..... Eric Hanson
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Nik Khakee
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Andrew Mayer, Harweii Wells
ASSISTANT FEATURES ..... Corinna Lamb
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright
GRAPHICS ..... Penny Schenk
ADVERTISING ..... Martin Furey, Lisa Kiem
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov 27 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma March 3 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879 Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma 01267 POSTMASTER Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown Ma 01267

The U.S. raid in Libya was a response to provocations

by David Walters

Unilateral diplomatic and economic sanctions by the U.S. are useless in addressing the Libyan problem. The U.S. attempted to bring its allies into an agreement for Libyan sanctions. U.S. veteran diplomat, Vernon Walters, spent two weeks before the military strike trying to achieve an agreement among our allies. He was unsuccessful. He is an expert in his field — fluent in more than six languages — and widely respected in Europe. If he could not achieve a consensus, it it probably not possible in the near future. Therefore, the U.S. was left with the choice of either taking military action or doing nothing.

Libya stated several years ago that it was going to attack Americans whenever it found them in the world. In recent months, the number of attacks and American deaths has increased. The argument that the U.S. should not attack Libya militarily because we might kill civilians is the argument that a Libyan civilian's life is worth more than the American lives which were being taken right and left.

For over a year, Qaddafi has been promising his people that the U.S. was preparing to attack Libya. The U.S., he knew, would not attack unprovoked, hence his recent provocation (the attacks on Americans). Qaddafi's hold on power is tenuous at best and he desperately needs to be able to deliver on his promises. He is not crazy — politically he is quite savvy. Despite the facts, Libyan radio and TV reports hushed up the damage the U.S. inflicted and announced that large numbers of U.S. planes had been shot down. Libya's failed attack on a U.S. telecommunications facility was reported a success. Qaddafi is using the U.S. as a target upon which to focus his people's hatred because he realizes that hatred is a powerful galvanizing force.

A military victory over Qaddafi cannot help but demonstrate to the Libyans (who are not taken in by the state-controlled media) that their leader's promises are not being kept. Over the long term, this cannot help but destabilize his regime.

It is foolish to think of the attack on Libya as an extension of U.S. policy on the use of force (as the policy stands in Central America). In Central America, the U.S. is acting without provocation. Libya, however, has adopted the policy of killing Americans. A response was absolutely necessary to force Qaddafi to relize that the U.S. does not give him free license to kill its citizens for his own political gain.

Qaddafi is using the U.S as a target upon which to focus his people's hatred because he realizes that hatred is a powerful galvanizing force.

Libya is obviously not the sole source of terrorism. Syria and Iran are also major sponsors of terrorism. Libya, though, is a problem we can do something about. Attacking Syria would involve directly engaging Soviet advisors, which no one thinks profitable. Iran's involvement with Iraq and Isolation in the world diplomatic community has made tracing terrorist activities clearly to her a bit more difficult.

We therefore conclude that the U.S. strike against Libya was justified and necessary. Qaddafi has no doubt that if he attacks Americans, he will get a response which will in the long-term destabililze his regime. This is one consideration he must take seriously.

David Walters '88 is member of the James A. Garfield Republican Club.

Violence and the Liberal Arts

by Charles P. Goodwin

If the liberal education fails to teach that violence is not permissible and that justice must be sought, then that education is a failure. The liberal education is founded upon a belief in the validity of reason and on a taste for life itself.

This education does not endow one with a store of knowledge but a wisely skeptical disposition toward the conventional wisdom and superstition that passes, in general, for knowledge. In a sense, the liberal education is a condensed life, an attempt — perhaps, in vain — to endow one with wisdom beyond one's years, to harden one against buying what this or that crackpot may say.

We stand, at the success of this education, stripped of everything but an affirmation of reason and humanity. Reason is nothing more than the attempt of each individual to make sense of a senseless world. Notions of Good and Evil become invalid before the awareness of our overwhelming ignorance that either age or education gives. All one can say is that he knows what he feels best. He cannot say that his notion is better that another's. Given this, notions of superiority become vapid.

Violence is an assault on the reasoning ability of each individual. I, the attacker, am destroying another's capacity to reason. Not only do I assert your reasoning is inferior, I assert that the command of a gun is itself more important than reason.

To commit violence is not only to declare that another's reason is inconsequentional but also to deny the importance of my own reasoning capacity. Thus, the saying from the Talmud or the Koran (depending on your preferences) that to destroy one life is to destroy all life. I cannot kill you — no matter what my desire — because I cannot know you well enough to justify your murder and because my act would be as much against myself as you.

Justice is not the blind search for revenge or retaliation for some supposed harm. Nor is justice the demand that I should attack you — mentally or physically — to avenge myself by some attempt to lessen who you are. Justice is the demand to reparate, to redress some wrong that has been done to me. No emotion is present here: this is merely a calculus. Notions of guilt are also bootless: one's self is not punished, one's deeds are. Social justice merely stands as an attempt to make a world which furiously resists human control a little more merciful to each and all of us. We must seek justice because it represents an attempt to make the world comprehensible before our human eyes. The search is to affirm reason.

Unless one affirms reason and the principles of justice and life itself, one becomes frivolous in the sense that one is rejecting one's own humanity. It is contradictory to believe in both the worth of one's own life, reason, and in violence.

To make this affirmation is not to become a saint, but to become a human being. The determination to enjoy life, to create, to act productively within society is to confirm the worth of humanity itself.

The burden of proof must always be upon the Violent and not upon the Non-Violent. Even the use of violence in self-defense is contradictory for that is to validate the logic of violence. Only in a passing moment of intense fear can this be tolerable. In all other moments and in all social decisions, reason, not violence, must prevail.

Tonight — tonight, the violence that infests all our lives in subtle and blatant forms can cease within the scope of our lives. Perhaps war will not cease instantly, perhaps we can do nothing immediate about the murders that go down on some city street after nightfall. But we can end the continuous small acts of violence — the bigotries, the intolerances, the petty hatreds, the angry flashes — that surround us like the tide about a jetty. All each of us has to do is to make a commitment to himself and to reason. This may take time and effort for it is difficult to accept oneself in a society that tells women how they must appear and that they are of little value aside from their appearance, a society that tells men that they must be unfeeling and that they must improve their value as men by destruction. But, it is possible.

If we do not search for justice, if we do not seek to end violence, then we have all failed as human beings, then Williams has failed as an institution of liberal education. For to embrace violence is to deny reason, to assault the ability of each to determine his own moral order for the universe.

Charles P. Goodwin is a junior.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

when it's your table, when it's you who is in control.

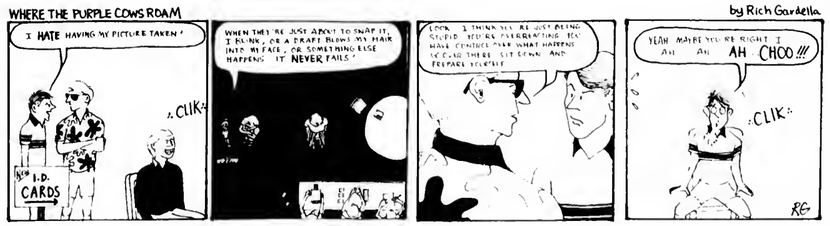
No, that student's action last Thursday noon did little to build an opposition to our nations' rising war hysteria. But it did succeed in negating one small moment of the war-mongers' campaign. Until a powerful peace campaign makes unnecessary such theatrical tactics, those bastards and their propagandizing have got to be disrupted and opposed everywhere, at every moment.

This action was a victory — a minute, momentary and, yes, foolish victory, but a victory nonetheless. We all ought to have the guts to be such fools.

Nicholas van Aelstyn '86

Stigma



To the Editor:

I wish the Gay and Lesbian Union and the larger homosexual rights community well in their attempts to lessen the stigma and discrimination too often associated with homosexuality in our society.

Precisely because I support the effort, I cannot understand why the pink triangle, a symbol of the worst kind of human degradation, has come to be used on buttons, T-shirts, bumper stickers and rally posters. Even an unintentional celebration of the demented mentality which created the label must encourage those people who want to hurl the word "perverse" at homosexuals. It is a symbol that stands in direct opposition to the dignity and worth of each person.

I ask that everyone associated with Lesbian and Gay Awareness Day please reconsider using the pink triangle as a community sign at Williams — or anywhere else.

Eric Glatstein '87

NEWSBRIEFS

Blood drive

Spencer-Brooks-West narrowly edged out three other residential houses in the Red Cross bloodmobile's Vampire Sweepstakes last week. The bloodmobile was open last Tuesday and Wednesday at the First Congregational Church.

Spencer-Brooks-West won with 19.2 percent of its residents donating blood. The next three finishers were East (18.5 percent), A-Gar-Wood (18.3 percent) and Gladden (18.1 percent). The competition was so close that one additional donor from East, A-Gar-Wood or Gladden would have given that house a victory.

The winners will receive a batch of goodies donated by the 1896 House. As winner among the freshmen dorms, East will receive an assortment of food from JB's, located on Water Street.

In all, the bloodmobile collect 211 units of blood during the two days. Of the 238 people who came to donate, 25 were first-time donors and 178 were Williams students. One-gallon donor pins were awarded to Paul Mahoney '87, Julie Silverman, exchange , Jennifer Martin '86, Mary Ulmer '88, Cathy Evans '86, Tom Vitale '86, and Martin Illner '87.

Additional charity work was done at the American Heart Association's Phone-a-thon, which ran April 11, 12 and 13, in the Currier Ballroom. Organized by Rob Manago '86 and Erol Onel '88, the phone-a-thon raised $2900, exceeding its goal of $2500. Approximately 30 people participated in the phone-a-thon by donating phones or phone lines, or making phone calls.

Grants awarded

Williams College professors Steven Zottoli of biology and Paul R. Solomon of psychology received a joint research grant last week.

Zottoli and Solomon were jointly awarded $50,000 from the National Science Foundation for Neuroscience Teaching and Research.

Zottoli and Solomon plan to use the NSF grant and a $50,000 matching grant from Williams to establish an undergraduate neuroscience teaching laboratory. According to Solomon, the grant will allow them to purchase equipment needed to build an advanced neuroscience training facility unique among undergraduate institutions.

"Our students will now have the opportunity to conduct experiments that were previously possible only at a handful of major research universities," Solomon said.

Thursday lectures

Noted theologian Ernest Sosa, Romeo Elton professor of natural theology at Brown University, will lecture about "The Incoherence of Skepticism" at 8:00 p.m. this Thursday in the Dodd House living room. Also on Thursday, Pierre-Edmond Robert will speak on "Marcel Prouse et ses manuscrits." Robert's lecture, to be given in French, will take place in the Stetson Faculty Lounge at 8:00 p.m.

Sosa's speciality is epistemology, the study of the scope and nature of human knowledge. In his lecture, Sosa will suggest that the challenge of skepticism, the view that knowledge is impossible, can be refuted.

Sosa received his Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh in 1964. Since then, he has written more than 70 philosophical articles and scholarly essays and edited four books. He has held visiting appointments at Harvard University and the Universities of Texas and Michigan. Sosa has taught at Brown since 1974.

Robert is a professor of French at Grand Valley State College in Allendale, Mich., where he has been teaching since 1969. A native of France, he received his Doctorat de l'Universite de Paris-Sorbonne in comparative literature in 1972 and his Doctorat d'Etat des lettres in French literature from the Sorbonne in 1984.

Robert is the author of Marcel Proust lecteur des Anglo-Saxons, published in 1976 and D'un hotel du Nord l'autre: Eugene Dabit (1898-1936), to be published later this year.

Both lectures are free and open to the public.

Math competition

Two teams, each consisting of three Williams students, participated in a mathematical competition in modeling held earlier this year. In results announced last week, the team consisting of Azim Currimjee '86, Joe Francis '87 and Mike McDougall '88 received an honorable mention.

For the competition, a team selected one of two problems and then worked on that problem over a weekend. Professor Gulliford Spencer, acting chairman of the mathematical sciences department, said, "On this type of problem, you are judged on the way you do something, rather than getting the answer. There might be several solutions which build a bridge, but some solutions are better."

Members of the math department said they are pleased with the results. Assistant Professor Colin Adams, an advisor to the competition, said, "Considering that this is the first year Williams participated in the contest, the performance of our teams was very impressive."

One hundred and eighteen teams from 89 colleges and universities submitted solution papers.

-Martin Hildebrand

Bruce

Kim Bruce, a mathematical sciences professor, has received an award of 277,000 Belgian francs, just under $6000, from the NATO Scientific Affairs Division.

Bruce received his award to support international collaboration in computer-science research with professors Albert Meyer of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Giuseppe Longo of Pisa, Italy. The grant will finance visits by Bruce and Meyer to the University of Pisa and by Longo to the United States to conduct a research project titled "The Mathematical Semantics of Types in Programming."

Astronaut describes her journey to space

by Karen Costenbader

Mary L. Cleave, a civil engineer and mission specialist for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, gave a talk titled "Mission 61-B of the Shuttle Program: The First Planned Space Construction" last Thursday in Bronfman Auditorium. Cleave was a member of the seven-person crew aboard the orbiter Atlantis Mission STS 61-B.

Cleave has been a NASA astronaut since May, 1980, and has completed numerous other technical assignments in addition to Mission 61-B, including serving as CAPCOM (Mission Control Communiciations liaison with astronauts aboard the shuttle) for five other shuttle flights. Her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Howard E. Cleave, live in Williamstown.

Mission 61-B was launched at night from Kennedy Space Center in Florida on Nov. 26, 1985. Cleave was the only woman on the shuttle's crew. The purposes of the mission were to deploy three communications satellites, conduct two six-hour spacewalks to demonstrate space-station construction techniques, and perform scientific experiments.

Cleave, an engineer who also has a background in research biology, was responsible for conducting various biological experiments involving growing organic crystals in the conditions of zero gravity. Originally educated as a high-school biology teacher, Cleave went on to receive both her M.S., in microbial science, and her Ph.D., in civil environmental engineering, from Utah State University.

Space stations

The two construction experiments were designed "to figure out the best way to build the space station," Cleave said. She remained in the shuttle and manipulated the mechanical arm, which assisted crew members in their construction of two four-story trusses.

In her opinion, the construction experiments turned out some of the most exciting results of the mission, because the astronauts found it easier than they had predicted to manipulate the large structures in space.

During her lecture, Cleave showed a video tape of crew members performing various activities in space. "Sleeping is great," she said. "If you don't

Continued on Page 7

Dodd will not lose satellite, Fix says

Dean of the College Stephen Fix announced last week that, contrary to what had been revealed earlier, there will not be a new freshman entry in one of the Dodd House satellites next year.

Fix said the decision came after "strong advice from this year's freshmen." During a Gaudino Committee-sponsored forum for the freshman class, students voiced concerns about the small size of the proposed entry, Fix said.

Dodd house residents, including former president John Woodard '86, had also opposed the plan, especially if the entry were to take Sewall House, which contains several Dodd House senior picks.

Because the target size for the class of 1990 is 515, seven more than this year's freshman class, the administration had thought it would be necessary to create a new entry and had settled on Dodd Annex. "There was some fairly advanced planning," Fix said, "but it will not happen."

The seven students will instead be housed in the six existing freshman dorms. When Fix asked students at the forum to come up with an alternate suggestion for housing the overflow students, they responded with a list of singles large enough to be converted into doubles. The exact rooms have not been chosen, but, "We're satisfied that we can do it," Fix said.

Fix said he wanted to emphasize that the decision was made in response to student initiative. "They (the freshmen) argued against it and convinced us," he said.

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

HEADING FOR EUROPE THIS SUMMER?

Jet there anytime for only $160 with AIRHITCH® (as reported in Consumer Reports, NY Times, Newsday, Harvard's "Let's Go" Student Travel Guide Series, Good Housekeeping, and on national network morning shows). For details, call 212-864-2000 or write:

2901 Broadway, Suite 100A, NY, NY 10025.

Camp Counselors

Top Camp, Berkshire Mts, Mass.

seeks top people over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Tennis, Football, Weight-training, Waterskiing, Swimming, Lacrosse, Sailing, Camp Radio Station, Camp Newspaper, Computer Programming, Video, Theatre Arts, Ceramics, Photography, Pianist. Good salary plus room, board, laundry.
Write Winter office: M. Moss, Lenox 270-14R Grand Central Pkwy, Floral Park, NY 11005

Williams University? MA really means arts

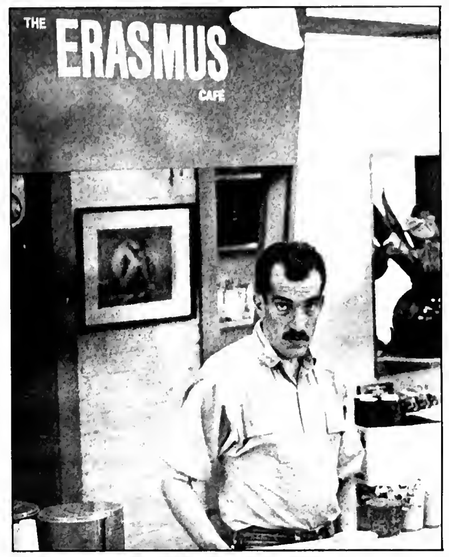
by Midori Sonoda

If you thought Williams was just a college, the Graduate Program in the History of Art will prove you wrong. Initiated in 1972, it has granted over a hundred students Master in Arts degrees in the history of art.

The two-year program, offered in conjunction with the

Continued on Page 8

Books, food for thought at New Cafe



by Bill O'Brien

"Don't give me these people who put too much hot pepper into something and then ask how to get it out."

Those were the first words I got from one Scott Van Hensbergen, directed at the employee who had apparently answered the phone. Van Hensbergen is the owner and chef, and sometimes waiter and busboy, at the newly-established Erasmus Cafe in the College Bookstore on Spring Street.

"When I get a little money, I buy books; if any is left, I buy food," he said. This is the theme behind the Cafe, based on a quote from Desiderius Erasmus, a philosopher whose name Van Hensbergen chose for the new addition to his establishment, both for the appropriateness of the quote and because he is a fellow Dutchman.

Van Hensbergen, a former free-lance caterer in both Williamstown and New York, returned home last year to find that Betsy Burbank, owner of the Bookstore, was looking for someone to open a cafe in her shop. And the rest, as they say, is down on Spring Street.

Erasmus Cafe propreitor Scott Van Hensbergen offers food for the flesh and books for the brain. (Khakee)

Business is going well, according to Van Hensbergen.

Continued on Page 6

Daiquiris: Fruity fun at the Factory

by Alison Jones

The mission was to explore and document alternatives to the local watering holes. The target was the Daiquiri Factory in Bennington, Vermont, just about 13 miles north of campus on Route 7.

The Daiquiri Factory is part of a double-decker establishment. There is a deli on the first floor through which you have to walk to get upstairs to the bar. The Factory is a surprisingly small room with about eight tables and a number of stools at the bar. Accoutrements include a couple of video games, a juke box and television.

By bar standards, it is fairly well-lit, somewhere between the gloom that denotes a dive and the equally unappealing flourescence of an interrogation room. The decor is forgettable haute deli style, with ersatz butcher-block tables, but it isn't grubby.

The clientele is not the usual college crowd of the local pubs. However, the bartender, Pete, said that a fairly large number of students from Williams, Bennington, and Southern Vermont Colleges come to the Daiquiri Factory on a regular basis. The only concern he had was that kids would make the drive home after a night of drinking at his bar. He encouraged the use of the "designated driver."

The daiquiris come in many flavors, including the traditional strawberry and a banana, as well as the more unique pina colada. Specials, such as raspberry, are also offerred. There is no table service.

Pete said daiquiris account for 75% of his blender drink sales. The blender drinks, served in tall glasses and garnished with whipped cream certainly look good. They are, surprisingly, tasteless.

The daiquiris suffer from too little rum, too little fruit, too much water, and an overpowering amount of lime juice. They are not terrible, but for $3.50 per drink one could expect more. The normal mixed drinks are quite good, and are less expensive than the daiquiris.

A few loyal patrons from Bennington said they go to the Daquiri Factory three or four times a week because they like the low-key atmosphere. They drank beer and remarked that nobody but out-of-towners drank the daiquiris, though they did recommend the frozen white russians.

All in all, Daiquiri factory gets a qualified recommendation: it is a create-your-own-fun place and, though the daiquiris weren't quite what we had hoped, for a quietish way to pass a couple of hours it does the job.

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight at 7:00, the music department's Studio X recital will take place in Brooks-Rogers recital hall featuring junior pianist Amy Champagne and other student performers. Admission is free.....At 8:00 tonight at the Clark Art Institute, Dr. Eunice Lipton, Robert Sterling Clark Visiting Lecturer in the History of Art, will give an art lecture entitled "Degas Paints the Ballet: Glamour Revisited.".....The third presentation in a series of seven "Art-Breaks" will take place Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. in the Clark Art Galleries featuring a talk by Beth Carver Wees on "American Glass." Admission is free. The presentation will be repeated on Sunday at 2:30 p.m.....Wednesday evening at 7:30, Transcript photographer James Niedbalski will present a slide lecture on "Hiking the Length of the Continental Divide." The free event will take place in Room 231 of Lawrence Hall.....Also at 7:30, Alexandra Murphy, curator of paintings, will give a talk at the Clark Art Institute Auditorium entitled "From Ruth to Boaz to the Shepherds in the Fields: The Theme of Love in 18-th Century French Painting." Admission is free.....On Friday afternoon at 4:00, senior Carl Leafstedt will give a talk in Room 30 of the Bernhard Music Center on violinist Ginette Neveu in aMusic Listening Group presentation for music majors and other interested music students.....The Berkshire Symphony will present its final concert of the season at 8:00 Friday evening in Chapin Hall under the direction of Julius Hegyi. The program will include Mozart's Concerto for Flute and Orchestra featuring senior soloist Tara Kazak, Dohnanyi's Suite in F-sharp minor, and Marga Richter's Blackberry Vines and Winter Fruit. Admission is $3.50; free with Williams ID.....On Saturday afternnon at 3:30, Curator of Paintings Alexandra Murphy will give a gallery tour of the French Impressionist Collection at the Clark Art Institute. The tour will meet in the museum's Renoir Room.....Saturday at 8:00 p.m., the opening performance of Mozart's opera "The Abduction From the Seragilo" will take place in the Adams Memorial Theatre. Tickets are $5; $1 with Williams ID. Reservations are required and can be made by calling the AMT box office at 597-2425. The performance will be repeated on Sunday and also on April 29 and 30, and May 2 and 3. All performances begin at 8 p.m.....Also at 8:00 that evening, the 10-man a cappella singing group The Springstreeters will present a concert in Chapin Hall. Admission is $1.....For complete music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146.

IN OTHER IVORY TOWERS

Western New England College

WNEC Athletic Director Eric Geldart submitted a proposal to the administration requiring the testing of athletes for drugs. This would only involve athletes participating in varsity sports. Interestingly, coaches and athletes feel that drug-testing is justified. According to Geldart, "the program is not designed to eliminate people, but rather to find out what athlete has a problem and help him to overcome it." The proposal calls for the athlete to be informed if a drug test is to be conducted. He will be able to refuse taking the test if he so wishes. The proposal at WNEC is an outgrowth of a NCAA resolution passed in January which will mandate all players participating in the college bowl games to be tested before the contest.

Wesleyan

Traditional caps and gowns are now a thing of the past at Wesleyan. This year's graduating class will be sporting "disposable gowns," robes of a light, synthetic fabric which looks like regular cloth but is less durable. The senior class officers hope that the purchased robes will eliminate the rush to return rented gowns after graduation. In past years, many seniors were charged for robes they had returned. Brian Mulhern, senior class president, said, "Seniors will be able to throw their caps in the air rather than worrying about losing them." Not everyone is so enthusiastic about the new gowns. Senior Joan Hecksher commented, "They're ecologically unsound, and I don't plan to buy one."

North Adams State College

For five weeks, labor workers from the Northern Berkshire area assembled to discuss labor problems and possible resolutions in "Labour History," an evening course sponsored by NASC. The course was a result of the success of an earlier course, "Steward Training and Contract Administration," which brought 30 union stewards and various officers together to discuss the representation of co-workers in grievance procedures and work rules. Maynard Selder, an instructor for the "Labor History" course, said, "the course has added to my knowledge and will be helpful in the instruction of my regular classes as well."

Swarthmore

Around midnight on April 3, a resident of Woolman House on the Swarthmore campus was assaulted by an unknown male. As the student approached her dorm, she heard footsteps behind her, causing her to turn around. She saw a man holding a strip of red cloth. The woman screamed, "Help, I'm being assaulted at Woolman," very loudly and tried to jab him in the eyes and other sensitive areas. She learned these methods at a self-defense class at Bryn Mawr College. The attacker retaliated by hitting her in the face and back. Her screams drew Woolman residents, but only after the assailant had escaped.

In Other Ivory Towers, written by Record reporter Midori Sonoda, was compiled from various campus newspapers.

GLU

Continued from Page 1

yet practice "silent tolerance instead of moving to active acceptance." He also described his frustration with employers whose hiring practices serve to "Institutionalize the closet," and politicians, specifically President Ronald Reagan, who proclaim no discrimination against homosexuals yet no privileges either. He also cited the self-censorship practiced by homosexuals themselves.

Hostile atmosphere

He said, "Civil rights don't mean much if the atmosphere is hostile." He encouraged others to bring attention to continuing intolerance. "One problem is that it's such a nice social movement, it doesn't make trouble. May you all be troublemakers," Cook said.

Both Brown and Cook emphasized that their participation in the rally should not overshadow the importance of the first outdoor homosexual rally at Williams College. Brown spoke of the importance "that students know that it's OK to be gay."

One of Brown's main fears, however, is that students will focus on her sexuality rather than her politics. "It's not the center of my politics," she said. "I'd hate to see my politics reduced to lesbianism."

She said her reason for participating was "to encourage and remind students that you lose more in every way when you keep it inside." Coming out is important, she said, because, "However vulnerable that makes you, you get to live and act in the world much more."

Erasmus

Continued from Page 5

"I'm attracting all types," he explained. "Many are educated customers that are interested in books and that sort of environment. There's been a good student turnout, although most students don't seem to know it's here yet."

"That sort of environment" is upscale and trendy, even yuppie-ish ... yet remarkably tasty. Every ingredient, from the bar stools to the Dijon mustard, has been chosen with care. Van Hensbergen is the one man in this largely one-man show, and the details are his to watch over.

Natural menu

So then, what kind of grub can one get for that leftover money?

As he marched from kitchen to Cappuccino maker to table, Van Hensbergen offered some clues.

"It's a very natural menu ... the Soho sodas are one of my features, the desserts are another. It's a very unique concept for up here (in Williamstown)."

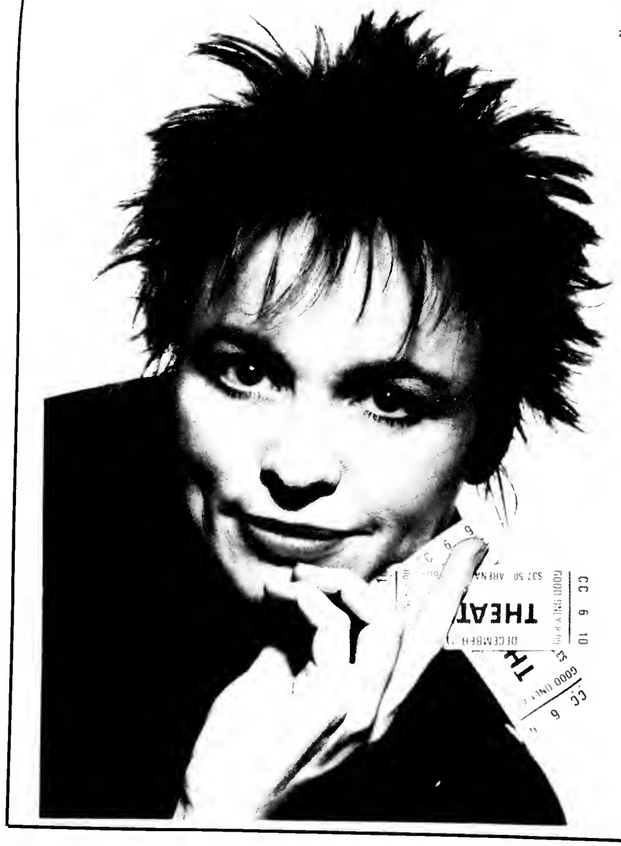
My own brief experience with the "natural menu" was very satisfying. The Erasmus Signature Sandwich — Black Forest Ham, asparagus, sliced hard-boiled eggs, and hollandaise on puff pastry — was served with an abundance of fresh fruit, all carefully arranged on black Bennington dishware. The presentation was impressive and delicious. The desserts sampled, Mocha Magic, a white layer cake with mocha frosting, and the Milky Way Cheesecake, made a fine ending to the light lunch.

The service, even with the extra man on at lunch, has some catching-up to do. The job gets done but that's about it. There are none of the fine extra touches here, which are so characteristic of the cafe itself. This problem shouldn't be hard to fix, however. The food is the crucial element and Van Hensbergen has that well under control.

The bookstore is expanding, meanwhile, to include a large collection of greeting cards and unique gift items. One striking feature already is the large portion of the store that is devoted to children's books. This seems a marvelous diversion for the kid who shuns cucumber, sprout and tomato with Tahini dressing and the like.

So, the Erasmus Cafe is here in Williamstown, along with the Double Chocolate Layer cake and the Linzer Torte. Next time that little extra money presents itself, wander down and buy a book and a lunch. The cafe is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

How to buy a performance.



You can use the American Express® Card to buy concert tickets for your favorite groups or airplane tickets for your vacations. It's the perfect way to pay for all the little things, and the big ticket items, that you'll want during college.

How to get the Card before you graduate.

Because we believe college is the first sign of success, we've made it easier for you to get the American Express Card. Graduating students can get the Card as soon as they accept a $10,000 career-oriented job. If you're not graduating yet, you can apply for a special sponsored Card. Look for student applications on campus. Or call 1-800-THE-CARD, and tell them you want a student application.

The American Express Card. Don't leave school without it.℠

© 1986 American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc.

Summer Fall Spring
WASHINGTON OR LONDON INTERNSHIPS
OXFORD SUMMER 1986
Full Academic Years in
• Oxford University
• L.S.E.
• St. Andrews, Scotland
U.S. credits will be transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, founded in Virginia by James Madison in 1776. Graduate work is an option. The Director of Studies for the Center for Quality Education Abroad (in Britain) is the Rt. Hon. The Lord Beloff, D.Litt. (Oxon.), Fellow of the British Academy, Professor Emeritus of Government and Fellow of All Souls, Oxford.
INQUIRIES TO:
JANET KOLLEK, J.D., Admissions Director CQEA/ WISC, Rm 53, 158 W. 81 St., NY,NY, 10024.
(212-724-0804/724-0136).
(EO/AA)

Babies Don't Thrive in Smoke-filled Wombs

When You're Pregnant, Don't Smoke!
Support the March of Dimes Preventing Birth Defects

C.C.

Continued from Page 1

College Council members also argued that they should have been consulted when final decisions were being made about the MASSPIRG chapter at Williams. Bryant House Representative John Ciolek '87 said the lack of consultation "implied that College Council is not seen as a forum for discussion and advising."

Fix said he did not object to Council participation in the decision and explained, "In the case of MASSPIRG, its institution depends on campus-wide consultation. It didn't seem necessary to get College Council approval in this instance."

Following the meeting, College Council Vice President Suzanne Blemiller '87 said, "The administration deserves high praise for actively seeking student opinion and really trying to improve communication."

Astronaut

Continued from Page 4

put your hands in your pockets, they will float up and wake you up when they hit you in the head.

There's no such thing as a hard mattress in space."

Cleave pointed out the crew eating irradiated turkey for Thanksgiving dinner and said, "The peanut M&M's were a lot of fun. You threw one up and the whole crew would fight for it."

Cleave said that after studying pollution and environmental biology for so many years, "I expected the earth to look a whole lot dirtier (from space)." From 190 nautical miles above earth, Cleave said she had seen jeep roads in Africa and 17 oil tankers parked off the coast of Iran.

Shuttle explosion

Cleave requested that she not be asked to answer any questions pertaining to the space-shuttle explosion which occured in January. She said she is not a design engineer and that a special task force is conducting the investigation.

According to Cleave, she was able to become an astronaut by "going down to the local post office and filling out the 171 form," as must any applicant for a Civil Service position. She then went through a period of intense screening in which all of her past employers and fellow employees were interviewed, she herself had numerous interviews and medical examinations, and finally the Federal Bureau of Investigations conducted a security clearance investigation.

The greatest potential exploration of outer space can offer, according to Cleave, is in the search for ways to deal with the overpopulation of earth. "There are just too many people on this planet," Cleave said. "I think Mars would be a nice place to live."

Missing fence

Continued from Page 1

The fence ran from the southwest end of East College to the north end of Fayerweather, preventing entrance to the Berkshire Quad from the circular driveway in front of Lawrence Hall. There was also a second fence which ran from Fayerweather to Lawrence, forcing students to enter Lawrence through the Berkshire Quad.

Days to put up

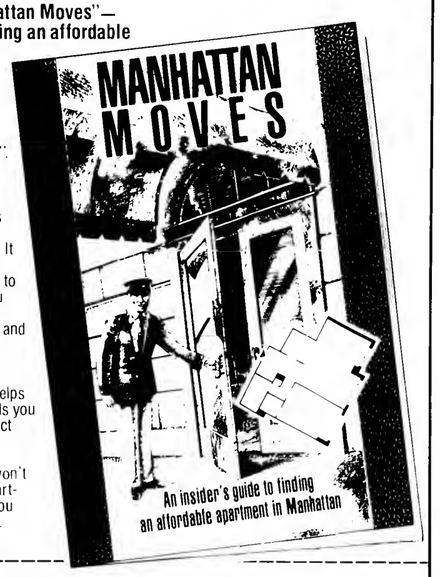
Workers began putting up the fence on the last Friday of spring break and finished early in the week of April 7. According to Quinn, it took several days to erect the fence because workers had to bore holes for the fence posts.

Quinn said he has decided "not to waste time putting it (the fence) up again." Quinn noted that the posts had already been pulled out and the fence had been neatly rolled up. He also said this is not the first such problem in this construction area. Earlier this year, a snow fence was torn down the first night after it had been put up.

According to Quinn, attempts by the construction workers to keep students away from the site by putting wooden horses around the construction area during the day were unsuccessful because students jumped over the horses and walked through anyway. Now that this latest effort to protect students has failed, Quinn said, "We've given up."

There will be no disciplinary action taken against the student(s) who may have been responsible for dismantling the fence, according to Quinn. He said that Williams Security had not even noticed that the fence was missing when he called to report the incident on the following Monday morning. Director of Williams Security Ransom Jenks had no comment on the subject.

FINDING AN APARTMENT IN MANHATTAN TAKES THE RIGHT EDUCATION



Get a free copy of "Manhattan Moves"— the insider's guide to finding an affordable apartment in Manhattan.

To welcome potential new residents to the city, and dispel some myths about housing in New York, we have published a book called "Manhattan Moves". It's the ultimate insider's guide to apartment hunting in the Big Apple.

"Manhattan Moves" helps you set your sights on the right type of apartment and location. It takes you on a tour of the city's neighborhoods, introduces you to the available housing, gives you vital facts about transportation, housing laws, renting, sharing, and much more.

The book gives you inside advice on actually finding the apartment you've targeted. It helps you find the hottest listings, tells you how to canvas, and how to select a broker.

Send for a free copy of "Manhattan Moves" today. It won't guarantee you a Manhattan apartment, but it will definitely get you "moving" in the right direction.

TO: MANHATTAN MOVES MILFORD MANAGEMENT, 1271 AVENUE OF THE AMERICAS, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10020
Send me a copy of "Manhattan Moves", The Insider's Guide to finding an Apartment in Manhattan—free without cost or obligation
Your Name _____
School _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Home Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Phone No _____ Or Call Toll Free 1 (800) 247-4041

Papa Charlie's Wants to Thank You For Your Patronage!

So we're holding a unique contest:

Have you ever wondered just how many sesame seeds there are on one of our delicious sesame bagels? Come down to the Deli and guess how many seeds are on the bagel on display. The five people with the closest guesses win a free sandwich and drink!
(Contest starts 4/22/86 and ends 4/29/86—In the event of tied guesses, the winners will be drawn at random.)

Columbia University
Graduate School of Architecture+Planning

The Shape of Two Cities: New York/Paris

Special Undergraduate Program A junior year introduction to architecture, urban planning, and historic preservation for students who have completed their sophomore year at an accredited college or university. Students spend the fall semester in New York at the Graduate School of Architecture and Planning and the spring semester in Paris at Reid Hall, Columbia's academic complex in the Montparnasse district.

Application forms and additional information may be obtained from:

Dean of Admissions
Graduate School of Architecture and Planning
400 Avery Hall
Columbia University
New York, New York 10027
(212) 280-3510

Faculty

Continued from Page 1

ing if the funding method, a negative check-off on students' term bills, will set a precedent for funding other organizations. He also asked if MASSPIRG will be accountable to Williams for its actions, and if parents, who presumably will be paying the bill, will be informed as to MASSPIRG's nature.

Provost Neil Grabois responded to Crider's first question by observing, "No other organizations have sought the same funding mechanisms on campus."

Grabois said that when MASSPIRG started in the early 1970's, it was not allowed at Williams because, under the then-existing funding method, students who did not support it would have had to seek reimbursement. Students requested last fall that a chapter be established with an acceptable funding mechanism, and, according to Grabois, they demonstrated substantial student support.

Fix said the funding for the organization, although it appears on the term bill, is "a thoroughly waivable fee". He answered Crider's question of MASSPIRG's accountability by saying that Williams will have a representative on the organization's board of directors, and that regular meetings will be held on campus to seek student opinion.

Fellowship recipients

Reichert announced the selection of the first two recipients of the Gaius Charles Bolin Fellowship. The fellowship, initiated by President Francis Oakley at his inauguration, is for a minority graduate student working on his or her Ph.D. dissertation to spend a year conducting research at Williams and teaching one course related to his or her field of study. It is named after the first black graduate of Williams, a member of the class of 1885.

The Gaius Charles Bolin Fellows for next year are Wahneema Lubiano, who is working on a doctorate in English at Stanford, and Roland Anglin, who is working on a doctorate in political science at the University of Chicago. Fifty students applied for the fellowship.

Reichert said, "I am very pleased with the number of applicants and with the high quality of applicants. It was fun to get the applications and see how many really good minority graduate students there are. The quality of the applicants was dazzling."

Art Graduates

Continued from Page 5

Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, is directed by Professor Samuel Y. Edgerton of the art department. Each candidate for a degree takes two graduate-level seminars each semester. In addition, all candidates take a trip to Italy during their first Winter Study period, and work on a major project the next January. Major projects range from writing a paper for publication to interning in a museum. Candidates must also fulfill a language requirement consisting of courses in both German and some Romance language.

Program participants are guaranteed work-study jobs, most of which are with the Williams College Museum, the Clark, and the Chapin library.

These jobs allow students to work in a curatorial or cataloguing capacity, giving them a good opportunty for hands-on experience.

Each year, about 12 students enroll in the program; there are currently 25 students in the program. Unmarried, first-year students are granted housing in Fort Hoosac, a residence two doors away from the Clark and formerly a fraternity house. Second-year students must find their own housing.

The faculty consists of Williams art and language professors, the Clark's staff, and visiting scholars. The students are from various backgrounds. Brent Benjamin, now in his second year, says that the average age for his class is about 27, whereas the current first-year class is composed mostly of recent college graduates. After graduating from St. Olaf's College, Benjamin completed a graduate program in architecture at Rice University. He then worked as a research consultant for two years before coming to Williams. He chose this program because of the Clark's excellent library and the convenient availability of undergraduate and graduate facilities. He also likes the skiing.

Museum work

Ann Slimmon, also a second-year student, added, "The program provides a good chance to work in a museum. I don't know whether other programs have such a good relationship with museums." Another big advantage she cited is that the Williams program offers a terminal masters degree, whereas at most universities one must continue on to a doctorate. First-year student Laura Coyle applauded the program's congenial atmosphere. "Everyone works really hard here," she said, "and it's an excellent program, but without being cut-throat like at other places."

Coyle, as well as others interviewed, said that one disadvantage to the program is the small number of graduate students at Williams. Slimmon suggested that age and work experience might be a few reasons for less-than-maximum contact between graduate and undergraduate students. The severity of this problem, however, is lessened by the contact with undergraduates through classes and museum work. Still, she would prefer a larger graduate community. "I wish there were more graduate programs so that others would be working at the same level," she said.

As to the future, candidates have varied plans. Many expect to work in museums after graduation while others plan on more graduate work. Still others, like first-year student Pamela Izinski, plan on internships to be followed by teaching. Coyle and Benjamin have both been accepted for the Ph.D. program in Art History at New York University. Afterwards, Benjamin is considering art markets and museum administration.

WILLIAMS SHOP
2nd
ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION
FREE - College print with a purchase of $20.00 or more
FREE PAIR with $35.00 purchase
NEW ARRIVALS —
Tastefully selected
Tops on Spring Street

SENIOR LEADERS NEEDED for TEENAGE
BICYCLE TRIPS
Applicants must be at least 21
Call or write:
Student Hosteling Program
Conway, MA 01341
(413) 369-4257

VISION BECOMES REALITY.

The transformation begins with one of this season's hi-fashion yet wearable cuts. We make the difference between ok and extraordinary.
THE
CLIP SHOP
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER.
122 North St., Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903 or 413-447-9576
125 North St., Bennington, VT
802-442-9823 or 802-447-2648
49 Spring St., Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167 or 413-458-8585

For the 1986 Stanford Summer Session Bulletin and application, mail this coupon to Stanford Summer Session, Building 10, Stanford University, Stanford, CA 94305.
STANFORD
SUMMER
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE
ZIP
JUNE 23 THROUGH AUGUST 16

TO MAKE IT TODAY YOU NEED A COLLEGE DIPLOMA, A GOOD SUIT AND PLENTY OF DRIVE.

If you've received your bachelor's degree from a 4-year college, or a RN or graduate degree from an accredited institution between October 1, 1985 and September 30, 1986, you can qualify for Ford's Graduate Assistance Program. We can give you pre-approved credit and $400 cash back on your new Ford.
Only if you buy one of the new Ford cars or trucks listed below and only if you take delivery by August 31, 1986.
For more information, call this toll-free number: 1-800-321-1536. Or see your local New England Ford Dealer today.

$400 cash back on a new Escort.

$400 cash back on a new Escort EXP.

$400 cash back on a new Tempo.

$400 cash back on a new Thunderbird.

$400 cash back on a new Mustang.

$400 cash back on a new Aerostar.

$400 cash back on a new Bronco II.

$400 cash back on a new Ranger pick-up.

$400 cash back on a new F-150 truck.

$400 cash back on a new F-250 truck.

Ford
NEW ENGLAND FORD DEALERS
NOBODY GOES FURTHER.

Now you can buy as much Macintosh as you need.

Here's a multiple choice quiz you can't fail.

Should you buy a Macintosh™ Plus personal computer? Or our newly enhanced Macintosh 512K personal computer?

The answer, of course, depends.

If you believe in student power, you'll want our new Macintosh Plus. It has one full megabyte of RAM. 128K of ROM. And a double-sided 800K internal disk drive.

Translated, that means Macintosh Plus can plot a calculus function or footnote a term paper in the time it took you to read this sentence.

Especially now that we've added a numeric keypad and four cursor keys to the newly-designed keyboard.

On the other hand, if you don't need all these capabilities right now, we suggest our enhanced Macintosh 512K.

It's considerably less expensive, yet it still runs hundreds of programs that will help take the work out of your homework.

Then, as your course-load grows, you can upgrade your enhanced Macintosh 512K to a Plus.

Of course, both Macintosh computers employ our point-and-click mouse technology that makes them so easy to use, it's almost like cheating.

Which means you can immediately do useful things, without going back to remedial computing.

Demonstrations are being held at your campus microcomputer center or authorized Apple dealer. Who'll gladly answer any questions, including the one your parents will ask:

How much?

Macintosh Plus, the more powerful Macintosh. Macintosh 512K, the more affordable Macintosh.

© 1986 Apple Computer, Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Macintosh is a trademark of McIntosh Laboratory, Inc. and is being used with its express permission. For an authorized Apple dealer near you, call (800) 538-9696. In Canada, call (800) 268-7796 or (800) 268-7637.

For more information contact the Computer Center at Jesup Hall.

Playing number one singles, senior Chris Clarey strokes the forehand in a home match last week. (Albright)

Crew

In their only home regatta of the year, the crew team raced at Lake Onata on Saturday in the Little Three meet. Williams won three races and finished second overall to Wesleyan.

The men's lightweight boat took first in their race with a time of 6:38.43. They were followed by the men's varsity four, which won over Wesleyan by rowing the course in 7:40.89. The final winning boat was the men's novice B boat, which turned in a 6:58.05 for the victory.

Two of the women's boats finished second, the JV boat and the novice eight. The varsity eight took third place in their race. The results were completed by the other men's novice boat, which took second, the men's varsity heavyweights, which also placed second.

The lightweight men rowed in the newly christened Charlie Cost '87. Overall, the rowers seemed pleased; coach Peter Wells commented "I was extremely proud of the entire team on their efforts today."

Track

Setting several school records while qualifying one performer for Nationals, the track team competed in the NESCAC tournament this weekend. They will prepare for their first home meet of the season on Saturday when Amherst and Wesleyan come to town for the Little Three meet.

On the women's side, the star of the day was clearly Dawn MacCauley '89, who won the 400 hurdles with a school- and NESCAC-record 63.83, a time fast enough to send her to the Nationals next month. She also took third in the 100 hurdles.

Becky Conklin '87 also turned in a fine performance, taking fourth in the 1500 and third in the 300. Susan Northen '89 took fifth in the high jump, and Joan Davis '88 set a school record of 26.80 while finishing sixth in the 200. Other Ephwomen to place were Sarah Pierce '88 (third) and Cathy Cocks '89 (fifth) in the 5000.

Ten place for men

Brandt Johnson '87 soared to 6'8" to win the high jump and lead the men's team. He was joined in the winner's circle by senior John Ellison, who swept to victory in the steeplechase with a 9:17.52.

Sophomore Henry Jones also turned in an impressive performance by placing in three events: third in the long jump, fourth in the triple jump, and participating in the fourth-place 400 relay squad, along with Fred Pehrsson '89, Scott Powers '88, and senior Bill Leininger.

Joe McGinn '88 threw 145' to take second in the hammer throw. Nat McCormick 88 placed sixth in the javelin, while Pehrsson took sixth in the 200. Sophomore Dave Sprague ran a 35:11 to take sixth in the 10000 to round out the Eph scorers.

Tennis

The tennis team fell 8-1 to arch-rival Amherst on Saturday, trimming their record to 2-2. Sophomore Hoyt Ludington recorded the only Eph victory with a 6-3, 6-3 win. The team then fell to Colgate by 7-2 on Sunday.

Number one player Chris Clarey '86 lost 6-2, 6-4 on Saturday, while senior Tim Peterson won only two games at the number two slot. Sophomore Robbie Hallagan fell in three tough sets, 6-7, 4-6, 3-6. Stephan Kargere '88 lost 6-2, 6-1 at number five, while Bill Hilty '88 fell 6-4, 6-3.

All three doubles teams fell, setting the final margin at 8-1. Clarey and Peterson lost 6-4, 6-4. The number two pairing of Hilty and senior Tom Goodspeed lost in three tough sets, 6-2 in the third.

Ludington and Peterson were the only winners on Sunday, Peterson blanking his opponent 6-0 in the third set. Ludington lost a tough second-set tiebreaker but ended up winning by 6-4, 6-7 (6-8), 6-3.

The Ephs attempted to get on the winning track today at home against Trinity.

Softball

by Michele Barry

The women's softball team began their season this week with two wins and one loss. The Ephwomen beat Union 7-6 and Amherst 11-6 with a 16-2 loss to Smith in between.

The season opener against Union was a tough, well-played game. In the bottom of the seventh, with Williams in the lead, Union tied the game with a bases-loaded, two-out single to make the game 3-3.

Freshman Nancy Hedeman hit a double to center field in the ninth which brought in two runs, including the game winner. In the bottom of the ninth, Union's final batter was retired leaving the tying run on second base.

Coach Harry Sheehy commented that Hedeman "was in control of the game, pitching strikes, and the team fielded very well behind her."

The game against Smith, on sunny Cole Field, was an entirely different story. Offensively, Williams played poorly with only six hits and often left runners on base. The only earned run for Williams came as a result of back-to-back doubles by Ballard and Hedeman. After seven, Williams was defeated 16-2.

The Ephwomen bounced back from the Smith game to crush Amherst on Sunday. Off to a slow start, the top of the first saw Williams down 4-0. In the bottom of the first, a Ballard triple brought in the first Williams run. Amherst led 5-2 after three innings, with four of their runs scored by runners who had been walked onto the bases.

The Ephwomen made a strong comeback in the fourth inning, scoring four runs and taking the lead 6-5. Wendy Roy '88 had a key hit in that inning, a powerful double that brought in one run. Williams then went on to score two runs in the fifth and three runs in the sixth. Williams won the game 11-6.

The softball season continues this week with three home games: 4:00 on Wed. vs St. Rose, 3:00 on Fri. vs Mt. Holyoke, and 1:00 on Sat. vs Trinity.

Golf

by Rick Orluk

All that separated the top two squads was just six shots but unfortunately, it was the Colgate Red Raiders who finished with the winning low score of 391 to Williams' 397 this weekend in Hamilton, N.Y. But not all was lost as the Ephs topped the two other competing golf squads, Hartwick and LeMoyne Colleges, who finished with team scores of 429 and 443 respectively. The two wins give Williams a record of 2-1.

The Ephs were led by the play of senior Bill Tierney, freshman Tim Frechette, and junior Tim McKone who turned in scores of 76, 77, and 78 respectively. Head Coach Rick Pohle was happy with the team's performance noting, "We will be very competitive this year. Anytime you can score under 400 as a team on a course such as Seven Oaks, you have to be satisfied. I thought the team played well overall. Considering that Tierney played number six today, I think it indicates that we possess depth."

Williams' Bob Sullivan '87 and Chas Foehl '87 finished out the team scoring with tallies of 81 and 85. Colgate's Kelly Mills was the medalist with an even par score of 72 and teammate Tony Spikes was just a stroke behind to lead Colgate to their victory.

The Ephs next play this Saturday at home against Trinity, A.I.C., and Union in a match that begins at 1:00pm. Said Pohle, "I am looking forward to this weekend, I think we will do very well."

Fencing

Last Saturday, two fencers from the fencing club, Tae Cho '87 and Yuji Shinozaki '88, competed in the Divisional Championships and National Qualifying Tournament. Cho placed second in the Divisionals and qualified for the Nationals.

In the first round, Cho easily won his pool. Shinozaki, however, ran into trouble. Playing in a very tough pool, he fenced extremely well, losing most of his bouts by very close scores.

In the second round, Cho was placed in a tough pool, which included powerhouse Tod Benton and two other finalists. He defeated all his opponents, including Benton.

Moving into the finals, Cho ran into trouble. He faced Benton again in the round, and fell in a close bout by 5-4 to Benton, using an aggressive strategy. He lost one more bout, to Dave Pitt of Brandeis, before beating defending champion Bruce Milligan. He ended up second, qualifying for the National tournament to be held this summer.

West Package & Variety Store
663-6081
Mid-way between Williamstown and North Adams on Rt. 2

Bollini Chardonay $6.99 1.5 liter	Molson Red ALE $11.98/case plus deposit while they last
West County Cider The Perfect Spring Refresher 750 ml	Hofbrau & Oktoberfest Light and Dark $14.95/case plus deposit

Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TABACS • FURNISHINGS | SPORTING GOODS
SALE LEVI'S
the Co-op

LEVI'S

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

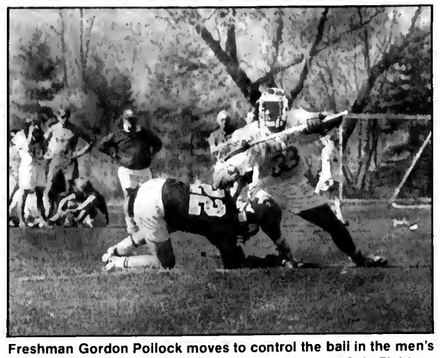
Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE GENUINE
This week's recipient is Dawn Macauley '89, who starred at the NESCAC track meet last weekend. Dawn won the 400 m hurdles in a school and NESCAC record time of 63.83, fast enough to send her to the Nationals. Dawn, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

Bantams and Big Green fall to Men's Lax

Scoring two goals immediately in the second half, the men's lacrosse team spurted ahead from a 5-4 halftime lead and coasted to victory, taking a 9-6 decision from the Trinity Bantams on Saturday. The win raised the Ephs' record to 3-2.

"We came out smoking in the first quarter," said coach Renzie Lamb. Four unanswered goals gave the Ephs a quick 4-0 lead before the end of the opening period. But the second quarter was a different story, as Trinity forced several penalties and scored two goals in man-up situations (four in the game) to cut the margin at the half to 5-4.

"We weren't hungry enough," noted Lamb. "We were playing cat-and-mouse with them; we should have put the game away."



In the second half, the Ephs scored two quick goals, the second by Rob Miller '87, to stretch the lead to 7-4 and put the game away. "Those goals pretty much put us in control," said Lamb. The Ephs got a break when goalie Brad DuPont '86 strayed from the crease and had the ball knocked away, but the Bantams missed at point-blank range, and the lead stayed at two goals. Lamb said he never felt safe; "It was touch and go all the way."

DuPont sparkled in goal, collecting 16 saves. Junior Mike O'Connell continued his high scoring, netting two goals and contributing an assist. Chris Oldham '88 tallied a pair of scores, while senior co-captain Chris Toll had a goal and an assist. Other scorers were Miller, Chris Swindell '88, Jim Sperry '87, and senior Mike Stoddard.

The game probably assured the Ephs of a spot in the New England rankings, to be released after press time. "I would expect us to be on it," said Lamb. The squad's 9-8 victory over Ivy League opponent Dartmouth on Wednesday was very valuable in that respect.

"We came out today to regain some confidence (after an 11-4 Saturday loss to Tufts)," said Lamb. "That's all we wanted. Dartmouth held the game out to us, and we accepted the challenge."

The Ephs held a 4-2 lead at the half, but watched it melt under a 4-2 Green-dominated third quarter. They then outscored Dartmouth 3-1 to take the game. DuPont made the game's most spectacular play by sprinting down the field, passing off and leading to a shorthanded goal.

Freshman Gordon Pollock moves to control the ball in the men's lacrosse team's 9-6 win over Trinity on Saturday at Cole Field. (Albright)

7-3 to Wesleyan

Baseball drops a pair

by Stewart Verdery and Al Mottur

The varsity baseball team had its first taste of defeat since returning north as it dropped both of its games this past falling to Little Three rival Wesleyan 7-3 Saturday after losing to Castleton State 6-5 on Tuesday.

Saddled by several key injuries, Williams could not generate any offense against the Cardinals. The home team used a four-run third inning to extend a slim lead to five runs against Eph ace Kevin Morris '86. The Ephs got on the board in the fourth on a sacrifice fly by Dick Hollington '86 scoring classmate Rob Coakley.

Two more runs followed in the fifth on hits by juniors Steve Belsito, John Shaw, and Rick Hedeman. Belsito and Shaw scored on RBI's by Sean Logan '88 and Coakely. However, these runs would prove to be the extent of the Eph offense on the day, as Williams could not get more than one baserunner in any inning for the rest of the game. Logan was the only Eph to collect two hits while Morris pitched effectively after the third in going the distance.

Setback against Castleton

The setback against Castleton St. earlier in the week was also marked by the Ephs' inability to score in the late innings as Castleton rallied from an early 5-1 deficit for the 6-5 victory. The situation seemed promising early, as Coakley slammed a first-inning homer for a 2-0 Eph lead. And in the third, DH Steve Holsten '88 drove in two runs in the third on a single to up the score to 4-0.

After Castleton tallied a single run in the bottom of the fourth, leftfielder Jim Duquette '88 forced in a run by drawing a walk with the bases loaded in the fifth, thereby restoring what seemed to be a comfortable four-run lead with starting pitcher Seth Lawry '87 cruising along with a three-hitter.

In the fifth, aided by two key errors, Castleton scored three times to close within one. Then a two run homer in the sixth vaulted them into the lead for the first time. A fine relief effort by Bob Hussey '86 kept the game close, but the Ephs could not manage to get the tying run, as an eighth-inning rally failed with two men on base.

Williams took on a very strong Amherst team yesterday and has a busy weekend coming up. Bowdoin will travel to Weston Field on Friday for an afternoon game with the Ephs, who will then take on Bates in a twinbill at home on Saturday.

Sophomore Lisa Phillips harasses her opponent in the women's lacrosse team's 12-10 victory over Smith on Saturday. (Albright)

Women's lacrosse takes three straight this week

Stretching their record to 4-1, the women's lacrosse team won three games this week, the last and toughest a 12-10 victory over Smith on Saturday.

"This wasn't one of our best games," said senior co-captain Laura Rogers. "I think we were a little tired from our other two games." Junior Lee Wierdsma led the scoring with three goals, while Rogers tallied two goals and two assists. Senior Carrie Cento and sophomore Beth Bernheimer contributed three goals and one assist.

The team went up 2-0 in the opening minutes before Smith could come back. The scoring went back and forth for a while, but the Ephwomen never lost their lead. Even several straight Smith goals to end the game could not overcome the Williams lead as the coasted to the 12-10 final.

Earlier in the week, the squad had won two games in spectacular fashion over weak teams. The first was a 16-7 win over Skidmore on Tuesday, followed by a 19-3 destruction of Mt. Holyoke on Thursday. "I was really pleased with our toughness and aggressiveness," said coach Chris Larson-Mason.

Two more home games will follow this week. On Thursday, Trinity will visit Cole Field, and Little Three rival Wesleyan will come on Saturday.

Ruggers take 2nd in home tourney

by Mike Curtin

The Rugby Club hosted the first annual Purple Valley Spring Rugby Classic. In the championship game, UVM defeated Williams 9-4 to win the tournament.

The A-side's first opponent was Boston College, ranked number four in the East last year. The BC side was obviously bigger and they appeared at first to be a more disciplined side. The scoring began when Roger Merriam '86 hit a penalty kick from inside the 22-meter line to put the Ephs on top 3-0.

The momentum quickly shifted to BC when they scored a try midway through the first half. The period was characterized by hard hitting and tough defense, but the score remained 4-3 at half.

Traditionally the Ephs have picked up the intensity in the second half. Behind the trusty leadership of Paul Hogan '86 and the speed of classmate Pete Aiken, the Williams scrum pressured BC deep in their own end, forcing them into a mistake which led to another Merriam penalty kick. This put Williams up 6-4, effectively giving them the momentum.

Good team running and cooperation between the scrum and line was a major factor, thanks in large part to seniors Greg Bronson, Craig Kirby, Hogan, Tim Faselt, and Brad Bissell. In the last minute of the game, BC put on a surge which Mark Tompkins '87 thwarted on the wing. His bone-crushing tackle jarred the ball from the BC player. Ever alert and on the ball, Ed O'Toole '86 snatched it up and blew by four Eagle defenders on his fifty-meter jaunt for the final score, giving the Ephs a 10-4 win.

Williams then advanced to play UVM, which had defeated UNH. The game was different from the first. Battered and a bit winded from the last match, the Ephs didn't have the spark necessary to beat their northern opponent.

UVM struck immediately with a penalty kick, but the Ephs came right back when scrum-half Bronson scored on a line-out pass from Craig Blackmore '86, an oft-practiced secret play. Neither team could punch another score over for the remainder of the half and the score was 4-3 Williams at the break.

Mental lapses and poor kicking by the Ephs resulted in the UVM try early in the second half, giving them a 9-4 lead. Heat and frustration prevented Williams from overcoming the deficit and UVM had won the championship.

B-side falls to UNH

The B-side played UNH and lost a heartbreaker in the third sudden-death overtime. Both teams hit hard and ran well but could not score. Despite inspired play by juniors Charlie Lazor and Sean Brennan, the teams went scoreless through regultion time. Two overtimes also ended in a scoreless tie.

But in the third overtime, Jeff Heilman '87 fielded a pass from Lazor and ran solo into the try zone. However, the play had been blown dead. Minutes later UNH kicked the ball into their try zone and fell on it for the score and the victory.

The final Eph side played at North Adams against Marris College and registered a resounding victory, 22-4, showing again the Williams depth and potential for the future.

The women's JV boat took second place in their race this Saturday on Lake Onata, as the crew team won three races against rivals Wesleyan and Amherst. Here the boat strokes their way toward the finish line. See story on P. 11. (Khakee)

The Williams Record

VOL. 99, NO. 22 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE APRIL 29, 1986

WAAC jumps on shanty wagon for parents' day

by Debbie Snyder

Beginning at 6:00 a.m. last Friday, approximately 100 students helped construct four shanties on Baxter Lawn to protest apartheid, to increase awareness of and discussion about apartheid and to urge divestment by the College.

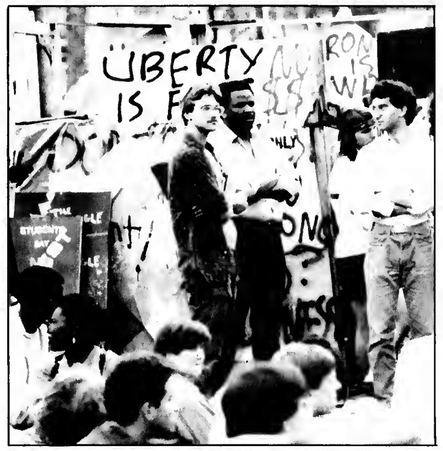
At a rally outside Hopkins Hall yesterday, the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition announced that it intends to leave the shanties up at least until tomorrow and longer if possible. The decision depends upon both WAAC motivation and how Williamstown classifies the shanties, as works of art or buildings, which would require permits.

Student organizations supporting the protest include the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition, the Gay and Lesbian Union, the Feminist Alliance, the Black Student Union, the Society Organized Against Racism and the Coalition against Militarism.

The decision to erect the shanties was made two or three weeks ago because of continued violence in South Africa and a feeling that the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility had become complacent because the school year is almost over, according to Tom Williams '87, spokesman for WAAC.

Friday rally

A protest Friday afternoon included speeches and music. Professor of Political Science Raymond Baker spoke about imperialism in United States' foreign policy. Visiting Assistant Professor of History Scott Swanson talked about his experience in trying to convince Cornell to divest. He cautioned against early burnout of students working toward divestment.



Reverend John Collins, who was scheduled to speak on "Why Reagan Won't Stop the Arms Race" at Weston Language Center, spoke instead at the rally. In addition, students from Williams, North Adams State and the Buxton School spoke.

According to Williams, the intention of the protesting students, to alert the entire community to the situation in South Africa, is precisely what the administration does not want.

Continued on Page 8

Matt Kivlin '87 and Tom Williams '87 work on one of four shanties constructed on Baxter lawn last Friday as part of student protest against investment in South Africa. (Khakee)

Students listen to speeches and music at the rally in front of the shanties on Baxter lawn last Friday. (Somers)

Baxter lunch target for guerilla theater

by R.P. DeMott

A group of white students dragged Devonya Havis '87 out of Baxter Dining Hall Friday at noon and took her to Hopkins Hall to be disciplined. In addition, Averil Clarke '87 was chased around Baxter, but she escaped through the snack bar.

The action was a guerilla theater project organized by Havis, timed to coincide with the construction of four shanties by the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition. Havis, Clarke and other participants were aware that the abductors were planted, however, most Baxter diners, and more importantly, the officials in Hopkins were not.

According to Mark Averitt '86, one of the members of the "South African Police," he and his cohorts began the project by approaching Anza Mammen '86 in the line for lunch and requesting his pass. Mammen, also in on the project, was able to suitably identify himself and was merely kicked out of the line which the "police" declared was an all-white line.

Havis said that the "police" then proceeded up to the dining room and were met by the cheers of a group of white students calling for them to remove two intruding blacks, played by Havis and Clarke. Havis did not present the requested identification, and after being harassed, she was dragged out of her chair.

Havis was taken initially to the President's Office for disciplining, however, the secretaries there told the "police" to bring her to the to the deans. "I think that says something about bureaucratic rationale," Averitt said.

The only one in the Deans' Office was Hilda Haig, a secretary, who, according to Havis, asked the students to leave her (Havis) there. Haig could not be reached for comment.

"We terrified several secretaries," Havis said. Averitt added, "She (a secretary in the President's Office) thought we were really hostile students." Havis said that later the secretaries were all apologized to and the project was explained to them.

Continued on Page 8

Shanties get local coverage

by Andrew Mayer

The construction of the Shantytown on Baxter lawn during Parents' Weekend received coverage in local newspapers, attracted television crews from Albany and Schenectady and was discussed on a regionally syndicated radio show. Williams News Director James Kolesar '72 said, "The coverage is what I would have expected."

The first coverage of the construction was in Friday's North Adams Transcript, in which it was a lead article. The Transcript also ran an article outlining the College's policy on divestment and reported on the letter sent to students by Dean of the College Stephen Fix.

On Saturday morning, articles appeared in The Springfield Morning Union and The Berkshire Eagle, in addition to The Transcript. The article in The Morning Union ran on the front page of its "The Berkshires" section. It also outlined the College policy and included comments from Stephen Lewis, chairman of the economics department and of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility.

In the Eagle an article appeared on the front page, concentrating on student reaction to the shanties and reporting the College Council's support of the construction.

The Transcript article on Saturday was the only article to mention the Friday afternoon rally and also discussed the letters from Fix, Lewis and Williams Students for Divestment distributed to students on Friday.

In addition to local newspaper coverage, Kolesar notified both the Associated Press and United Press International of the news, and bulletins went out over both wires Friday.

Local affiliates of all three major networks also filed reports. Crews from Schenectady's WRGB Channel 6, a CBS affiliate; WTEN Channel 10 from Albany, an ABC affiliate;

Continued on Page 7

CC endorses WAAC shanties

by Jocelyn Shadforth

The College Council voted Thursday to endorse the building of the Shantytown on Baxter Lawn, calling the building an "appropriate political expression." It also discussed the Junior Advisor selection process and heard a presentation by JA President Jim Reichheld '87 and JA Vice President Deborah Gordon '87.

Although the Council endorsed the shantytown, built by the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition early Friday morning, it withheld a vote on divestiture. The Council cited its own lack of information both about divestment and student opinion on divestment as reasons for not voting. This in effect reversed a vote taken prior to President Francis Oakley's induction last fall that called for immediate divestiture.

Willa Morris '88, speaking for WAAC, argued the need to "show that not only students in WAAC are supporting (the shantytown)." When asked why Parents' Weekend had been chosen for the demonstration, Morris said, "Trustees are highly swayed by the opinions of parents."

College Council President Amy Jeffress '87 called for a split vote, one to support divestment and another to endorse the building of the shanties. She said the Council needed to reaffirm the earlier vote supporting divestment in light of the election of a new Council administration.

'Not informed'

At-Large Members Hans Humes '87 and Jim Reichheld '87 expressed concern about voting on divestiture. Reichheld commented, "I know that I, for one, don't feel informed enough to vote about divestiture."

After taking a straw poll, which indicated that the Council did not want to vote on divestment, Jeffress called for a vote in support of the shantytown, which passed 18-6-2.

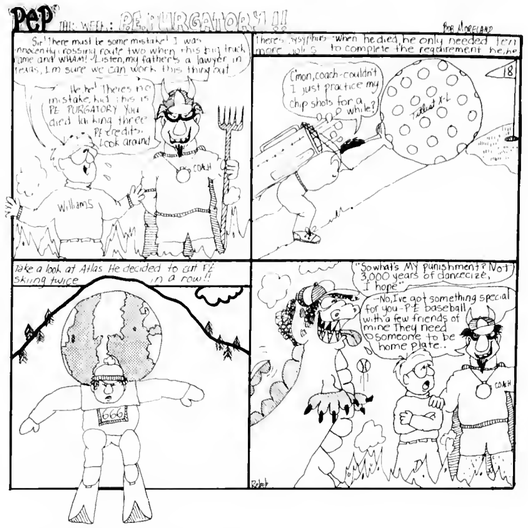
Following the divestment discussion, Reichheld and Gordon discussed possible revisions in the JA selection process. Reichheld said he has heard complaints about the composition of the Selection Committee, the sincerity of the applicants, the number of minority students applying to be JA, and biases on the part of the selection committee.

Reichheld refuted charges of bias, pointing out

Continued on Page 9

English professor D.L. Smith addresses the crowd in last Friday's rally. (Somers)

April 29, 1986



Costs and benefits

Do the benefits Williams reaps from its investments in companies doing some business in South Africa outweigh the costs? No.

The construction of shanties and the numerous speeches made last week force the College community to face a fact on which there can be no debate: apartheid is wrong. The South African government's policy of racial separation, minority rule and destabilization of its neighbors makes it an international pariah, with which Williams should have no association.

Neither Williams College, nor any American school, can hope to play a role in toppling, or even influencing, another government's internal politics. But when a regime presents such an affront to so many people, the least an investor can do is to remain neutral. By investing, and thus supporting the status quo, Williams has forfeited that neutrality.

Divestment is more a moral than political stance. Economically, Williams' investment in companies operating in South Africa is not substantial, but isn't it sad that a top-flight liberal-arts college that is supposedly encouraging an enlightened view of the world will not take the small step to withdraw from companies that profit from a brutally, exploitive economic sytem?

Williams can't change the world to fit its image, but it should show its abhorrence for apartheid by divesting itself of all companies doing business in South Africa, not just Sullivan non-signatories. Unless, of course, profits matter more than morality.

Letters

Divestment

To the Editor:

The Williams Students for Divestment would like to thank the students, parents, faculty, administration and members of the community who have turned out to show their support for the shantytown. The positive response from most quarters has been most gratifying.

Erected by a wide-ranging student coalition, the shanties have been intended to focus attention upon the College's increased investment in corporations doing business in South Africa. Simply put, the exploitation of the vast majority of South Africans is helping to underwrite the expenses of a Williams education and this reflects poorly upon the College.

Trustees and members of the administration have argued that divestment would be a blatantly political manipulation of the endowment. Yet the College mandates that corporations obey the Sullivan Principles which themselves embody specific political policies. To argue that one is being "only a little bit political" is akin to trying to be "only a little bit pregnant."

While the situation in South Africa rapidly deteriorates the College is increasing rather than decreasing its investment. It is this seminal point that requires the attention of the Williams community, this issue which necessitated the building of the shanties.

While President Oakley praises "dialectical space" it cannot be denied that none of the debates, lectures, discussions or fact-sheets have had the impact of one shantytown. To the degree that discussion has been generated, both pro and con, the shanties have succeeded in their purpose. Those who have supported us we thank, and those who oppose us we hope will be more vocal in their opposition in future.

Tom Williams '87 for Williams Students for Divestment

Relationships

To the Editor:

We would hope that David Vann's article in the Record (March 11) would not be viewed as a frontal attack on the "scoping" male population at Williams, but rather as an article which raises the issue of female/male relationships at this college. We feel that this is an issue which people at Williams need to think about and discuss.

The reaction to Vann's article has certainly been great but largely negative. We hope that in the future, reaction to the issue raised by this article and other such issues will not conform to the "mudslinging" that has developed in recent weeks.

Hopefully, thoughtful responses such as the letter to the editor written by Arty Xanthos and Tom Kuntz (entitled "Scoping", March 18) will come out of the controversy. We are not saying that we agree with Vann's article or the letter entitled "Scoping," but we laud the efforts of these people in bringing the issue of male/female relationships forward.

Hal Hermanson '89
Robin Rasmussen '89

"Scruffy"

To the Editor:

If Nicholas van Aelstyn (April 22) thinks that "military recruiters should be made to feel uncomfortable wherever they go," that's fine. However, I doubt that much discomfort was caused to Mr. Ortolf of the Naval Reserve, a week ago Thursday.

If anyone sounds like a "mad dog," it would seem to be van Aelstyn himself. P.S. Not all civilians are "scruffy."

Edward J. Coakley, Jr. '86
(prospective flyer, USNR)

The Arts

To the Editor:

I was appalled and dismayed at the realization I came to last week when the Record failed to review the play Working which was performed the week before Spring Break. However, the more I thought about it, the less shocked I became; after all, it was only a Cap and Bells production. The last Cap and Bells play reviewed in the Record was during Winter Study.

At least Mainstage productions are reviewed, but since the only Mainstage production in the last four months was Exiles, one would be led to believe that theatre barely exists on this campus. I am rapidly beginning to feel that for the Record, it assuredly doesn't.

Of all the productions that have been aired in recent months — Working, Exiles, Casandra, The Mime Show, Black Comedy, White Liars, and numerous one-acts in the Theatre Practicum — only one has been reviewed. Mr. Editor, there is more to Williams Theatre than Mainstage.

In fact, there is more to the Arts at Williams. Theatre is only one facet of the Arts at Williams that has been violated. Dance and music are keeping suit at the Record's printing press. During Winter Study, Blondell Cummings and four professional dancers from New York City came to perform with five Williams College students in Basic Strategies V. There was also a Winter Study 99 program taught by Susan Griss that culminated in the dance show Caryatids. The Williams College Dance Company performed in conjunction with that show. It was all ignored by our school paper.

The same holds true for music. There are constant recitals and orchestral concerts, not to mention various a-capella singing groups gigs that are never credited. It is a pleasure to see reviews of the Berkshire Symphony, but there is a touch of irony involved. Less than a third of its participants are from Williams College. Why not also review a production with all Williams College students?

There is no point in dwelling over productions long put in the archives. Let's move on to the reviews themselves (as few and far between as they may be).

Continued on Page 7

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
NEWS ..... Virginia Demaree
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Eric Hanson, Joe Thorndike
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Nik Khakee
ASSISTANT FEATURES/ARTS ..... Corinna Lamb
LAYOUT ASSISTANT ..... Mary Iliff
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Andrew Mayer, Harwell Wells
GRAPHICS ..... Penny Schenk
ADVERTISING ..... Martin Furey, Lisa Klem
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267

Interested in advertising?

Why not get a start at the Record.

The Record is looking for a few good people to manage our advertising department next year. The managers receive a commission on each ad and a small salary to help offset the slow weeks. We would prefer people with sales experience and a car, however, these are not at all required. We would like to meet with those interested, and if you can sell us on hiring you, great!

Drop a note in either S.U. Box 1652 or 1947 as soon as possible and we will get in touch with you.

Earn money and gain experience.

Shanties are an inappropriate display of anti-apartheid views

by Martin Ilner '87, Greg Fertik '87, and Ned Gallagher '86

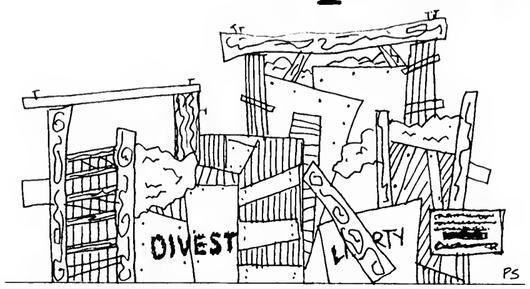
I am writing this Op-Ed to further express the views of the Ad Hoc Concerned Students Group. We were responsible for putting up the sign in front of Baxter Hall that questioned the use of shanties as a form of protest. This is a rather pretentious name but the most suitable one we could devise on such short notice. The opinions expressed in this article and on the sign are primarily three people's, though we hope, and are led to believe, that a significant number share at least some of them.

Friday afternoon at around five o'clock, after Reverend Collins had finished speaking, we placed "a notice" in front of the shanties erected by a group of students. When I returned that evening I was pleased to see that calmer minds had prevailed and that it still stood. After we had elicited cries of "Bullshit" and "Fascist" from two of those present I feared the worst. I was even assured by a leader of the protest that it would rain torrentially that night and that if not, "someone might piss on it." I'm not certain that he had even read what was written on our sign.

Other students, thankfully, provided interesting comments and explained to us their views on the shanties and on our sign. One concerned student lamented that, whether I intended it or not, the sign would draw criticism upon this worthy cause. He said that, being sympathetic to this cause, I should unhesitatingly ally myself with this protest. I think that reasoning like that is counter-productive to the very goal of the protest: to heighten awareness and promote discussion.

At any rate it is illogical to think that a protest like this will stand unchallenged by dissonant voices. It is this kind of discussion, I think, that saved our sign from a fate similar to the Dartmouth debacle.

Heightened discourse is precisely what an academic community, to use a well-worn expression, is designed for. We think that there exist other, more benign forms of protest which may serve to stimulate awareness and conversation as much as this unsuccessful attempt at an Art 320 project.



The awareness day sponsored by the Gay and Lesbian Union was very successful according to its organizers. The white shirts worn by those that supported this issue were equally as "visible" as this shanty town and were much less of an aesthetic affront. The rally they held attracted much interest and comment. And even on a cloudy day. Imagine that.

One might argue that the sheer grotesqueness of the shanty town is an integral element of its visibility. This is certainly true but I think that it might discourage those that it attracts and that while the accompanying discussion was laudable the shanties might have been replaced with saturation leafletting.

This form of protest has its roots in an anti-intellectualism that is unbecoming of Williams Colege, a rather grandoise statement but nonetheless one we believe in. It tends to elicit a strong emotional response, a kind of gut reaction rather than enlightened discussion. We think that while seeking to elicit an emotional reaction is a valid tactic of protest, it is not a rational way of solving the problem.

If a person angered me I might think first to hit him or her, but upon reflection I would probably find that it would be better to first speak in calm persuaslon and to avoid excited rhetoric. We recognize that it is difficult to entirely divorce emotions from such a sensitive issue but surely one should not seek to provoke them.

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibilities, in open meetings, provides at least one effective voice for interested students. Again, it is a discussion such as that condoned by the ACSR that may provide a well thougnt out and workable solution for the College in its attempt to censure Botha's South Africa.

We think that this attempt to "get people worked up" may be flawed. As we explained in our poster, when someone who holds a moderate opinion on an issue is confronted by an extreme and unappealing manifestation of one side's point of view, he or she might scurry to the opposite side seeking a sort of security in the status quo. How would you react to a cross burning on the Perry House lawn? Or, to use a more current example, what would your reaction be to someone rabidly haranguing a Marine recruiter in Baxter Hall?

The protest was well timed to coincide with parents weekend and a heavy influx of "perspectives." That is all very well but we're not sure that what parents wind up thinking is an accurate reflection of the situation here. Regardless of whether or not it was intended by the organizers of this manifestation, sensationalist media exposure will probably result in an exaggeration of the number of students "involved."

Witness the case at Brown where a very small group of students advocated stocking cyanide capsules as a means of escaping nuclear holocaust. A number of people, including my parents, who I would like to think are fairly literate and aware, were led to believe that a large majority supported this rather drastic measure. This is simply not true.

It is also not true that the entire student body occupied Mather House (the admissions building) earlier this year as was reported by a Texas paper. A major concern of ours in placing our sign was that an inaccurate picture of Williams College not be painted in the minds of the unwary by the lion's share of attention which is given to extreme action.

We concede, though, that the shanties have at least one redeeming quality as a form of protest. While they are not an original or creative idea (though their builders might argue otherwise), they do serve to show a unified student effort across many college campuses.

The sign we wrote was carefully worded so as not to express support for, or condemnation of, divestment as a means of ending the moral travesty of apartheid in a modern nation. We were concerned solely with what is briefly summarized above.

We would like to conclude by reiterating our convictions. The abolition of apartheid is a worthy, important and noble cause. We support it fully.

We, as an interested group, do not share a common sentiment with regard to divestment. We do disagree with the shanties as a means of protest. We would also like to apologize for any grief or anger we may have unwittingly caused. I do not think we were demeaning or unfair in our sign but apparently strong reactions, inevitably, were suffered by some. Thanks to all who offered their suggestions and advice.

Do Williams students really believe in honor-code spirit?

by Karen H. Costenbader '89

Perhaps I was an idealist. I must have been wrong to think of Williams as a collection of not only the best and the brightest, but also very honest and responsible individuals. In my first months at Williams, I was impressed by the openness and trust of the students who could toss their coats, purses, and books on the stairs in the dining halls and leave unlocked the doors to their rooms. I was proud that we had an honor code, and no room for competition, spite, or outright cut-throatery.

Unfortunately, I have been disillusioned. Last semester I had a very frightening and angering experience. Two weeks before I was to encounter my second hour exam in biology, I woke to find that my notebook, along with the unorganized mess and all the hideous charts that I had been attempting to memorize, had disappeared. At first, I was not alarmed, for although they were not in my backpack on my desk in my room where I was certain I had left them, I suspected that I had misplaced them, as I admit, I have done before. My entry mates will never forgive me for waking every last one of them up to search behind their doors and under their beds. Not only did I carry on within my own entry, but as frantic as I was now becoming, my ranting and raving awakened every occupant of the entry in which I had been reviewing with friends on the previous night.

Panic-stricken, I wasted the entire day searching, but, needless to say, my biology notes did not turn up. Two days later, they surfaced in a remote corner of Sawyer basement, a place I had never been. Every day since then, when I entered my biology lecture hall, I suspiciously glanced around at all the faces, knowing one of these fellow classmates had crept in to my room and stolen my notes.

I was not the first nor the only victim of such a flagrant violation of our honor code. In fact, two other Biology 101 student had their notes stolen within the same week, and just the week before Spring Break, two days before the English 216 exam, three more people had notes stolen from Baxter Hall while they lunched.

We, the student body, have a serious issue to address. We cannot continue to allow what hopefully is just a few warped individuals to degrade Williams' open, trusting and relaxed atmosphere. Theft such as this is not only a breach of our honor code, but an infraction of the law, and yet, frustrated and infuriated, there was nothing which we, who were left stranded to face exams, could do to prevent the same from happening again in the future.

It seems that with every new instance of note rip-off, the crime becomes viewed increasingly as "safe" and "uncatchable." Cases such as these, which typically occur in large lecture courses, are difficult to investigate. However, at the present, perhaps because of a lack of awareness or naivete about the seriousness of such crimes, no effort is being made to discourage these incidents from taking place, nor to uncover the perpetrators once they do take place.

We cannot continue to allow what hopefully is just a few warped individuals to degrade Williams' open, trusting and relaxed atmosphere.

Why is there such dishonesty on campus, and what can we, the students, do about it? First, we have to recognize that we do indeed have a problem, one whose implications are serious and will be taken seriously if violators are apprehended. At the present, since we do still have an honor code which each one of us has signed, our honor is looking pretty shabby.

Perhaps the best and only way to solve this crisis is to make notestealers realize that their dishonesty is out in the open and the subject of conversation, even if their names are not. Maybe, just by increasing our awareness, we can make the honor of Williams students more than just admissions book hype.

NEWSBRIEFS

Bullett hired

Richard B. Bullett '70, vice president of the Berkshire Bank & Trust Company, has been appointed director of personnel at Williams. Bullett was selected from among 160 applicants after a three-month search.

Bullett is a North Adams native and graduated from St. Joseph's High School in 1965. In his position at Berkshire Bank, Bullett is responsible for administrating all corporate personnel policies and procedures, including the employee benefit plan, recruitment and staff training programs.

Bullett has also worked for Adams Super Markets and James Hunter Machine Co.

The director of personnel supervises all aspects of personnel policies and practices for the College's 550 employee support staff. He is also a member of the College's personnel committee.

William B. Reed, Williams' vice president for administration and treasurer, said, "We are truly delighted to have Rick join Williams. His experience related directly to his work at Williams." Reed also spoke of Bullett's proven ability to "work effectively and comfortably with a variety of people."

Bullett said, "Williams is very special to me. The College gave me an invaluable start in my career."

Bullett, who serves on the North Adams School Committee, lives in North Adams with his wife, Deborah, and their son, Brendan.

Employees honored

Williams College will honor its longtime and retiring employees at a luncheon and dinner May 7. The 48 people who have worked for the College for 10, 15 or 20 years will gather at the Williams Inn for a special luncheon, and the 17 retirees will dine at Mill on the Floss that evening with other invited guests.

College Vice President Williams S. Reed will welcome both groups and President Francis Oakley will recognize each employee individually. In addition, the Ephiats will perform at the dinner.

Each retiree will receive a chair with the Williams insignia on it as well as a written citation. The College will award special pins to 30 ten-year, 13 15-year and five 20-year employees.

Appreciation Day, organized by a committee of Williams College staff members and the assistant to the president, is an annual event to express appreciation to staff members reaching career milestones and recognize the loyalty and good work of College employees.

This year, the retirees to be honored are Grace E. Bump, buildings and grounds department; Lucille M. Clark, provost office; Howard A. Davis, chemistry department; Roy D. Germaine, Jr., B&G; George C. Howard, registrar's office; Hugh W. Kirkpatrick, physics department; Norman J. Labrecque, B&G; Nadene L. Lane, English department; Stanley A. Lescarbeau, B&G; R. Cragin Lewis, alumni office; Anna I. MacLean, computer center; Ann J. Marlowe, College post office; Zita P. Milne, public information office; James W. Norton, B&G; Shane Riorden, business manager's office; Elizabeth B. Scherr, library; Carl L. Vanuni, B&G.

1986 Officers

The Class of 1986 has chosen class officers to represent it as alumni. They are President Mammen P. Mammen Jr. of Allentown, Pa.; Vice President Donald T. Hess of Garden City, N.Y.; Secretary Martha E. Nikitas of Fitchburg, Mass.; and Treasurer David P. Applebaum of Staten Island, N.Y.

The officers' duties will begin with Class Day ceremonies on June 7, and continue beyond the 1986 Commencement on June 8.

As president, Mammen will arrange and preside over class events, recommend classmates for various College purposes, and appoint other class representatives as needed. Mammen, a mathematics major, served as president of the College Council for the 1985-86 academic year.

Hess, a chemistry major, will help arrange class events and preside over them when Mammen is not available and carry out special assignments on request.

As secretary, Nikitas will be responsible for gathering news about her classmates and writing it up four times a year for the Williams Alumni Review. Nikitas is an English major.

Applebaum's duties as treasurer include collecting and disbursing funds as needed for reunions or other class events. A political economy major, Applebaum served as treasurer of the College Council for the 1985-86 academic year and is a member of the varsity squash team.

The Class of 1986 also elected two class marshals to lead it in the traditional commencement procession. They are William C. Couch of Watertown, N.Y., and Michael F. Zullas of Brockton, Mass.

Poetry reading

Seven Williams College students, cited for their poetry in the annual Academy of American Poets Contest, will read from their work tomorrow at 4:00 p.m. in the Currier Ballroom. Julie Convisser '86, of Falls Church, Va., was chosen as the winner of the contest, with six other students receiving honorable mentions.

Awarded honorable mention were John A. Bird '86, of Kansas City, Mo.; Franklin Gill '86, of Radnor, Pa.; Steven Massimilla '86, of Roslyn, N.Y.; Claudia Rankine '86, of Bronx, N.Y.; Matthew Klviln '87, of Mystic, Conn.; and Kathryn R. Kent '88, of Bainbridge Island, Wash.

The Academy of American Poets pledges an annual $100 prize to each of more than 80 schools throughout the country to be awarded to the best poem or group of poems written by an undergraduate. Stephen Dunn, author of six books of poetry and judge of this year's contest at Williams, chose the winning poems from 72 entries submitted by 21 students. Since the establishment of this program in 1955, the Academy has awarded more than $100,000 in student prizes.

The student reading, sponsored by the English department, is free and open to the public.

CAMP COUNSELOR
POSITIONS AVAILABLE

Camp Arcadia for girls, Casco, Maine: June 23-August 17. Sports: Swimming, Canoeing, Sailing, Windsurfing, Hiking Trips, Riding. Arts: Ceramics, Arts & Crafts, Gymnastics, Weaving, Dramatics, Photography, Dance. Phone Vicki Secrest (215) 247-8508 or write Camp Arcadia, New Vernon, New Jersey 07976.

— SUMMER —
SKI STORAGE
$12.50 through September
TUNE-UP SPECIAL with Storage
$9.95 (regularly $16.00)
Three Certified Technicians to serve you
GOFF'S SPORTS
15 Spring Street

Baker opposes U.S. raid on Libya

by Tom Ewing

The United States' attack on Libya two weeks ago was part of a more assertive U.S. policy in the Third World, according to Professor of Political Science Raymond Baker. He said he opposed the strike, both because it will not fulfill its short-term objective of deterring terrorism and because of its long-term impact on U.S.-Middle East relations.

According to Baker, the Reagan administration is following an assertive policy in the Third World with the objective of more actively contesting the Soviet Union on a geopolitical level. The raid on Libya was part of a forward thrust of U.S. power, a policy that has had precedents in Grenada, Libya, Nicaragua and Afghanistan, he said.

Baker, who has been at Williams since 1973, is a specialist in Soviet politics and the Middle East. In 1984-1985, he directed the Williams program at the American University in Cairo. He is currently teaching a course on "Domestic Politics in the Middle East," with a particular focus on Egypt. Baker has been interviewed about the recent Libyan developments by several national publications, including the Christian Science Monitor.

According to Baker, the Reagan Administration is using terrorism to mobilize U.S. support against radical Third World regimes. Anti-communism is losing its force, he said, and therefore terrorism has become the new ideological concept designed to win support for the administration.

Nicaragua parallel

The most significant impact of the raid, according to Baker, will be on U.S. relations with other Third World countries. The administration is trying to create a parallel between Libya and Nicaragua, Baker said. This will allow the administration to use the popularity of the strike on Libya and anti-terrorist rhetoric to legitimate some kind of action against Nicaragua, although he did not specify what kind of action this might be.

The rhetoric of the administration has been designed to focus attention on the idea of terrorism, Baker said, but actually terrorism is nothing more than an ideological formulation. Once the debate has begun in these terms, however, it is not possible to argue against terrorism, he said. "Who can be for terrorism?" Baker said.

"If you put the violence in its proper historical and social context, then it is possible to take sides, both for and against the U.S. action. The terrorist language has made it impossible to discuss the issue," he said.

Baker said he disagrees with the Reagan administration's claim that the strike will undermine support for Qaddafi's regime. While there are dissident factions in the government and the military, Baker said, the strike has actually hurt their chances of challenging Qaddafi. The open U.S. support for an anti-Qaddafi coup deters Libyan people and most of the Arab states from supporting a coup against Qaddafi because it would identify them with the United States, according to Baker.

Israel connection

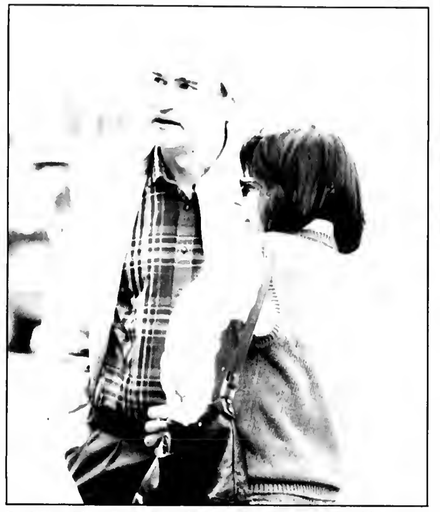
Baker said the U.S. has become identified as a strong ally of Israel during the last five years, and this shift accounts for the declining U.S. status among Arab powers. He claimed the U.S. has shifted from mediating the Arab-Israeli conflict to participating on the side of Israel.

The recent military actions by the administration, according to Baker, have only weakened the United States' political and diplomatic resources in the Middle East.

Baker also pointed to the opportunities for the U.S.S.R. that have been created by the U.S. attack. He said Soviet diplomacy has been brilliant in its ability to stay out of the fighting and use rhetoric to demonstrate support for the Libyan people. At the same time, he said, the wrecking of the pro-U.S. faction in Libya can only strengthen the pro-Soviet and Islamic fundamentalist elements among the Libyan people and in the government.

The Soviet Union is also re-supplying the Libyan military, which will provide the Soviets with hard currency and also possible port facilities. Part of the long-term effect will be to assist the Soviets in their Arab policy, Baker said.

Baker said he believes the worst possible scenario would be for the United States to continue using force. He foresees this leading to more threats against U.S. interests in the Middle East, and especially against so-called "soft targets." Baker said a policy of force is not in the long term interests of the United States because it would alienate Arab and other Third World allies.



Profile: Prof. Thomas Jorling

by Eric Hanson

Next Tuesday, the name of Thomas Jorling, professor of environmental studies, will appear on local ballots as a candidate for the position of selectman for Williamstown. This candidacy marks yet another era in the career of involvement and service that Jorling has traditionally led.

A native of Cincinnati, Ohio, Jorling received his bachelor's degree in biology from the University of Notre Dame in 1962. He continued his education at Boston College, from which he graduated in 1966 with a law degree. At this time, Jorling entered the realm of government service in which he remained for much of the next 20 years.

While completing his masters degree in ecology at Washington State University, Jorling served as attorney and advisor for the Solicitor's Office of the U.S. Department of the Interior. He held the position of assistant counsel at the Smithsonian Institution and minority counsel for the U.S. Senate Committee on Public Works and its five subcommittees before switching his sights to the world of teaching.

Professor Thomas Jorling takes to the streets during his current selectman campaign. (Khakee)

Changes

In 1972, Jorling was hired by Williams as a professor of environmental studies and director of the Center for Environmental Studies. "We had just completed a round of environmental legislation," he recalled, "and it seemed like an

Continued on Page 9

Performers stalked the AMT stage in the Saturday debut of Mozart's opera. (Somers)

Joint production shines in Wolfgang's 'Seraglio'

by Tim Harhold

Saturday night, a sell-out crowd at the Adams Memorial Theatre's MainStage witnessed the opening of the first large-scale opera ever produced at Williams: Mozart's Abduction From The Seraglio. Co-produced by Williamstheatre and the Williams Choral Society, the opera was directed by Jean-Bernard Bucky, while the orchestra was conducted by Julius Hegyi in the the absence of Music Director Kenneth Roberts (Roberts suffered a heart attack early last week).

Overall the production was quite enjoyable. Carroll Freeman turned in a fine performance as Belmonte, the Spaniard who attempts to free his lover, Konstanze, and their servants from the seraglio of the Pasha Selim. Freeman sang with satin-smooth resonance and sensitive musicianship and was convincing enough as the amorous young Belmonte.

As the faithful Konstanze, Linda Wilcox displayed skillful facility with Mozart's demanding music. Although she often seemed stiff and occasionally had problems with intonation and diction, Wilcox was impressive in her virtuosity and in the ringing purity of her voice, particularly in her upper registers.

Rich Miller '86 was likeable as Pedrillo, Belmonte's servant and friend. At times his singing was musically bland, but his voice was pleasant and his energetic, bordering-on-sappy characterization was so appealing that one couldn't complain.

Blonde lover

Complementing Miller, Valerie Anastasio '86 was captivating as Belmonte's saucy and brash love, Blonde. With commanding stage presence and comedic charm, Anastasio established the strongest and most interesting character in the performance. Although her beautiful singing voice did not project as well as it might have, her arias were entertaining and well-received.

Mike Costantino '85, as Osmin, the keeper of the Pasha's harem, was appropriately oily and twisted, but lacked the strength to carry either his voice or character sufficiently. Playing the Pasha Selim, Tim Latimore '86 was perhaps too kindly to be feared as the captor who determines the fate of the others.

Supporting the strong cast, the production crew created a set that was quite interesting visually. Marjorie Bradley Kellogg's stage design, along with Arden Fingerhut's lighting and Deborah Brothers' costumes, gave the production a sleek sophistication. In addition, the polished acting chorus with its smooth movements and freeze-frame tableaux was visually striking.

The opera will also be staged tomorrow, Friday, and Saturday at the AMT MainStage at 8 p.m.

WAAC strives for consistent action

by Corinna Lamb

The Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition captured student and parental attention last weekend by building a mock shantytown on Baxter Lawn during the annual Parents' Weekend. Although the construction of the shantytown has earned the most visibility on campus of any WAAC action this year, the group has organized several other anti-apartheid demonstrations including the occupation of the admissions office in November, the divestment rally during President Francis Oakley's inauguration, and the discussion with the trustees during Winter Study.

WAAC's activity has been spirited but sporadic. Most of their demonstarions have been timed to coincide with events that bring many people to campus. According to WAAC member Ben Perlman '89, "Every time there's been a lot of people around on campus, we've been doing things." The group's problems consist of keeping the momentum going on a day-to-day basis, rather than acting only during major College events.

Many members of WAAC explain their difficulty in maintaining momentum by pointing to what they consider the politically passive atmosphere at Williams. "People at Williams are pretty apathetic," Perlman contended.

WAAC has grown significantly since its creation in 1978. It currently has 30 members, in contrast to its six members in 1983. A problem exists, however, in getting enough members who are willing to make serious time commitments. As Willa Morris '88 said, "There's a small core of people who are very dedicated, but, like everything at Williams, it's hard to get the dedication and motivation going. Some members just don't have the time to put into passive action like weekly meetings and planning sessions. They're much more into active action, like building the shantytown, which has more publicity."

Members of WAAC said the shantytown has stimulated the group while simultaneously increasing campus concern with divestment. Martin White

Continued on Page 6

ARTS IN VIEW

Tomorrow at 12:30 p.m., the fourth in a series of ArtBreaks at the Clark Art Institute will be presented by Rafael Fernandez, curator of prints and drawings; entitled "Recent Acquisitions of Prints and Drawings," the talk will be repeated on Sunday afternoon at 2:30.....Tomorrow afternoon at 4:00 in Currier Ballroom, there will be a poetry reading by the winner and those named to honorable mention in the annual Academy of American Poets Contest.....An informal music listening group will meet on Wednesday at 4 p.m. in Room 30, Bernhard Musical Center.....At the same time on Wednesday, Wheaton College's associate professor of art Roberta J. M. Olson will be presenting a lecture entitled "The Once and Future Comet or In the Comet's Wake" in Room 231, Lawrence Hall.....At 8:00 that night, Mozart's "The Abduction from the Seraglio" will be presented on the MainStage of the Adams Memorial Theatre; the performance will be repeated on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday and admission is $4 ($1 with a Williams ID).....Thursday night at 8:00 in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, there will be a concert entitled "The Theatrical Chamber Music of Robert Suderburg" involving eight performers and four works.....Also at 8 p.m. that night, Rafael Fernandez will present a lecture on "Goya: From Rococo to Revolution"; at the Clark Art Institute.....Ephoria, the Corneli Cayuga Waiters, and Combination Pizza will appear together on Saturday night in Brooks-Rogers; admission is $1.....For more music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146)

Student soloist sparks symphony

by Nik Khakee

The Berkshire Symphony closed its season with a strong performance under the baton of Julius Hegyi at Chapin Hall Friday night. The program was generally well-received by the large crowd and included a modern work as well as more traditional pieces.

The concert opened with contemporary composer Marga Richter's chilling orchestral "poem" entitled Blackberry Vines and Winter Fruit. The 1976 piece, which takes its name from the writings of Henry Thoreau, began with a haunting dissonance from the flutes and piccolo and increased in intensity, reaching a climax in which several contrasting melodic lines were played at a feverish pitch.

Throughout the very programmatic piece, the orchestra produced effects that corresponded appropriately to the moods that Richter wishes to convey. The ostinato figure in the strings was highlighted by some impressive woodwind work, most notably by clarinetist Susan Martula and oboist Carl Jenkins.

It wasn't dark, but this orchestra and flute soloist Tara Kazak '86 performed some fine maneuvers in Friday's Chapin Hall concert. (Khakee)

The evening's next selection was a piece composed early in the 20th century by Erno Dohnanyi entitled "Suite in F-sharp minor for orchestra." The four-movement composition was light and airy in comparison to the more ponderous character

Continued on Page 7

Man on the Quad

The Record recently asked bystanders "What do you think of the shanties on Baxter lawn?"

Interviews by Harwell Wells; photographs by Jeff Somers.

"I'm still undecided about divestment but the shanties are good because people are asking questions and finding answers." — Libby Miles '86

"I think it's a cool attempt to do something . . . this is about as much as you can do without getting radical." —Steven Best '89

"Let's just say, I was standing around the shantytowns last night and was called a 'fascist' because I'm blond ... and I'm not even blond." — Carter Zinn '88

"We (WAAC) think that they're a good thing designed to initiate discussion about South Africa." — Nzinga Clarke '86

"I think it's a valid form of expression. They are just not saying what they stand for. They should recognize other people have a right to the space after a period of time ... a week at most." — Jonah Neuman '89

"I support the shanties as a way of forcing students to come to terms with the importance of dis-Investment. However, some of the spray-painted messages are simple and naive. For example, 'Botha sucks.'" — Ted Arrowsmith '88

WAAC

Continued from Page 5

'87, WAAC member and former College Council presidential candidate sees the construction of the shanties as the first step within a larger framework of action. "Now that the shantytown's up," he said, "the inertia has been conquered. We have reached a place of action."

WAAC members expressed the hope that the shantytown would motivate students to become more politically aware. "The shantytown has given people the opportunity to be unabashedly political," insisted Tom Williams '87.

Mixed feelings

Student reaction to WAAC has been generally receptive, Williams said, although support of the shanties is less than enthusiastic. Some have accused WAAC members of being merely "trendy radicals," who aren't really addressing the problem by building the shanties. K.K. Roeder '88, however, maintains the validity of the shanties as a form of demonstration. "I don't see this as our group saying 'Hey, Yale did it, let's do it too.' We used it because it's a good idea," she said.

WAAC's relationship with the administration has been mixed. "The administration is willing to talk to students," Williams explained, "They just don't want the alumni and parents to hear about it because they might stop giving money."

Individual members of the administration are sometimes seen by WAAC members as less than completely respectful of the group's opinions, some members insist. "Oakley tends to seem patronizing," according to Morris. "I think the Trustees are blatantly patronizing. But the faculty and the deans have been very supportive."

Roeder perceives a desire on the part of the administration to pacify Williams students. "Everyone wants to keep the peace so they (the administration) validate everything we do. They justified the shantytown as an art project. (The administration thinks) it sort of keeps them quiet until the end of the year," she said.

Organizational unity

WAAC is very optimistic about the shantytown action, in part because it promises to unify a group which has had some problems with agreement on policies. Mark Averitt '86 said "There are lots of different opinions within the group, but we all agree about divestment."

Nonetheless, some substantial differences seem to exist. Roeder observed that the group's occasional differences in attitude might have affected their work. "The WAAC is disorganized. It's impossible to be organized when you have ten different opinions," she said. White, however, defended the cohesion of WAAC by citing the internal diversity of most political organizations. "Within any political group there are a lot of opinions," he said, "Williams people are strong-willed."

WAAC members generally see the shantytown as only a first step toward their eventual goal of divestment. Said White, "We have to keep up pressure. We want to convince people that divestment is important." One method of bringing this pressure upon people is by making it a personal matter of conscience. Explained Williams, "People should realize that it is a reflection on our education that money to educate us comes from the exploitation of the majority of South Africans."

Experience England
(and Earn College Credits)

Students from over 200 colleges and universities throughout the United States have experienced England at Wroxton College. Wroxton is a college of Fairleigh Dickinson University, New Jersey's quality, comprehensive private university.

The Wroxton campus is located in central England, less than two hours north of London. The experience is exceptionally British — a British faculty and a diverse curriculum encompassing British literature, history, government, economics and art. Traditional British-style tutorials and seminars are taught by outstanding English scholars. Outside the classroom, you'll enjoy the Royal Shakespeare Theatre and three-day weekends with guided tours. There also is time for you to see more of Europe during your stay.

Formerly part of Trinity College of Oxford University, Wroxton College was once the home of Lord North, British prime minister during the American Revolution. The College has been fully renovated for classroom and on-campus dormitories.

FDU courses at Wroxton College are accepted for full academic credit at most U.S. colleges and universities. We will provide you with the information your academic adviser needs to determine course equivalency at your college.

Tuition and room and board fees at Wroxton are no more than standard university charges. Your only additional cost may be travel. We will help you in making the necessary arrangements.

FDU's Wroxton College will be an educational experience you'll never forget. For more information, complete this coupon or call 201-460-5173.

FDU

FAIRLEIGH DICKINSON UNIVERSITY

Clip and mail today to: Office of Overseas Programs, Fairleigh Dickinson University, 155 Montross Avenue, Rutherford, New Jersey 07070

Please send me more information about FDU's Wroxton College.
I'm interested in ☐ graduate studies ☐ undergraduate studies
I would be interested in attending the following semester:
☐ Spring '86 ☐ Summer '86 ☐ Fall '86

Name

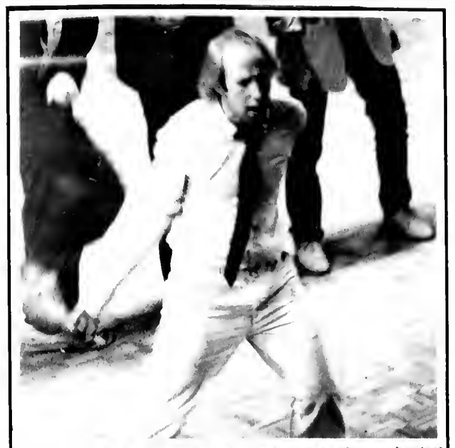
Address

City State Zip

Summer Fall Spring

WASHINGTON OR LONDON INTERNSHIPS

OXFORD SUMMER 1986



Full Academic Years In

- Oxford University
- L.S.E.
- St. Andrews, Scotland

U.S. credits will be transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, founded in Virginia by James Madison in 1776. Graduate work is an option. The Director of Studies for the Center for Quality Education Abroad (in Britain) is the Rt. Hon. The Lord Beloff, D.Litt. (Oxon.), Fellow of the British Academy, Professor Emeritus of Government and Fellow of All Souls, Oxford.

INQUIRIES TO: JANET KOLLEK, J.D., Admissions Director CQEA/WISC, Rm 53, 158 W. 81 St., NY, NY, 10024. (212-724-0804/724-0136).

(EO/AA)

Junior Rob Wieman takes the lead in a Springsteeter number last Saturday night in the group's concert in Chapin Hall. The ten-man a capella group provided a lighter musical alternative to the opera performance across campus as part of Parents' Weekend festivities. (Khakee)

Letters

Continued from Page 2

Granted, some are more meritorious than others, but a good critic is not judged by his or her enthusiasm to a) see the show and b) write on the Record. When Sports articles are written, members of the team or someone indisputably qualified writes them, which brings me to my next point.

Two pages of the Record every week are dedicated to sports. I am an avid sports fan and am not condemning a vital outlet of this college. But the Record doesn't think much else exists (except the Gaudino Committee). Why not an Arts Section? The "Arts in View" column is great, but it is not enough. There is never a follow up on things listed in it. People are too preoccupied with the "Athlete of the Week." O.K., that's a super idea and everyone, including myself, looks forward to its weekly victor, but how about a "Thespian of the Week," or a dancer or musician of the week?! This Bud's for you, huh?

Just an added note while I have a captive audience. The term "theatre-fag" is offensive. Most everyone uses it jokingly, but their subtle statement is made. Even our rivals, the Lord Jeffs, have risen above this tacit racism. This is manifested by their term for actors and actresses: drama-Ramas. Way to go Amherst!

An improved awareness of the Record is needed to place the Arts on this campus in their proper perspective. The masses are calling for new-and-improved reviews, and more of them. I greatly anticipate the review of Mozart's opera, The Abduction from the Seraglio, which will probably be found in this week's Record (it better be). Let's hope it is only the beginnings of a new "Artsy-fartsy" epoch.

P.S. If the Cap and Bells show MAI, which was performed last week, was reviewed in this issue, I will retract every sentence. But I do not think that will be necessary.

Howard Patlis '88

Symphony

Continued from Page 5

of the opening piece. The first movement, Andante con variazioni, was executed well despite the orchestra's occasional lack of drive. The slow and plaintive Romanza movement was moving and especially powerful in the solo section performed by principal cellist Susan Ruzow.

The showpiece of the evening was clearly the third selection, Mozart's Concerto in G Major. The work, composed for flute, featured senior Tara Kazak in a solo-oriented piece. Although her initial nervousness seemed at first to affect her playing, she quickly settled down to command attention with her stylistic and seemingly effortless fingerwork as the concerto proceeded.

The evening's presentation concluded with Brahms' Academic Festival Overture. Opening with a classically romantic movement, Brahms' piece worked up to a bright and stirring conclusion heralded by the brass.

Coverage—

Continued from Page 1

and WNYT Channel 13 of Albany, an NBC affiliate; appeared on the scene.

According to Kolesar, Robert J. Lutzema, a popular classical-music disc jockey who broadcasts from WGBH in Boston and can be heard over WAMC in Albany, mentioned the shantytown on his Friday broadcast. Luztema's show can be heard in most of the regional area, according to Kolesar.

The Springfield Sunday Republican included a story about the protest, but neither the New York Times nor the Boston Globe covered the construction of the shanties.

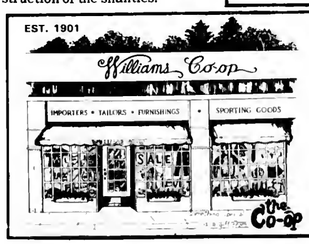
Leave your typewriter with us this summer. We will clean and store it and have it ready to go this fall.

McClelland's

36 Spring Street - - Williamstown

Telephone 458-4920

SENIOR LEADERS NEEDED for TEENAGE BICYCLE TRIPS



Applicants must be at least 21

Call or write:

Student Hosteling Program
Conway, MA 01341

(413) 369-4257

EST. 1901

Levi's

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

JOSEPH E. DEWEY 9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

West Package & Variety Store

663-6081

Mid-way between Williamstown and North Adams on Rt. 2

Bollini Chardonay $6.99 1.5 liter	Molson Red ALE $11.98/case plus deposit while they last
West County Cider The Perfect Spring Refresher 750 ml	Hofbrau & Oktoberfest Light and Dark $14.95/case plus deposit

HEADING FOR EUROPE THIS SUMMER?

Jet there anytime for only $160 with AIRHITCH® (as reported in Consumer Reports, NY Times, Newsday, Harvard's "Let's Go" Student Travel Guide Series, Good Housekeeping, and on national network morning shows). For details, call 212-864-2000 or write:

2901 Broadway, Suite 100A, NY, NY 10025.

Camp Counselors

Top Camp, Berkshire Mts, Mass.

seeks top people over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Tennis, Football, Weight-training, Waterskiing, Swimming, Lacrosse, Sailing, Camp Radio Station, Camp Newspaper, Computer Programming, Video, Theatre Arts, Ceramics, Photography, Pianist. Good salary plus room, board, laundry.
Write Winter office: M. Moss, Lenox 270-14R Grand Central Pkwy, Floral Park, NY 11005

Shanties

Continued from Page 1

"The administration is afraid of this getting off campus," he said.

The College holds $35 million in 40 companies with operations in South Africa, according to Stephen Lewis, chairman of the ACSR, although this includes stock in General Electric, which announced last week that it has sold its $1.9 million operation in South Africa.

This year, the trustees approved divestiture of just over $2 million of stock in companies which have not signed the Sullivan Principles. Lewis stressed, "Virtually none of the companies has more than one percent of its operations in South Africa ... and profits in the last couple of years are probably zero."

Williams still feels the need to widen support for divestment and against apartheid, but he thinks the town's main concern may be the appearance rather than the symbolism of the shantytown. He said, "The town is not too psyched to have the village beautiful become the shantytown ugly."

College: no response

The College, although not supportive of this form of protest, has respected the protesters' right of free speech and has welcomed the increased dialogue produced by the protest.

President Francis Oakley said, "The best thing it (the shantytown) could do is promote a more active level of exchange between both sides." He said he believes the trustees have been very open to students' opinions, and he noted they have responded to all recommendations of the ACSR. Voicing his personal opinion of the protest, however, Oakley said, "I don't like shanties. I don't like that form of symbolic protest, but it's not interfering with the rights of others."

Lewis said, "As one personally interested in the problems in South Africa, I'm glad to see someone else who's expressing strong convictions about South Africa." He expressed uncertainty about the effectiveness of the protest on College policy, noting that ACSR and the trustees are already informed on the issue.

Dean of the College Stephen Fix believes that one advantage of the protest is that it "has generated renewed debate about the College's policies and apartheid and the proper course of action for the College financially." Fix said he found most parents approved of the way the administration and the community have responded to the protest. "What colleges are good at," he said, "is providing a forum, sometimes more dramatic than other times, where students can express themselves."

Building code

Fix and College Vice President William Reed met with Michael Card, the Williamstown building inspector, after Card received complaints from townspeople about the shanties. Reed said Card was trying to be cooperative and that they were all concerned about hazards that could affect the protesters such as fire, bad weather and violence from people opposing the protest.

Security was maintained around the clock on Baxter lawn to guard against these hazards. "We certainly don't want another Dartmouth," Reed said. He said it is uncertain whether the shantytown violates town building regulations because the shanties can be regarded as buildings, forms of protest or works of art.

Student reaction to the shantytown has been controlled and minimal. A sign erected on Baxter lawn by an ad hoc concerned students group labels the shanties, "An unfair and ugly Imposition of the views of some on all who would otherwise enjoy the beauty of the campus this weekend." The sign also says that the members of this group are opposed to this form of protest but will not resort to violence to express their opposition.

Quiet opposition

David Walters '88, president of the Garfield Republican Club, and club members Scott Brower '88 and David Drumheller '88 met with Oakley on Thursday in an attempt to convince the administration to prevent the shanties from being built, for what they called aesthetic reasons. According to Brower, "We were simply trying to touch base with the administration."

Walters said they assured Oakley they had no plans to tear the shanties down, adding he views the shanties as "a perfectly valid form of protest." He said, however, he does not think the protest will succeed in changing the trustees' position, because he believes the trustees are already well informed and the protest will not change this.

Guerilla

The student reaction in the dining hall reflected the confusion created by such a seemingly impossible occurrence. Most students who could see and hear the activity seemed shocked yet did not interfere.

Delois Dowdell '87, who had not been forewarned, heard the abuse and taunts of the "police," however, and responded by grabbing a chair and heading to Havis' defense. She brandished the chair at Averitt, whom she recognized after a moment. According to Dowdell, Averitt asked her "Delois, do you think I turned into a fascist?"

Dowdell said that she felt foolish when she realized that the encounter was staged, but in retrospect, she was glad that she reacted the way she did. She added that it was frightening to her that no one else did anything.

Havis said that other members of the group refused to be identified. She explained that the individuals were not important, the cause which brought them together was.

Impress that Special Someone!
Take them to Dinner on The Record

For the next two weeks the Record will be running a promotion in conjunction with many of the areas finest restaurants. We will be drawing a winner for each of the restaurants advertising with our coupon. The restaurants have given a dinner for two.

Clip the coupons and submit

- $1.00 with any one coupon
- $3.00 with any four coupons

Seal the coupons & money in an envelope and put it in the mail to us. The mailroom has a special box in the back for us.

The contest is open to all members of the college community except members of the Record Editorial Board. Our determination of winners is final.

Dinner for you!!

It's happening . . .
In our Tavern Lounge for a limited time only
JIM BAYLISS singer/guitarist
Friday evenings
WALT LEHMANN BAND
Saturday evenings
Sunday Brunch
11 a.m. - 2 p.m.
A delicious way to relax!
The Williams Inn
On the Village Green
Junction Routes 2 & 7
Williamstown, MA 01267
Reservations Tel. (413) 458-9371

Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Phone: _____
Contest open only to the College Community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper
Williams Inn (Gift Certificate) 4/29/86

There is another choice.
Pursue a Career and the Liberal Arts.

Penn's Master of Arts and Professional Studies Program offers you an unusual opportunity to obtain a Master of Arts degree in a humanities or social science discipline combined with professional studies and an internship in the business, government, or non profit sectors, leading to a career in as little as 18 months.

For information, complete the coupon and return it to:
Nancy Overholt, Program Coordinator
Master of Arts and Professional Studies Program
School of Arts and Sciences
210 Logan Hall
Philadelphia, PA 19104-6384
UNIVERSITY of PENNSYLVANIA

Please send me more information about the Master of Arts and Professional Studies Program.
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Area of Academic interest _____
WIC

Le Jardin
RESTAURANT and INN
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
Win Brunch for Two.
Serving Dinners from 5-9 and 5-10 on Saturday.
Sunday Brunch 10:30-1:30
Phone 458-8032

Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Le Jardin (Brunch for Two) 4/29/86

Council

Continued from Page 1

that applicants whose JA was on the committee had a 34.9 percent acceptance rate, compared with a 34.5 percent rate overall. He said the people overlooked tend to be "a little more quiet, a little more diverse."

5 proposals

Reichheld and Gordon presented five proposals to change the selection process. They suggested that the number of students chosen by the Elections Committee be increased from seven to eight, which would decrease the number of former JAs on the committee from 13 to 12.

The Selection Committee is chosen by the Elections Committee, the previous year's JA president and vice president and the current JA president and vice president. It was suggested that each group be given the right to veto a certain number of committee members chosen by other groups.

To deal with the problem of geographic distribution of members of the committee, Reichheld and Gordon suggested that two of the former JAs be from the Berkshire Quad and that two others be JAs from Morgan. Now only one committee member is from each area.

It was also recommended that potential applicants attend a mandatory pre-application orientation similar to the one that students selected to be JAs are required to attend in the summer. Reichheld cited the need to "make people more aware of the role of the JAs."

Role-playing

In addition a "shelf" between the second round hold or reject vote and the final vote was proposed in order to make possible a more-balanced judgement about lesser-known JA applicants. Gordon said students placed in this group would participate in a role-playing simulation in the hope that "an active situation would reveal more than an interview."

In other business, the Council approved the allocation of $250 for a return lecture by Nancy Kline, who spoke last Sunday, and the formation of a panel to discuss sexism at Williams. They also approved Elections Committee recommendations for the Financial, Faculty and Food Service Committees. It was noted that not enough application were received to fill spaces on the Food Service, Log, Library, Winter Study and Bookstore Committees.

WILLIAMSTOWN
CAPTAIN'S TABLE
The Lobster House
Of The Berkshires
(413) 458-5645
(413) 458-5124
Cold Spring Road, Route 2-7 Williamstown, Ma. 01267
Lobsters . . . and so much more!
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Captain's Table ($30 - Gift Certificate) 4/29/86

Capers
If you haven't been to Capers lately, take the time.
New Menu . . . New Format
Entertainment Friday, Saturday night
412 Main St., Williamstown 458-9180
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Capers (Free Dinner) 4/29/86

JB's Restaurant 159 Water Street, Williamstown. 458-9825 Recently restored — mid 1800's Plank House. Unique Ambiance with wall displays of old tools and stained glass paintings at the windows. Serving lunch and dinner 11:30-8:30 featuring vegetarian dishes and sweedish specialties plus daily special of non-veg. and veg. fully licenses, Reservations Accepted.
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
JB's (Free Dinner) 4/29/86

1896 HOUSE
Specializing in Novelle American Cuisine. Outdoor Patio Luncheon opening May 8th. Open for dinner: Monday-Saturday 5:00 'till 9:30 Friday and Saturday until 10:00 p.m. lunch starting at 11:30 ending at 2:30 (458-8123) One short mile shouth on Route 7, Williamstown.
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
1896 House (Free Dinner) 4/29/86

THE FREIGHT YARD PUB
"Affordable dining in an unsurpassed setting!"
LOCATED IN WESTERN GATEWAY HERITAGE STATE PARK
Rte. 8, Downtown North Adams, 663-6547
Open 7 Days 11:30 a.m.-1 a.m.
Live Entertainment and Late-Night Fare
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Freight Yard Pub (Dinner for Two) 4/29/86

THE RIVER HOUSE RESTAURANT
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name: _____
Address: _____
Telephone: _____
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
River House (Free Dinner) 4/29/86

Jorling

Continued from Page 5

appropriate time to do something else." The change was a good one, he reflected. "I miss a lot of the professional work," he admitted, "but I don't miss much of the personal dimension that went along with it. The demands it places on the family are not very rewarding."

His experiences as director of the CES, however, were quite rewarding. He helped establish the curriculum of the Environmental Studies Program and served as manager for the Center's library, the Environmental Analysis Lab, and programs related to Hopkins Forest. The curricular advances that he promoted encouraged the development of the Center into more of an education-oriented facility. When it was formally dedicated in 1967, the Center had a much different focus than it does today.

"It started out as more of a research institution that was only incidentally in Williams College," Jorling recalled. With the help of grants that he solicited from various foundations, the director helped change the Center's character. He worked to increase the quality and range of the course offerings and the availability of resources to the student body.

The development of the environmental studies library, located in the Center's Kellogg House headquarters, was one of Jorling's many projects during his tenure as director of the Center.

Back to politics

His teaching and directorship duties, however, were interrupted in 1977 when he accepted a position as Assistant Administrator for Water and Hazardous Materials for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, to which he was appointed by President Jimmy Carter. For the next two years, Jorling was instrumental in the implementation of the Clean Water Act, the Ocean Dumping Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

In 1979, he returned to Williams and resumed his duties as professor and CES director. He was to interrupt his stay at the College once more, with a one-year visiting professorship at the University of California at Santa Cruz, before returning in 1983.

Jorling's recent decision to run for selectman, a position which includes the responsibility for the preparation and implementation of the town's budget, again opens the possibility for him to simultaneously participate in both the realm of education and of politics. His candidacy was inspired by a recognition of the seriousness of the issues that currently face the town.

"I've always been interested in public service," he explained. "And right now the town is under a lot of pressure." Jorling insists that he is not willing to let these tensions get the best of the town. "Some of these pressures have the potential to dramatically change the character of the town," he said. "I'm interested in keeping the town dynamic and progressive without losing some of the values that attract people here in the first place."

No Dean's Extention this time?

Maybe you should place your faith in a Macintosh instead.

For more information contact the Computer Center at Jesup Hall.

Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc.
Macintosh is a trademark of McIntosh Laboratory, Inc. and is being used with express permission of its owner.

Sports Shorts

Crew

The women's crew team competed Saturday in a tough, exciting regatta against Lowell, Tufts, and UMass in Amherst, winning two races while stroking competitively in several others.

The varsity women began the day with a tense and exciting race, losing to Lowell in a photo finish. The next race featured two boats, the lightweight eight and a new JV eight. Both boats rowed a hard race, coming in second and third behind the Lowell JV boat. As stroke Pam Tabari '86 described it, "We were even until the 1000m bouy and then they pulled up six seats and held it for the rest of the race."

The last race of the day was the women's fours. Williams—after two agonizing false starts—rowed a strong race, winning by half a length over UMass, ending the day on a victorious note.

Men take two races

Meanwhile, the men's varsity lightweight boat stroked to a victory over Tufts to lead the men's squad. They were joined in the winner's circle by the varsity four, which dominated their race in spectacular time.

Three other boats competed for the men. The varsity heavyweight boat, newly put together for this race, took second behind UMass in their race despite a valiant sprint to the finish line. The lightweight four lost their race to the Williams varsity four, while the novice heavyweights and lightweights finished second in their races.

Women's Lacrosse

The women's lacrosse team split two games this week, including a thrilling 13-11 win over Weslevan on Saturday.

"This was a real good game," said co-captain Laura Rogers '86. "We came out really strong and were ahead the whole way."

Junior Lee Wierdsma netted three goals and passed out three assists to lead the scoring. She was supported by Rogers with two goals, sophomore Mara Burnett with three goals, and sophomore Beth Bernheimer with two goals and one assist. "This was probably our best game," said coach Chris Larson-Mason. "It was a real team effort."

The key question for the squad now is whether it can qualify for the NIAC playoffs, which accepts four teams. Larson-Mason thinks that the teams game today against Middlebury will be crucial in determining if Williams gets a bid.

Tennis

by Mark Vla

The men's tennis team started the week by dropping the Trinity Bantams by an 8-1 score. This weekend they hosted the annual NESCAC tournament and finished fourth.

In the NESCAC's, the best finishes were recorded by sophomores Robbie Hallagan and Hoyt Ludington, who reached the semifinals of the B singles bracket, each losing to opponents from eventual winner Tufts. Seniors Chris Clarey and Tim Peterson, playing the top two positions, each reached the consolation semifinals.

Clarey and Peterson competed in number one doubles, and lost a close match in the second round to the eventual finalists. Tufts ended up winning the competition, followed by Amherst.

In the Trinity match, the Ephs picked up victories in five of the six singles matches to clinch the contest in the early going. All three doubles teams won in eight-game single sets. The closest match was at first doubles, as Clarey and Peterson edged by their opponents 8-7 (7-3).

WUFO

The Williams Ultimate Frisbee Organization (WUFO) emerged victorious from a tough tournament at Hampshire College this weekend. As they arrived at Hampshire, the clouds began to clear and the sun began to shine — it was a perfect day for frisbee.

WUFO scored the first two points and, with the long passes of field captain Chris Jones '86 and exceptional defense by cocky freshman John Bellwoar, took the half at 8-6. After the half, it became apparent that Hampshire was not going to be able to stage a comeback, failing to capitalize on WUFO turnovers, whereas Williams took full advantage of their opportunities. At 14 -12, the game point, Humes dove to block a Hampshire pass and caught it in the endzone to win the game.

The tournament final was played against Dartmouth, a particularly intense Ultimate team. Their discipline and sharp passes cut the WUFO zone apart and pulled them to a quick two-point lead. The teams, playing excellently, traded points without a turnover until the half, which Dartmouth took at 8-7.

During the half, WUFO decided to switch to a running team for a man-to-man defense, and pulled to an 11-9 score. Strong passing between profs Colin Adams and Dave Levine kept the scoring going and WUFO took the game 15-11.

Golf

by Rick Orluk

Head coach Rick Pohle expected his Eph golf team to possess depth this season and on Saturday, the Ephs showed why as the top four players shot 78 to sweep Trinity, AIC, and Union. The Ephs posted the win with a low team score of 393, raising their record to 5-1.

Playing in beautiful golf, the squad was led by the play of freshman Tim Frechette, senior Bill Tierney, and juniors Charles Foehl and Tim McKone, each shooting 78. Williams' next best scorer was Don Dagnoli '87, who shot an 81.

The Ephs now look to the New England Championships beginning Monday. Once again Williams is expected to be in the top three or four teams in Division III. Pohle added that "several of our players have played this course and that will be helpful. I think we will finish very respectably."

Williams' toughest opponents look to be Little Three rival Amherst and Salem State for overall team honors. In addition, Foehl and Frechette each have to be considered legitimate contenders for the individual title.

Baseball

Continued from Page 12

ing baseball, allowing no earned runs, while the Ephs' offense hammered away at Bowdoin's pitcher.

Pachus started the onslaught by launching a two-run homer deep into the football stands in left-center. Rick Hedeman '87 added another two-run blast in the fourth and also doubled in the fifth to account for his fourth RBI of the day. The rally left Williams in front 9-7, but Bowdoin tallied single runs in the seventh and ninth to set up the scintillating ninth inning rally by the Ephs.

Once again, Pachus was at center-stage, singling to open the ninth. Beisito walked to set the stage for catcher John Shaw '87. Just as he had delivered in a similiar situation against RPI two weeks earlier, Shaw lined the pitch into rightfield to score the game-winner.

Pachus continues to lead the Eph attack, as his batting average still resides in the statosphere at .474. Jim Duquette '88 ended a 1-15 streak Saturday by going 3-4 to boost his average to .442, and Hedeman has also topped the .400 barrier at .409. Kevin Morris '86 picked up Friday's win in relief to up his record to 5-2 with an ERA of 2.93. Relief ace Hussey used his strong performance against Bowdoin to lower his ERA to 1.88.

The Ephs will try to bounce back from the doubleheader loss this week, as they embark on a busy and important part of their schedule. AIC was slated to play the Ephs yesterday, and Middlebury visits Williamstown Wednesday. Then on Friday Amherst comes into town for a single game, before the Ephs travel to Amherst Saturday for a doubleheader.

Track

Continued from Page 12

Junior Becky Conklin led the women's squad to the championship, as she won the 800 and 1500 m races. Senior Mel Mahoney also supported the cause with a win in the high jump and second in the long jump.

Three other Ephwoman, freshmen Dawn MacCauley and Sue Northen and junior Gail Henderson, were double winners, as MacCauley won the 100 and 400 hurdles and Northen took the long and triple jumps. Henderson then tok the 100 and 200m sprints. Sarah Pierce '88 took the 3000 m, and the Ephwomen took both the 400m and mile relays.

The team was supported by several second and third places. Sophomore Sarah St. Antoine finished second behind Conklin in the 1500m, while Joan Davis '88 took second in the 200m. Sophomore Jean Fox placed second in the 3000, followed by Susanna Camp '89 and classmate Cathy Cocks in the three and four positions.

Rugby

Continued from Page 12

The C-side dominated their game, winning 18-10. Hooker Phil Headley '86 was a powerful force, scoring twice. The other Eph try was the result of a beautiful play by two rookies, Brian LeNuguy '89 and Mike Copeland '87. Also key to the Williams victory were Julius Yang '89, Rob Shepard '87, and Charlie Benedict '89 at scrum-half.

Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank

The Cow Bell
NEEDLEPOINT
Gifts
Cottons, Cottons and more Cottons Have come in for Spring!
Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267
413-458-5437

THE CLIP SHOP
VISION BECOMES REALITY.
GET WET
TRAVEL PACK
Contains Cello Shampoo, Sheen instant conditioner or Cellofix conditioner for permed hair, Wet - for the wet look or to add body to the hair, and Shprizt Forte — The Finishing Spray to hold your style or add texture to it. It's purse size, so you can take it with you where ever you go!
Keep it looking great even when you are on the go with the new Sebastian Travel Pack.
Receive $1.00 OFF with this card
Regularly $11.95 + tax

WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE
GENUINE

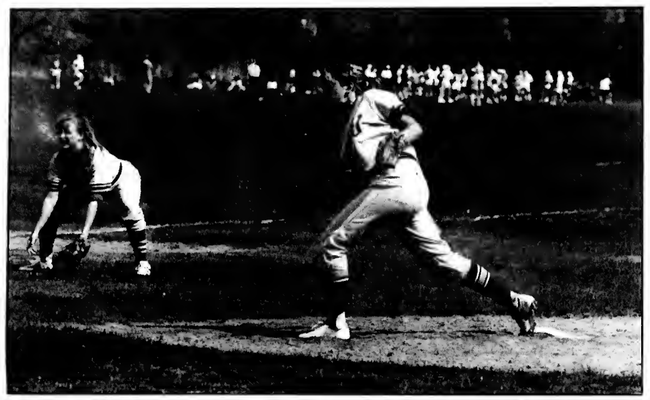
This week's recipient is senior Bill Leininger, who placed in six events at this weekend's Little Three track meet, much to the satisfaction of his many fans. Bill, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

5-2 record

Lacrosse tops Wesleyan by 18-6

Outscoring the Cardinals 11-1 in the second half, the men's lacrosse team blasted Little Three rival Wesleyan 18-6 on Saturday, running their record to 5-2. They also beat Union 12-3 on Thursday.

"It was just a matter of settling down," said coach Renzie Lamb after a first half in which the teams traded goals before Williams went up 7-5 at the half. "We were confused by their changing defenses. I don't really think the game was ever in doubt."



Senior co-captain Chris Toll netted four goals and added an assist to lead the Eph scoring, but the squad had trouble dealing with Wesleyan's slowdown game and didn't establish itself until the third quarter. The Cardinal goalie would often hold the ball to keep the Ephs from pressuring and forcing loose balls and breakaway situations. "The intensity wasn't there," said Lamb. "We didn't do a good job defensively."

Junior Steve Patterson helped the Eph cause by scoring two goals, as did junior Rob Miller and sophomore Bill Boyd. Leading scorer Mike O'Connell added a goal and four assists.

"At the end, we were just cleaning up," Lamb said. "I was a little upset, but we regained our intensity."

"They didn't want to run with us," Lamb continued. Williams' transition game pulled into high gear in the second half and blew the Cardinals away, outscoring them 11-1. "Most of our goals have come off the transition game." The Ephs also beautifully set up several goals in man-up situations, ending up 2-4 after Cardinal penalties.

The game followed a 12-3 pasting of Union of Thursday, cancelled from Wednesday due to the snow. O'Connell scored three goals with three assists while junior Jim Sperry also tallied three goals. "We had good intensity today; it was a solid game," said Lamb.

The softball team beat Trinity 11-10 on Saturday, and here sophomore pitcher Nancy Hedeman fires one across, as senior Christy Foster prepares at third. Hedeman singled home junior Tori Ballard in the sixth inning for the winning run after Ballard had legged out a triple to tie the score. The Ephwomen survived several walks and errors in the seventh to win by one, setting their record at 3-2.
(Albright)

Sophomore Ted Arrowsmith (second from left) and junior Dave Prockop (second from right) help the Ephs to the Little Three title on Sunday, trying to overtake their Amherst foe in the 1500.
(Somers)

Men and women tracksters run past Little Three rivals

Crushing rivals Amherst and Wesleyan, the men's and women's track teams swept to the Little Three championship on Sunday, the men by 91-57 over Amherst and the women by 106-37 over Wesleyan.

The men started off strongly with five firsts and one second place in the field events. Joe McGinn '88 started things off by winning the hammer throw. Freshman Mark Duff then won the pole vault, followed by sophomore Ken Alleyne's victory in the long jump. Nat McCormick '88 took second in the javelin, while junior Brandt Johnson won the high jump.

The track events started just as auspiciously, as the Ephs swept to the title. Senior John Ellison took third in the 1500m, before junior Andre Lopez won two events, the 400 and 800m runs. Scott Purdy '88 won the 100 hurdles and placed third in the 400 hurdles, and Ellison then won the 5000m.

Even though the victory was already wrapped up, the mile relay was the most exciting race. Senior Tom Pingree took the baton for the anchor leg at least 15 yards behind his Amherst foe, and didn't catch up until only 10 yards remained. But catch up he did, and he won the race at the wire by only .1 second.

Bill Leininger '86, who always performs well in Little Three competition, contributed valuable points to the cause in his final Little Three meet. He won the discus, took second in the hammer throw, second in the 200m, and third in the pole vault.

Continued on Page 11

White dogs take 2 out of 3 against Dart. on Saturday

by Mike Curtin

This weekend's rugby extravaganza started with a B-side victory and ended with a C-side victory; unfortunately, the middle match was lost by the A-side to Eastern rugby champion Dartmouth.

Remembering last year's defeat, the B-side took the field with revenge on their minds. What was to come was the best game of rugby the B-side has yet played, this year. At the beginning, passes were being dropped and tackled being missed. The result was an early Dartmouth score which put them on top 6-0. This was all Williams needed to get them going.

The scrum tightened up, and, following the example of wing forwards Jon Stanley '87 and Nils Christoffersen '88, the team began to hit hard. The scrum became a dominant offensive force, winning every loose ball. Explosive running and precision kicking by Erik Valdes '87, Charlie Lazor '87, and Mike Sullivan '88, kept the ball in the Dartmouth end for the remainder of the half.

The B's came out for the second half with the same fire and intensity. Playing like it was his last game, Sean Brennan '87 dominated loose play. He was supported by Geoff Kass '86 and Denis Newcomer '87, who combined to get the ball to sophomore Andy Harris, who scored and kicked the conversion himself, tying the score.

With five minutes left in the second half, Sullivan ran into a swarm of Dartmouth defenders, pop-kicked the ball ahead of him, outran the opposition and fielded his own kick, galloping into the try zone for the score. Following an unsuccessful conversion attempt, Williams led 10-6. Tough goal line defense by Valdes and Mike Goldstein '88 preserved the victory.

A-siders fall

In the A-side game, Dartmouth struck early with a drop-kick, but Williams came right back behind the running and kicking of scrum-half Greg Bronson '86. Scrum-running by classmates John Fetterolf and Pete Aiken kept the ball in Dartmouth territory. After senior George Clemens hit a penalty kick to tie the score at three, Dartmouth went ahead 10-3 at half.

The teams traded scores in the second half, and then scrummies Eugene Mazzaro '87 and Paul Hogan '86 pushed the ball to the Dartmouth try-line. Senior Brad Bissell dove over the line for the only Williams try. The game ended with Dartmouth ahead by 20-10.

Continued on Page 11

Hardballers drop pair to Bates

by Al Mottur
and Stewart Verdery

For the baseball team, the past few weeks have been disapointing ones, especially in comparison to the club's dazzling 5-0 start after a successful southern trip.

The Ephs have dropped four of their last five games, including a doubleheader sweep at the hands of the Bates Wildcats this Saturday at Weston Field. The first game of the twinbill saw Bates rout the home team 20-2 in a game marked by Eph mistakes. Bates only collected 12 hits, but was handed fourteen walks and eight errors by the Williams defense.

After that humiliation in the opener, the Ephmen fought back valiantly in the nightcap, but fell again 6-5. After a Bates solo homer in the top of the inning, the Ephs struck for three runs in the bottom of the frame, the big blow being a two-run homer by Chris Pachus '88.

The story of the day, however, was freshman pitcher Chris Conway, who responded to his first starting assignment by going the distance, holding the potent Bates' attack to nine hits. He also showed good control, walking only four while striking out three. He was helped by an outstanding defensive play by centerfielder Sean Logan '88, who crashed into and over the fence to take away a three-run homer in the second.

The Wildcats were able to break through against Conway in the fourth for four runs to take a 5-3 lead. Bates managed to stave off Williams' two-run sixth inning which tied the game, and answered with the game-winning run of their own in the top of the seventh. The first batter of the inning, Steve Bonello, deposited Conway's first pitch just over the left-field fence. The Ephs' Steve Belsito '87 singled in the bottom of the inning, but the team could not drive him around, as Bates completed the sweep.

The baseball team lost twice to Bates on Saturday by scores of 20-2 and 6-5. Here junior Seth Lawry tries to stem the tide in the first game.
(Khakee)

On the previous day, the squad fared better, defeating Bowdoin 10-9 in perhaps the season's most exciting game. Bowdoin jumped out to a commanding 7-2 lead against Eph starter Pieter Mulder '86, before Bob Hussey '86 relieved and proceeded to throw four and two-thirds innings of outstand-

Continued on Page 11

The Williams Record

VOL. 99, NO. 23 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE MAY 6, 1986

Students listen to a speaker at last Monday's rally for divestment held at the shantytown, sponsored by Williams Students for Divestment. (Khakee)

8 days later

WSD shanties go down

by Debbie Snyder

At noon last Saturday, the members of Williams Students Divestment removed from Baxter Lawn the shanties they had erected eight days before.

The decision to end the protest came after President Francis Oakley responded positively to three of the four proposals presented to him by the group on Monday. Mark Averitt '86 said at a rally Saturday preceding removal of the shanties, "As a symbol of good faith and progress in dialogue and as a symbol of good faith in the continuing struggle against apartheid, we've decided to take down the shanties."

Oakley agreed to the following requests: to enlarge the College's collection of written materials pertaining to the issue of divestment and to house this collection in Sawyer Library, to provide additional funding for speakers on divestment, and to allot space in the fall Alumni

Continued on Page 7

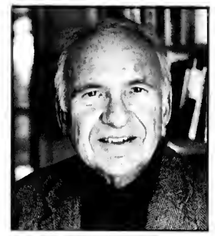
Brzezinski graduation speaker

Zbigniew Brzezinski, former National Security Advisor during the Carter Administration, will speak at the 197th commencement on June 8. Senior Williams faculty member and Pulitzer Prize-winning political historian James MacGregor Burns will deliver the Baccalaureate address on Saturday June 7.

Brzezinski is the Herbert Lehman Professor of Government at Columbia University, where he has been a member of the faculty since 1960, and a counselor at the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies. His career as an educator and author has been complemented by significant public and government service as well as extensive writing on international politics for American and foreign magazines.

As President Jimmy Carter's National Security Adviser from 1977-81, Brzezinski was instrumental in the normalization of diplomatic relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China. For this and his contribution to U.S. human rights and national security policies, he was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1981.

His book Power and Principle: Memoirs of the National Security Adviser, published in 1983, describes and analyzes his experiences during the Carter administration.



Communism expert

Brzezinski, long recognized as a leading expert on communism, is the author of several books on the subject. He has served as a member of the Policy Planning Council of the State Department and as director of the Foreign Policy Task Forces for Hubert Humphrey's 1968 presidential campaign.

He also served as director of the Trilateral Commission, formed in 1973 to encourage closer coordination among the United States, Western Europe, and Japan. He is currently a trustee of that Commission.

Zbigniew Brzezinski

James MacGregor Burns

Born in Poland in 1928, Brzezinski moved to Canada with his family in 1938 and became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1958. He received B.A. and M.A. degrees from McGill University in 1949 and 1950, and a Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1953. He will be awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at Commencement, where his son Ian will be awarded a bachelor's degree in political science.

Burns retiring

Burns, Woodrow Wilson professor of government at Williams and a 1939 graduate of the College, has combined nearly a half-century of teaching with the writing of more than a dozen books on American history and politics and a long and active

Continued on Page 6

1990 yield rate running 50 percent

by Anne O'Malley

According to Director of Admissions Philip Smith '55, about 50 percent of the students accepted for the class of 1990 have decided to enroll at Williams. This figure represents a four to five percent increase over last year's yield rate, which Smith termed "a very signifigant change."

Smith said the class will include roughly 210 women and 295 men, though he said the Admissions Office "literally has not counted that yet."

Smith noted that the Admissions Office had still not heard from 150 students as of May 3, and said he plans to wait for a few more days' worth of mail before accepting any students from the waiting list. The Admissions staff is hoping for an entering class of 515 freshmen in September. Smith said, "We'll probably come in just on target."

Smith anticipates between five and 10 students will be added from the wait list over the summer to make up for the "summer melt." The summer melt consists of students who decide to delay matriculation for a year or who are accepted off other colleges waiting lists or decide not to attend Williams. The Admissions office did not accept anyone off the wait list last year.

Tight waitlist

Because the waiting list activity will be so tight, Smith indicated that the Admissions staff is going to begin letting people know if "there is no chance at all." He said 60 percent of the students placed on Williams' waiting list this year have indicated continuing interest, as compared to an average of 50 percent in other years.

The Admissions Office had received positive replies from 512 students as of this time last year, when the Office was planning for a class of 505. Ninety fewer students were accepted this year.

Smith also noted that the yield rate for minority students had increased. He said he believes this will be the first Williams class with more than 15 percent American minorities. According to Smith, 25 blacks had sent in deposits to Williams at this point last year, and 22 eventually matriculated. Smith said next year's freshman class contains 37 blacks, and he is assuming this number will hold.

Smith said the admission office is pleased with the number of positive responses received thus far. He attributed at least part of this success to the fact that "the undergraduates, and particularly the freshmen, pulled together very well for the overnight prospective programs."

Sexism exists here, say panelists

by Karen Costenbader

Because "Sexism is an important issue which doesn't get full and adequate treatment (at Williams)," College Council President Amy Jeffress '87 organized a panel discussion on sexism, which took place last night in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

The nine-person panel was scheduled to include Jeffress, Averil Clarke '87, Gail Covington '88, Katie Kent '88, Chauncy Lennon '88, Melissa Matthes '86, and professors Wendy Brown of the political science department, Rosemarie Tong of philosophy and women's studies and John Smith of German.

Jeffress said she believes not that there is an exceptionally repressive, sexist atmosphere at Williams, but that, "sexism is pervasive and affects us in specific ways."

Double standard

Kent, an active member of the Feminist Alliance, planned to speak about women's perceptions of sexism at Williams. Kent said the stigma attached to members of the Feminist Alliance and participants in the women's parties held earlier this year was an important issue. She is also concerned about what she perceives as a sexual double standard on campus and the impending lack of women's studies professors next year.

Matthes, who teaches dancercise classes for the physical education department, said she

Continued on Page 7

CUL meets after lengthy gap, students want input

by Karen Olson

Citing a lack of opportunity for student input into the agenda of the Committee on Undergraduate Life and saying student contributions have been undervalued by this year's committee, some CUL student members question the committee's effectiveness.

Before its meeting today, there was an almost two-month gap between CUL meetings. Theme housing and the freshmen college were in the campus spotlight during this time. "I wish we had met over the Gaudino Committee proposal (about theme housing)," said Suzanne Biemiller '87, a member of the committee. The CUL had only met twice this year, on Jan 28, and March 4, before today's meeting.

Some student members are calling for the creation of a student co-chair for the committee. The students also pointed to scheduling problems and the administration's assignment of priority to issues as reasons for the proposal to reform committee structure.

Assistant Dean of the College William Darrow, last year's CUL chairman and currently the administration representative on the committee, said he believes the CUL is the only student/faculty committee with these problems.

Discussing the lack of student consultation on theme housing, Darrow said, "It is certainly possible to say that the issue kind of fell between the cracks." He added, however, that it was not viewed as a new idea because the CUL had discussed theme housing during the 1981-82 academic year.

Gaudino proposals

Chairman of the CUL, Professor Michael Bell, acknowledged student criticism that CUL members had been presented with the Gaudino proposals but never discussed them. "It was not clear that the proposals came to us as a request that we discuss or act on them, so I created no sense of urgency about their discussion," he said.

Bell added, "The mandate of the committee is hugely open and unbelievably vague. We make recommendations to the Dean's office, to the faculty, and we could also make proposals to College Council."

Both Bell and Darrow stressed the lack of an independent student voice in the decision-making process of the College. Bell noted, "The big issue is to what extent are students on committees the elected representatives of students, as they are often in disagreement with College Council."

Darrow said, "All student representatives are continually in a bind in terms of whose opinion they represent. The students on the CUL were at loggerheads with College Council during last year's debates about the residential housing system."

Continued on Page 6

May 6, 1986

Breathe life into CUL

The Committee on Undergraduate Life, the most influential student/faculty committee with the broadest charter, has had little impact on students' lives this semester. Changes should be made; the first being to install a student co-chairman.

Failing even to discuss the Gaudino Committee's controversial proposals when they were hot topics or set an agenda of its own to examine campus issues, the committee did not fulfill its duties. Indeed, the CUL has met only three times this semester. This inactivity is inexcusable from a committee that supposedly plays such a major role in college life. The committee should have addressed issues such as minority life, divestment, the Berkshire Quad and JA selection process.

The CUL is simply too important to be stagnant. It needs an agenda of its own and active leadership.

The students on the CUL were among the first to cite the need for improvement. Some members said that items which they wanted to discuss were not put on the agenda. Indeed, the Deans said most of the items brought before the CUL came from the Deans' office. Students, who are, after all, closer to undergraduate life than faculty or administrators, deserve a chance to have their voices heard — especially when the leadership of the committee remains passive and silent.

Making a student member of the CUL a co-chairman will provide a safety valve so that student concerns are sure to be addressed when the non-student chairman fails to bring them before the committee.

Letters

Triangles

To the Editor:

Why do we wear pink triangles? Obviously, not as a celebration of the Nazi mentality, as suggested in a letter to the Record of April 22. Rather, the display of the symbol imposed upon us by our worst oppressors is an act of remembrance, self-assertion, and protest.

The pink triangle is a sign of our identification with those who suffered and died for being gay, under the Nazis and throughout history. Knowing gay history is not just a way of finding models of courage and achievement; it is an incitement to struggle for full rights as human beings and citizens. Gay people, too, must say "Never again!"

By displaying this emblem we ask to be included in a moral stand against bigotry which is more generally extended to other minorities. Gay men and lesbians suffer from the presumption that homosexuality is a kind of moral delinquency, like theft or murder, rather than an essential fact of being like race or ethnic heritage. As a result, many who reject racial or religious discrimination deny tolerance and acceptance to gay people.

Finally, the pink triangle stands for the continued oppression of gay people, which differs in degree and method, but not in essential motivation, from the policies of Hitler. We wear it in protest of degradation, not in celebration of it.

It takes courage to label oneself publicly in this way, but from this act comes pride and the joy of living the truth. That is what we celebrate when we wear pink triangles.

Scott Opler GS '87
Eric Rosenbaum '86
David Diamond '89

Methods

To the Editor:

While no one condones the mistreatment of blacks in South Africa, there has been widespread disagreement throughout the campus on the method which should be adopted for abolishing apartheid.

Those protesting for divestment believe their way is the right way. They have put in a lot of time and energy fighting for what they believe. It is their duty to do so, as members of this society. The other members of this society must make an effort to listen to, and seriously consider the validity of, their stand.

Conversely, the protesters must also be open to the opposing views. Yet I heard one protester insult a passer-by who disagreed with divestment. In insulting the opposition, the protesters lost the opportunity to consider other points of view.

Many undecided students I have spoken to are very willing to listen to facts in order to make up their own minds. Insults, though, merely show close-mindedness and disrespect, and furthermore are not very successful at persuasion.

No matter how adamantly students support their views, I am appealing to them not to make closed-mindedness a popular trend. Serious thought about all available viewpoints makes the final decision stronger.

Diana Holtzman '89

Berkshire

To the Editor:

In his letter of April 15, Hart Murphy '88 claims that something should be done about the freshman inclusion process because the Berkshire Quad is so unpopular, with more than 300 freshmen listing it as last choice. He claims further that if fifth choices were minimized, the "anxious unanimity which tends to surround the Berkshire Quad" might go away.

Is he suggesting that a changed inclusion process would make the Quad less unpopular? Not at all. He is merely suggesting that fewer people will have to fear being assigned to the Quad as fifth choice. Murphy could care less why the Berkshire Quad is so unpopular; he says there probably are some reasons, but they don't matter. In effect, he says we shouldn't even bother to ask why, or to try and solve this problem. Murphy's lack of curiosity comes as little surprise to us. He knows, as we do, that one of the prime reasons for the Berkshire Quad's unpopularity is he himself.

Last year, Murphy publicly pronounced the Berkshire Quad unfit for human habitation — according to him it is not social and is full of homosexuals and undesirables — probably because he was unhappy there. Taking advantage of existing homophobia and conformism, he institutionalized this reputation. In so doing, he slandered the Quad's current residents and cast a shadow on all those who would live there in the future. The Quad's reputation was Murphy's bequest to the class of '89 and future classes.

As prospectives and as newly-arrived freshmen, we all heard about the awful Berkshire Quad. A friend of one of us who told people he lived in Fayerweather got replies of "Oh, over there with all the queers!" from freshmen who had only heard the rumors. By the time of our inclusion, the bad reputation of the Berkshire Quad has lessened some. But many people simply did not want to live in a place with such a reputation, or didn't want to live in a not-so-social place.

After people avoided it because of the rumors, it is hardly surprising that the Quad hasn't been a social center. Some still find it hard to believe that we want to live there.

For Murphy, this is all irrelevant. But it matters very much to us that Murphy, because he was unhappy in the Berkshire Quad, intentionally created an undesirable situation for many by appealing to the bigotry of others. Murphy's behavior was that of a spoiled child, and it is a bad reflection on our college community that it worked well enough for Murphy to come back this year with a smug "I told you so." Selfish acts, like Murphy's Berkshire Quad slander, which insult and harm hundreds of others, should not be tolerated at Williams.

Clancy Bailey '89, Nicole Blamonte '89
Dawn Powers '89, Erika Elvander '89

Fairness

To the Editor:

I am a freshman representative on the College Council. In reply to the letter two weeks ago ("Equality?" by Matthew McQueen '89), I feel that there is a lot of fault in the arguments given on the minority representative's right to vote.

Minority students do not have anything close to a "greater voice in the government because of the color of their skin." We don't ask for a "greater" voice. But minority students do demand a voice and want you to know where they are coming from.

"In the first place," fairness to the students in the majority in this college has never been a problem. When it gets down to it, Matt, your rights have not

Continued on Page 3

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Virginia Demaree
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Eric Hanson, Joe Thorndike
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theordore
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Nik Khakee
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Rico T. Ewing, Andrew Mayer, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT FEATURES/ARTS ..... Corinna Lamb
LAYOUT ASSISTANT ..... Mary Iliff
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright
GRAPHICS ..... Penny Schenk
ADVERTISING ..... Martin Furey
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Interested in advertising?

Why not get a start at the Record.

The Record is looking for a few good people to manage our advertising department next year. The managers receive a commission on each ad and a small salary to help offset the slow weeks.

Drop a note in either S.U. Box 1652 or 1947 as soon as possible and we will get in touch with you.

A plea for compassion and an understanding of South Africa

by Dilip Nair '88

The bubble burst for me a week ago Monday, April 28. It was on the lawn of Baxter, in the afternoon. Various speakers were speaking on the South African question — some delivering planned speeches, others making more impromptu remarks. It was one of the latter kind, I think, that I overheard as I was passing by — remarks that made me stop in mid-step and made me reach for the mike myself to say what was welling up in my heart, clamouring to be said.

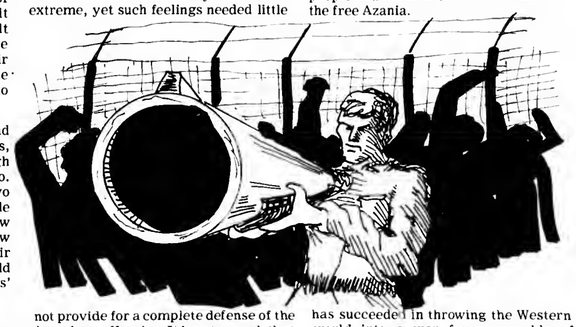
The speaker I had overheard, as well as the subsequent one, spoke of the only solution to the problem in South Africa that they saw — violence. The stood there, hands nonchalantly stuck in their jeans pockets, talking of how the best service America could render to the black nationalists was that of guns and grenades. They spoke of how the black man needed to be given, not money or food or moral support, but a "revolver and a compass." They talked of how the white man in South Africa did not deserve any pity when the crowds retaliated in reply to long years of bondage. And the crowd cheered.

I had lived in Southern Africa from when I was a year old till a year and a half ago. The last two years of this period I had spent in Gaborone, Botswana, a few miles from the South African border. The bitter, hate-filled rhetoric that slammed home at my heart took me back to all I had been distancing myself from since I had arrived here. (For I, like so many others whose hearts had forged bonds with that troubled land, had learned to laugh about it all — for if we did not we would cry ...)

I would like to share the images that flashed before me as I listened.

I remembered the children I knew who were South African. I remembered those who had died, cut down not only by police bullets but also by their frenzied countrymen. I remembered how friends who lived in Soweto, in shanties, had told, with tearful eyes and in simple language, of the loved ones they had lost. I saw again how their eyes would light up as they told of the majestic beauty of their land's mountains and valleys. I felt again the warmth in my soul I had felt with them as they talked of a land of the future — one where they and their children would be able to reap the harvests that the rich land offered up to them.

I saw too, the white Afrikaaners I had met — many arrogant and rough, yes, but I had met arrogant and rough Britons, Australians and Americans too. I remembered how the one or two Afrikaaners I got to know were simple people, with hearts too. They would now and again catch a glimpse of how narrow-minded and egocentric their view of the world was, but they would retreat into the security of their peoples' psyche.



They, too, I remembered, would tell with shining eyes, of work on the farm and of beautiful sunsets and magnificant wildlife. They too, had stories of woe to tell — young promising men lost in the prime of life, helpless babies caught in a mid-town bomb blast.

Then I thought of the angry young blacks I had met on their way to military training camps in Tanzania, Mozambique and East Germany. Young men who had given up university education to take up arms — people who spoke in menacing tones of blowing up white kindergardens ... I remember how there were also young white men, equally blinded with anger and hate who spoke of fighting even if it meant retreating into "laager" and fighting to the last man, woman and child, with only the ocean behind them.

There were not many of either extreme, yet such feelings needed little to make them flare into uncontrollable flames. I saw that rich and beautiful land with all its people — black and white, suffering as it had never suffered before, the ravages of war.

This was the same war that those speakers were calling for and for which the crowd was applauding. I ask you to stop and remember the things I remembered, every time you raise your voice to proclaim your solution to their problem. I ask you to consider that both black and white South Africans are South Africans and that they both share the same country. I suggest to you that this and any conflict can only begin to be resolved once we recognize that mankind has spent too long hating and fighting and that we have forgotten how we are all of one human race.

I lift up in my prayers to God, the people and the land of South Africa — of the free Azania.

Beyond ivy walls: frustration

by David Futterman '87

At the risk of casting the eyes of the Record beyond the ivy-covered walls of Williams, I would like to share some impressions, concerns and not a small amount of near-hysterical paranoia concerning the international events of the past week and offer a hopefully enlightened (although I'll settle for a quasi-European) assessment of the Libyan ordeal.

I awoke Tuesday last to the ring of our telephone and I cursed whomever it could be all the way to the living room for the unpardonable sin of awakening an IES London student before noon. "Can I come over and check out y'all's T.V.?" drawled Lawton Hawkins, fellow displaced Williams junior, "We blew up Libya last night."

Now, three days and countless newspapers later, I remain as dumbfounded as I was at the bleary-eyed moment when I first learned that the world had gone crazy. There's a certain stranded feeling that an American gets in Europe when the word is out that your country is at war with international terrorism.

Like when the Heathrow Airport bomber is caught at the next tube stop, or when Americans are warned to stay away from places like McDonalds, or when your parents call to say they've decided to cancel the trip to visit you that they have been planning for three months. And my isolation and anxiety are matched only by the dismay and outrage I feel upon discovering that in the States, people are falling all over themselves to line up behind Rambo Ronald Reagan.

That American opinion can be easily swayed by the President's bully-of-the-playground rhetoric is a frightening indication of what other half-cocked, over-powered schemes Reagan will be able to employ in his remaining year and a half.

It is true that something had to be done against terrorism. It is true further that Libya supports terrorism. Yet these two facts, which seem to compromise the administration's entire justification, do not provide for a complete defense of the American offensive. It is not enough that the U.S. has copper-bottomed proof of Libyan complicity in terrorism, though, I would ask, why was this proof not offered most recently when the U.S. asked Europe for economic sanctions against Libya and no one, not even Britain, would agree.

It is not enough to bloody Qaddafi's nose and establish the tit for tat. A country interested in, and tirelessly invoking, international law and moral standards must proceed whole-heartedly along the legal and moral lines of diplomacy.

The belief that the bombing will end terrorism requires a flight of imagination of which even the President remains incapable. What the action does instead is solidify support for the "martyr" Qaddafi and legitimize his grievances against an increasingly imperialist America.

Terrorism does not need an official state. It has existed and will continue to fester, with or without Qaddafi, in the streets of Beirut, Damascus and Belfast. Reagan knew this, and decided that he was prepared to trade the lives of innocent Libyans, Britains and Americans for his own myopic political games. He has succeeded in throwing the Western world into a war frenzy capable of drowning out the calls for peace which run contrary to Reagan's paranoid insular world view.

In a war alert, Congress is more likely to aid Reagan's toy terrorists in Nicaragua, and the Soviets will cancel the summit, thereby giving Reagan the excuse he was looking for not to sign an arms agreement that Russia seems prepared to accept after nearly forty years of American pressure.

We need to resist, at all times and with all the conviction we can muster, the belief that the current administration is telling the truth, or has the best interests of the American people at its cold, calculating heart. Only in this way can we extricate ourselves from the mire of destructive interventionism in which Reagan has immersed the country.

I fear the reprisals from Monday night's raid which have already begun, I fear the irrevocable precedent we have set, and I fear most of all the complacency with which Ronald Reagan's "God is on our side" militarism is swallowed by the American people. America has not safeguarded, it has hideously endangered the state of world peace.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

been affected at all; your voice on the campus carries the same import as it did before. In fact, by augmenting the strength of the input of minority students, which have contributed much to the variety of student life on this campus, this move can only serve to strengthen the College Council and the student community as a whole.

The minority representative voting issue does not represent a correction of a "past inequality"; it is a present concern. The assumption that the granting of a right, which should have been granted long ago, means a loss for "conservative W.A.S.P.('s)" is a sad and very loaded postulation.

"Secondly," after you argue that your rights have been infringed upon, you then argue that the "new system," — there is no new system — is unsatisfactory. And then you suggest that there is no need for more minority representatives, which, in following with your argument, would take even more rights away from you.

"Thirdly," your protagonists "Bob" and "Bill" would never have voted for "Joe" in the first place. No one who would make a statement such as the one you came up with would, it may be "neither unlikely nor unnatural" — which would just prove that such feelings do exist. Nothing would be added to, only outwardly expressed. The minority reps will add no racial seperatism to this campus; in your view, it would already exist to an extent.

"Lastly," a "significant racial problem"? Perhaps not at all, in most people's perceptions. But, "if many people feel that we do have a racial problem" then perhaps, just maybe, there is something to that claim. Those who will consistently deny that no examples of racist behavior exist and that there is a need for minority representation might just be part of the "problem."

In your letter, you said nothing to indicate that you think a minority representative is necessary, which shows that your perceptions of minority life at Williams are misconceived.

There is a definite need for minority representation in College Council, something that had been established long before you matriculated here. There are minority members on Council now who do have the right to vote. Presently there are two freshmen and two newly elected members. Although I do feel that we have and are capable of expressing the interests of minority students on campus, as well as those in the majority, we cannot hope to have as firm a grasp on issues and as established a position within the College Council and on campus as specifically chosen, full year minority reps.

Before you start hurling accusations of unfairness or inequity, you should make an effort to come to an open College Council meeting to affirm the validity of your claims. However, the College Council and I invite you and anyone else who challenges the minority representative right to vote, to attend meetings to witness what you have referred to as an encroachment on your rights.

You have put forth an argument with no tangible basis. You have not been to the meetings, you have put forth the impression that he minority representative system is a "new system," you contradict yourself — in short, you are neither sensitive to nor completely aware of the situation that you criticize.

That you are a conservative W.A.S.P. is not important, and I don't care to permanently pidgeonhole your character as you have done. I only hope that you would open your mind a bit, and give more thought to what you have said, in order that the voice that you still do and always will have on campus will be more effective.

Kevin Hinton '89

Respect

To the Editor:

Although I do feel that Howard Patlis has a point concerning the lack of the Record's coverage of student productions, I must express my disagreement with two other points made in his complaint letter of April 29.

First and foremost, I do not understand why there are those in the theatre who constantly demand equal time and attention which many of the athletes on this campus receive. Theatre and sports are two different arenas and both are acknowledged differently. Theatre is not our national pastime, and nothing the Williams press does is going to make theatre a necessary part of a student's social life, not even a third-rate review of a Cap and Bells production written by somebody with absolutely no understanding of the Theatre or any other artistic production.

Secondly, I cannot believe that Mr. Patlis does not recognize that generalizations are directed toward everyone heavily involved in any organization or team, and not just toward the theatre person. To make it an issue of theatre people being complete victims of others' generalizations is almost as bad as cer-

Continued on Page 5

NEWSBRIEFS

Wright grant

Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright has received a grant from the American Council of Learned Societies, under the auspices of a program which awards fellowships to recent recipients of Ph.D. degrees.

The grant will provide support for Wright's project to revise and develop her Ph.D. dissertation for publication. Her dissertation compares two versions of the 14th century narrative poem Piers Plowman, attributed to William Langland, in terms of focus, unity of purpose and artistic merit.

Wright, a medievalist and specialist in Middle English, has taught at Williams since 1983. She graduated from Ohio University in 1974 and received her Ph.D. from Indiana University in 1983.

Zinn lecture

Howard Zinn, professor of Political Science at Boston University and a civil rights activist, will speak on the "Uses of American History: Nonviolence and Social Change," tomorrow night at 7:30 in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

Zinn first became involved in the civil-rights movement when he taught history at Spelman College in Atlanta during the late 1950s and 1960s. He has written ten books on American political history, including Disobedience and Democracy: Nine Fallacies of Law and Order (1968), The Politics of History (1970) and A People's History of the United States (1980).

Zinn was awarded the Albert J. Beveridge Prize from the American Historical Association in 1958. A second lieutenant in the Air Force from 1943 to 1945, he went on to study history at Columbia University, where he received a master's degree in 1952, and a Ph.D. in 1958.

The lecture is sponsored by the Williams Coalition Against Militarism and the Disarmament Forum and is free and open to the public.

Wendy Brown

Assistant Professor of Political Science Wendy Brown has been awarded one of two Humanist-in-Residence Fellowships for the 1986-87 academic year from Rutgers University's Institute for Research on Women. The fellowships are sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation to allow scholars to pursue significant questions in women's studies and the humanities.

Brown's project, "Towards a Feminist Theory of the Modern State," will explore what she calls the masculinist dimensions of modern political power and the modern liberal state. She plans to examine traditional texts in political theory, as well as bureaucratic and legal discourses, and studies of selected Supreme Court cases. Through this she intends to study how the modern state is founded in and perpetuates male privilege and the depowerment of women.

Brown, who has taught at Williams since 1983, graduated from the University of California at Santa Cruz in 1977 and received her M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton in 1980 and 1983. She received an American Association of University Women Educational Foundation Fellowship in 1982 and a Ford Foundation grant on "Women and Gender in the Curriculum" in 1985.

Memorial service

A memorial service for Charles A. Foehl, Jr. will be held at 11:00 a.m. Saturday, at the First Congregational Church in Williamstown.

Foehl, who died March 20 at the age of 76, was member of the Williams College administration for 23 years, serving both as treasurer and as vice president for administration before retiring in 1973. Foehl graduated from Williams in 1932, after winning letters in both baseball and football. In 1965 he was awarded the Rogerson Cup, given annually to a Williams alumnus for "service, loyalty, and achievement."

The service will be conducted by the Rev. Robert Buckwalter, the minister of First Congregational Church.

CC approves WSD requests

by Harwell Wells

Thursday, the College Council approved 25-0-5 a version of a proposal from the Williams Students for Divestment calling for the use of an independent consulting group to advise a divestment committee and two extra faculty representatives on this project, to be agreeable to all parties involved.

The council also discussed the future of the Junior Advisor Selection Committee, and council President Amy Jeffress '87 described the council's attempt to influence the tenure process. She said she hopes the council can "find out who is up for tenure and print their names" at the beginning of the year, as well as try to pressure the Committee on Appointments and Promotions.

The council heard from representatives of Williams Students for Divestment (WSD), who originally asked the council to endorse the letter placed in student boxes Wednesday, which outlined four proposals for further study of divestment. In the final vote, the council approved a shortened version of the letter, amended to include results of WSD's negotiations with the administration.

WSD member Dominic Kulik '86 described the requests as an attempt to "bring economics into the moral-political discussion" of divestment. He reiterated the request for an independent economic consulting firm to study the overall divestment picture. He also specifically requested "extra-faculty representation to the ACSR acceptable to all parties."

Kulik said the extra members would help with the increased workload anticipated for the committee next year. He said the request was "only asking for a guarantee of faculty — black faculty in particular — to work with ACSR."

Council member Dave Kane '88 asked whether the WSD trusts the ACSR to study the issue. Kulik replied, "Quite frankly, (ACSR and Economics Department Chairman Stephen) Lewis is against divestment. I don't think it's unfair to ask for equal representation." Kulik also said, "We would like you to endorse the objectives of this resolution, not its structure,"

A written statement of what was to be voted on was then requested. Council member Susan Fine, an exchange from Smith, questioned the need for a written proposal, but was answered by Kane, who replied "(The Council) voted on the shanties and were told they were coming down by Monday. They didn't come down."

The Council also heard from JA President Jim Reicheld '87 and Vice President Deborah Gordon '87. They presented six proposals for revisions in the JA selection process, including decreasing the number of JAs on the committee, instituting group interviews for the applicants, ensuring a broad geographical distribution of former

Continued on Page 7

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

THE CLIP SHOP
S VISION BECOMES REALITY.
TRAVEL PACK
Contains Cello Shampoo, Sheen instant conditioner or Cellofix conditioner for permed hair, Wet - for the wet look or to add body to the hair, and Shprizt Forte — The Finishing Spray to hold your style or add texture to it. It's purse size, so you can take it with you where ever you go!
Keep it looking great even when you are on the go with the new Sebastian Travel Pack.
Receive $1.00 OFF with this card
Regularly $11.95 + tax
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER.

Leave your typewriter with us this summer. We will clean and store it and have it ready to go this fall.
McClelland's
36 Spring Street - - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

SENIOR LEADERS NEEDED for TEENAGE BICYCLE TRIPS
Applicants must be at least 21
Call or write:
Student Hosteling Program
Conway, MA 01341
(413) 369-4257

EPH of the MONTH

May's Eph of the month award goes to George Howard, the registrar. Howard retires this May after 21 years of service to the College. As a representative of all the Williams employees retiring this year, Howard receives a gift certificate to Goff's for his devotion to the College.

Presented by

GOFF'S SPORTS Spring Street Williamstown

Performers display skill in Original Suderburg music

by Paul Brainard

Visiting Professor of Music Robert Suderburg has made a lot of waves lately, having recently been both tenured and nominated for department chairman after only one year at Williams. He has also made quite an impact on the community with the music he has brought with him.

Thursday night Suderburg and a handful of guest musicians gave a concert of his works, including pieces with dates of composition ranging from 1962 to 1984. Although, strictly speaking, most of the music performed is no longer considered avant-garde, the program was highly modernistic and was as challenging for the audience as it was for the performers.

The first piece was a suite for trombone and piano titled Night Set. It recalls the nightlife of a jazz trombonist playing in clubs and bars. In the program notes, Suderburg recognizes his father, a jazz trombonist in the '30s and '40s to whom the work is dedicated, as the inspiration for his composition of the piece.

The first movement, "cry, man," sounds very much as its title suggests — wailing trombone lines over haunting piano accompaniment — but it does not readily evoke a picture of a jazz player. The second movement is more jazzy, but the third movement, "brother Devil," is the most intriguing part of the work. It is chaotic and disjointed, perhaps suggesting the frantic life of a jazz performer, and it uses a number of unusual vocal and instrumental techniques, such as the trombonist singing through the instrument and the pianist imitating the sound of the muted trombone. The movement reaches a chaotic climax before returning to the theme of the first movement.

Abstract fragments

The second piece was a widely-performed work aptly titled "Six Moments for Piano." It is a set of six very short (totalling just over three minutes) musical fragments, consisting of seemingly random notes and rhythms, with no apparent melodic relationship. However, each segment has a distinct character and texture, and they are all connected by an underlying sense of direction, however abstractly it manifests itself in the music.

"Ceremonies," a fanfare-like work for trumpet and piano, was probably the most conventional piece of the concert. Even so, it begins with the trumpet playing a series of variations on a short call directly into the open piano, with the strings vibrating, seemingly in sympathetic response. The result is a bright statement by the trumpet contrasted by a mysterious echo from the piano.

The fourth and most interesting work of the concert used an unusual combination of media to present a highly programmatic tribute to political figure Adlai Stevenson. It was commissioned by Dr. James Semans for the Duke University Bicentennial Tribute to Stevenson, and it uses the combination of voice, string quartet, prerecorded tape, and slides to present four periods of Stevenson's life: boyhood, campaign for governor of Illinois, first campaign for President, and ambassadorship to the United Nations. Each movement involves pictures from the period it represents, words from Stevenson's speeches and letters with taped applause, and a subtle but ever-present accompaniment by the string quartet.

Interactive presentation

Particularly interesting was the interaction of the various parts of the presentation, and the manner in which the strings were used to represent each period. While the singer recited the text, the strings played a disjointed accompaniment based on a simple rhythmic figure, changing into short melodic interludes between passages or using unusual sounds and techniques to emphasize certain points in the dialogue.

Composer Robert Suderburg of the music department.

The music in the movement chronicling the Presidential campaign used fragments of the Star Spangled Banner and other patriotic tunes, cast into new harmonies and rhythms, and the movement about Stevenson's childhood used light, playful melodies. The final movement, covering Stevenson's time in the United Nations, had a tragic sound which became peaceful near the end, producing a cathartic effect.

All of the works in the program were very challenging pieces to perform, and it was obvious from the high quality of the performance that much time had gone into preparing the concert, including a great deal of personal work with the composer to achieve the specific effects desired. Most notably, Maureen Horgan, trombone, and Paul Sundberg, trumpet, produced excellent playings of very demanding parts.

In general, Suderburg's music, while abstract, was very effective at communicating the ideas intended. Some people would say that Suderburg has gone beyond the boundaries of musicality in his works, and others might say that a higher level of musical education is necessary to appreciate his music, but it is not really a matter of musicianship as much as an understanding of pure expression which is needed to appreciate musical excursions such as those undertaken by Professor Suderberg.

in other IVORY TOWERS

Wesleyan

Last month, as a means of protesting Wesleyan's policies on South African investment, students protestors successfully blockaded the entrance of Russell House, where a meeting of the school's trustees was to have taken place. The meeting, however, was moved to Downey House.

While the meeting began at Downey, approximately 150 students marched down the street from Russell House, chanting "We will not bow to racism" and "Corporate U. has got to go." They surrounded the meeting at Downey and used old kegs, empty bottles, sticks, and many other objects to create a barrier.

North Adams State

North Adams State College recently dedicated its Halley's Comet time capsule in a ceremony attended by College President Catherine Tisinger, Mayor John Barrett and several student leaders.

"The capsule dedication is to pay homage to the passage of Halley's Comet as it moves away from the earth," said President Tisinger.

The capsule will be sealed after graduation and encased in the outside wall of Eldrige Hall for the class of 2061 to open in 75 years. The memorabilia contained in the capsule includes issues of local newspapers, fraternity and sorority articles, a local newspaper review of Macbeth, a cassette tape of the top 10 songs from WJJW, a We Are the World lip-synch video, a 1986 yearbook, and a recorded tape of the ceremony's invited guests reading letters addressed to the NASC class of 2061.

Student Government President James Doran and Vice President Robert Hoffman predicted that by the time the capsule is opened the school will be called the University of North Adams, that there will be co-ed residence halls and married student housing, and also that there will be a bachelor's degree program which can be completed in two years.

Amherst

The Amherst College switchboard received a call from a man who claimed he had planted a bomb in Pratt dormitory late in the evening on April 16.

According to Amherst Chief of Security William Dion, the "usual steps" were taken in response to the bomb threat. The dormitory was immediately evacuated and thoroughly searched by Amherst security and town and police officials.

No explosives were found, however, and at 12:30 a.m. the students were allowed to return to their rooms.

Franklin and Marshall

The Board of Trustees at this Lancaster, Pennsylvania college unanimously endorsed President James Powell's "Strategic Long Range Plan" which calls for a reduction in enrollment due to a declining pool of college-bound high school students.

Enrollment will be cut from the current 1,850 students to 1,650 students by 1991. The projected enrollment for the incoming freshman class has been set at 510 students, instead of 540 as it has been for many years.

Dean of the College Bradley Dewey said that the plan should definitely improve one area, namely "student access to the curriculum."

Hamilton

After students built a third anti-apartheid shanty on this rural New York campus, Hamilton College President J. Martin Carovano ordered the removal of all the structures. Workers successfully razed the first two shanties, but student protestors prevented college workers from removing the third. The last shanty was constructed around a statue of Alexander Hamilton, the college's namesake. (Daily News bureau and wire service reports)

Duke

The Duke University board of trustees voted last Saturday to divest from all companies doing business in South Africa if that nation's apartheid system is not removed by January. If conditions at that time have not changed, the trustees' decision could affect $12.5 million in stocks and bank deposits.

The decision follows an earlier vote by the board to divest $36 million invested in companies that would not subscribe to a set of guidlines that require employers to desegregate their South African facilities and institute non-discriminatory hiring practices. (New York Times)

In Other Ivory Towers, written by Record reporter Doug Phillips, was compiled from various campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

WCFM Top Ten

1. Joe Jackson .... Wild West
2. Bourgeois Tagg ..... Mutual Surrender
3. The Call ..... I Still Believe
4. The Pogues ..... The Sick Bed
5. Laurie Anderson ..... Language is a Virus
6. Peter Gabriel ..... Sledgehammer
7. Book of Love .... Late Show
8. The Costello Show ..... Brilliant Mistake
9. INXS ..... Listen Like Thieves (Live)
10. Fingerpaint ..... Stay

Letters

Continued from Page 3

tain organizations using the Anti-apartheid movement to advertise their own opinions and gripes.

Mr. Patlis is missing the point and the point is: respect. All anyone in the theatre wants and deserves is respect for all the time, energy, and work put into each production, just as any athlete deserves respect for his or her dedication to a sport.

Jonathan Moscone '86

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight at 8:00, there will be a performance of "Raku," a new play be Gordon Leeds '86; the show will be presented in the basement of Greylock dining hall and will be repeated on Wednesday.....Also at 8:00 tonight, there will be a cello recital by Douglas Moore and Susan Rozow in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall; assisted by Edwin Lawrence, piano, and Jennifer Sills '87, cello, the performers will present works by Mozart, Breval, Klengel, Popper, and Menotti.....At 12:30 p.m. tomorrow afternoon, the fifth in a series of seven ArtBreaks at the Clark Art Institute will be presented by Alexandra Murphy; entitled "Realism and Early Impressionism," the talk will be repeated Sunday afternoon at 2:30.....Thursday afternoon at 4:00, sculptor and performance artist David Hammons will be discussing his own work in Room 231 of Lawrence Hall.....The Williams Octet will appear in concert on Friday night at 8:00 in Chapin Hall with Vassar's "Measure for Measure," and the Middlebury "Mischords"; admission will be charged.....At 3 p.m. on Saturday, Amy Champagne '87 will give a recital including works by Bach, Scarlatti, Chopin, Ravel, and Ginastera; the performance will take place in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.....The Ron Carter Quartet will present a jazz concert in Chapin Hall at 8:00 on Friday night.....At the same time on Saturday, folk singer and banjo player Bill Crofut will give a concert entitled "American Myth, Legend, and Dream in Song" at the Clark Art Institute; admission is $4 general, $3 for members, and $2.50 for students.....A third performance on Saturday night at 8:00 will feature original works by Karl Pribram '86; eight performers will be involved in the joint music/theatre presentation; the show will take place in the Thompson Memorial Chapel.....For more music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146.

CUL

Continued from Page 1

Biemiller agreed that deciding who student CUL members represent can be difficult. "While you listen to what everyone says, you have to vote with the information you know," she said.

Lack of meetings

While some students point to the lack of weekly meetings this year as a weakness of the CUL, Darrow maintained, "It is not an atypical pattern for us to meet less frequently in the spring."

Bell added, "There is a real scheduling problem on the committee," citing the 4:00 p.m. student athletic practice time and the difficulty for faculty members to meet at night as hindrances to scheduling.

Stephen Shapiro '86, who has served on the CUL for two years, said, "Oftentimes the Committee has dealt with things which I felt had less relevance than more pressing issues." He offered the issue of minority life at Williams as an example. Shapiro contends that he raised the issue at the beginning of the year, but that it was tabled until now. "I feel the Committee has been ineffective as a result of little opportunity for student input into the agenda," he said.

Other members of the CUL, including Amy Jeffress '87, suggested that blame for the CUL's ineffectiveness could also rest on the shoulders of Bell. "There wasn't any real leadership on the committee as far as putting important items on the agenda is concerned. I think that a student co-chair could alleviate this problem," Jeffress said.

Setting agenda

Explaining the agenda-setting process, Darrow said, "The consensus of the Committee sets the agenda. The Chairman acts as a traffic cop. He schedules issues as they come up to make best use of Committee time." Jeffress, who has sat on the CUL for the past two years, said, "No students really took much initiative this year, (but) since all of the agenda items seemed to come from the administration, it didn't seem to be a very receptive environment."

Jeffress continued, "I'd like to see a student co-chair. I think that students are dedicated to the committee, but that they don't see the potential for their role in setting agenda. If there were a co-chair, students would be more willing to take initiative."

This year the CUL has discussed party policy, the Log, disciplinary procedures and housing questions. The Committee met this afternoon to discuss a proposed change in the transfer affiliation system. Also at today's meeting, Assistant Dean of the College Roberto Ifill joined the committee for a discussion of minority life at Williams.

M. Lax

Continued from Page 10

The Jeffs hit the pipe but were denied the goal seven times in the game. Still, Lamb applauded his players. "We had a good game plan and the kids executed it," he said. "You have to give them the credit. It's a sweet win down there."

The Ephs played one more game last week, a 12-9 loss at Middlebury on Wednesday. Behind by only 8-7 late in the game, the Ephs "lost control of the game," according to Lamb, giving up four quick goals in a quick Panther spurt.

With a 6-3 record, the squad must now wait and see if they qualify for the ECAC postseason playoffs, an assignment that Lamb sees as doubtful.

Brzezinski

Continued from Page 1

association with Democratic Party politics, including winning the nomination as the 1958 Democratic candidate for Congress from the Massachusetts First District.

Burns is probably best known for his biographies of Franklin D. Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy.

Burns has been active in civil liberties, civil rights and labor organizations, and in the 1950s headed the Berkshire County Commission Against Discrimination. Currently, with Richard B. Morris, Burns is co-chairman of Project 87, a program to encourage a serious commemoration of the drafting of the Constitution, sponsored by the American Historical Association and the American Political Science Association.

Burns will retire from teaching at the end of this academic year.

Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank

HEADING FOR EUROPE THIS SUMMER?

Jet there anytime for only $160 with AIRHITCH® (as reported in Consumer Reports, NY Times, Newsday, Harvard's "Let's Go" Student Travel Guide Series, Good Housekeeping, and on national network morning shows). For details, call 212-864-2000 or write:

2901 Broadway, Suite 100A, NY, NY 10025.

Camp Counselors

Top Camp, Berkshire Mts, Mass.

seeks top people over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Tennis, Football, Weight-training, Waterskiing, Swimming, Lacrosse, Sailing, Camp Radio Station, Camp Newspaper, Computer Programming, Video, Theatre Arts, Ceramics, Photography, Pianist. Good salary plus room, board, laundry.
Write Winter office: M. Moss, Lenox 270-14R Grand Central Pkwy, Floral Park, NY 11005

EST. 1901 Williams Co-op
the Co-op
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Rackel Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

YOU HAVE UNTIL FRIDAY...
To Enter The RECORD'S Restaurant Raffle!
The contest is open to ALL members of the college community: (yes, even Professors & College or Food Service Employees!) Clip the Coupons & Submit:
• $1.00 with any one coupon
• $3.00 with any four coupons
(Cheaper than the Megabucks & your chances are better!)
Seal the coupons and money in an envelope and put it in the mail addressed to us. The Mailroom has a special box in the back for us. Contest closed to Record Editorial Board. The Record's Determination of winners is final. Separate drawings will be held for each Restaurant, so in theory . . . you could win them all. Go For It.
Win Dinner For Two!!
Over $300 In Prizes!!

Le Jardin RESTAURANT and INN WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
Win Brunch for Two.
Serving Dinners from 5-9 and 5-10 on Saturday.
Sunday Brunch 10:30-1:30
Phone 458-8032
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Le Jardin (Brunch for Two) 5/6/86

JB's Restaurant 159 Water Street, Williamstown. 458-9825 Recently restored — mid 1800's Plank House. Unique Ambiance with wall displays of old tools and stained glass paintings at the windows. Serving lunch and dinner 11:30-8:30 featuring vegetarian dishes and sweedish specialties plus daily special of non-veg. and veg. fully licenses, Reservations Accepted.
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
JB's (Free Dinner For Two) 5/6/86

Council

Continued from Page 4

and current JAs on the committee, and instituting a pre-application orientation.

The Council approved 24-0-6 three of the proposals and delayed a decision on the other three until the council's meeting next week. Approved were 1) a proposal giving the presidents and vice presidents of the JAs and the council veto power over selection of committee members; 2) a proposal stating that, of the senior ex-JAs, two should be from entries from the Berkshire Quad and two from Morgan; and 3) a proposal installing a mandatory pre-application orientation during Winter Study.

No decision was reached on how many members of the committee should be ex-JAs or on the group interviews. Hans Humes '87 said "One of the biggest problems is that JAs tend to perpetuate themselves." Describing the number of former JAs on the committee, Humes said "I think it could be cut down a lot ... what about a GLU member of the committee?"

Reichold replied, "I feel very strongly that with 160 applicants you need 12 JAs on the committee." Jeffress said Dean of Freshmen Robert Kavanaugh had conveyed to her his belief that there could be less than 12 JAs on the committee.

Asked about the concept of a minority representative on the Committee, Reichold said that he had "talked with several people about minority representatives and, frankly, the sentiment was that it would turn into a token spot."

Shanties

Continued from Page 1

Review for debate on divestment.

No committee

Oakley did not agree to the creation of an ad hoc committee to investigate divestment and its financial impact on the College, maintaining in a letter to the Williams community on Friday that the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility fulfills those functions.

The WSD held two rallies, one last Monday and one Saturday, as part of its demonstrations. Assistant Professor of Political Science Robert Stiglitz, speaking on Monday, said opposing divestment and remain politically neutral is hypocritical. "Maintaining investments in companies that do business in South Africa by using the endowment is in itself a political statement," he said.

Oakley, responding at a later date, disagreed with this statement claiming that it demonstrates, "A lack of willingness to admit the importance of intention in moral or political acts." He added, "If you're talking about moral, political things, you have to look at the intentions involved."

Oakley explained that when the College invests in a company, it does so for financial reasons. The reasons for which the College is being urged to divest, however, are political.

'Continue fight'

At the rally on Saturday, students were encouraged to continue the fight for divestment after the shanties were taken down. Assistant Professor of Political Science Wendy Brown said that in a struggle to change the world, it is necessary to balance "a sense of absolute urgency" with "a willingness to spend your whole life getting there." Brown suggested that another way to encourage divestment is by urging alumni not to contribute any more money until the College divests.

The College said in its statement about the decision to take down the shanties that it is glad that WSD conducted the protest peacefully. WSD donated the wood used to build the shanties to the Western Massachusetts Labor Action for distribution in the Berkshire community.

Sexism

Continued from Page 1

finds the objectification of women's bodies oppressive, yet prevalent at Williams.

According to Matthes, there is a lack of a strong sense of community among Williams women. She said it seems that women at Williams are in competition. "We all hurt in our own way, yet we forget we're all hurting," she said.

Lennon is concerned about the danger inherent in categorizing and stereotyping others. He said, "Groups with power define other groups in sexist ways. We tend to think of others in terms of these definitions."

Clarke said, "People don't allow discourse on a subject." She cited the controversy last fall concerning the Williams student phone-book cover, referring to the angry comments and editorials, but lack of discussion. According to Clarke, the issue should have served as a starting point for open dialogue.

Clarke and Covington both mentioned the problems of inter-racial dating encountered by many black women and said that Williams values tend to be white, male and upper-middle class.

According to Jeffress, the topics planned for discussion included bitter reactions to women's editorials in The Record, the monopolization of most class discussions by male voices, female-male ratios in the faculty and student body, rape and sexual harassment on campus, the differences in attitude and funding for women's and men's sports, and sexist magazines and posters found in men's rooms on campus.

WILLIAMSTOWN
CAPTAIN'S TABLE
The Lobster House
Of The Berkshires
Cold Spring Road, Route 2-7 Williamstown, Ma. 01267
(413) 458-5645
(413) 458-5124
Lobsters . . . and so much more!
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Captain's Table ($30 - Gift Certificate) 5/6/86

THE FREIGHT YARD PUB
"Affordable dining in an unsurpassed setting!"
LOCATED IN WESTERN GATEWAY HERITAGE STATE PARK
Rte. 8, Downtown North Adams. 663-6547
Open 7 Days 11:30 a.m.-1 a.m.
Live Entertainment and Late-Night Fare
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Freight Yard Pub (Dinner for Two) 5/6/86

Capers
If you haven't been to Capers lately, take the time.
New Menu . . . New Format
Entertainment Friday, Saturday night
412 Main St., Williamstown 458-9180
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
Capers (Free Dinner For Two) 5/6/86

THE RIVER HOUSE RESTAURANT
123 Water Street
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
River House (Free Dinner For Two) 5/6/86

1896 HOUSE
Specializing in Novelle American Cuisine. Outdoor Patio Luncheon opening May 8th. Open for dinner: Monday-Saturday 5:00 'till 9:30 Friday and Saturday until 10:00 p.m. lunch starting at 11:30 ending at 2:30 (458-8123) One short mile south on Route 7, Williamstown.
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Telephone:
Contest open only to the college community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper.
1896 House (Free Dinner For Two) 5/6/86

It's happening . . .
In our Tavern Lounge for a limited time only
JIM BAYLISS singer/guitarist
Friday evenings
WALT LEHMANN BAND
Saturday evenings
Sunday Brunch
11 a.m. - 2 p.m.
A delicious way to relax!
The Williams Inn
On the Village Green
Junction Routes 2 & 7
Williamstown, MA 01267
Reservations Tel (413) 458-9371
Record Restaurant Sweeps
Name:
Address:
Phone:
Contest open only to the College Community
Contest Rules posted near front of paper
Williams Inn (Dinner For Two) 5/6/86

Last chance to get one with your parents' money.

Now that you've made it through college, ask your parents for a graduation present to help you get through life.

A Macintosh™ personal computer.

If you're headed off into the business world, we highly recommend our new Macintosh Plus.

Between its one megabyte of RAM, 128K of ROM and double-sided 800K internal disk drive, it lets you put all the power of a corner office on a single corner of your desk.

If your parents buy the idea of a Macintosh, but feel like maybe they've donated enough to your future the past four years, there's always our newly enhanced Macintosh 512K with its added 800K internal disk drive and 128K of ROM.

It's considerably more affordable, yet still has enough power to run hundreds of leading software programs. Besides, you can always upgrade your Macintosh 512K up to a Macintosh Plus later.

Of course, with either Macintosh, you get our advanced point-and-click mouse technology that makes using them easier than passing Pinball Theory 101. So you can immediately be productive, without taking a course in remedial computing.

To learn more, visit your campus microcomputer center.

Soon.

Because once you're out of school, you're out of luck.

Macintosh Plus Macintosh 512K

© 1986 Apple Computer Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. Macintosh is a trademark of McIntosh Laboratory, Inc. and is being used with its express permission. For an authorized Apple dealer near you call (800) 538-9696 In Canada call (800) 268-7796 or (800) 268-7637

For more information contact the Computer Center at Jesup Hall.

Sports Shorts

Track

The track team, led by junior Becky Conklin and senior John Ellison, competed in a meet at WPI on Saturday, turning in several excellent times and prepping themselves for next weekends New England and ECAC championships.

Conklin turned in the top performances for the women, most noticeably her time of 10:30.7 in the 3000m, which set a new school record. The distance relay squad also won, providing another victory for the Ephwomen.

Sophomore Sarah Pierce placed second in the same 3000m with a time of 10:50.8, while freshman Susan Northen took a second place in the long jump, leaping 15'6".

On the men's side, Ellison clearly stole the show, winning the 3000m steeplechase with a 9:05.9, qualifying him for the NCAA Division III Championships later this month. His time was also a school record.

Ellison was joined in the winners circle by sophomore Henry Jones, who won the long jump with a leap of 21'5". Jones also placed third in the triple jump, flying 42'6". Both relay squads took victories to complete the list of Eph winners.

Crew

On a cold and windy Saturday at Lake Waramaug, the crew teams rowed in their last race before the Dad Vail regatta in Philadelphia this weekend.

While none of the women's boats emerged victorious, several placed high in their respective races. The varsity lightweights and the JV squad rowed in the same race against Trinity and Ithaca. In a strong headwind and choppy conditions. The JV finished third while the lightweights were fourth.

In the afternoon, rough water caused delays in many races. The varsity women, after starting several times, placed second to Trinity in their race.

The men experienced the same problems with the rough weather. This especially affected the varsity heavyweight four; their race was cancelled due to the conditions.

Four other men's boats were able to race, however. The varsity lightweights took second place behind Trinity in their race, while the varsity lightweight fours also took second.

The freshman lightweight boat rowed an exciting race, finishing second by only several feet to Trinity. The freshman heavyweights then finished out the competition by taking third.

Golf

After an impressive second place finish in the New England Championships earlier in the week, the golf team capped a very successful week last weekend with a first-place finish in the NESCAC tournament in Middlebury, Vermont.

In both tournaments, the Ephs were led by the play of freshman Tim Frechette, who earned medalist honors as the top Division III finisher in the New Englands and then added to his trophy case by winning the NESCAC's.

The New Englands pitted Williams against 25 other Division III schools, as they played fantastic golf to place 634 in the two day tournament. Overall, the Ephs placed seventh among all schools.

Frechette turned in two great performances on his way to a total score of 150, including rounds of 78 and 72. The Ephs also received solid golf from junior Bob Sullivan, who notched a total score of 166. The three other Eph entrants, junior Tim McKone, Charles Foehl, and Don Dagnoli, shot in the mid-160's.

In action at the NESCAC tournament, the Williams team turned in a solid effort to capture the championship laurels. The team registered a tournament low-score of 634, which easily outdistanced their closest rival, the Lord Jeffs of Amherst.

Frechette, McKone, and Foehl led the Ephs with scores of 155, 157, and 159, respectively, to earn individual first, third, and fourth place honors. Sullivan and Dagnoli turned in performances of 166 and 173.

The 6-2 Ephs host the Little Three championships tomorrow at the Taconic Golf Course.

— Rick Orluk

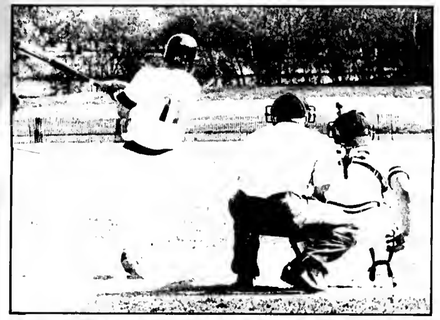
Tennis

Losing their first two singles matches before coming back to win the last seven contests, the tennis team defeated the Wesleyan Cardinals on Saturday by a 7-2 score.



Wesleyan's Ralph Sevarese took three sets to down top Eph player Chris Clarey '86, while Guy Cohen surpassed Eph captain Tim Peterson '86 by 6-1, 7-6. At number three, sophomore Hoyt Ludington broke the streak, breezing by Steve Cadigan 6-1, 6-4, while number four Robbie Hallagan '88 defeated Rich Bruce 7-5, 6-3.

The final two singles players each won in straight sets to wrap up the victory. Sophomore Stephan Kargere took two tiebreakers to win, while classmate Pier Friend lost only five games.

The three doubles teams each won in fine style to wrap up the victory. Clarey and Peterson avenged their singles losses with a 6-2, 7-5 victory. Hallagan and senior Tom Goodspeed, playing second doubles, picked up an easy 6-3, 6-1 win. The third doubles pairing of Ludington and freshman Drew Sawyer cashed in with a 6-4, 6-4 win.

The win evens the Ephs' record at 4-4. They will try to enter the win column Thursday when they travel to Union before entertaining MIT on Saturday.

— Mark Via

Senior tri-captain Dick Hollington raps one up the middle in the baseball team's 8-3 win over AIC last Monday at Weston Field.

Baseball

Continued from Page 10

ble dispatching with their opponents as the club jumped out to a 7-2 lead behind Mulder's pitching and a first-inning homer by leftfielder Jim Duquette '88. Amherst came back with six unanswered runs in the seventh and eighth, taking a one run lead. In the bottom of the inning, Belsito lined a 1-2 pitch into right center, bringing in shortstop Lewis Collins '88 with the tying run.

Next up was catcher John Shaw '87, who produced his third game-winning RBI in three weeks, when he grounded a fielder's choice shot at the third baseman, who chose to try for the double play. Unfortunately for the Lord Jeffs, their second baseman threw wildly to first base, allowing Chris Pachus '88 to score with the winning run. Muider (4-0) retired the Jeffs in the ninth to end the exciting contest.

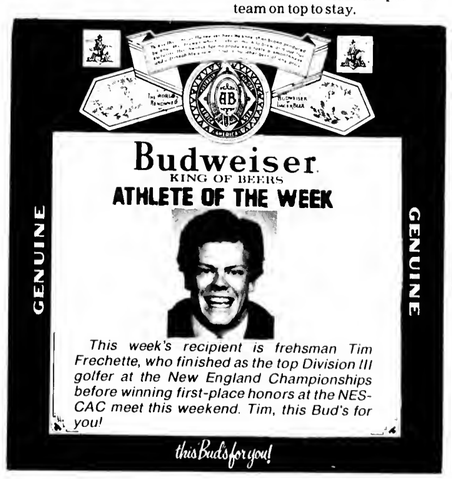
The Ephs earlier had beaten AIC 8-3 and Middlebury 19-14. Staff ace Kevin Morris '86 picked up his sixth win against AIC on a five-hitter as Hedeman ripped out three hits. The slugfest against Middlebury earned Mike Barbera '89 his first collegiate win in relief.

This week the Ephs play at North Adams today and at Union on Thursday. Saturday, the Ephs will host Wesleyan in a doubleheader as they conclude their Little Three schedule.

Rugby

Continued from Page 10

The Ephs started slowly and trailed Amherst by 3-0 at the half. The second half, however, was all Williams.



The Ephs pushed the ball deep into Cardinal territory, with Mike Goldstein '88 pushing the ball into the try zone. Williams kept the pressure up, and scored their second try off a penalty play, as scrum-half Kurt Oeler '88 passed to junior Jon Stanley, who gave it to Evan Zahner '87, who bowled over four defenders on his way to a try. The third try was a linie effort, as strong tackling by Erik Valdes '87 led to a Cardinal turnover, and Charlie Lazor '87 took the ball in.

In their second game, the B-side managed to hold off Wesleyan 10-6. The Ephs took the early lead when senior Greg Norton fed sophomore Rob Rau for the score. Later in the half, a Wesleyan player slithered through several tacklers on his way to a 50-meter run to tie the score. But Williams came right back, and Goldstein put the team on top to stay.

The C-side scored the most satisfying victory of the day, giving Amherst a 38-0 lesson in rugby. The highlight of the game was prop Sean Cook '88 setting a Williams scrummy record with four tries. The line played its finest game of the season; standoff Jeff Sher '86 led the line to five tries, dishing to Mike Sullivan '88, Austin Kelly '88, George Tolley '88, Chris Michaels '89, and Dan Shore '87 for seores.

The final game of the day was a showcase for the future of the club, as a freshman and sophomore-dominated squad defeated Wesleyan 20-0. Great play by freshman hook Charles Benedict and scrum half Joe Mannix '89 led to two easy tries for junior Mike Copeland and another for junior Dave Tager.

Strong running in the second half led to two tries as Mike Shelby '88 took one in and Mark LeNuguy '89 seored another off a penalty.

Columbia University
Graduate School of Architecture+Planning

The Shape of Two Cities: New York/Paris

Special Undergraduate Program A junior year introduction to architecture, urban planning, and historic preservation for students who have completed their sophomore year at an accredited college or university. Students spend the fall semester in New York at the Graduate School of Architecture and Planning and the spring semester in Paris at Reid Hall, Columbia's academic complex in the Montparnasse district.

Application forms and additional information may be obtained from:

Dean of Admissions
Graduate School of Architecture and Planning
400 Avery Hall
Columbia University
New York, New York 10027
(212) 280-3510

Stickmen win Little Three by nipping Amherst in OT

Senior co-captain Chris Toll fired in a shot off an assist from Mike O'Connell '87 at 1:10 of overtime to give the men's lacrosse team a 6-5 victory over the Amherst Lord Jeffs on Saturday, bringing the squad its first Little Three title since 1980.

"We played with high intensity this game," noted coach Renzie Lamb. He also pointed out the excellent play of his senior co-captain, goalie Brad DuPont, who made 20 saves in his final Little Three contest. "Brad had a great game in the goal."

Freshman Doug Gilbert led the Eph scoring parade with three goals. O'Connell added to his team-leading totals with a goal and an assist, while sophomore John Edie contributed a pair of assists. Toll came through with the game-winner in overtime, while junior Steve Patterson and Jamey Gallup had one goal and one assist each.

"We really controlled the ball in this game," said Lamb. "Gilbert made some very key goals. And our defense didn't give them a lot of time to set up."

The contest was tied 2-2 at the half, and then the Ephs went up 3-2 with one quarter to go. But belying the low-scoring nature of most of the game, the Jeffs came up with three goals in that fourth period. Only two clutch goals from Gilbert saved the day for Williams.

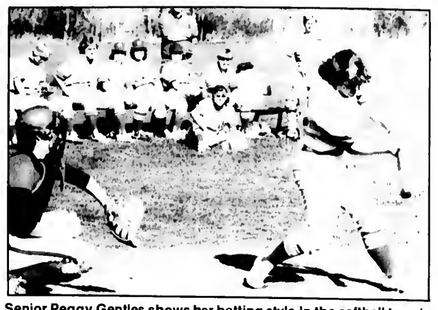
Amherst ties it up

With only 28 seconds to go, Williams held a 5-4 lead and appeared to be in charge. But the Ephs were called for a penalty and Amherst converted, putting in an extra-man goal to send the game into overtime. After the Jeffs won the faceoff, the Ephs got the ball back and wasted no time getting it to O'Connell, who fed Toll for the winning score.

"For the first time all year we were a little lucky," said Lamb.

Continued on Page 6

Softballers split with Wesleyan



by Michele Barry

The women's softball team ran their record to 5-3 and captured the Little Three title for the third consecutive year after splitting a doubleheader with Wesleyan on Saturday.

After beating Amherst 11-6 in the first leg of the Little Three battle, the Ephwomen traveled to Weslayan for the final battle on Saturday. In the second inning of the opener, Williams put the game out of reach by scoring eight runs. They continued to pour it on, finishing with a 20-2 victory.

The Ephwomen rapped out a record twenty hits; the powerful Williams batting was lead by Nancy Hedeman '89, Kathy Oehling '87, and co-captains Tori Ballard '87 and Peggy Gentles '86, all of whom had three hits.

After securing the Little Three title in the first game, Williams went on to lose the second game in extra innings by a score of 9-8. Although the Ephwomen had thirteen hits to Wesleyan's six, they left a lot of runners on base. The seventh inning saw both teams tied at 8-8. Wesleyan scored the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning on a sacrifice fly to center field.

Senior Peggy Gentles shows her batting style in the softball team's game with RPI last week.

Earlier in the week, Williams won 11-6 in a tough game against RPI. In the second inning, Williams scored nine unearned runs on walks and passed balls to take the lead. Hedeman pitched a six hitter, but the Ephs had only four hits in the game. Williams fielded well, however, and kept the lead secure to win the game.

The Lady Ephs played their final home game today against North Adams.

Rugby takes 5 of 6 at Little Three

The Williams Rugby Football Club traveled to Wesleyan on Saturday for the annual Little Three tournament. The end of the day found the club with five out of six victories, including a clean sweep of archrival Amherst. The A-side split its games, beating Amherst 27-9 but losing to Wesleyan 7-6, while both the B and C-sides swept to Little Three titles.

The day began with the A-side's destruction of Amherst. The Lord Jeffs never had a chance, as the Ephs romped all over the field at will. The scoring began early with aggressive play led by captain Paul Hogan '86 and classmate Pete Alken, resulting in a try for scrum-half Greg Bronson '86. The line, not wanting to be outdone, soon got in on the fun.

The ball came out of the scrum to Craig Kirby '86, who dished to line captain Ed O'Toole '86, who ran a perfect switch with junior Mark Tompkins, letting Tompkins scamper in with the second try.

The Ephs salted the game away in the second half with its third try. John Fetterolf '86 tore the ball out of a pile and spun away, running 30 yards before passing to senior Tim Faselt for the score.

Andy Harris '88 prepares to hit an opposing rugger in earlier action. The A-side split two games at the Little Three championships this week while the B and C-sides swept. (Khakee)

In the Wesleyan game, the white dogs fell to a well-rested home team by a 7-6 score. The Cardinals scored a fluke try on a broken play early in the game, and the Ephs could not come back.

The Williams line kept Wesleyan under control, but the only offense mustered was two penalty kicks by senior Roger Merriam.

The B-side had no such trouble, as it thoroughly dominated both contests, to win its second consecutive Little Three crown.

Continued on Page 9

Lady Ephs cradle title

Winning their second Little Three title in a row, the women's lacrosse team nipped Amherst 8-7 in overtime on Saturday to take the championship. Sophomores Beth Bernheimer and Mara Burnett scored in the six-minute overtime period to insure the victory.

As has been the case most of the year, senior co-captains Laura Rogers and Carrie Cento led the Williams scoring. Rogers collected three goals while Cento had two. Bernheimer and Burnett each added an assist to go with their overtime goals, while junior Lee Briggs had a goal and an assist and sophomore Lisa Tenerowicz tallied one assist.

"It was a great game," said coach Chris Larson-Mason. "Amherst has been a good team this year; they beat Trinity last week."

The first half started with the teams trading goals, none able to take more than an one-goal lead. At the half, Amherst was leading 3-2, but then came out in the second half to take a 6-4 lead late in the game. The Ephwomen had to find a way to get the game into overtime, and they did just that, as Briggs and Cento scored late in the contest to square the count at six and force the extra period.

In the overtime, the Ephwomen came out smoking, as Burnett and Bernheimer scored within a three-minute stretch to put the game away.

"We showed good movement and good control, as well as patience on offense and toughness on defense," said Larson-Mason. "We really controlled the ground balls."

The win set the Williams record at 6-3 with only one game remaining, a home contest with Union tomorrow.

Amherst falls to Lady Ruggers

by Anne Schmutz

Victory over Amherst proved to be a profitable as it was satisfying for the Williams women's rugby football club on Saturday, as they defeated their archrivals by 4-0, winning well-deserved game shirts.

Although the final score was only 4-0, Williams dominated the A-side game. The speed and intensity of freshman sensation Kerry Kilander at scrum-half set the quick pace of the game. The line, headed by senior Becky Halle in her last Amherst game and anchored by junior Suzanne Blemiller and Ann-Marie Plankey, ran circles around their opponents, but it was the strength of the scrum that won the game.

The game's only try was scored after an amazing defensive kick by fullback Mary Peterson '87, a strong scrum drive, and a final lunge by Annie Cordova '88, Kerry Cullen '87, and Noreen Harrington '88. Amherst was also outjumped on lineouts by sophomores Jody Skidd and Sonja Lengnick.

The Killer B's demolished Amherst by a score of 16-0. The first try proved that Williams' experience and kowledge of the game was superior to Amherst's. After a great line run and a short scrum drive, scrum-half Janet Mansfield '88 scored from three feet out on a penalty play before Amherst had time to set up.

Jean Janson '88 scored the first try of her career, with the help of junior lock Carol Smallwood. Beth Schaeffer 'Ex secured the victory as she proved she has some great moves, as she scored eight points on breakaways. Amherst was held scoreless by the strong tackles of Jane Amidon '88, anne Petersen '89, and Chris Koniezhny '86.

The C-side game ended in a 4-4 tie despite a stellar effort by Donna MacDonald '87, who scored two trys, one of which was nullified. Many of the Ephwomen were playing their first collegiate rugby game, and showed a great deal of potential. Kelly Russell '89, Corinna Lamb '88 and Liz Peay '86 played with the aggressiveness that kept Amherst from scoring more.

Next weekend Williams hosts the annual Ball of Inverness tournament against Middlebury and Dartmouth.

Baseball loses 2 of 3 to Jeffs

by Al Mottur
and Stewart Verdery

Only one out from winning the weekend series from Amherst, the baseball team saw the Lord Jeffs deliver two clutch hits to snatch victory from the Ephs in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader 4-3. Amherst had routed the Ephs 8-1 in the opener after Williams had captured Friday's single encounter 9-8 at Williams.

The second game was a typical Williams-Amherst sports encounter, as the teams battled into extra innings before the Lord Jeffs pulled out the contest. Chris Conway '89 earned his second starting assignment after last weekend's strong showing against Bates. The two teams had a hard time scoring runs as Conway and his Amherst counterpart were outstanding, and the game moved through regulation tied at two. However, in the eighth, Steve Belsito '87 was brought home by Chris Donato's '89 sacrifice fly to put the Ephs ahead.

In the bottom of the inning, only one out from losing, the Lord Jeffs responded by singling home the tying run, knotting the game at three. The next batter drove a ball over a fallen Jeff Lilley '86 in center field to drive home the winning run.

The heartbreaking loss followed the 8-1 blowout by the Lord Jeffs in the opener. Sloppy Eph fielding and a strong pitching performance from Amherst ace Paul Nimons combined to bring about the loss. After the Jeffs three-run first, the game was never in doubt as Nimons held the Ephs to five harmless singles.

Successful week

Despite the doubleheader sweep, the Ephs had a relatively successful week, winning their three previous games, including a dramatic 9-8 victory over the same Amherst squad on Friday. A gutsy pitching performance from Pieter Mulder '86 and the team's uncanny ability to come up with the big play at just the right moment secured the win.

The game started out as if Williams would have little trou-

Continued on Page 9

The Williams Record

VOL. 99, NO. 24 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE MAY 13, 1986

The crowd takes to the grass to dance to the Rhythm Method at the Music Fest Saturday in the Berkshire Quad. (Khakee)

More frosh bumped this year

by Anne O'Malley

Roughly 45 freshmen do not have rooms in their assigned residential houses as of now, according to an informal poll of house presidents.

William Darrow, assistant dean of the College, said he estimates that 30 to 40 students will be without rooms as of the end of classes. Darrow said, "There are a number of rising sophomores bumped every year," but acknowledged that the number is higher this year. He did say, however, "I know that all of them will be housed by August."

According to Darrow, the main factor leading to this situation is fewer students wanting to live off-campus. He said the Deans' Office usually would have received 90 to 110 requests by this time, but that so far they have received only 68 requests for permission to live off-campus next year.

He said the number of students planning to go away next year has remained steady, but added, "Concern about terrorism and nuclear pollution (might) pull the numbers down."

28 to Oxford

Assistant Dean of the College Shelia Spear said she expects the numbers of students studying abroad next year to be "just about exactly the

Continued on Page 4

Board of Selectmen spot goes to Williams' Jorling

by Debbie Snyder

Professor of Environmental Studies Thomas Jorling won one of two open spots for Williamstown selectman in elections last Tuesday, garnering 1,072 of the 2,057 votes cast. He came in second, 400 votes behind the other winner Alan George and 203 votes ahead of Paul Humora.

Jorling, who will begin his duties tomorrow, said, "I am pleased that the vote was as high as it was." His term will run for three years. Selectmen are the only elected town officials other than the school committees and are responsible for the conduct of the town government.

Jorling believes that being on the faculty at Williams will not conflict with his responsibilities as selectman, but he said that if a conflict of interest does arise, he will withdraw his vote as selectman.

The editorial in the May 2 Advocate expressed some concern about Jorling being on Williams' faculty. Although the editorial endorsed Jorling, it said that it did so despite his association with Williams. An advertisement in the same issue of the paper that listed Jorling supporters contained few faculty names. Jorling said, "I didn't actively seek endorsement of faculty, because I didn't want to overdraw the connection."

The major issues now facing the selectmen include problems with the permit for the town landfill, siting of the new town garage and development of Cold Spring Road valley.

The voter turn-out for the election was large, with more than 50 percent of those registered voting.

Timid Fiddle strums along in its final appearance on the Williams campus. Dave Latham '86 and Ken Lafler '86 lead the band. (Khakee)

Honorary

Six to get degrees

Williams College will award honorary degrees to six men and women who have distinguished themselves in the areas of government and public service, business, education, medical research, journalism and writing. President Francis Oakley will present the degrees at the College's 197th Commencement, June 8.

Edgar M. Bronfman, a Williams alumnus, chairman and chief executive officer of The Seagram Company Ltd., and president of the World Jewish Congress; and Harry T. Edwards, circuit judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit will be awarded Doctor of Law degrees.

Edgar Bronfman

Meg Greenfield

Howard M. Goodman '60, chief of the department of molecular biology at the Massachusetts General Hospital, will receive a Doctor of Science degree. Meg Greenfield, Pulitzer Prize-winning editor for The Washington Post and a columnist for Newsweek will receive the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters.

Ved Parkash Mehta, a staff writer for The New Yorker, and Cynthia Ozick, a writer of novels and short stories, will be awarded Doctor of Letters degrees.

Continued on Page 8

Vacancies hurt women's studies

by Susan Fine

At the sexism panel May 5, Assistant Professor Wendy Brown described what it feels like to be the only female professor in the political science department. What she did not say, however, is that next year she will be on leave, and the department will not have any female professors.

While the situation in the political science department is an extreme case, many other departments are also losing female professors. As hard as the loss of these professors is on individual departments, it is considerably more burdensome for the women's studies program because many of these professors teach courses that apply to the concentration.

Those leaving who have served on the advisory committee are Professor Lynda Bundtzen of the English department (and this year's chairman of the advisory committee), Associate Professor Carol Ockman of art history, Assistant Professor Lila Abu-Lughod of anthropology, Assistant Professor Wendy Brown of political science and Associate Professor Pat Tracy of history.

Next year weak

The coincidence of many of these leaves results from the arrival four years ago of several female faculty members who created the impetus for the formation of the women's studies program. "Four years ago," Bundtzen recalled, "Women's studies looked like a wonderful possibility because of the new faculty interests and their research. The influx of the new women faculty encouraged others and a cohesive faculty of women seemed to gel." The following year the program was passed.

Bundtzen acknowledged that next year will be particularly weak in terms of women's studies offerings, and explained that departments do not always think in terms of interdisciplinary programs when they do their hiring.

She said the women's studies faculty feels it is not just an isolated compartment of interdisciplinary activity. "We have something to say about everything. Women's studies is not a separate phenomenon. In virtually every area there is a women's studies perspective that could be taken into account," Bundtzen said.

Brown expressed similar feelings. "The quality of the faculty makes it clear that going and studying women is not like an extra-added thing," she said. "You aren't just studying women but all kinds of institutions ... the family, government."

Under the new leadership of Associate Professor Rosemary Tong of the philosphy department, the advisory committee will gain six members, four of whom come from departments not represented on the earlier committee. Many women's studies elective courses still will not be taught next year, however.

Cook course

In the political science department, Assistant Professor Tim Cook will teach a new course, "Gender Gaps in American Politics: Women, Men and Political Action." Cook expressed dissatisfaction with the situation, calling it "more than unfortunate." He did explain, as did political science chairman Professor Gary Jacobsohn, that the department had tried to hire a woman, but she turned down the position.

As Cook explained, "Political science in demographic terms tends to be dominated by men. It is more difficult to find women in terms of sheer numbers."

Lynda Bundzten

Cook also mentioned that he feels the title women's studies is something of a misnomer and perhaps ought to be changed to gender studies or feminist studies. His course will examine the impact of gender upon political behavior and political outcomes in the United States. Cook's course lends support to Bundtzen and Brown's belief that women's studies is not an isolated phenomenon. "In an empirical sense, you can't study how women act in politics without studying how men act," he said.

In addition to these courses, Tong is working with Associate Professor D.L. Smith of the English department and Afro-American studies program to put together a three part miniseries of lectures focusing on black women writers, the black family, race , class and gender. Tong said she hopes to maxim-

Continued on Page 7

May 13, 1986

Confronting ourselves

With a flurry of activity and emotion, students have addressed many problems this spring. Those of us who have complained of student apathy welcome this activism on the part of some Williams students.

The building of shanties showed people are willing to make sacrifices for a cause in which they believe; the gay awareness rally proved students will face homophobia and intolerance and create a supportive environment for those coming to terms with their sexual identity; and the panel discussion on sexism emphasized that Williams, though a liberal institution, is not free of the subtle, and even the obvious, sexism that exists in society today. Only by getting these issues out in the open can we confront them, understand them and propose solutions.

These public efforts do not make the problems disappear. However, the student who will do whatever he or she can to dismantle apartheid, the homosexual who feels persecuted or uncomfortable at Williams, and the woman who feels limited by the fact that she is female in a male-dominated institution, can teach us something merely by expressing their feelings.

It is easy to be cynical, to say Williams will continue to invest in companies doing business in South Africa, homosexuals are no better integrated into the campus "mainstream," and Williams women still face obstacles that men do not to reach their full potential.

But it is more constructive to note the progress we have made. Well attended rallies and panel discussions are a good first step; silence helps no one. Only when we recognize that it is racism, homophobia and sexism that our classmates feel can we confront these problems directly to erase intolerance and prejudice — at least in our little corner of the world.

This is the last issue of the Record for the '85-'86 academic year. We will resume publication and distribution to our subscribers in September. The editors of the Record would like to thank especially sophomore department editors Virginia Demaree and Eric Hanson for their efforts. Both will be studying abroad next year, and they, as well as their talents, will be missed.

We would like to congratulate the following winners of the Record Restaurant Sweepstakes.

Will Dudley — dinner for two at the 1896 House
Pat Groves — dinner for two at the Freight Yard Pub
Fred Hopkins — brunch for two at Le Jardin
Joan Horgan — dinner for two at J.B.'s Restaurant
Edward Lung — dinner for two at the River House
Nat McCormick — dinner for two at the Captain's Table
Sarah Taub — dinner for two at the Williams Inn
Debbie Wisleder — dinner for two at Capers

Letters

Sexism

To the Editor:

After having dealt, for four years, with the issues discussed at the panel on "Sexism at Williams," I continue to grapple with one painfully obvious question: if the administration is not wholeheartedly committed to fairly and fully intergrating women into their formerly "male" institution, why do they bother to ask women to participate at all?

If I'm here just for "show," as a convenient alternative to the Mount Holyoke Road Trip, then, no matter how I look at it, I have invested an embarassingly large amount of money and time in a system that never did, and never will, have the ability to take my female perspective seriously. This points to the unsettling observation that students who do not fit into the "Traditional Williams College" mold forego potentially better educational experiences at less traditional institutions by agreeing to serve as mindless accessories here.

I can only hope that future students will strive to be less gullible than I have proven to be. Reputable colleges like Williams will substantially change their attitudes toward their non-traditional student bodies only when prejudice becomes bad business. Unfortunately, until students recognize their powers and responsibilities as wallet-wielding consumers of education, these institutions will continue to "have their cakes and eat them too."

Su Wrench '86

Lopsided

To the Editor:

On April 28, the Williams Students for Divestment drafted a proposal "to promote investigation of the feasibility of College divestment." Certainly, the issue of College divestment should be discussed, but both sides of the issue should be addressed. Despite claims that its "four measures are in the best interests of open and educated debate..." the WSD proposal is grossly lopsided.

The first idea requests literature regarding divestment to be made available. Unfortunately, there is no safeguard to ensure that a balanced selection of literature will be purchased; students and faculty deserve access to both sides of the issue.

The same criticism applies to the criteria for speakers. By insisting that the three speakers will be black South Africans, the WSD proposal ensures that students will hear only one side of the divestment argument.

The veto power that each of the selecting bodies have with regard to the student/faculty committee strikes me as being a dangerous weapon which might create a homogenous committee willing to overlook or understate the economic consequences of divestment.

My concerns, thus, center around the nature of the proposal and some of its debate stifling components.

David Rakonitz '88

Shanties

To the Editor:

On Friday April 25, the Williams Students for Divestment constructed a shanty town on the lawn of Baxter in symbolic protest of the abomination of apartheid, and the college's investments in corporations doing business in South Africa. On Monday, April 28 the WSD presented President Oakley with four proposals formulated to enhance the availability of information on issues surrounding apartheid and divestiture.

The platform provided that funds be allocated for speakers and literature focusing on the means of effecting change in South Africa, that space be made available in the Alumni Review for a discussion of the college's role in apartheid, and that a committee be formed to specifically address the short and long term ramifications of divestiture on the college investment portfolio.

Although Oakley did not endorse the creation of the suggested committee, but instead delegated the investigation of divestiture to the ACSR, which has been previously hesitant to take on such a rigorous exploration, we feel that the president's response opens up the possibility of a future shift in the college's investment policies.

Believing that we have made progress, and unwilling to let our symbolic protest, having served educational ends, induce rabid and unproductive opposition, we have dismantled the shanty-town in a show of good faith. We shall, however, continue to act on our abhorrence of the college's investments in a system predicated upon the institutionalized oppression of people of color. The struggle continues.

Devonya Havis '87
and John Malcolm '87

Opera

To the Editor:

As the original Music Director of the recent Mozart opera production at Williams, I am pleased that so many saw it and took pleasure in Mozart's Abduction. I am writing this letter as there is a general misunderstanding of my views and why I did not stay to the end.

I worked with individual singers from January onward and with the few members (only one-third of our membership wanted to be a part of the opera project) making up the chorus from March onward. However, as soon as we got into ensemble rehearsals, it was clear that it was not going to be a joint and fully cooperative venture between music and theatre, for what was constantly done was to minimize and change what Mozart had written. No musicians trained or willing to do that on any wholesale scale.

I refer to dialogue which has nothing to do with the original, to the reordering of numbers in an Act, which changes the way a character is introduced as well as changing the tonal plan which Mozart had created for that character and the Act. During rehearsals, the stage director would invite the singers to make wholesale cuts in their arias, so as to make his own dramatic work easier ... but what of the music?

Complaining did no good; musicians were treated as if we were merely hacks in a Theatre show, and as guests in the AMT, we were expected to obey what was called for by theatre staff. Again, this is no example of cooperation for opera, or of departments in an academic institution.

I have no comment about costumes, scenery, sunglasses, etc.; they are not part of my musical responsibilities, and however much I like or dislike them, they do not enter into the areas under my judgment and control. What I deeply objected to was having no input (example, let's cut number so-and-so ... no discussion, or speed up that piece, it's too slow for the dramatic action I'm doing there ...).

No music director will take this bullying, and after protesting, to no avail, for several large full-act rehearsals, I withdrew. Only musical hacks can work with such theatrical directors; my sense of loyalty to Mozart and good opera was higher. I retired to recuperate in the hospital, glad to have my life, but sad that Mozart had been so changed to the entertaining sophomoric level, although with some music intact.

They say that it is an opera director's world ... Ponnelle, Zeffirelli, Dexter, etc. But it is the composer who created the work, and he and his music must come first. I hope that I never am sickened again with the callous way a major composer is treated in what should be a first-class institution.

Kenneth Roberts, Professor of Music

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Virginia Demaree
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Eric Hanson, Joe Thorndike
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
MANAGING ..... Steve Theodore
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Nik Khakee
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Andrew Mayer, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT FEATURES ..... Corinna Lamb
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ... Steve Belsito, Mary Iliff, Frances Lashen, Keith McIver
ASSISTANT PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright
NEWS REPORTERS ..... John Canty, Karen Costenbader, John Faust, Jim Hartnett, Karen Olson, Anne O'Malley, Jocelyn Shadforth, Debbie Snyder, Meg Thomas, Allison Wertheim
FEATURES REPORTERS ..... Jane Becker, Mark Canuel, Laura Clark, Peter English, Susan Fine, Tim Harbold, Martin Hildebrand, Mary Iliff, Alison Jones, Tara Kazak, Carol Koeppel, Lanny Lim, Meredith Miller, Bill O'Brien, Elizabeth Scorcz, Jennifer Sills, Midori Sonada, George Tolley
SPORTS REPORTERS ..... Michele Barry, Mike Curtin, Jamey Gallop, Alfred Mottur, Kurt Oeler, Rick Orluk, Beth Schmidt, Anne Schmutz, Stewart Verdery, Mark Via DARKROOM ASSISTANT ..... Carolyn Boyden
PHOTOGRAPHERS ..... Sarah Marcus, Bill Mead, Tim Radomisli, Rachel Silver, Jeff Somers, Rich Ward
GRAPHICS ..... Penny Schenk, Jeffrey Weinstein
ADVERTISING ..... Martin Furey, Lisa Klem, Caryn Nagler
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma. and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267

On leaving Williams: a look back at students and issues

by M.L. Smith

It turns out that I am a member of the class of '86. I have accepted a teaching position in California, so I will be leaving Williams four years after I arrived. Realizing that brought these thoughts to mind:

A few years ago, I attended a dinner welcoming new freshmen to Williams. Two administrators (both now elsewhere) spoke. One of them, a Significant Personage, spoke of "Williams traditions." He singled out the Amherst game and "sticky buns" (I didn't ask).

The other speaker, a Mere Dean, had a very different message. The most important thing you can do with these four years, he said, is to seek out fellow students whose race, national and social origins, sexual orientation, and beliefs are different from yours, and listen to them.

I remembered how, when I was first hired at Williams, two former Williams faculty members told me to expect to find smug preppies in training for designer lives in Mondo Condo. How many Williams students fit this crude stereotype? Perhaps, like the Chernobyl casualty count, the answer is either two or 2000, depending on whom you ask.

The Significant Personage's remarks didn't do much to challenge the image of Williams students as self-satisfied purple cows. The Mere Dean, on the other hand, was pointing to a Williams experience beyond the stereotypes. I suspect he knew how dangerous that can be. Start looking at the world through the eyes of others, and before long you begin to make their concerns your own.

And that, I discovered, is another, less obvious Williams tradition. I have seen Williams students and alumni working to rescue civil rights legislation from the Meesekateers; publishing vital research challenging nuclear reactor safety, toxic waste, and Star Wars policies; helping the Sanctuary Movement; and tutoring students whose high schools had given up on them.

Some of you have staffed crisis centers for victims of rape and domestic violence; some joined local workers on picket lines, and heard their views on the "new prosperity." Others traveled (to Central America, the Middle East, even South African shantytowns), and brought back perspectives that rarely make it into the evening news.

When homophobia threatened to disrupt dorm life last year, I watched a dedicated few of you find a way to "celebrate diversity" with insight, compassion and good humor. And for over ten years, Williams students have returned to the question of divestiture. (I'm a slow learner, so I still don't understand how divestiture would "politicize" the college, whereas investment in apartheid occupies lofty, neutral ground.)

I have learned a great deal from these students. My generation came to college with different stereotypes. Romantics saw us as democratic idealists in (predesigner) blue jeans. Cynics saw us as spoiled sons and daughters of postwar affluence, crazed by sex, drugs and granola. Nixon called us "bums," Agnew denounced us "naddering nabobs of negativism," and we mourned our failure to meet the standards of these great leaders.

Agnew was wrong about the negativism. We were hopelessly optimistic nabobs, and the luckier ones among us came away with a sense of possibilities — a notion that if we learned enough, and struggled together, we could make a positive difference in our little corners of the world.

But it required less imagination to examine the dynamics of racism, sexism, and militarism when the cities were in flames, the women's movement swept the campuses like an electrical storm, and draft boards raffled off mandatory post-graduate tours of Vietnam. Even we patriotic, straight white males had to be brain-stems not to notice contradictions between the values we'd been taught and the uses of power in the world around us.

So I am more impressed to see that in the 1980's, when students are seen as self-absorbed and apathetic, Williams harbors (as I suspect it has all along) a few students who discuss the exhilarations and frustrations embracing social goals larger than themselves and who were willing to put in long, hard hours toward keeping those goals alive.

It hasn't been easy for you. Your efforts are not celebrated at homecoming or in alumni newsletters. For questioning arrogance and irresponsibility, you have been called arrogant and irresponsible. But it all makes a difference. What began as a late-night discussion or a public interest internship can lead to ways of seeing that never show up on resumes or in Michelob ads. Before you know it, you're carrying on a tradition that I'm glad to have witnessed at Williams.

Assistant Profesor of History Michael L. Smith came to Williams in 1982; he has accepted a teaching position at the University of California at Davis for next year.

Women and their bodies: a destructive competition

by Melissa Matthes '86

To some of you I'm the aerobics teacher, to others the P.E. dancer and to others still the sexercise lady. It almost seems natural, I suppose that I should talk about bodies, about the way we feel about our bodies and how we interact with each other because of and against our bodies. However, talking about bodies isn't that natural for me; in fact, talking about bodies is probably one of the more difficult things for me to do — the entire issue surrounding bodies, the notion of beauty, etc., is a painful locus of struggle and conflict for me.

Whether we like it or not, many times we're judged by our bodies, our appearance, how we look to the world. The awful thing about the social standard of beauty and our resultant obsession with our bodies is that no one is ever satisfied. If you don't fit the standard and feel you never will because you're genetically loaded for wide hips, you feel forever doomed to struggle toward an impossible goal. If you do fit the standard, you never believe you do. In fact, I am beginning to believe that the standard of beauty is always whatever you are not; nevertheless, we continue the relentless quest for this elusive ideal.

This is not to suggest that the desire to be attractive is anti-feminist; quite to the contrary, the desire to be attractive is part of our sexuality; it's erotic to feel attractive and content with one's own body.

The feminist issue is not whether wearing make-up is anti-feminist and scrubbing your face isn't or whether doing aerobics is anti-feminist and riding your bicyce is feminist but rather as Joanna Rush asserts, the issue is the social compulsion, pressure and power associated with female conventions and the symbols of femininity. Bodies are a feminist issue because how a woman looks has for centuries been the most important feature of womanhood. This is not true for men — men have created the arrangements; they are evaluated in terms if courage, intellect, prestige or material success.

Bodies are a feminist issue not because there is a right and wrong way for a feminist body to be but rather because there is a powerlessness that comes with being obsessed with one's body, with trying to get one's body to fit a Procrustean standard of beauty. Finally, bodies are a feminist issue because they have become the chief tool of a pernicious woman against woman competition.

Somehow this body beautiful craze has divided us against each other. We judge ourselves against other women. But we don't realize what happens to that woman we judge ourself against. She becomes an object, the standard to achieve but more destructively, she becomes the competition.

Continued on Page 9

There is no justification for investment in South Africa

by Charles P. Goodwin '87

For too long the question has been why divest our assets in corporations doing business in South Africa. Now, we should ask why invest? I believe there are three possible reasons.

Corporations doing business in South Africa obey the laws of that country, pay taxes to the racist government and pump life into the economy. In short, those corporations support the society which imposes apartheid. The college, by owning stock in those corporations, has acquired a partial responsibility for the continuation of apartheid.

The second reason for owning stock in corporations that do business in South Africa is that these corporations contribute to — pardon the expression — prosperity of the Black population. This implies that we know what the Black population of South Africa wants. In fact, policies such as constructive engagement and the domestic investments which back it say that we are telling the Black population of South Africa what it wants. This is arrogance — especially when the Black leaders of South Africa, such as Bishop Tutu, Stephen Biko and Allan Boesak, ask us over and over again to take economic action against South Africa and to eschew those corporations which continue to do business in South Africa.

The third reson is that U.S. corporations in South Africa are promoting peaceful, gradual change. In a word, BUNK. One, the corporations that do business in South Africa are there for a profit, not because they have some reformist aim. Apartheid itself is a great source of profit in that it's restrictions provide a class of what is essentially slave labor.

Continued on Page 9

America can press for needed reform in S. African apartheid

by David Kane '88

Sometimes the editors of the Record are simply clueless. In the editorial advocating divestment two weeks ago, they sarcastically asked if "profits matter more than morality" In the College's investment decisions. That's obviously not the issue. The real issue is whether or not U.S. companies in South Africa are helping the blacks to gain political power. I think that they are and that therefore Williams should feel free to invest in these companies.

But before I make my case, let's get rid of some myths. Myth number one is that of "imminent revolution" — the idea that the blacks are going to topple the white government within the next ten years. The whites make up a large and heavily armed minority. Against this, the blacks have nothing. In strictly military terms, as long as the whites have the will to rule, they, in fact, will rule.

Myth number two is that U.S. companies are a key support of the South African government and that their removal would hasten the arrival of "imminent revolution". If Mobil vacates the country, their refineries will be sold to either another foreign or South African company. If the price is right, there will be plenty of buyers. "What about bank loans to South Africa?" screams the Williams Student for Divestment. Cut off the loans, and the government will cut off the repayments. Selling stock and stopping trade aren't much better. Other investors would buy the stock; other countries would pick up the trade. In strictly economic terms, the severing of all ties with the U.S. would not have a major impact on the South African economy.

Myth number three is that the overwhelming majority of blacks and their leaders demand the disinvestment of foreign companies from South Africa. Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, the leader of six million Zulus, is against disinvestment. The blacks who work for foreign companies are assumedly against disinvestment. If they weren't, they could quit and thus force out foreign companies. In fact, most of the clamour for disinvestment comes from the unemployed — those who have nothing to lose. Whether disinvestment helps or hinders the struggle against apartheid is a decision that we need to make for ourselves.

Myth number four is U.S. companies exploit blacks and do nothing to aid them in their fight for justice. Williams invests only in companies that have signed the Sullivan principles. These companies help to create a black middle class that the whites would trust to govern. To take a favorite WSD example, Mobil sells oil to the South African police and military. In 1984, Mobil gave over a million dollars to black community projects. U.S. companies have given more than 80 million dollars to such non-white only projects.

Continued on Page 9

Clothing drive

The Committee on Campus Environment, the Center for Environmental Studies, Williams College Buildings and Grounds and the Housing Office will sponsor a campus-wide paper and clothing drive during reading period and final exams.

Newspapers will be collected from each house on May 19. Clothing and paper can be dropped off at sites in all dining halls from May 26 to May 28.

The newspaper must be bound in stacks no more than one foot high, with string to be provided by the house managers. All other types of paper, including xeroxes, phone books, books and magazines, can be recycled, but not plastic or cardboard. The clothing must be in reasonable condition.

The paper will be taken to a recycling factory in Troy, N.Y., and the clothing will be donated to charities in the Williamstown area. Volunteers in each house and the house managers will be encouraging participation in the campaign and can answer questions. For more information, contact Mary Taylor '88, S.U. 1476, x6785, or Sarah Thurber '86, S.U. 2534, x6992.

Kiser grant

Cynthia Kiser '87, has been awarded an Undergraduate Research Fellowship from the Genetics Society of America. The award will provide Kiser with a stipend of $2400 to support her summer research in the lab of Martha Atschuler of the Williams biology department.

Kiser will attempt to discover how DNA is organized in the somatic nucleus of Tetrahymena thermophila, a free-living, single-celled organism which is a model system for studying DNA changes during development.

Fifteen fellowships were awarded nationally by the Genetics Society. The recipients were chosen by a panel of researchers from Carnegie-Mellon University, the California Institute of Technology and the University of Oregon.

Stoddard honored

Whitney Stoddard '35, Amos Lawrence professor of art emeritus, was honored by the International Center for Medieval Art at The Cloisters in New York City on May 1.

In recognition of Stoddard's contribution to the study of medieval art, the I.C.M.A. dedicated the 30th anniversary issue of its journal, GESTA, to Stoddard, one of its founders. The volume contains a biography of Stoddard, testimonials from his former students and scholarly essays published in his honor. It was presented at a surprise party.

Stoddard has been teaching at Williams since 1938. Although he officially retired in 1976, he has continued to teach part time. He is known for his interest in medieval architecture, sculpture and painting and his passionate interest in Williams athletics.

His book, Monastery and Cathederal in France, discusses issues of archaeology, historiography, and style. His most recent book is The Facade of Saint Giles du Gard. His summer excavations at the monastery of Psalmodi in France continue to attract students.

In the printed testimonials, Stoddard's colleague in the Williams art department, E.J. Johnson '59, said, "Whitney, with his great eye, taught me to think visually, and that changed my life." A former student, art historian James Morganstern '58 of Ohio State University, remembered the sense of excitement Stoddard gave to the material.

Among those in attendance from Williamstown were Johnson, Charles Parkhurst '35, and Christine Kondoleon, all of the Williams art department, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Flynt '44.

Housing

Continued from Page 1

same as last year." She has received 219 study away petitions, one less than she received last year. She also noted that there are now 28 Williams students who will be on the Williams-in-Oxford program.

These students will live in the Ephraim Williams House along with two Oxford University students. Spear said the Williams house is now full.

Although next year's entering class of freshmen is expected to be larger than usual, Darrow said, "The specific problem this year is not freshmen." The Admissions Office is currently hoping for an entering class of 515.

According to Admissions Office Coordinator Beth Stachelek, 511 students had sent in deposits as of May 8. The Admissions Office had already accepted five students from the wait list at that time and was planning to accept at least five more.

No expansion

According to Darrow, there are no plans to expand the size of the College, although he did admit, "Our overall numbers have moved up slightly, creeping up from somewhere below 2,000 to somewhere above 2,000." He said a decision was made to accept more freshmen and less transfers, "because there is such a large pool of freshmen applicants." According to Spear, there will be just 20 transfer students next year, eight fewer than this year.

Ten of the 15 residential houses were not able to assign rooms to all of their freshmen affiliates during room draw this year. Tyler's 12 freshmen bumped was followed by Hopkins, with nine extra. All of the Row Houses and all of the Greylock houses bumped at least one freshman; only one of the four Mission Park Houses had to bump freshmen.

Many of the house presidents expressed confidence that at least some of the wandering freshmen would get rooms in their affiliated houses during the course of the summer.

Dodd, Dennett, Mills, Pratt and Prospect are housing all their freshmen. According to Dodd House President John Phay '87, Dodd was undersubscribed because at the time of freshmen inclusion the 13-bed Dodd Annex was expected to be used to house freshmen next year. Phay expects Dodd will actually have five extra beds when room draw is completed.

No contingency plan

Dennett House has four extra rooms, while Prospect House has seven to 10 extra rooms. The presidents of both Mills and Pratt said that they are exactly full, except for living rooms.

Director of Housing Wendy Hopkins said, "We're working from the premise that everyone will be housed," stating that no contingency plans have even been discussed. She pointed out, "A lot of things can happen after the 28th of May," noting that seniors may find off campus housing, students may decide to withdraw, and juniors may have study abroad programs approved.

She said the waiting list for housing is "an incredibly fluid situation and we are working with it on a daily basis." Over the summer, she said, "We accommodate a lot of people." She also confirmed that the 20 transfer students who will be coming to Williams next fall still have to be housed, as they are not assigned rooms until all current Williams students have been accommodated.

Darrow acknowledged, "We are about at the limit of what our housing will hold and will eventually have to plan additional buildings." He said he believes the College needs a new classroom building and two new dorms: a small one for freshmen and one for upperclassmen. He said the Dean's Office has made a decision not to allow any sophomores to go off campus, "even though that could be a solution."

Darrow said he wishes to stress, "This college is a residential College and has an obligation to house all of its students."

Hot dogs

The second annual Hot Dog Eating Contest will take place this Sunday at 1:00 p.m. at Jack's Hot Dog Stand in North Adams. North Adams State, the University of Massachussetts at Amherst, and Williams will each send four contestants to see who can eat the most hot dogs in 30 minutes. The proceeds of the contest will benefit Oxfam America.

A crowd of between 800 and 1000 is expected at the contest, for which all of Eagle Street will be closed off. The judges will be Mayor John Barret III of North Adams and State Representative Sherwood Guernsey of Williamstown.

Last year in the inaugural 1985 Hot Dog Eating Contest, Chris Acker '85 narrowly defeated North Adams senior Peter Bourne. Acker consumed 17 1/2 hot dogs in the 30-minute period, edging out Bourne, who ate only 17. The contest was neck and neck for 29 minutes, until Acker shoved down the final half with six seconds to go.

The contest is sponsored by Jack's Hot Dog Stand, The Hangover Show, (formerly of NASC's WJJW), Worhle's Wholesale of Pittsfield, Price Chopper, Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Springfield, Steve Binder's Mobile Music, Norm's Limousine Service of North Adams, Gatsby Screen Printing of North Adams and North Adams State College.

PIRG drive

The Stamp Out Hunger campaign sponsored by the Williams chapter of MASSPIRG raised $210 last week, according to Jennifer Grant '89, a member of the organization.

The money will go directly to support soup kitchens in Pittsfield and to the North Adams Salvation Army. The campaign is part of a national student campaign against hunger, initiated by PIRGs on Feb. 26.

A giant foot bearing the signatures of those who donated money will be sent to the House Select Committee on Hunger, with a request for action to reduce domestic hunger, according to Grant. "We all know how much we enjoy the Berkshire area, and this was a unique opportunity for us to provide a small but significant boost to the region," Grant said.

Interested in advertising?

Why not get a start at the Record.

The Record is looking for a few good people to manage our advertising department next year. The managers receive a commission on each ad and a small salary to help offset the slow weeks. We would prefer people with sales experience and a car, however, these are not at all required. We would like to meet with those interested, and if you can sell us on hiring you, great!

Drop a note in either S.U. Box 1652 or 1947 as soon as possible and we will get in touch with you.

Earn money and gain experience.

THE CLIP SHOP

We have a unique philosophy about hair and make up. We take everything into account; the shape of your face, the colour of your skin, your lifestyle, and most important — the individual you. Our stylists are privy to concepts and designs that influence the fashion world. We're the people that make your look the difference between OK and extraordinary.
We're a Sebastian Artistic Center.

"we make the difference between dc & extraordinary"

Sebastian Artistic Center is a trademark of Sebastian Int'l © 1984 Sebastian International, Woodland Hills, CA 91367

122 North St., Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903 or 413-447-9576

125 North St., Bennington, VT
802-442-9823 or 802-447-2648

49 Spring St., Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167 or 413-458-8585

Interview: Prof. D. L. Smith

by Lanny Lim

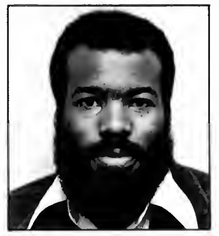
In light of the recent shantytown construction here at Williams, the Record interviewed Williams' only tenured black professor, Associate Professor of English D. L. Smith. Smith spoke at the recent rally for divestment and has a strong interest in the issue.

Reeord: What are your opinions abut the recent shantytown construetion?

Smith: "I was surprised that there was as much support for it as there was, and I expected there would be opposition to it. I was pleased to see the number of students that got involved with that work and gave some sense of support for it."

Record: When you spoke at the rally, what was the message that you were trying to convey?

Smith: "Well, I talked about political struggle. I didn't talk about South Africa specifically as I did about the importance of people standing up for what they believe in and the importance of recognizing that some struggles are long struggles — that movements go through phases of development. Things have been quiet here for a while on this issue. There has been a long history of struggle on the issue at Williams, but this is a reawakening because there is likely to be a lot more struggle in the future. So people have to have a long term perspective on movements to recognize that the fact that we don't get what we want tomorrow doesn't mean that what we do today is a failure."



"The other main point is that it is necessary to struggle and not to be afraid to take a stand and to upset people because anytime there are conflicts of interest and one interest is more powerful than the other, the only way to bring about change is through some kind of confrontation that might be friendly. But in most cases it is not going to be friendly."

Record: Do you think the administration's actions were fair?

Smith: "I think the administration was extremely clever in their response. They were most concerned, I think, with negative reactions from the other students and Dean Fix moved immediately to send out a letter saying that this is just another form of expression, and we believe in freedom of speech and all that. I think they were basically concerned with maintaining the calm of Williams. They were very accommodating. They agreed to three of the four demands presented that were the least troublesome and the most obvious, and they did not say 'no' but simply deferred a decision on the fourth one. So I think that from the perspective of the administrative management that they were about as clever as they could be in dealing with the situation."

Record: Despite the interest reflected hy Williams' construetion of a shantytown, do you helieve there is some reality to the situation that we don't perceive because we are so far away from South Africa?

Smith: "There's so much that we aren't aware of at Williams. Regarding South Africa, I suppose the most important thing is that a large number of people are being killed there everyday. Black people, although it's not entirely a race issue, since a large percentage of the army and police forces in South Africa are black. So it is fundamentally a political question. It's a question of power. We have a tiny minority in South Africa which is exercising despotic power over the overwhelming majority. Some 80% of the people in South Africa are black."

"One way of thinking about that would be in our context to imagine if black people were absolutely in power in America, and white people were the oppressed majority because the numbers would work out about right. About 10% of Americans are black; so you can imagine black people holding all the privileges and power, and the white people of America having to settle for second-class citizenship. That gives you a sense of what the situation is in South Africa, but then you also have to factor in the amount of sheer violence by which that government is maintaining itself in power. So people that argue that there's going to be a blood-bath in South Africa are people who are callous to the amount of blood that is already being shed everyday. There's already a blood-bath in South Africa; so that the real question is, in a sense, whose blood?"

Record: Do you think that divestment will have negative eeonomic effects on South Africa?

Smith: "Nobody knows that for sure. I think that's probably the most important point to remind ourselves of — that we see a lot

Continued on Page 7

Precise playing marks cellists' varied concert

by Paul Bardin

Professor of Music Douglas Moore and Susan Ruzow performed a full-length concert of music for two cellos last Tuesday in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. In an effort to revive his "Cellobration" performance of years ago, Moore, the chairman of the music department, teamed up with Ruzow, principal cellist in both the Berkshire and Albany Symphony orchestras, to present an unusual and extremely pleasant musical event.

The first half of the program consisted of Mozart's Sonata and Julius Klengel's Suite for Two Cellos, op. 22. The pieces, played handily by the duo, presented a considerable variety of musical textures and proved the cello to be an instrument worthy of virtuoso solo treatment. While the Mozart was primarily contrapuntal, with its sprightly melodies and accompaniments, the Klengel tended to be more homophonic, often utilizing rich, full chords that required both performers to bow two strings simultaneously. It was in the Klengel piece particularly that Moore demonstrated his mastery for the instrument, delivering a flawness and very moving cadenza at the end of the final movement.

Assisted by pianist Edwin Lawrence and cellist Jennifer Sills '87, the duo opened the second half of the program with David Popper's Requiem, op. 66. Lawrence was characteristically solid and ever alert in the role of accompanist, and Sills executed her solo sections with confidence and accuracy. The piece, as the title might suggest, contained many somber, chordal sections that remind one of a chordal requiem.

Dynamic duos

Returning to the duet format, Moore and Ruzow performed a second work from the classical era, Jean-Baptiste Breval's Duetto V in F Major. Moore prefaced the work by explaining that Breval's specialty was the "give-and-take" duet, one in which both performers imitate each other regularly with similar harmonic material. Though Moore was slightly the victor in the "contest" (Ruzow had occasional intonation problems in the high register), the performers played the piece with a freshness worthy of the composer's intentions.

The duo could not have chosen a more suitable conclusion to the program than Glan Carlo Menotti's Suite for Two Cellos and Piano. Compositionally sound, rhythmically demanding and harmonically bright, the piece explored many musical textures untouched by other composers, such as pizzicato, octaves, unisons, and the mute. Ranging from a flowing, lyric melody in the third movement to a jazz-like "walking bass" line in the fourth, the piece also offered an array of musical styles. With Lawrence again assisting, Moore and Ruzow played with great precision and finesse — and with the final racing scale the duo proved their instrument worthy indeed of "cellobration."

Experimental drama

The Udder side of Eph Theater

by Jennifer Sills

The "Other Theater"? The "Utter Theater"? Or the "Udder Theater"? Just what is The Udder Theater? Well, actually, it's something of a combination of all three.

Williams Theater students have, for a few years, been considering the idea of an alumni and student-run summer theater. Last summer, under the direction of Joanna Adler '86 and Jamie Tarses '85, the idea finally became a reality. The new theater provides the opportunity for Williams alumni and students to continue working together, in an environment aimed at promoting artistic growth and innovation.

The theater, funded only by contributions, is experimentally- and educationally-based. A great deal of time is devoted to improvisational classes, individual scene study, singing, and working on monologues for auditions. Working with peers who have had much of the same instruction at Williams, and working with alumni — many of whom are now working in theater in major cities — are two of the many positive aspects of the program. Interested members have the opportunity to work on improving directing skills, and alumni who have written scripts will have the chance to see them performed and promoted.

Atypical repertoire

One of the goals of the theater, Adler commented, is to present productions which are not typical summerstock repertoire. The performances will be more in an untraditional and experimental, rather than a classical vein. Their work, Adler stated, will be "taking greater risks, doing new and different things,

Continued on Page 7

Jazz bassist extraordinaire Ron Carter does some furious fingerwork on his fretboard in his quartet's Chapin Hall concert Saturday night. (Khakee)

Committees seek increased involvement

by Midori Sonoda

Student-faculty committees are an important part of Williams, and each is geared to help the administration with various aspects of Williams life. Yet this year the deadline for applications for some committees had to be extended because of an insufficient number of applications.

This year, the highest number of applications were received for the Committees of Undergraduate Life, Admissions, Educational Policy, and Finance. To begin the selection process, each member of the Elections Committee reads every application and then the group convenes to determine whom they will accept. In special cases, when the competition is close, interviews are held to learn more about the most promising candidates.

Veteran members must annually re-apply for their positions because membership is no guarantee of re-election, which depends on the size of the applicant pool each year. College Council Vice President Suzanne Biemiller '87, who is chairman of the Elections Committee, explained, "experience is a good thing but if we feel someone (other than a veteran member) will put in more time or wants it more, they will get it."

Faculty committee assignments are made by the president after consultation with the Steering Committee and Dean of the Faculty John Reichart. One exception is the Committee on Educational Policy, whose faculty members are elected by the faculty.

The most sought after committees deal with a wide range of subjects. The Financial Committee works with the treasurer of the College Council in determining club and organization budgets from the students activity tax. The Committee on Undergraduate Life makes policy recommendations to the administration concerning most issues outside of education. The Committee on Educational Policy examines the curriculum and then reports to the faculty as well as the administration. The Admissions Committee advises on recruitment and is also concerned with making the College more attractive to prospectives.

Continued on Page 7

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FEST

Saturday's "Music Fest '86" drew hundreds of students to the Berkshire Quad for a full day of fun, food, and tunes. The event, produced by seniors David Latham and Ken Lafler and sponsored in part by the SAC, featured campus bands whose music ranged from rock and jazz to bluegrass and classical. (All photos by Record photography editor Nik Khakee.)

Committees

Continued from Page 5

When asked why some groups like the Bookstore and Log Committees were having trouble attracting candidates, Biemiller responded, "Maybe a lot of people think those committees don't have much say in determining policy, but they do."

Biemiller added that she hoped to get more applications for the Log Committee, which deals with visible issues on campus. Last year the Log Committee was forced to expand in response to the large number of qualified applicants. Amy Jeffress '87, president of College Council and former Elections Committee chairman, commented that there was a similar problem in filling some of the committees last year.

Women's studies

Continued from Page 1

ize the impact of the women's studies and Afro-American studies programs through this lecture series.

CEP focus

Tong will teach the women's studies senior seminar this fall. The seminar already has eight people signed up, and more are expected to enroll in the fall. This year there are five students receiving a concentration in women's studies. She will also teach the "Introduction to Feminist Thought," which had 98 students in it this semester.

Tong said she thinks the Committee on Educational Policy will focus on the interdisciplinary curriculum next year, giving the women's studies program an opportune chance to work with the administration to resolve some of the staffing and structural problems of the program.

Smith

Continued from Page 5

of predictions. People are always saying, 'Well, if we divest, this will happen,' but we don't know. The bottom line is that the people involved in the struggle against apartheid in South Africa pretty much unanimously say that we should support divestment. They are willing to suffer that much financially one way or the other. Black South Africans stand to suffer a great deal, and if they're willing to do that, then we should be willing."

Record: Do you think that Williams will totally divest in the future?

Smith: "Yes, I think that Williams will divest. I think that they will wait until after everybody else has already done it, until divestment has become a dead issue everywhere else. Then, Williams will divest and pat itself on the back for doing the morally right thing. That tends to be the pattern at Williams historically. Williams is always behind national trends and follows these trends a few years later. So I would expect the same thing to happen on this issue."

"At the moment, I think that WAAC and other students on campus who oppose apartheid should give the administration no rest on this issue. They should continue to insist upon full divestment. They have to organize themselves ... and to realize that it's going to be a very difficult struggle. It's not likely that the trustees are going to suddenly agree to reverse their policy. So it's going to require real commitment and patience, but I think that they should try to develop commitment and patience, and keep the struggle going."

Record: Do you have any final comments regarding this issue?

Smith: "I ought to say that I think the College is wrong in the position that it has taken. I also think that people who argue for the Sullivan Principles are simply wrong; that there is nothing but a kind of blind faith to support their position. Certainly very little testimony from people actually involved in the struggles supports that position. The only blacks out of South Africa who support that position tend to be the people who are on the payroll of the government. So I think that we should not deceive ourselves about what's at stake in South Africa or about the fact of our complicity. We are complicit as long as we continue to invest in South Africa. We should stop doing that and it's clear that many institutions have divested and not hurt their portfolios and in some cases improve their portfolios by divesting. I think Williams should stop wasting its time with these specious arguments and divest."

Record: So you don't have any faith in the Sullivan Principles?

Smith: "No, I don't have any faith in the Sullivan Principles. I can't see any basis except faith itself and faith in the Sullivan Principles because, given the structure of laws in South Africa and given the attitude of the government there, the Sullivan Principles are doomed to fail."

Theater

Continued from Page 5

and not leaning on any tradition." Last season they performed one large play, "The Madwoman of Chaillot," and two one-acts.

Adler commented on the difficulty of finding opportunities for performing, and described their venture as "making theater for ourselves." However, this year they are hoping to expand their repertoire and plan to include more musical productions and perhaps some lunchtime cabarets.

Adler explained that the group is "shooting for longevity, and would like the theater to remain an institution." She also mentioned that their name is going to be changed. "We'd like to be taken more seriously than the name has implied to our public," she explained. Suggestions, she noted, are always welcome.

Williamstown, with the summer theater festival, the many other smaller theater companies, and nearby Tanglewood, attracts many visitors who come mainly to take advantage of these cultural experiences. The Udder Theater (or whatever it will eventually be called) is a unique sort of theater which adds a new dimension to the Williamstown Theater community.

HEADING FOR EUROPE THIS SUMMER?
Jet there anytime for only $160 with AIRHITCH® (as reported in Consumer Reports, NY Times, Newsday, Harvard's "Let's Go" Student Travel Guide Series, Good Housekeeping, and on national network morning shows). For details, call 212-864-2000 or write: 2901 Broadway, Suite 100A, NY, NY 10025

FOR HEALTHY BABIES...

build a strong foundation with good prenatal care.
March of Dimes Preventing Birth Defects

SENIOR LEADERS NEEDED for TEENAGE BICYCLE TRIPS

Applicants must be at least 21

Call or write:

Student Hosteling Program
Conway, MA 01341

(413) 369-4257

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS
SPORTING GOODS
SALE
The Co-op

LEVI'S
LEVI STRAUSS & CO.

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

YESTERDAY'S CARS AT YESTERDAY'S PRICES

Berkshire County RENT A WRECK Inc

Used Cars
New '86 Ford LTD.
Passenger/cargo vans

Two Locations:
922 Curran Highway, North Adams
#663-8020
1315 East Street, Pittsfield
#447-8117

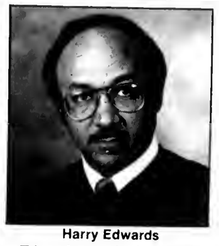
RENT A WRECK

WATERFRONT SWIMMING DIRECTOR NEEDED

Age 21+. International Scholarship Camp (for teenage boys) in New York State. WSI, ALS, 3 years exp. required.

21 June - 24 August — $1900

Phone Collect
(201) 567- 4550



Degrees

Continued from Page 1

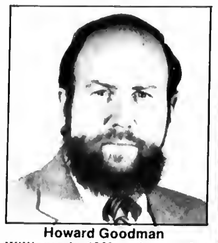
Jewish leader

Bronfman has developed The Seagram Company into the world's leading producer of spirits and wines. He has been president of the World Jewish Congress since 1980 and has become especially concerned with the plight of Soviet Jews, becoming last year the first WJC leader invited to the Soviet Union. He attended Williams for three years, graduating from McGill University in 1951.

With other members of the Bronfman family, he provided substantial funding toward the construction of the Bronfman Science Center, dedicated in 1968, as a tribute to his father, Samuel Bronfman.

Harry Edwards

Edwards taught law for 10 years before his appointment to the United States Court of Appeals, specializing in labor arbitration, collective bargaining, labor relations and higher education law.



Edwards graduated from Cornell University in 1962 and the University of Michigan Law School in 1965, where he was a member of the Law Review and the Order of the Coif, a national legal honorary society for academic achievement.He teaches part-time at the Harvard, Georgetown and Duke Law Schools.

University of Detroit.

DNA research

Goodman has conducted research in the field of recombinant DNA, commonly known as gene splicing. His work has focused on using recombinant DNA techniques to produce insulin and human-growth hormone in the laboratory.

Goodman graduated from

Howard Goodman

Williams In 1960 and earned a Ph.D. in biophysics from M.I.T. in 1964. In 1979 he received a CIBA-GEIGY DREW Award in Biochemical Research for advanced work in genetic engineering. In 1981, he became chief of the newly established department of molecular biology at Masschusetts General Hospital, teaching concurrently in the department of genetics at Harvard Medical School.

Cynthia Ozick

Greenfield jolned The Washington Post in 1968, and was appointed deputy editor of the editorial page in 1969, winning a Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing in 1978. In 1979 she became editor of the editorial page.

Greenfield has written a biweekly column for Newsweek since 1974. Greenfield graduated summa cum laude from Smith in 1952 and spent the following year as a Fulbright Scholar at Cambridge University in England.

Ved Mehta

Ved Parkash Mehta, born in 1934 in Lahore, India (now in Pakistan), has been blind since age 3 because of meningitis. He came to the United State in 1949 to attend the Arkansas State School for the Blind. He later earned a B.A. from Pomona College in 1956, a B.A. with honors in modern history from Balliol College of Oxford University in 1959, and a M.A. from Harvard in 1961.

Mehta, who writes both fiction and nonfiction on such subjects as philosophy, religion and linguistics, has written most extensively about his family and his childhood. Much of his writing orlginally appeared in The New Yorker, where he has been a staff writer since 1961. Mehta's first book was the autoblographical Face to Face, written when he was 20. He has received a number of awards and fellowships, including a five-year MacArthur Prize Fellowship, awarded in 1982.

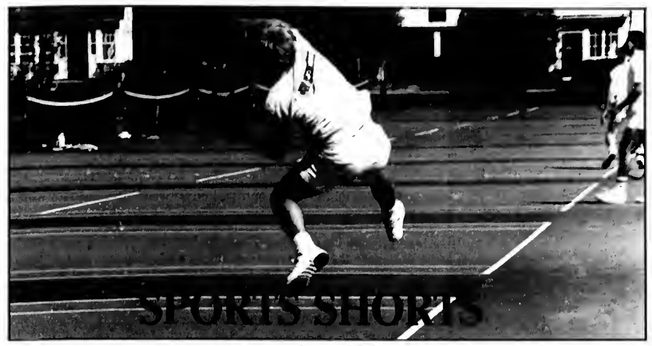
Cynthia Ozick's first published work was a novel, Trust, published in 1966. She has written many short stories, critical essays, poems and reviews for such magazines as Commentary, The New Yorker and Harpers. In addition to a second novel, The Cannibal Galaxy, published in 1983.

She is concerned in her writing with the issue of retaining one's identity as a Jew in the modern world. Ozick's work has been translated into 10 languages, and she herself translates works of Yiddish literature into English. Ozick graduated from New York University in 1949 and received a master's degreee from Ohio State University in 1951.

Leave your typewriter with us this summer. We will clean and store it and have it ready to go this fall.

McClelland's
36 Spring Street - - Williamstown
Telephone 458-1920

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3518 PHONE 458 - 5717



1976 Ford E250 Chateau Van. Yellow, totally converted inside with C.B., AM/FM Tape, captain's chairs, Bed or couch. Front/rear speakers. Storage, curtains, tinted windows, roof vent, Michelin radials with western steel chrome spoke wheels, 351 3 speed, no emission controls. 45,000 miles. Never driven in winter, always garaged. $2,950 or best offer. #802-362-1993.

Camp Counselors
Top Camp, Berkshire Mts, Mass.
seeks top people over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Tennis, Football, Weight-training, Waterskiing, Swimming, Lacrosse, Sailing, Camp Radio Station, Camp Newspaper, Computer Programming, Video, Theatre Arts, Ceramics, Photography, Pianist. Good salary plus room, board, laundry.
Write Winter office: M. Moss, Lenox 270-14R Grand Central Pkwy, Floral Park, NY 11005

Pre-Season Racquet Sale
Save 20-40% on all tennis racquets in stock
by prince HEAD Donnay PRO KENNEX
24 hour racquet stringing
Complete Demo Program
Goff's Sports, inc.
15 Spring St., Williamstown, 458-3605
Mon.-Sat. 9-5, Thurs till 8:30, Sun. 12-4

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
76 SPRING STREET · WILLIAMSTOWN
Telephone (413) 458-5007
* COUPON *
Wishing the Class of '86 the best . . .
20% discount on all purchases with this ad.
Good until June 5th
Open until 8:00 p.m. Monday-Saturday

Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
76 Spring Street
458-4808
the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1948 Betsy Burbank

The tennis team completed their season on Saturday in losing to MIT 7-2, but captain Tim Peterson '86 certainly gave his all to help the Eph effort. (Albright)

Tennis

The tennis team lost to MIT on Saturday by a 7-2 score. MIT stands as the top-ranked Division III team in New England, and is ranked among the top 15 in the country. Coach Sean Sloane was pleased that his team took two matches, especially since several other matches were very close.

At third singles for the Ephmen, sophomore Hoyt Ludington defeated MIT's Rob Craig 6-3, 6-1 to raise his season record to 10-3. Drew Sawyer '89 made his season singles debut and, playing number six, breezed by George Lyden 6-1, 6-2.

Several other matches saw Ephs lose in the final games. Captain Tim Peterson '86 lost to Ben Spehlman 3-6, 6-4, 7-6 (7-5) at second singles, while at number four, sophomore Robby Hallagan lost 7-5 in the third set.

The Ephmen's record drops to 4-5 as a result of the loss. They attempted to close out the year at .500 when they played the Union Dutchmen yesterday.

— Mark Via

Track

Led by senior John Ellison and junior Brandt Johnson, the men's track team took third place in the New England Championships this weekend. Ellison won the 3000m steeplechase in spectacular time, while Johnson qualified for his second straight National tournament with a 6'9 1/2" leap in the high jump.

Several other Ephs joined Ellison and Johnson in the winners circle. Sophomore Henry Jones continued his impressive performance of recent weeks by winning in the long jumpand taking third in the triple jump. Sophomore Joe McGinn won the Hammer throw, while junior Andre Lopez took the 800m run with a blazing time of 1:53.05. He will head to the Division I New England tournament next week.

Mark Duff '89 placed fourth in the pole vault to complete the list of individual winners, while the 400m relay team won in fine style.

The women's team competed in the ECAC's this weekend, with junior Becky Conklin and freshman Dawn MacCauley continuing to lead the Ephwomen's season. Conklin placed sixth in the 1500m with a school-record time of 4:48.19. MacCauley capped off her great freshman season by taking second in the 400m hurdles.

Crew

Competing against over 100 other colleges in "the largest collegiate regatta in the country," according to coach Peter Wells, the crew teams rowed in the Dad Vail in Philadelphia last weekend, with several boats turning in impressive performances.

The women fared well in all areas, led by the performance of the varsity heavyweights, who placed fourth behind powerhouses Navy, Simmons, and Lowell. The varsity lightweights, although their race had only five entrants, also raced well, leading the whole way before finishing second behind Lowell. The JV boats also raced but were eliminated on the first day of competition.

The men were led in their races by the varsity heavyweight four, which took fifth in the semifinal. The two freshman boats also raced, with the best time turned in by the heavyweights as they finished sixth in their semifinal. The freshman lightweights were eliminated in the first heat, but Wells indicated they rowed well below their ability.

A disappointment to the team was the plight of the varsity lightweight boat, which came into the race with a 6-2 record and ranked fourth in NE. According to Wells, they were placed in an inordinately tough heat and failed to make the semifinals, losing to such schools as UNH and the University of Michigan.

Competition

Continued from Page 3

Why is it we judge each other by the very standards, by the very same oppressive standards we struggle to meet ourselves? Is male attention still our primary concern? What about who we are in the world? What happened to that concern?

One of the most difficult things for me while at Williams has been this lack of a women's community. Women, we're divided ourselves against each other with absurd battlelines. We're all hurting; my hurt may be different from yours — I may not have experienced exactly what you have experienced, but I have been hurt, hurt because of the way I look, hurt because of the image projected onto me.

We have to learn to listen to each other, to listen to the slightly different language in which each of us speaks about our hurts. Some of us are women of color oppressed because the standard of beauty sometimes doesn't even include us, some of us are fat, ignored because thin is in, some of us are lesbians struggling for a definition of sexuality outside the constraints of heterosexuality — but these are differences over which we should not be divided. We can't let ourselves be fractured because of something imposed on us — that is the imposed social construction of our bodies and our female sexuality. This construction of our bodies and our sexuality is something that is done to us, to our bodies; it is not something we have created for ourselves and for our bodies. Our notions of female attractiveness are not constructed for our own pleasure but for another's pleasure.

We need to construct a feminist conception of beauty — a conception in which beauty is not an adjective describing how we look but rather an action verb capturing what we do and who we are in the world.

Melissa Matthes is a senior; this article is excerpted from the speech she delivered at the discussion of "Sexism at Williams."

Anti-Divestment

Continued from Page 3

If Mobil didn't sell oil to the government, someone else would. But there isn't anyone waiting in the wings to aid these community projects or improve black work-place conditions.

We face a choice between progressive companies (like IBM and Mobil) that help the blacks and companies that don't. For me, the choice is obvious.

After clearing away all these myths, what do I have to offer? We do not have the power, short of an armed invasion, to dismantle apartheid. All we can do is eat away at the edges, looking towards a long-term peaceful solution. A non-violent removal of apartheid will take decades. The alternative is a blood-bath involving the slaughter of millions.

Sullivan companies promote peaceful change. It was in part a response to the pressure from U.S. companies and from Washington that South Africa legalised black trade unions in 1979, gave Desmond Tutu a passport to visit the U.S. In 1984, and scrapped the pass laws.

Political power derives from military and economic power. The blacks don't have the former, but we can help them get the latter. And what's probably more important, the whites could learn to trust a black bourgeoisie to govern. They could never live with power in the hands of the rioting ghetto youths of Soweto.

Moral choices derive their relevance from the actual political-economic situation in South Africa. If the presence of Mobil helps the blacks more than it's absence would, than Mobil should stay in South Africa. Period. To say apartheid is evil is true but irrelevant. Washing our hands and turning our backs while Mobil is, however humbly, working for peaceful change is an act of moral masturbation. Plain and simple.

Williams College, as a responsible investor, only acts when the moral issue is clear. In this case, it isn't. Until WSD can prove that forcing companies like Mobil to sell-out will in fact help the blacks in their struggle, it has no business demanding that Williams divest.

Pro-Divestment

Continued from Page 3

Two, South African society is based on racism in the same way that our society is based upon the Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the notions of the Founding Fathers. Apartheid is not a severe version of the racism that populated the American South twenty years ago. Apartheid is a way of life, a shape of consciousness, a social pathology that infects every mind in South Africa. A few thousand jobs handed to South African Blacks will not change anything — no matter what the time frame. To plead for this kind of peaceful, "evolutionary" change is the product of a few too many martinis and a conscience too engaged in self-justification instead of change.

There are, then, no reasons to invest. Many reasons have been presented for divestiture. If we believe in the words that fill our political rhetoric — "liberty" and "equality" and "self-determination" — then we must divest our assets in corporations doing business in South Africa or live within a double-speak lie.

M. Lax

Continued from Page 10

and freshman Tony Fuller each contributed one goal. Senior co-captain Chris Toll chipped in with an assist.

The team obviously suffered from the loss of junior Mike O'Connell, out for the game with an injury. But Lamb gave full credit to the Panthers: "They gear themselves for the tournament in a way that we don't. They were very well-prepared."

The team had prepped for the Middlebury game by topping Hamilton on Thursday by a 13-11 count. "I thought we played very well," said Lamb. "We put a lot of people in there." The Continentals scored eight goals in the second half but couldn't overcome an early Eph advantage.

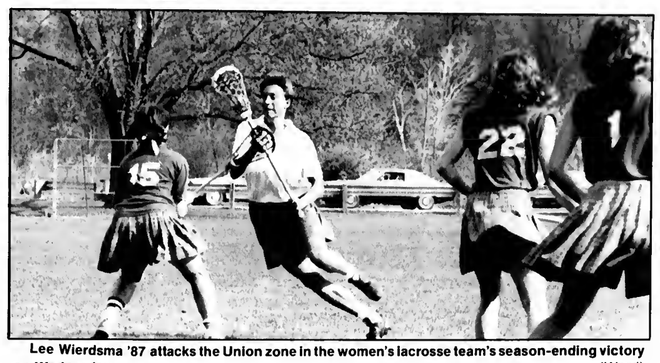
"We're pretty pleased with the season," said Lamb, noting that it was an improvement over last year, when the Ephs finished 6-4 but lost the Little Three and failed to make the ECAC's. "I think we achieved all the goals that we set."

Rugby

Continued from Page 10

ally threatened to score, but could not get the ball into the try zone. Despite the heroic efforts of freshman Claire Manwell, the Ephwomen just couldn't pull off the win.

The C-side, composed almost entirely of first-year players, gained a great deal of experience as they played against Dartmouth. Although they lost 6-0, Willliams played very well; Corinna Lamb '88 helped hold the line together as she passed and ran like a veteran, as did classmate Vicki Rummler. Jacon scored a try as did the scrum, muscling the ball over the line.



The Ball of Inverness Tournament marked the end of the rugby careers of five seniors: Chris Koniezhny, Becky Haile, Sara Suchman, Sara Murphy, and Diana Roberto. These five have been the backbone of the club and will be missed by those who remain.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's recipient is junior John Shaw, who won the Wesleyan game on Saturday with his fifth game-winning RBI of the year, a ninth-inning ground rule double. John, this Bud's for you!

GENUINE GENUINE
this Bud's for you!

Lee Wierdsma '87 attacks the Union zone in the women's lacrosse team's season-ending victory on Wednesday. (Ward)

Union win caps year for Lady Ephs

Scoring three goals in the six-minute overtime to drown the opposition, the women's lacrosse team dropped Union 19-17 in overtime on Wednesday to complete their season with a 7-3 record and their second straight Little Three title.

"We always had the lead," noted coach Chris Larson-Mason. "It looked like we sat back a little bit, but I think we controlled it most of the way."

The Ephwomen led by four or five goals throughout the contest, but fell behind in the final minute before senior co-captain Carrie Cento, in her final game, put through the tying goal to force an overtime period for the second consecutive week. Last week the Ephwomen went into OT before topping Little Three rival Amherst. The overtime itself was not problem, according to Larson-Mason. "We completely controlled the period," she said.

Looking over the season as a whole, Larson-Mason expressed satisfaction about her squad. "It was a great season," she said. "We worked really well together and we were a real positive team."

The coach also looked to the fact that the team "didn't lose to anybody that we should've beaten." The only losses were to Trinity, Tufts, and Middlebury, all involved in post-season play. She also noted the three seniors that will be leaving: Cento, co-captain Laura Rogers, and Sue O'Brien, all of whom have played since freshman year.

Ruggers 1-1 at Inverness tourney

by Anne Schmutz

The annual women's rugby football club's Ball of Inverness Tournament was a smashing success as Williams, Middlebury, and Dartmouth battled for the coveted trophy.

In the A-side tournament, the aggressive efforts of the entire Williams team was not enough to overcome Dartmouth. The game was even throughout both halves as the smaller, but smarter, did remarkably well against the larger, stronger Dartmouth scrum.

Unfortunately, the Big Green scored on a freak breakaway midway through the first half and the Ephwomen had to play a catchup game. Junior Mary Peterson scored the only points of the game for Williams on a penalty kick from just outside the 22-meter line. The game marked the return of junior scrum-half Steph Jacon '87, who played with her usual killer instinct. Scrummies Kate Shaw '87 and SonjaLengnick '88 consistently pulled the ball out of rucks and mauls while senior hooker Diana Roberto stole the ball in scrum-down after scrum-down.

In the game against Middlebury, the Ephwomen found themselves down 8-0, but they eventually won in a kick-off. Two trys in the second half secured the victory. Junior Kerry Cullen peeled off a scrum down, ran a few meters and placed the ball down for the first one. Several plays later, freshman wing Gemma Burgos ran the ball down the sideline to tie the score at eight. The game ended in a tie, but Peterson's golden foot came through once again as Williams topped Middlebury.

The B-side game against Middlebury also ended in a tie, this one a scoreless tie. In a scrum game, Williams continu-

Continued on Page 9

Defense has long been the key to coach Renzie Lamb's lacrosse teams, and here freshman Tony Fuller harasses his Hamilton opponent. (Albright)

Lax falls in ECAC playoffs

Finishing with an 8-4 record, a Little Three title, and a berth in the ECAC playoffs, the men's lacrosse team fell to Middlebury 12-4 on Friday in those playoffs after taking Hamilton 13-11 on Thursday.

"We played pretty well, but they were too well-rested for us," said coach Renzie Lamb about the Middlebury game. "They're a good team, and we had played four games in seven days."

Middlebury jumped out to a 5-0 lead at half, but the third quarter saw the Ephs come alive with four goals, keeping them in the game. But the Panthers jumped on Williams for three quick fourth-period goals, effectively putting the game away.

Co-captain Brad DuPont '86 led the Eph effort with 23 saves in goal. Junior Steve Patterson led the scoring with a goal and an assist, while sophomre Scott Berman, freshman Gordon Pollock

Continued on Page 9

Baseball takes doubleheader with 2 late-inning comebacks

by Stewart Verdery and At Mottur

The baseball team completed the most successful season in Eph history on Saturday by sweeping a doubleheader from the Cardinals of Wesleyan. Trailing 7-0 in the first game and 7-1 in the second, they rallied to take both contests and add to their record for wins in a season.

The first game saw the visiting Cardinals jump out to an early 7-0 lead off Eph starter Pieter Mulder '86. The Ephs struck back for four runs in the fourth, two coming on a homerun to right-center by junior Rick Hedeman. The fired-up squad then took the lead in the fifth with five more runs.

Meanwhile, senior relief ace Bob Hussey was silencing the Wesleyan attack, allowing only a harmless seventh inning run that narrowed the final score to 9-8. Kevin Morris '86 took over for Hussey in the seventh and earned the save.

The unlikely first game comeback was topped only by the heroics of the nightcap. Again Wesleyan gained the early advantage as Mark Borkman slammed a three-run homrun in the second off of freshman Chris Conway; the Cardinals then added four more runs in the fourth to assume a 7-1 lead.

In the sixth, Rob Coakley '86 slammed his sixth homerun of the year—this one a three run shot—narrowing the Cardinal lead to 7-5, setting the Ephs up for their last-gasp seventh inning comeback. They managed to scratch for two more runs to tie the game at seven. The tying run scored on a wild pitch and sent the game into extra innings.

Junior Seth Lawry continued his mound mastery in the eighth, and the Ephs almost ended the marathon doubleheader when Steve Holsten '88 ripped a shot towards left-center with a man on first. However, the ball bounced over the fence for a ground-rule double, halting the lead runner at third. The team could not advance him any farther and the game moved to the ninth.

Senior ace Morris came in to pitch and loaded the bases before inducing Borkman to bounce back to the mound, forcing the lead runner at home and leading to the double play, ending the inning and preserving the tie.

Beisito then singled to lead off the bottom of the ninth, but was erased on Hedeman's fielder's choice. Senior Jeff Lilley singled, advancing Hedeman to second and bringing junior John Shaw to the plate. Shaw doubled to deep right-center to score Hedeman with the winning run for his fifth game-winning RBI. Morris was the beneficiary of the rally, gaining his seventh win against only three losses.

Two days earlier, the team forged yet another improbable come-from-behind victory over a tough Union squad by a score of 12-7. The contest was tight from the start, but it was the Dutchmen of Union who held slim leads for most of the game. And going into the eighth inning, the Ephs trailed 7-5 and were seemingly under the harness of Union pitcher John Horan before designated hitter Shaw doubled for the winning runs and sophomore Scott Garfield held off the Dutchmen.

The win proved to be an important one for the Ephs who had just dropped a tough 4-3 decision to North Adams, as it kept their slim ECAC playoff hopes alive. It came on the heels of a three-game losing streak, and established the momentum that carried over into Saturday's exciting and improbable sweep of the Cardinals.

A win over North Adams tomorrow at Weston field should go a long way toward securing a possible playoff spot for the Ephs, as the Mohawks have won fourteen in a row and are highly ranked in the area.

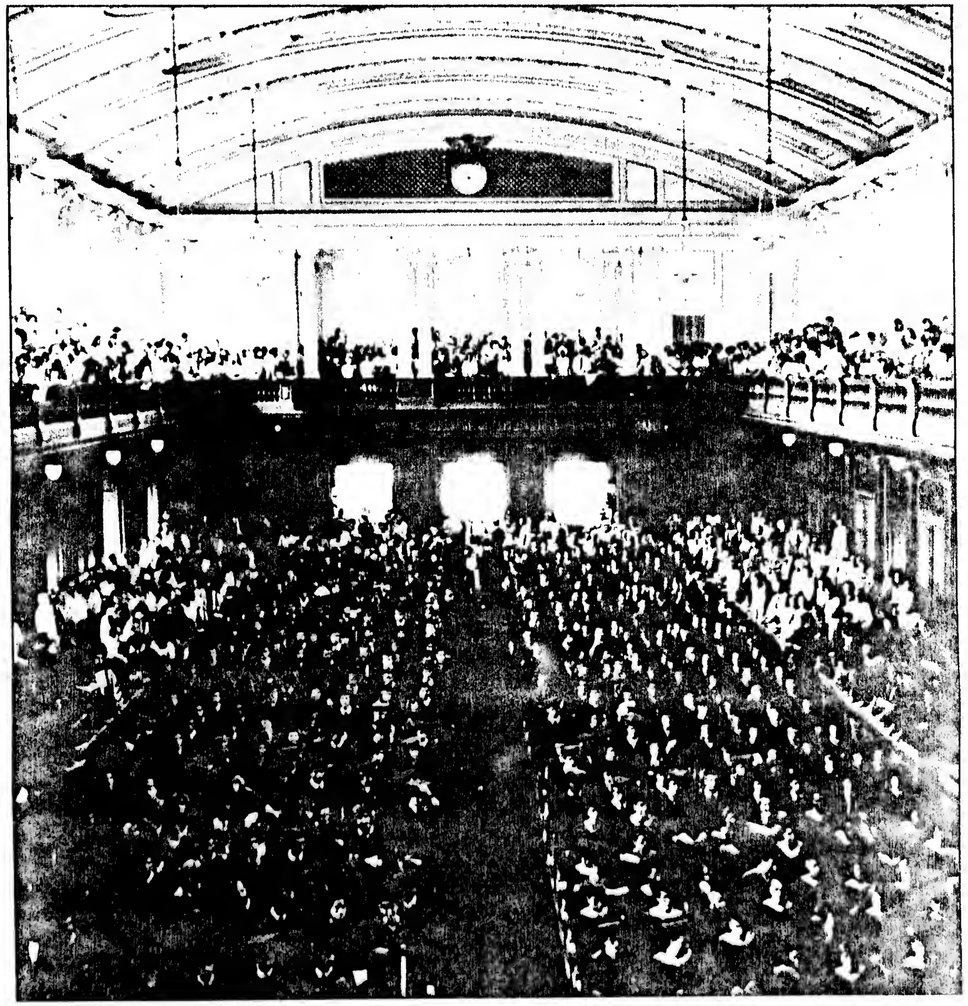
Golfers take second in Little 3

by Rick Orluk

Dropping a tough match to Division I Dartmouth by just six shots, the golf team played their season finale on Saturday, registering a score of 407 to the Big Green's 401. The loss drops the Ephs' record to 7-4 for the year. Earlier in the week they finished second in the Little Three tournament.

In the match, the Ephs were treated to some fine weather, but it was not their day as only one of their top five players posted a score of less than 80. Junior Guy Kurtz tied for medalist honors to lead the squad. The other four Eph scorers were junior Bob Sullivan and Charles Foehl, senior Bill Tierney, and freshman Tim Frechette, all of whom turned in scores of 81-84.

On Wednesday, the Ephs hosted the Little Three Championsips at the Taconic Golf Course. They turned in a disappointing performance, finishing second to archrival Amherst. It was a tough loss for the Ephs to swallow, as they had beaten the Lord Jeffs on two separate occasions earlier in the season, once in the New Englands and once in the NESCAC's.



Putting is 90% of golf, as junior Bob Sullivan tries to prove in the Little Three meet at the Taconic Golf Course last week. (Ward)

The season as a whole was very successful, highlighted by the New England and NESCAC tourneys. Frechette's first-place and medalist finishes in those two matches were very impressive. Coach Rick Pohle was "very pleased with the season and, in particular, the NESCAC championship was a very pleasant surprise."

Juniors Fochi and Tim McKone will join Frechette will participate in the NCAA Division III Championships on May 20.

The Williams Record

June 8, 1986 GRADUATION 1986 USPS 684-680

Co-valedictorians chosen for Class of '86; Oakley bestows bachelors degree on 491 Seniors

On Sunday, June 8, the job market was increased with yet another 491 Williams alumni, all members of the Class of 1986 who received their Bachelor of Arts degrees at the College's 197th Commencement. Masters degrees were awarded to 11 graduate students in the history of art. In addition, 24 Fellows enrolled in a one-year program in economics at the Williams Center for Development Economics received master's degrees in development economics.

Eight member of the undergraduate class graduated summa cum laude. There were also 49 who graduated magna cum laude, and 116 who graduated cum laude. One-hundred and seven qualified for departmental honors.

Activities also included the induction of senior class members into Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi, an afternoon reception at the president's house for seniors and their families, an evening party, and the Ivy exercises.

Featured speakers at the Commencement, which began with a Procession down Main Street at 9:30, included co-valedictorians William M Tierney and Margaret J. Wildrick, Phi Beta Kappa speaker Stephen DeLano, and Class Speaker John S. Bird, Jr. The Commencement address was delivered by Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's national security adviser from 1977-81, and James MacGregor Burns '39, Pulitzer Prize-winning political historian and senior member of the Williams faculty delivered the Baccalaureate address on Saturday June 7. In addition, seven honorary degrees were awarded to leadtng figures in the areas of educatton, biology, journattsm, and itterature.

The Baccalaureate procession began at 4.45 pm on Saturday, June 7. Because of limited seating in Chapin Hall tickets were only available to seniors and their parents. Thirty members of the Williams Choral Society performed a motet by Gabriel Faure, "Cantique de Jean Racine," traditionally sung at the Williams Baccalaureate Service.

Class President Anza Mammen presided over the Ivy Exercises and the watch-dropping ceremony while Dean Fix presented awards and prizes. Class Historian Brian Carpenter and Class Poet Franklin Gill reviewed the Class activities over the past four years and Class Songwriters Randall Kromm and David Latham led the Class in song.

The Ivy Exercises ended with an old Williams tradition—the dropping of a watch from the top of Thompson Memorial Chapel. If the watch breaks, good luck will come to the graduating seniors.

An innovation this year was a spectat "Ltght Night" Commencement Eve celebration on Saturday from 9:00 P.M. to midnight. Lighted walkways led to Baxter Hall where refreshments, music and dancing were offered to seniors, family and friends. Also new this year was a senior-faculty picnic at Cole Field on Wednesday, June 4. The annual senior dance, on Thursday, June 5, was held at Mount Hope Farm.

Editors-in-chief R.P. DeMott and John Schafer
Photography editor Nik Khakee
Editorial assistants Becky Barr, Theresa Fieber, Jocelyn Shadforth

Two Boli

Williams College has ann the first recipients of the
Charles Bolin Fellowsh
Minority Graduate Stu
Roland Anglin, a graduate in Political Science at the sity of Chicago, and Wal
Lubiano, a graduate stuc
English literature at Stanfo

The fellowship prograr established by Francis Oa hts induction as president o ams College last October.
in honor of Williams's firs graduate, who was admit Wtlliams in 1885, the fellow tntended to encourage qu minority students to careers in college teaching.

According to John F. Re
Dean of the Faculty at Wil the fellowships grew out of cern which Williams share other colleges and unive about the underrepresenta minority students, espe
blacks, among those college uates who enter graduate grams in anticipation of car higher education.

Reichert describes the f
ship program as "a very n

Two Bolin fellows named

Williams College has announced the first recipients of the Gaius Charles Bolin Fellowships for Minority Graduate Students: Roland Anglin, a graduate student in Political Science at the University of Chicago, and Waimeema Lubiano, a graduate student in English literature at Stanford.

The fellowship program was established by Francis Oakley at his induction as president of Williams College last October. Named in honor of Williams's first black graduate, who was admitted to Williams in 1885, the fellowship is intended to encourage qualified minority students to pursue careers in college teaching.

According to John F. Reichert, Dean of the Faculty at Williams, the fellowships grew out of a concern which Williams shares with other colleges and universities about the underrepresentation of minority students, especially blacks, among those college graduates who enter graduate programs in anticipation of careers in higher education.

Reichert describes the fellowship program as "a very modest effort toward recognizing and addressing a very serious national problem." He adds that "nothing would please us more than to be joined by other liberal arts colleges offering similar opportunities and similar encouragement."

Williams had originally intended to appoint one Fellow this year, but Reichert said the quality of the applicants was so high that the college decided to appoint two. "Both the large number and the distinguished records of the graduate students who applied for the fellowship, many of whom really deserve and need financial support as they enter the final phase of their Ph.D. studies, persuaded us that we're on the right track" in creating the fellowships, Reichert said. The fellowships provide a stipend of $20,000 with an additional allowance for research-related expenses.

One-course load

Anglin and Lubiano will devote the bulk of their time at Williams to completing their dissertations, but will also teach one single semester course. They will work closely with a Williams faculty member with

Continued on Page 10

Honorary

Williams gives degrees to seven for their work

At Commencement on Sunday, Williams College president Francis Oakley awarded honorary degrees to seven men and women who have distinguished themselves in the areas of government and public service, business, education, medical research, journalism, and writing.

Commencement Speaker Zbigniew Brzezinski will be awarded a Doctor of Laws degree. Brzezinski served as President Carter's National Security Adviser from 1977 1981.

Also receiving Doctor of Laws degrees were Edgar M. Bronfman and Harry T. Edwards. Bronfman, a member of the Williams College Class of 1950, is Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of The Seagram Company Ltd. and President of the World Jewish Congress. Edwards is Circuit Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

Howard M. Goodman, a Williams alumnus and Chief of the Department of Molecular Biology at the Massachusetts General Hospital, was awarded a Doctor of Science degree.

Meg Greenfield, a Pulitzer Prize-winning editor for "The Washington Post," and a columnist for "Newsweek," received the Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

Two distinguished writers, Ved Parkash Mehta, a staff writer for "The New Yorker" magazine, and Cynthia Ozick, best-known for her novels and short stories, were awarded Doctor of Letters degrees.

Distiller/philanthropist

Bronfman has developed The Seagram Company into the world's leading producer of spirits and wines. In addition to business responsibilities, he has devoted considerable time and energy to numerous philanthropic causes including the World Jewish Congress (WJC) of which he has served as president since 1980. He has been especially concerned about the situation of Soviet Jews, and last year became the first WJC leader ever to be invited to the Soviet Union.

Bronfman is also President of the Samuel Bronfman Foundation, Honorary Chairman of the United Jewish Appeal/Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, and Chairman of the American Friends of Beth Hatefutsoth (Museum of the Jewish Diaspora) and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith New York Appeal. He is a trustee or member of various organizations, including the United Negro College Fund, U.S.-U.S.S.R. Trade & Economic Council, Inc., Salk Institute for Biological Studies, American Jewish Congress, Committee for Economic Development and the National Urban League.

Legal educator

Before his appointment to the United States Court of Appeals, Judge Harry T. Edwards taught law for ten years, specializing in labor arbitration, collective bargaining, labor relations, and higher education law. He has written more than 50 articles on such issues as equal employment opportunity, affirmative action, labor arbitration, and the judicial process, and is co-author of four books, including "Collective Bargaining and Labor Arbitration" (1979), and "Education and the Law (1979)."

Edwards graduated from Cornell University in 1962 and the University of Michigan Law School in 1965. He has taught at the University of Michigan Law School from 1970-75 and 1977-80, and at Harvard Law School from 1975-77, and presently teaches part time at Harvard Law School, Duke Law School and Georgetown Law Center.

Hormone production

Howard M. Goodman has conducted significant research in the field of genetic engineering. His work has focused on using recombinant DNA techniques to produce hormones such as insulin and human growth hormone in the laboratory. Goodman graduated from Williams in 1960 and earned a Ph.D. in biophysics from M.I.T. in 1964. He spent three years at the Medical Research Council Unit on Molecular Biology in Cambridge, England, and did further postgraduate work at the Institut de Biologie Moleculaire in Geneva.

Continued on Page 9

Former advisor addresses seniors, Burns gives Baccalaureate speech

Zbigniew Brzezinski, former assistant to the president for national security affairs, spoke on Sunday at the 197th Williams College Commencement. Pulitzer Prize-winning political historian James MacGregor Burns delivered Saturday's Baccalaureate address.

Brzezinski, Herbert Lehman Professor of Government at Columbia University and a Counselor at the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies, spoke on the subject "From Strategic Anxieties to Philosophical Dilemmas."

Burn's speech was on "Beyond the Educated Vision." He is the Woodrow Wilson Professor of Government and senior member of the Williams faculty.

Born in Warsaw, Poland, Brzezinski moved to Canada with his family in 1938 and became a naturalized US citizen in 1958. He received B.A. and M.A. degrees from McGill University in 1949 and 1950, and a Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1953. He was awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at Commencement, as his son Ian was receiving a bachelor's degree.

Zbigniew Brzezinski

Govt. service

Brzezinski taught at Harvard from 1953-60 before joining the Columbia faculty in 1961. His career as an educator has been complemented by significant public and government service as well as extensive writing on international politics for American and foreign magazines. He wrote a regular column for "Newsweek" from 1970-72, and has often been interviewed on major television current affairs programs.

In 1966 Brzezinski served as a member of the Policy Planning Council of the Department of State. He had already been acclaimed as an expert on communism for his journal articles and for his early books, which included "Politics in Soviet Totalitarianism" (1956), and "The Soviet Bloc: Unity and Conflict" (1960).

In 1968 Brzezinski directed the Foreign Policy Task Force for Vice President Humphrey during the presidential campaign. He served as director of the Trilateral Commission, formed in 1973 to encourage closer coordination between the United States, Western Europe and Japan, until 1976.

As President Carter's national security adviser from 1977-81, Brzezinski played a key role in the normalization of US-Chinese relations. For this, and for his contribution to US human rights and national security policies, he was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1981. "Power and Principle: Memoirs of the National Security Adviser," published in 1983, describes and analyzes his experiences.

Brzezinski is a Trustee of Freedom House, a member of the Boards of Directors of the Atlantic Council and the International Parliamentary Group for Human Rights in the Soviet Union, and is honorary chairman of the Americares Foundation.

Distinguished Democrat

Burns, Woodrow Wilson Professor of Government and a 1939 graduate of Williams is one of the country's most distinguished political scientists. He has taught and written for nearly a half-century, completing more than a dozen books on American history and politics. In addition he has enjoyed a long and active association with Democratic Party politics, including winning the nomination as the 1958 candidate for Congress from the Massachusetts First District.

As an undergraduate at Williams he served as editor of both the Record and a literary magazine. After graduating from Williams and serving as a combat historian in the Army, Burns earned a Ph.D. from Harvard in 1947.

Returning to Williamstown, Burns resumed his interest in practical politics, serving as a delegate to the 1952, 1956, 1960, and 1964 Democratic National Conventions. He was a delegate to the National Charter Commission of the Democratic Party in Kansas City in 1974 and to the Charter Commission of the Massachusetts Democratic Party in 1979.

Burns has also been active in civil liberties, civil rights and labor organizations, and in the 1950s headed the Berkshire County Commission Against Discrimination.

Pulitzer prize

Among his best known books are his biographies of Franklin D. Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy. "Roosevelt: The Lion and the Fox," the first volume of his two-volume biography of Roosevelt, won Burns both a Tamiment Institute Prize in 1956 and a Woodrow Wilson Prize in 1957. The second volume, "Roosevelt: The Crucible of Freedom," published in 1970, earned him a Pulitzer Prize, the 1970 National Book Award for history and biography, and the 1971 Frances Parkman Prize. He also received the Sarah Josepha Award for general literary work in 1979.

James MacGregor Burns

Burns is co-author of "Government by the People," a widely-used American government text, and has written numerous reviews and articles for such publications as "Harpers," "Life," "Newsweek," and "The New York Times Magazine." He has lectured widely in the United States, Europe, the Soviet Union, and India. He is former president of the American Political Science Association and the International Society of Political Psychology.

Currently, with Richard B. Morris, Burns is co-chairman of Project 87, a program to encourage a serious commemoration of the drafting of the Constitution, sponsored by the American Historical Association and the American Political Science Association.

Secondary teachers rewarded

Williams College has announced the four winners of its annual Olmsted prizes for excellence in secondary school teaching.

This year's recipients are Robert D. Hires, an English teacher at Loyola Academy in Wilmette, Ill.; Bruce E. Mitchell, an English teacher at Evanston Township High School in Evanston, Ill.; Jerry Opbroek, a biology and chemistry teacher at Mitchell Senior High School in Mitchell, S. Dak.; and Carole Stearns, Chairperson of the Science Department at Horace Mann School in the Bronx, N.Y. All four have been invited to attend the college's 197th Commencement on June 8 in formal recognition of their achievements.

The Olmsted Prize is a $1,000 award to each teacher and $500 to each of their schools. The fund for the awards was established three years ago through the estate of George Olmsted, Jr., a 1924 Williams graduate who died in 1976, as well as through gifts from his wife Frances, of Chestnut Hill, Mass.

Williams President Francis Oakley said that the four Olmsted Prize winners "embody the creativity and dedication that invigorates secondary school teaching at its best—teaching that enables students to apply the theoretical and practical skills they have learned to develop into thoughtful, concerned and productive individuals. These teachers deserve our admiration and thanks."

Seniors at Williams are asked to nominate former secondary school teachers whom they feel have contributed significantly to their intellectual and personal growth. A committee of faculty, staff, and Williams College juniors made the final selection. The seniors who nominated the winners will be the primary hosts for the recipients during Commencement weekend.

The selection committee was chaired by Fred Stocking, Emeritus Professor of English. The committee members were Anne R. Skinner, chemistry, Norman R. Petersen Jr., religion, Nancy J. McIntire, Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action and Government Relations, and juniors Ann M.Bechan, Stephen W. Skavlem, and Michael E. Weber.

Williams-Clark program in Art

Eleven students who have completed a two-year course of study in the history of art were awarded Master of Arts degrees at Williams College's 197th Commencement on Sunday, June 8.

Williams offers the History of Art Program along with the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute in Williamstown. Many of the graduates of the program will go on to one-year curatorial internships at museums, where they will receive the additional practical training they need to continue in the field. Other graduates will go on to a Ph.D. program in art history.

Brent Benjamin has been named the Robert Sterling Clark Fellow for the Class of 1986. "Mr. Benjamin already holds a Master of Architecture degree from Rice University. He has been an outstanding student in his two years here, distinguishing himself especially in the study of 17th century Baroque art," says Samuel Y. Edgerton, Director of the program. According to Edgerton, Benjamin plans to continue with graduate work and next year will commence his studies towards the degree of Doctor of Philosophy degree in New York City at the Institute of Fine Arts of New York University

Other graduates of the program are: Sarah D. Cash of Mount Carmel, Conn.; Laura A. Coyle of Washington, D.C.; Lucy Winters Durkin of Sandy Hook, Conn.; Carolyn Halpin-Healy of Cambridge, Mass.; Zheng Hu of Shanghai, China; Ann H. Slimmon of West Hartford, Conn; Mark D. Stansbury-O'Donnell of Williamstown; Elizabeth I. Triplett of Holden, Maine; Susan V. Webster of Davis, California; and Vincent P. Carnevale of Everett, Mass.

Masters in development economics for 24 in CDE

After spending the year as Fellows at the Williams Center for Development Economics, twenty-one graduate students from various developing countries were awarded degrees and certificates in developmental economics at Sunday's Commencement.

The CDE program is offered to students from developing countries who have had some experience in business or government. It focuses on the economic problems and issues which face developing nations.

The graduates are: Joshua Oyeniram Ajewole, of Nigeria; Md. Abdul Aziz, of Bangladesh; Lebani Ndanda Cephas, of Botswana; Ma. Theresa S. Coronel, of the Philippines; Giulio Francesco De Feudis Nunez, of Peru; Ali El Hariri M. Ekbal, of Egypt; Sorie Alieu Badara Fofana, of Sierra Leone; Harisman, of Indonesia; Detty Hindrati Hinuri, also of Indonesia; Chidinma Ngozi Ikpechukwu, of Nigeria; Nilufar Jahan, of Bangladesh; Ershadullah Khan, also of Bangladesh; and Byung Joo Kim, of Korea.

Other candidates are Jackson Njau Kinjanjui, of Kenya; Leonard Leon Regy Mushi Kisarika, of Tanzania; Camilo Jose Lim, Jr., of the Philippines; Muhammad Abul Quasem, of Bangladesh; Raja Abdul Hameed, of Pakistan; Gilda B. Reyes, of the Philippines; Rubiah Hj. Abd. Rahman, of Malaysia; S. M. Adil Shah, of Pakistan; Shen Kang, of China; Jae Joong Yun, of Korea; and Mohd. Zaki Bin Abdullah, of Malaysia.

Research scientists' society honors Division III students

Seventeen Williams College seniors have been elected to Associate membership in Sigma Xi, a national scientific honorary society. Lawrence J. Kaplan, professor of chemistry and president of the Williams Sigma Xi club, inducted the new members into the society in a ceremony in the Bronfman Mathematics Library on Saturday, June 7.

Students are elected to Sigma Xi based on their outstanding ability and motivation for research as demonstrated through their work at Williams, particularly in thesis and independent study investigations. About 25 percent of the senior science majors who have carried out honors research achieve this award. The recipients include students from every Williams department in science and mathematics.

The newly elected Sigma Xi members are: Barbara Brott of Winnetka, Ill., a biology major; Barbara Lynn Chalfonte of North Adams, Mass., a psychology major; Charles Wheaton Congdon of Pittsfield, Mass., a physics and astronomy double major; Barbara A. Feeney of Portland, Maine, a psychology major; Martin V. Hildebrand of Penn Wynne, Pa., a mathematics and physics double major; Brian Hare of Waterloo, Iowa, a chemistry major; and Barbara J. Kerker of Flushing, N.Y., a chemistry major.

Also: Edwin Fremont Ladd of Bristol, Conn., a physics and astronomy double major; Thomas J. Lydon of Framingham, Mass., a physics and astronomy double major; Kenneth Giles MacLeod of Montchanin, Del., a geology major; Ellen Ann Markstein of Springfield, N.J., a biology major; Marlene E. Morrison of Evanston, Ill., a chemistry major; Nathan Reynolds Newbury of Wayland, Mass., a physics major; Thomas M. Pingree of Walpole, Mass., a psychology major; Jon Gary Riecke of Lincoln, Neb., a mathematics major; Andrew E. Schwentker of Pittsburgh, Pa.; and David F. Skinner of Kingston, Ont., a geology major.

CONGRATULATIONS
CLASS OF '86
From
A&T Video
your Campus Video Center
Dawn Bryant Cheri Dragotta Andrian Sabborn
Kathy Flanagan

GRADUATE TO GOLD

CLASS RINGS at
The
WILLIAMS COOP
25 Spring St.

BETTE'S
LIFE AND TIMES
PUBLIC • VICTUALS
Building Tomorrow's Leaders Today
27 Spring Street
Open 7 days

1985-86 The Y

by Dave Scheibe
and John Schafer

Those of you who read last year's "Year in Review" by John "Converse" Clayton and Charles "Aloha" Mitchell noticed that those two pillars of the Williams community characterized 1984-85 as one of the few years in recent memory to go by without a cause. At the (admittedly small) risk of confusing Clates and Chasmo with James Dean and giving every American Studies major a splitting headache, we have to tell you that 1985-86 was also a Year Without a Cause.

Of course, it is entirely possible that John and Chas may have simply lost the real Cause of 85 in the case of Labatt's they drank while writing the article. We thought that if you've got to find an excuse for failing to come up with a unifying idea for a year, their excuse was as good as any. Our own case of beer quickly appeared.

We should really defend ourselves. It's not that we didn't try. We did have a few ideas. We thought of the Year of the Righteously Indignant Letter to the Record, but thought that would make everyone who wrote a letter look too important. The Year of the Stupid Drinking Age was as close as any to winning, but we figured that would make it seem as if there was a Drinking Problem at Williams. Stress was a contender last year, but by now we realize that it was an issue thought up by the Infirmary (sorry, Health Center) to get rid of a surplus of Tylenol with codeine, so that was out too. We also toyed with the idea of the Year of the Gaudino Committee, but realized they had given themselves more than enough recognition already. We finally admitted to ourselves what you are about to find out, that there was no cause, and we got to write whatever we wanted. Here, then, is what we happened to remember about President Oakley's first year.

September

Let's face it. New presidents, new buildings, no one noticed for a while. The Log was gone. Over the summer, the wisdom of the Commonwealth had decreed that yea, there would be no drinking by those under the ripe age of 21. The Log opened with a floor smoother and shinier than the Lasell basketball court, a two-drink limit, and a policy of carding everyone younger than Noah. A cheese wheel the size of Rhode Island attracted patrons for a few nights, but after a week the novelty wore off and the Log's attendance was, uh, thin. In other construction news, Baxter had been renovated in the train station motif and the new gym had (surprise!) been named for President Chandler.

Kicking off the letter-writing trend, there was infuriation over the cover of the phone book, which portrayed a beach scene involving a woman wearing a Williams sweatshirt and a bathing suit. Detractors termed the cover "exploitative and appalling," but emerged sheepish when it was discovered that the model herself had designed the cover. In his own moving letter to the editor, student spokesman Hart Murphy '88 noted that if the complainers wanted an environment where women's bodies should be concealed, they should go to Iran.

October

Those cute little freshmen, we discovered, had set admissions records for high scores on the SAT's and AP exams. Watching them at a party, you'd never know it. In another story dealing with a lot of wind, we battened the hatches for Hurricane Gloria, which turned out to be little more than an excuse to take the day off and play mud football.

The situation at the Log stayed pretty much the same. Attendance per night reached highs in the single digits. On a reassuring note, we found out that the deans are not told when drunk students stay at the Infirmary (Health Center). If an audience includes any state legislators, we should tell you that all such students were in their thirties.

Convocation/Inauguration. The College gathered to install a president with an Oxford accent and a Roget's vocabulary. Neither of us was there, so ask the person next to you what happened. (We know from past experience with our leader's speeches that attendance is no guarantee of comprehension.) We did notice that some of those auspicious freshmen mentioned earlier had hung a sign at Sage A in tribute to President Oakley's inauguration and his sterling command of the English language. The sign said: "Way to go Frank!" 'Nuff said.

A 40-foot bottle of Liquid Tide appeared in the Quad for Freshmen Parents' Weekend. Rumors that an irate mother had been attacked by her son's pyramid were unconfirmed.

November

Observing the true spirit of a liberal education, Defector football coach Jim Ostendarp cancelled plans to broadcast the 100th Williams-Amherst game on ESPN. In a truly insightful comment, "the Darp" said, "If they want to be on TV, they can write a letter to Dr. Ruth." The consensus here was that the water was getting bad down in the valley and had unfavorably affected Defector Numero Uno. College spokesman Hart Murphy noted that if the Darp wanted to censor TV, he should go to Iran.

We lost The Game, but that didn't matter because there was a more important victory. After a two-year hiatus from reality, U.S. News and World Report finally came to its senses and admitted that Williams was really the finest small college in the country. Also, stout Ephmen managed to keep the Weston Field goalposts from going to Amherst, where it was reported they were needed to build a gym. Neither the Defectors nor the Darp commented.

Police Chief Joseph Zolto noted that he had received more complaints about College students making a drunken nuisance of themselves this year than ever before. Those that hinted this might be because students now drank all over campus instead of at the Log quickly and mysteriously vanished. While decadence thrived on the streets, the College announced that there would be none of the traditional decadence over fall reading period, since this will soon cease to exist. At the same time, Thanksgiving break is to be lengthened to a week, keeping our total number of vacation days constant. This is why you are here on June 8th instead of May 18th.

December

Nothing much happened. We were only here for two weeks anyway, and most of that was exams. Seniors don't have to worry about those anymore, so who cares?

January

Try to remember that this was

ear In Review

Winter Study, so details may be sketchy. The two-drink limit at the Log was removed, and the establishment immediately filled up. This was of little surprise to the College Council, which had been supporting such a move since October. Attendance dropped off again when those who could drink realized that they had to pay for their drinks, a procedure no one seemed to remember at the old Log. Some wondered whether Williams alum and Secretary of Education William Bennett would rule this expenditure a needless frivolity like "the car, the stereo, and three weeks at the beach."

The Health Center (not the Infirmary anymore...we apparently no longer get infirm) opened at the end of Hoxsey St. next to world-renowned Jake House, known as one of the quieter spots off campus. No one could figure out if this was bad because of the noise factor or good because of the proximity of the Jakes to medical help in times of need. Dagmar Bubriski could not be reached for comment.

The College Council unveiled a program to raise social awareness on campus. A loud snap was heard the next morning as all students achieved said awareness at the same moment, blowing a circuit breaker. Also on the awareness front, Director of Admissions Phil Stalth said he thought the U.S. News ranking had come out too late and would not affect applications. The other theory, of course, is that there was no difference at all because applicants already knew that the magazine had made a mistake two years before. Hart Murphy pointed out that if they didn't want to come here, there was always Iran.

February

One word. Gaudino. The Gaudino Committee, chaired and selected by Kurt Tauber, loosed two bombshells on us this month. First, the junta (whoops) announced that theme houses would be all the rage next year. The Record reported the story, including the detail that the plan was to eliminate a co-op, only the most popular type of housing on campus. Featured with the story was a picture of Goodrich co-op, known to anyone with a clue as Turtle Cottage. The residents of Turtle Cottage promptly noted that they already had formed a corporate interview theme house anyway.

Toying further with the housing system, the Committee announced its plans for a College within a College, which will place forty or fifty freshmen taking the same classes in two entries. Coincidentally, the deans announced that one of the Dodd satellite houses would become a freshman entry. Student objections to the theme house and the Dodd proposal were strong enough that those decisions were, uh, reconsidered later in the month. 'Nuff said about Gaudino, eh? Stay tuned next year for Gaudino II; just when you thought it was safe to be an anti-intellectual ....

The Vermont drinking age was raised to 21 effective in July. Governor Madeline Kunin said Vermont was becoming a barroom for 18 to 20 year olds from other states. Not a single freshman could be reached for comment, but sales of large capacity refrigerators were reported up in the Northern Berkshires.

The library installed a security system to prevent book loss. Enterprising students soon found out that Lucy, the campus golden retriever, set the alarm off. A sculpture of a Roman vomitorium won the Winter Carnival contest. We'll leave that one alone. The SAC spring concert was cancelled for lack of funds. Hans Humes was spotted on a beach in Exuma. No one really cared about the concert because it would have been played in the hockey rink, which has the acoustics of a plastic garbage can.

March

In a mercy ruling, the Williamstown building inspector announced that the top two floors of Hopkins Hall could no longer be used as classrooms. This came as a disappointment for students who had been filling P.E. requirements by climbing the stairs to the classrooms.

College Council elections were held, pitting career undergraduate politician Amy Jeffress against rugby's own Mark "Goat" Tompkins. The choice was the wimpy status quo or Bacchus and beer practice. Jeffress won in a runoff. CC also mourned the graduation of president Mammen P. Mammen, who besides providing strong and dedicated leadership, had a really fun name.

April

Spring Break came and went, and as far as we can tell, everyone made it back. Students living on Hoxsey St. complained in a town meeting about the noise and nuisance created by the residents living there. Dagmar Bubriski said students weren't human beings, but Paul Williams claimed he was a nice person — what hot debates they have in town meetings! While communication between residents and students was ailing, Dean Fix met with College Council to discuss lack of communication between students and administration. This time the issue came to a head because of the Council's, the Record's, and most thinking students' objection to the theme house and freshman college proposals. Weeks earlier, the faculty had passed the freshman college proposal even though student opinion indicated the idea would be about as popular as Lentil Surprise at Baxter.

The year was far from over. In a freak of coincidence, shanties sprouted magically on Baxter lawn just in time for Parents' Weekend. Rumor has it that Director of Buildings and Grounds Winthrop Wassenar had heard that no college should be without the little suckers and had them installed so the 'rents would know their kids were at a real college. Mom and Dad oohed and ahhed and a week later, the shantles were gone, leaving only a little yellow grass as a reminder that our collective consciousness had been raised. As far as we know, Hart Murphy had nothing to say.

May

Professor Thomas Jorling was elected to the Williamstown Board of Selectmen and was overheard wandering around campus mumbling something about Hoxsey Street and tear gas. Those dedicated to the destruction of body and mind on the last day of classes took part in the Dodd Daytona, a one-mile chug-n-run quest to eradicate dehydration in our lifetimes.

Continued on Page 9

College hands out '86 awards

Horace F. Clark Fellowships
Martin V. Hildebrand '86
Kenneth I. Kersch '86
Sarah B. Thurber '86

Francis S. Hutchins Fellowships
Dominic C. Kulik '86
Mammen P. Mammen '86

Hubbard Hutchinson Memorial Fellowship
Lisa A. Mazzotte '86
Sebastian Pugliese '86

Lansing Fellowship in Latin and Greek
Robin S. Lorsch '86

Herchel Smith Fellowships
Katherine M. Elliot '86
Thomas J. Lydon '86
Bruce P. Smith '86

Williams-in-Hong Kong Teaching Fellowship
Lisa L. Jayne '86

Carroll A. Wilson Fellowship
David A. Deakin '86

William Bradford Turner Citizenship Prize
David P. O'Keeffe '86

Allan L. Grosvenor Memorial Award
Martin S. White '87

Academy Of American Poets Prize
Julie M. Convisser '86

Adriance Prize In Chemistry
William M. Tierney '86

Benedict Prizes
In Biology
First Prize: Margaret K. Nelson '86
Second Prize: Barbara K. Brott '86
In French
David F. Desmond, Jr.'86
Timothy J. Walsh '86
In German
Eugene L. Kim '87
Timothy D. Pittman '87
In Greek
First Prize: Thomas J. Lydon '86
Second Prize: Daniel E. Reynolds '86
In History
First Prize: Bruce P. Smith '86
Second Prize: Erik L. Knutzen '86
In Latin
First Prize: Eric P. English '86
Second Prize: Ann M. Bechan '87
In Mathematics
Elizabeth J. Camp '88
Benjamin J. Miller '88

Gaius C. Bolin Essay Prize In Afro-American Studies
Stephen A. Shapiro '86

W. Marriott Canby Athletic Scholarship Prize
William M. Tierney '86

David T. Clark Prize In Latin
Margot L. Cowan '89

Class of 1925 Women's Scholar Athlete Prize
Laura E. Rogers '86

James B. Conant-Nathan R. Harrington Prize In Biology
George F. Barker '86

Henry R. Conger Memorial Literary Prize
Julie M. Convisser '86

Doris deKeyserlingk Prize In Russian
Dennis F. Dunne '86
Paul O. Ketro '86

Garrett W. DeVries Memorial Prize In Spanish
Nancy K. Christoph '86

Sherwood O. Dickerman Memorial Prize In Greek
Elise A. Friedland '88

Freeman Foote Prize In Geology
David F. Skinner '86

Sam Goldberg Prizes
In Computer Science
David H. Kleit '86
In Mathematics
John D. Renneisen '86

Arthur B. Graves Essay Prizes
In Art
Susan I. Michalski '86
In Economics
Mark B. Andrejevic '86
Donald C. Hovey '86
In History
Bruce P. Smith '86
In Philosophy
Ian Eagleson '86
In Political Science
Christopher J. McGuire '86
In Religion
Clifford H. Ruprecht '86

Graves Prize for Delivery of Essay
David P. Applebaum '86
Darryl K. Shaper '86

Fredrick Hagedorn, Jr. Premedical Prize
Samuel Cho '86

Thomas G. Hardie III Prize In Environmental Studies
Anne D. Southworth '86
Nicholas W. VanAelstyn '86

C. David Harris, Jr. Prize In Political Science
Michael H. Goldstein '88

Willard E. Hoyt, Jr. Memorial Scholar Athlete Prize
Thomas J. Lydon '86

Arthur Judson Prize In Music
Richard J. Miller, Jr. '86

Arthur C. Kaufman Prize In English
Steven T. Massimilla '86

Jack Larned International Management Prizes
Joshua Oyeniram Ajewole, M.A.D.E. 1986
Gilda B. Reyes, M.A.D.E. 1986
Jae Joong Yun, M.A.D.E. 1986

Richard Lathers Essay Prize And Medal In Government
Nicholas W. VanAelstyn '86

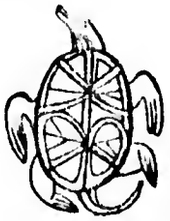
David N. Major Prize In Geology
Thomas H. Goodspeed '86

Leverett Mears Prize In Chemistry
Robert S. Kaplinsky '86
Marlene E. Morrison '86

Willis I. Milham Prize In Astronomy
Edwin F. Ladd '86
Thomas J. Lydon '86

John W. Miller Prize in Philosophy
Edward D. Stein '87

Purple Key Trophy
Caroline L. Cento '86
Jeffrey McEvoy '86



James L. Rice Prizes In Classical Languages
In Greek
Dominic C. Kulik '86

Continued on Page 9

WILLIAMS SHOP
Graduation Gift Ideas
—Traditional Williams Chairs by Bent Bros.
—Watches
—Bookends
—Banners
—Reverse Weave Sweatshirts

Goff's Sports, inc.

CONGRATULATIONS
CLASS OF 1986
15 Spring St., (413) 458-5885
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30, Thurs. Til 8:30, Sun 12-4

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123-3548 PHONE 413-458-5717

Congratulations and Thank You to all the '86 graduates

Review

Continued from Page 7

The audience in the Quad was immense and encouraging, but seemed a little overly concerned with the participants' running boots, as it were.

Music Fest '86 was staged in a further effort to keep everyone out of Jesup and the library and to sacrifice a few brain cells before exams. The Housing Office announced that it did not have rooms for about forty students next year but said that negotiations were underway to rebuild the shanties.

Basically, there weren't enough parties. Somehow, final exams and papers fell into the framework, but no one seemed to notice or care.

June

Yes, June. There is something you should understand about June, and that is that we are trying to write the history of June before it has happened, under the influence of a great deal of America's Only Fire Brewed Beer. June sees the final days of the Class of 1986 as undergraduates. We will never again (we hope) run in the Dodd Daytona. We will not have to stay up late writing papers for courses like The Origins and History of Medieval Pickles. We will not have to talk our way out of little red parking tickets, or sneak into dining halls when we have forgotten our ID's. We will not have to worry about whether the heating plant will come on before our plants freeze. We are relieved, and we, for now, are leaving. We will be back mainly so that we can get carded at the Log and feel young again. See ya then.

Scheibe '86, former photo editor of the Record, took a lot of pictures, but we never let him do any writing. Schafer '87 hasn't even had his senior year to reflect on, but he wanted some beer.

Prizes

Continued from Page 8

In Latin
Robin S. Lorsch '86

Royal Society Of Arts Silver Medal In Art
Kelly S. Andrews '86

Bruce Sanderson Prize In Architecture
Benjamin W. Pinney '86
Richard W. Song '86

Ruth S. Sanford Prize In Theatre
Martha A. Hughes '86

Sentinels Of The Republic Essay Prize In Government
Eric D. Adelstein '87

Edward G. Shumway Prize In English
Margaret J. Wildrick '86

Elizur Smith Rhetorical Prize
Alexander G. Boutselis '88

Howard P. Stabler Prize In Physics
Nathan R. Newbury '86

Shirley Stanton Prize In Music
Valerie C. Anastasio '86

Stanley R. Strauss Prize In English
Mark H. Averitt '86

William B. Turner Prize In American History
Michael F. Zullas '86

Carl I. Van Duyne Prize In Economics
Amy S. Salsbury '87

Benjamin B. Wainwright Prize In English
Bettina U. Roth '86

Harold H. Warren Prize In Chemistry
Philip A. Linden '88

Honorary Degrees

Continued from Page 3

In 1970, he accepted a position at the University of California at San Francisco. In 1981 he became chief of the newly-established department of molecular biology at Massachusetts General Hospital, teaching concurrently in the depa-tment of genetics at Harvard Medical School.

Pulitzer winner

Meg Greenfield, a 1952 summa cum laude graduate of Smith College, joined "The Washington Post" in 1968, and was appointed deputy editor of the editorial page in 1969. She won the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing in 1978. In 1979 she became editor of the editorial page. Since 1974 she has also written a bi-weekly column for "Newsweek".

Greenfield writes about current national and international events and issues. Her recent "Newsweek" columns have covered issues ranging from President Reagan and the Press to the importance of getting straight answers in the Challenger disaster investigation. She is a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Indian Writer

Ved Parkash Mehta, born in 1934 in Lahore, India (now Pakistan) was educated in the United States and England, and writes about events and personalities in all three countries. Totally blind since the age of three due to meningitis, Mehta came to the United States in 1949 to attend the Arkansas State School for the Blind. He later attended Pomona College, earning a B.A. degree with honors in Modern History in 1959, and Harvard University, where he was awarded a master's degree in 1961.

Mehta writes both fiction and nonfiction about religion, philosophy, and linguistics, and has also written extensively about his family and childhood. His first book, "Face to Face," written when he was 20, is an autobiography.

Among his other books are "Fly and the Fly-Bottle" (1963), "Mahatma Gandhi and his Apostles" (1977), and "The New India" (1978). His autobiographical series, about his family, includes "Daddyji" (1972), "Mamaji" (1979), "Vedi" (1982), and "The Ledge Between the Streams" (1984).

Mehta wrote and commentated for a television documentary, "Chachaji: My Poor Relation," about his father's elderly cousin. Produced by PBS in 1978, it won the DuPont Columbia Award for Excellence in Broadcast Journalism.

Writer/translator

Cynthia Ozick's first published work was a novel, "Trust," in 1966. Her second novel, "The Cannibal Galaxy," was published in 1983. In between, Ozick wrote many short stories, critical essays, poems and reviews for such magazines as "Commentary," "The New Yorker," and "Harpers." She has also published several collections of her work, "The Pagan Rabbi and Other Stories" (1971), "Bloodshed and Three Novellas" (1976), "Levitation: Five Fictions" (1982), and "Art and Ardor: Essays" (1983).

Ozick is concerned with the issue of retaining one's identity as a Jew in the modern world. Her work has been translated into 10 languages, and she herself translates works of Yiddish literature into English.

Williams Rocker - $150.00

Your Williams College CHAIRS

Will conform with any trend

Order from WILLIAMS CO-OP,
25 Spring St., Williamstown, Mass.

Whether your home, office, or studio follows the so-called conventional or modern trend, these beautiful chairs will lend themselves in perfect harmony. For these chairs, which come in black, with gold trim, have a proper place in the conventional or modern setting.

You have always admired these chairs for their beauty in design and comfort . . . and now . . . you may own one with that added "Personal Touch" . . . The College Seal has been atractively screened, in gold, to the front of these chairs.

Chairs shipped F.O.B. Williamstown
Freight may be Prepaid

Williams Co-op

Williams Arm Chair with Cherry Arms - $155.00

Bolin fellows

Continued from Page 3

related interests, and become involved with the life of the college. "But the purpose of the fellowship is to enable them to complete their dissertations," Reicherts says, "so their teaching responsibility is expected to dovetail with their research, and is limited to one course."

Reichert acknowledged that there are already other generous minority graduate fellowships, such as those sponsored by the Ford Foundation, the National Science Foundation. However, he notes, those fellowships tend to provide funding for continuing study at the student's home university. "Ours is distinctive," Reichert says, "in that it is designed to share with the fellows the special pleasures afforded by teaching and doing research at a small liberal arts college, in a close-knit community of excellent students and dedicated, productive teachers and scholars."

Anglin's dissertation will involve looking at industrial revenue bonds from the perspective of economic development in changing industrial capitalism. His research and teaching interests include the political economy of the black ghetto and organizational theory. He is currently a researcher for the Chicago Urban League, and is teaching courses at Roosevelt University on comparative politics and on the politics of race in Chicago. Anglin has also been a consultant to Chicago's Department of Economic Development. He graduated from Brooklyn College in 1981 and earned his master's degree from Northwestern University in 1982.

Lubiano began her graduate studies at Stanford intending to specialize in English Renaissance literature, and advanced far enough to pass the oral exam for her Ph.D in this area. She then decided to switch her focus to Afro-American literature, and is currently completing research in this field for her dissertation. She has taught courses in the literature of third world women and of American women of color, and recently conducted a workshop at Stanford on Afro-American literature and literary criticism. She has also organized a writer's workshop for Stanford's Black Student Union. Lubiano graduated from Howard University in 1979, and received her master's degree from Stanford in 1981.

THE CLIP SHOP

THE SALONS THAT MAKE THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OK AND EXTRAORDINARY

THE END OF A GREAT YEAR

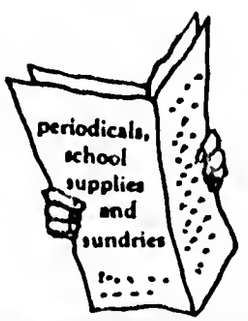
Once again it is time to say goodbye and congratulations to those who are graduating and moving on.

We wish you much success and happiness.

We thank all, students and faculty, for your patronage throughout the year and your kind words. You have made this year pleasant and successful for us. We look forward to seeing most of you in the coming year.

125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
802-447-2648

122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576



49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center

Perry's

Williams News Room

"The friendliest little store in town"

Congratulations to the Class of '86

"Y'all come back and see us, y'heah."

32 Spring Street, Williamstown

Joy Perry

Sports

Continued from Page 12

men's team, as they completed a campaign that saw them go 8-4, win the Little Three and make the ECAC playoffs for the first time since 1980. Even though you could hear Coach Renzie Lamb from the tennis courts, a bunch of people still came down to watch the games.

Laura Rogers and Carrie Cento co-captained the women's team, helped along by fellow senior Sue O'Brien. The squad went 6-4, culminating in the Amherst win in which sophomores Beth Bernheimer and Mara Burnett scored key goals. The big disappointment for Coach Chris Larson-Mason's team was not making the NIAC playoffs, which they just missed.

The baseball team provided one of the biggest thrills of the year in their scintillating doubleheader sweep over Wesleyan on the last Saturday of the season. Junior John Shaw banged out about 62,000 game-winning hits, and sophomore Jim Duquette led the squad on the field. Seniors Kevin Morris, Dick Hollington, Bob Hussey, Jeff Lilley, Pieter Mulder, and Rob Coakley provided great leadership along with new coach, Jim Briggs.

Only three seniors will leave Coach Harry Sheehy's softball team: Peggy Gentles, Barb Chalfonte, and Kristi Foster. Nancy Hedeman played for this team too, and pitched every game. Juniors Darca Boom and Tori Ballard will lead the team next year.

The white dogs (known in civilized circles as the rugby team) lost their Little Three title this year to Wesleyan, but we beat Amherst, so it doesn't really matter, right? Seniors (hold your breath) Greg Bronson, George Clemens, Paul Hogan, Mike Curtin, Craig Kirby, Ed O'Toole, John Fetteroif, Pete Aiken, Roger Merriam, Craig Blackmore, Brad Bissell, and Greg Norton will be gone next year, but with a rugger named Goat how can the white dogs lose?

The women's team was led by five seniors: co-captains Sara Murphy and Becky Halle, Chris Koniezhny, Sara Suchman, and Diana "Slink" Roberto. They also finished second in the Little Three, providing ample incentive for next year.

The crew teams each enjoyed fine years, particularly the men's lightweight boat, which went 6-3 and was ranked as high as number four in New England. Seniors Greg Heller and Lindsay Brown and junior David Esseks have gone through two rounds in the tryouts for the national team; they have been at the racing camp this past week.

The track teams each won another Little Three title. In the men's meet, Bill Leininger's all-around efforts placed him in five events and got him his picture in the paper. Seniors are John Ellison, Ed Tonelli, Tom Pingree, Leininger, Ian Brzezinskt, Bob Kaplinsky, and Tim Pittman. Ellison and junior Brandt Johnson and freshmen Dawn MacCauley won all-American status at the Nationals in Wisconsin.

The women's team was led by senior Mel Mahoney, who joins Colleen Murphy as the only one's leaving next year's squad. Juniors Gail Henderson and Becky Conklin and MacCauley will be back.

The tennis team was missing seven of its top nine players from last year's New England champions, with only seniors Tim Peterson and Chris Clarey back. The two shared the Clarence Chaffee award for good sportsmanship at the New Englands.

CONGRATULATIONS
TO THE
CLASS OF 1986

Thank you for your patronage

Harts' Pharmacists
40 Spring St.
Williamstown

Thank you Class of '86 for your Patronage during your years at Williams College.
The Best of Everything in the years to come.

McClellands
36 Spring Street - - Williamstown
Telephone 458-4920

The House of Walsh

THE HOME OF CLASSIC
AND CONTEMPORARY FASHIONS
FOR MEN AND WOMEN

39 Spring Street Williamstown, Mass
413-458-5010

Eph teams reviewed for '85-'86

by Cliff Peale

Well, it's all over now. Bill Leininger has won Bud Athlete of the Week (but hasn't yet received his jacket). Sue Klein led the women's hockey team in penalty minutes. Sam Fortenbaugh's inspirational play led the men's squash team to a fine national finish. These are the only really important things, but there are a few more sports stories that could be told from this year.

Fall

Two-time All-American Jeff McEvoy teamed with fellow all-NE senior Mark Schroeder to lead the men's soccer team to another fine season, 11-3-1, and a Little Three crown. Pieter Mulder and Clark Otley also had excellent senior seasons, and the squad was fun to watch. Another painful ECAC shootout playoff loss couldn't dim the glow of this season.

The success story of the fall was the volleyball squad; one of the miraculous things was that tri-captain Kelly Andrews noted that she was actually satisfied with the team's coverage in The Record. Andrews and fellow captains Lisa Jayne and Mary Hickox will be missed, but the team can wait for the blossoming of freshman Nancy Hedeman, as can all the other teams she seems to play on.

The football team got to play on TV, which is more than most teams could say. A bunch of seniors leave this team, which went 2-5-1. On offense, Kevin Morris, Jay Hickman, Tom O'Connor, Andy Jeffrey, Tom Goodspeed, Brad Ball, Pete Dawson, Rob Coakley, and Greg Taylor will depart. Greg Norton, Frank Morandi, Jeff Lilley, Dick Hollington, and Ken MacLeod leave a stellar defensive unit that never got the credit it deserved. They all got to play in the epic Amherst game, which drew a letter from President Reagan that he obviously didn't write. They also got to leave the field when the Moo-cow marching band came on. Oh well, maybe they didn't have it so bad after all.

Only two seniors leave the women's soccer squad, which will be strong next year with the return of leading scorers Gigi Madore and Chris Boddicker from this year's 4-7-2 squad. Ashley Mace and Peggy Cardie will be sorely missed from coach Lisa Melendy's squad.

Sean Sloane's tennis team went 6-4 on the year, due in large part to the great leadership of four-year standout Sue Brown. Geri Hugo, Debbie Bernheimer, Jenni Koski, and Laura Rogers will also leave the squad.

John Ellison brought pride and respectability back to the Valley by leading the men's cross-country team to a Little Three title, breaking a one-year losing streak. T.J. Lydon helped out, as did Ed Tonelli when he wasn't writing obnoxious letters to The Record. The women's team was very young: only all-around star Beth Schmidt will leave, and she only cared about skiing anyway. ..

Winter

The most amazing play of the winter had to be Mike Meadows' 12-step dunk against Dartmouth; the second most amazing thing was obviously how his teammates hid their laughter from Coach Sheehy. Tim Walsh recorded the best season a hoop player has enjoyed here in many a year. On his way to a school scoring record, all-NE status, and a place in Sports Illustrated's Faces in the Crowd, Walsh hit about 10 million jumpers, neglecting to notice that there were guys scratching his eyeballs at the time. Meadows, Chris Gray, and jump-shot artist Tarek Essa also graduate. Juniors Greg Lang and Brandt Johnson will be back; John Ciulla is still severely depressed over the institution of the three-pointer, and his return is in question.

It's fair to say that it was a long hockey season; injuries were so prevalent on this Eph squad that six players missed time. Joe Sciacca, Chris Pappas, Scott Karmozyn, Dave Fritz, Marty Collins, and Eric Knutzen were among the seniors that suffered through this 3-17-3 season. Freshmen Chris Conway, Mike Swenson, Will Putnam, and Tim Frechette will lead a revival in Chapman rink next year with Denny Wright, Chris Traggio, and Mike O'Connell providing some veteran play.

The women's team, in contrast, enjoyed a fine season, led by co-captains Sue Klein and Beth Ebel. Ebel, who is also a Rhodes Scholar, scored six goals in a game, and Klein knocked down more people than anybody else. Lisa Marr, Debbie Bernheimer, Sarah Montgomery, Tedie Jones, and Sally Hart were the other seniors.

The men's squash team improved as the year went along and finished eighth in the Nationals, while the women's squad had a fine year tainted when leading player Jeanne Cloppse '88 injured a knee just before the National tourney. Doug Roble and Sam Fortenbaugh led the men's squad along with fellow senior David Applebaum. The team won the award for most complaints to The Record with seven, but who's counting? Senior co-captains Laura Rogers and Carrie Cento will be missed by the women's team next year.

The swimmers probably graduate more seniors than any other team, which makes sense since they do better than just about any other team. The two big losses will be Bill Couch and Kathy Kirmayer, each All-Americans for the past several years; Couch won an award at the New Englands as the top swimmer in the region over the last four years. Dom Kulik, Will Andrew, and Alex Kraus will also leave the men's team. The women will lose Emily Parker, Andrea Raphael, Susan Lockwood, and Alicia Murphy in addition to Kirmayer.

The ski teams enjoyed a fine year, led by the consistent performance of the men's alpine squad, which took first in the Williams Winter Carnival. Seniors Tim Hill, Beth Schmidt, Ole Halvorsen, Fred Eaton, Martin Magoun, and Morten Moehs won't be back, but several freshman will hopefully make the next couple of years equally successful.

Coach Sue Hudson-Hamblin's women's basketball team had a difficult year, topped off by a serious injury to junior captain Anne Schmutz. Hedeman was the anchor of this squad, and she and several other promising freshmen will return.

The key question for the volleyball team was "How does Chris Clarey bend his body like that when serving?" Clarey and co-captain Sam Beltran '87 led the team to a successful year, helped by senior Eric Andren.

Even though the wrestling team struggled, several juniors had successful years. Most notable was captain Dan MacDonnell, who went most of the year without losing a match.

Spring

One afternoon at Amherst, both the men's and women's lacrosse teams won Little Three championships in overtime. Senior Chris Toll scored the winning goal for the

Continued on Page 11

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 1 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE SEPTEMBER 16, 1986

Local resident cited in fatal car accident

by Harweil Wells

A Williamstown man has been cited for vehicular homicide in the accident that killed professor Richard W. Krouse, police said.

According to Williamstown police chief Joseph Zoito, Mark H. Miller, of Williamstown, was cited with vehicular homicide, negligent operation of an automobile, and a passing violation in the September 5 accident.

The citation means that Miller has requested and been granted a probable cause hearing before a clerk magistrate next Tuesday, Sepember 23. If the clerk magistrate decides there is probable cause to file charges, Miller will then be charged and given chance to plead guilty or innocent before a judge.

The accident occurred on Cole Avenue, Zoito said. Both cars were traveling in the southbound lane. Krouse had stopped at the head of a line of cars and begun a left turn. Miller, several cars behind Krouse, pulled over a double-line divider into the northbound lane in an apparent attempt to pass the stopped cars. He struck Krouse's car in mid-turn, killing Krouse and injuring his daughter, Olivia Leach-Krouse, 6 months, who was strapped in an infant chair in the back seat of the car.

Zoito said that while the repainting of road dividing lines is continuing in Williamstown, the dividing lines were clearly marked on the portion of Cole Avenue where the accident occurred.

Olivia Leach-Krouse was admitted to North Adams Regional Hospital and later released.

College stunned, saddened

Prof. R. Krouse dead at 39

by Jocelyn Shadforth

Richard W. Krouse, associate professor of political science, died on Friday, Sept. 5 from injuries sustained in a car accident on Cole Avenue in Williamstown.

Krouse specialized in political theory with a particular emphasis on the relationship between the liberal-democratic and Marxian traditions and an interest in the scholarly work of John Stuart Mill and John Rawls. He began teaching at Williams in 1975. Krouse graduated from Franklin and Marshall College in 1968 and did graduate work at the University of Chicago, where he earned a master's degree in 1971. He received a second master's from Princeton University in 1973, and a Ph.D. in 1978.

As an undergraduate at Franklin and Marshall, Krouse received the Wagner Prize, awarded annually to the senior with the most distinguished record as a government major. He also received many awards during his career, including a 1984 fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities, under which he did research comparing the work of John Stuart Mill and Karl Marx. Krouse also wrote articles and reviews on liberalism and democratic theory that have appeared in many professsional journals.

Krouse collaborated with economics department chairman Michael McPherson on three articles which examined how Rawls and Mill approach inequality in society. It was Krouse's contention that a combination of socialism and capitalism would work best. Krouse delivered a lecture on their findings last March titled "The Logic and Limits of the Liberal Welfare State: John Stuart Mill and the Origins of the Political Theory of Welfare State Liberalism," in which he stated,

Professor Richard W. Krouse

"Our broad theme is that the choice between laissez-faire and welfare-state capitalism does not exhaust the universe of liberal visions of a just political economy."

Rigorous, responsible

Krouse was praised by many of his colleagues as a dedicated,

Continued on Page 7

Students arrested

New crackdown on alcohol

by John McDermott and Debbie Snyder

Two students have been arrested and two more issued summonses to appear in court in what they viewed as a crackdown by police on possesion of alcohol by minors.

Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zoito said police officers can do nothing but enforce the law when they see it being violated publicly. "You don't walk up the middle of Main Street with beer if you're not 21," Zoito said. "The police — if it's in our view, we're going to stop you and check your I.D."

The police have also revised their policy on complaints of disturbances from parties. According to Zoito, "This year the policy for a disturbance call is for that party to be abated right away." The new policy particularly affects students living on Hoxsey Street, following last year's complaints about the noise of student parties in that area.

Zoito maintained that the police do not have a special policy regarding college students, but that they are only enforcing the law. He stated that when people violate the law in public, "they put us in the position where we have to execute the law."

A special squad?

For this reason, Zoito said, parties on Hoxsey Street will be closed down immediately if they are disturbing the peace. The policy last year was first to notify the residents of the house that the party was disturbing neighborhood residents, and then, if the disturbance continued, to shut down the party. "It is not necessary at this point for a special squad to go down to Hoxsey Street," said Zoito. "If it gets like last year, we will put police on special duty in that area."

Dean of the College Stephen Fix met with students who live on Hoxsey Street, both in co-ops Mills and Lambert and in off-campus housing, to discuss the students' responsibilities as neighbors. Fix called the meeting because Hoxsey Street is "the street with the greatest concentration of students and the most problems in the past."

Stephen Jones '87, who lives in off-campus housing on Hoxsey Street, said the meeting was informational and open. Some of the topics discussed, he said, included keeping the street clean and quiet and having earlier ending hours for parties.

Tom Kaegi '87, also a resident of off-campus housing on Hoxsey Street, stated that the members of his house have decided not to have any parties for the time being. He felt that the reputation the students have for creating disturbances is inherited from previous years, and he said, "We don't want to be known for wild parties."

The first arrest occurred on Wednesday, September 3, when 20-year-old senior Scott Smith was stopped by police as he carried a cup of beer, Zoito said. Zoito said that Smith was apparently leaving a party at Spencer House.

Smith was arrested and charged with possesion of an

Continued on Page 6

Students returning to campus once again found the college much changed—or changing—from another summer of construction. The Williams College Museum of Art is due to open in mid-October to great fanfare. Don't get your hopes up too high, however, for the Chandler Gym, shown above, has yet another year to go. (Ward)

The Professor of the Year, right, at work in the classroom. (Bowers)

Tong is national prof. of the year

by Joe Ehlers

Associate Professor of Philosophy Rosmarie Tong was named national Professor of the Year this summer by the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education. Tong was selected from 324 nominees from 36 states and Canada.

"It's a pleasure to provide through this award the recognition that Dr. Tong so clearly deserves," jury chairman Ernest Boyer said. "Like so many dedicated faculty members across the nation, she's committed to excellence."

In nominating her, Dean of the Faculty John Reichert noted that "Tong's heavily enrolled courses have introduced countless students who would in all likelihood never have taken a philosophy course to the value of applying the rigorous methods of philosophy to social, political, legal and ethical issues."

Tong believes that philosophy has practical applications to many facets of an increasingly complex society. The author of Women, Sex, and the Law and Ethics in Policy Analysis, Tong focuses her writing on areas like pornography, public policy, reproductive and genetic technology and feminist thought.

"She made learning fun"

Tong brings "an inordinate amount of common sense to bear on inordinately complex topics," said a former student in his nomination letter. Another student wrote simply, "She made learning fun."

About her own work, Tong says, "Many of the students who take my courses are risk takers. They know they may feel uncomfortable and may even get angry with the ideas we explore, yet they want to be challenged. In many ways, these are the most difficult — and interesting — students to teach. The risks come not only when you challenge their minds but also their very ideas of who

Continued on Page 8

What really matters

Because we expect so much from Williams, we judge the institution and the people who make up our community by very high standards. Not easily satisfied, we often take each other to task for small issues that at times seem important. We analyze, criticize and strive to root out perceived imperfections in order to better our small part of the world.

But when faced with larger matters, the ones that really matter, we put away our pettiness and learn together the values that are really important. In times of tragedy, which these first weeks have been due to the death of Professor Richard Krouse, this amorphous "Williams community" becomes a supportive and sympathetic family.

Two memorial services, one for Professor Krouse and one for Charlie Cost '87, who died two years ago, have served as eloquent commemorations of two loved members of this family whose lives were tragically cut short. In both ceremonies, friends and colleagues reaffirmed the values of human life that the two had shared with Williams. Charles Cost and Richard Krouse were important because they were a part of our world. No matter how history judges their contributions, those of us who lived and thought with them feel the loss of the human lives, not the loss of a student and a teacher.

Gaining perspective is an invaluable part of education. Our community, though often buried in a self-made heap of trivialites, can take a broad perspective. The loss of members of the community makes us aware that the social fine tuning we try to do is insignificant compared to the inherent beauty of human life.

Letters

Prof. Krouse

To the Editor:

Whenever a life is lost, the temptation is to draw a superficial moral from the death and to forsake the subtle, shimmering lesson of a lifetime.

Professor Richard Krouse was a man of quiet compassion, intelligent restraint, careful moderation and lucid wit. Anyone who has taken a class with him knows that his concern for his students and his discipline was surpassed only by that for his wife and young children.

The most honest testimonial to a man who calls himself a teacher is his students. Those of us who have had him shall not forget this.

In the end, words cannot recapture a life lost. But the enduring influence of experience and education, reflected in thought and deed, may evoke a thin but lasting image.

Charles P. Goodwin '87

Our Quad

To the Editor:

Ah, the Williamstown fall. There is no greater pleasure than to come back from a summer of hard labor to the soft greens and the lazy foliage of the Berkshires. But wait a minute. Something's amiss here.

Someone's in Our Quad.

Oh sure. It's not as if I didn't know it was going to happen. I vagueiy remember Freshmen inclusion and my choice of Mission Park as living quarters for this year. But I didn't know that they were going to give someone else Our Quad. It just doesn't feel right with other people in there. Everytime I walk past, I have to suppress an urge to run up to my old room, sit in my roommate's chair and put on an English Beat album. I want to lie out on the grass. I want to throw a frisbee end-to-end. I want Our Quad back.

My friends try to persuade me with Mission's attractions. "We don't have to go outside to get to the dining hall." True, but a minimal gain. "Think of the parties." An alluring concept. "Besides, almost everyone you knew in the Quad is down here in Mission." Yes, yes, yes. Still I am not convinced. I know I'll enjoy this year in Mission, probably even more than last year in the Quad. It won't be the same, though. I'll have left some of my fondest memories in that Quadrangle with the funny L-shaped buildings.

I'm sure all of you upperclassmen know what I mean. What I've rambled on about above can be applied to Morgan, the B.B.Q., or Lehman. And Freshmen, you'll find out this time next year. Just do me one favor.

Take good care of Our Quad.

John Bellwoar '89

Recycling

To the Editor:

Last April when the Committee on Campus Environment started planning for its "first annual year-end recycling drive" we were anticipating a modest student response. We understood that, being a new event, the drive's main purpose would be to heighten awareness for this coming year's recycling program.

What we in no way anticipated was the outstanding response from students who, in the midst of exams and last minute packing, collectively contributed over 700 pounds of clothes and 4000 pounds of newspaper and "loose paper" to the recycling depots in the dining halls.

On May 28th, after three days of collecting and sorting, student workers delivered two car loads of clothes to the Salvation Army in North Adams, a station wagon stuffed with clothing to the Women's Center in Pittsfield, seven boxes to the Women's Exchange and eight huge bags of clothes to the Western Massachusetts Labor Action Group. The two tons of sorted paper was delivered to a recycling company in North Adams.

As a student body, we should be pleased with our collective effort. It was astonishingly successful, and the members of the committee look forward to running a full scale recycling program this year.

Thanks and congratulations for a great job.

Sarah Thurber '86

Dancersize

To the Editor:

Sartre was wrong; hell is not other people. Hell is Dancersize class.

Erik Migdail '87

Students

To the Editor:

By some incredible coincidence my three most mature large houseplants disappeared from my front porch just as Williams College students were returning to campus on September 3 and 4. Just in case you happen to come across them in the course of your daily endeavors, they are as follows: a four foot high yucca palm, a spiky yucca cactus, and a hanging pot filled with a multi-leafed succulent.

It is indeed very difficult to understand the purpose of this kind of theft. Plants of this sort are completely useless. They do not fall into the useful category of a stereo, a bicycle, a dog, a car, or even a silver service.

They exist in our homes purely for decorative purposes and enjoyment. How can anyone look at stolen plants and enjoy them, knowing that someone else has suffered a loss, and knowing further that they have committed grand larceny.

Last year at the same time of year a cherished milk glass container filled with yellow marigolds disappeared from my backyard terrace. It had been a sentimental gift in 1954 when one of my sons was born. It has spent many a summer in that some spot.

What curious quirk of mind makes Williams students these days, who are certainly not deprived individuals, feel that their random fancies justify random stealing? This kind of behavior certainly reflects poorly on Williams College which prides itself on attracting some of the better students nationwide.

Perhaps this underlines once again the poor judgement of the college in housing large numbers of students in off-campus situations, to the detriment of formerly quiet residential neighborhoods and the composure of local residents. Certainly the Williams College campus is spacious enough to allow adequate on-campus housing for all 2000 residential students, and many of the present town and gown problems would disappear.

Mrs. Stanley W. Bubriski

Mrs. Bubriski is a resident of Hoxsey Street.

The Record will print letters to the Editor and opinion pieces from the student body and members of the Williams community. Letters should be limited to less than two pages and may be edited for length. Letters and articles should be submitted either to the Record office, the Record box in the Baxter mailroom, or to S.U. 1672. The deadline is Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Corinna Lamb, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, James Spallone, Harwell Wells
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Stephanie Brown, Danielle Dixon, Jennifer Eisenberg, Margaret Laster, Kathy Ryan, Katrina Spraglns, Drew Steckler, Paul Willen
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and raanterad, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma 01267.

Cost Remembered

A memorial service was held Sunday for Charles Piper Cost, a member of the class of 1987 who died two years ago today.

The service, which began in Thompson Memorial Chapel, was led by College Chaplain Carol Pepper and included words and music dedicated to Cost. About 100 friends and family members attended.

Three memorials to Cost were dedicated Sunday. A bench, designed by F. Andrus Burr, visiting part-time lecturer in art, and a sculpture, "For Charlie," by John Safer, were dedicated in a Mission Park field near Park St.

In addition a weaving, created by Charlotte Durgin of Deerfield, Massachusetts, now hangs in the meditation room in the Thompson Chapel tower.

Why so many mushrooms? reflecting on Williams food

by Cathy Clayton '88

It's the mushrooms.

I am sure you have noticed. They find their way into everything. Go through a Food Service menu and just try to find a day without mushrooms. It's impossible. Cream of mushroom soup. Mushroom pizza. Sauteed mushrooms. Mushroom omelettes. Then there are the more subversive mushroom dishes, without "mushroom" actually in the title. Check out the vegetable souffle. The chicken fricassee. The stir fry vegetables and egg rolls on Chinese night. They're in there. Monday through Sunday, lunch, dinner, even brunch. Sometimes, on good days, they're even in the salad bar.

I have spent many nights — usually during finals — pondering this situation. Why so many mushrooms? I went through all the usual explanantions (they're cheap? they're good for you? they're a Communist plot?) before realizing suddenly, late one caffeine-ridden night in May, the obvious, undeniable truth: Larabee has a mushroom farm on the side.

With that burning question laid to rest, another, bigger one rose to take its place: what to do about it? This was a stumper, this one. Hardly a new problem; I'd seen numerous notes (and not a few mushrooms) tacked up on napkin boards in dining halls all over campus, but to no avail.

Then, one Saturday morning during Bugs Bunny, I realized what must be done. We must take to heart the words of my life long hero, Elmer Fudd: "You know what dey say, wabbit — if you can't beat 'em, join 'em." This was it! To take on the mushroom, to welcome it with open arms and open mouths as a symbol of our institution.

Change the school mascot! The "Purple Mushroom" sounds better anyways and would be easier for the band to do at football games, since instead of running around moo-ing, it could just stand around and drop spores.

Change the school song! No one knows the words to begin with, and it fits, too: "The mushrooms, the mushrooms, we greet them with a fork...".

Change the name of the new gym! Don't name it after John Chandler; he's gone. Instead, call it the Mushroom Supreme Memorial Gym (and if you really want to immortalize our illustrious ex-president, name a casserole after him).

And finally, put mushrooms in everything! No meal without a mushroom and two mushrooms in every meal! Think of the possibilities ... chicken and mushroom cutlets. Peanut butter, tofu, apple and mushroom sandwiches. Who needs banana splits? Give us mushroom sundaes instead.

We could even put mushrooms in the Cap'n Crunch.

Cathy Clayton '88 is spending this year in China.

The banning of Kegolators: a rule without justification

by Ray Yau '88

I was in a great mood when I returned to college this September, until I picked up the student handbook and noticed a curious new clause. The sixth paragraph on page 60 states the following: "Portable electric beer coolers, or 'kegolators', are forbidden in student rooms or residential houses. If found, the 'kegolator' will be confiscated from the room."

Suffice it to say that my suitemates and I cried for two whole hours. We have a kegolator stored in the basement. It wants to get out. We like it and miss it. A lot.

The new rule came as a great shock because it was not preceded by any debate. It seems that the administration one day decided to ban kegolators and felt that it was justified in doing so without bringing up the issue for discussion before the student community.

Presumably, the new rule was instituted to prevent damage to floors and carpets caused by kegolators leaking. Indeed, kegolators can and do leak, but whether they leak or not is dependent upon its maintenance and use. Leakage is not a built-in mechanical function of a kegolator. It occurs only when one is negligent about emptying the inside container that catches overflow from the tap. If one were to empty that container on a regular basis, no leakage from the kegolator should occur. If leakage still does occur, there is something wrong with the kegolator, which is an entirely different issue.

A rule that is fair should only penalize those who do not maintain their kegolators properly and cause leakage. When one breaks a window in his room, he is forced to pay for it. The same philosophy should apply to the case of kegolators. If one damages a rug through negligent use of a kegolator, he should be fined for it. A fine could be made stiff enough to deter negligent use and appears to be a very reasonable alternative measure. At the very least, we should all be miffed at the administration for not allowing that issue to be debated before the rule was instituted.

To an extent, one cannot help but suspect that there may be other motives behind the measure. It should be expected that the banning of kegolators will cut down on the amount of partying and socializing on campus to a measurable degree. If that is an objective of the administration, it should say so instead of weaseling around the issue with the specious argument it is now presenting.

One final thought on the new clause in the handbook: Why the use of the term "portable"? Hasn't anyone in the administration seen a kegolator before?

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS
SPORTING GOODS
SALE
the Co-op
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Phillip's General Store
extension cords - picture hooks - potting soil shelving - clothes driers - mirrors and other new-year supplies on Water St., near Rte. 2

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
Welcome back to Williamstown!
Come see
our fine selection of books, including a new expanded literature section
as well as
Science Fiction, Biography, Humor, Mystery, etc.
Come visit us soon.

BACK-TO-SCHOOL
BED-SPREADS
RUGS BASKETS
Mon.-Sat. 10-6
Thurs. 10-9
Sun. 12-5
the Cottage
Pittsfield Williamstown Lenox Stockbridge

C.C. begins new year

College Council's two major areas of concern this year will be improving student-administration communications and improving relations within the Williams community, council president Amy Jeffress '87 said at the first meeting Thursday.

Jeffress said a specific area of student-administration communications that the Council seeks to improve is student input into the tenure process. Students are often unaware of which professors are eligible for tenure until the decision process has been completed, a situation which has caused controversy in the past, council members said.

"The tenure system is not a very public system," said Jeffress. She said that it would be beneficial for the Council to examine the system and subsequently let the students know exactly how it works.

"The students need to know more about the system so that it can be more responsive to what students want," she stated. This year the Council plans to distribute a letter listing all professors who are up for tenure for the next two years. Council members said providing this information will allow students to comment and voice their opinions before any final decisions are made.

Jeffress also told the council that the new registrar, Charles Toomajian, has expressed interest in enhancing relations between students and his office. Jeffress said Toomajian hopes to achieve this goal by creating a committee to provide him with students' opinions.

Treasurer Wendell Chestnut '88 expressed an interest in having students communicate more effectively with the Council through their house representatives. "We should know what students expect from the College Council and how they feel about it," he said. He closed by stressing that the Council is the official representative of the students and should strive to reflect their opinions.

Jeffress welcomed a change in the college council's constitution granting voting privileges to two minority representatives. Previously, the representatives could not vote.

The change is the result of an amendment approved by the student body last year. The representatives will be chosen this year by the Council, and in subsequent years by the entire student body.

In order to foster improved relations between Williams College and its surrounding community, the Council hopes to participate in this year's annual Fall Foliage Parade, to be held in North Adams on October 5. Jeffress proposed that students build a float to represent Williams at the event.

—Allison Wertheim

Staff shifts announced

Winthrop M. Wassenar, Director of the Physical Plant at Williams, announced last July the appointment of Antonio R. Janairo as Assistant Director for Administrative Services in the Williams College Buildings and Grounds Department.

Janairo, formerly a Lieutenant Colonel in the Army Corps of Engineers for 22 years, will supervise the administrative functions of B&G, including the campus telephone system and Central Office Services.

Wassenar also announced a number of internal changes, also effective last summer. Robert Fowler, formerly Assistant Director for Administrative and Housekeeping Services at the college, has replaced Wendy Hopkins as

Wendy W. Hopkins

Director of Housing. His duties will include the coordination of student housing matters with the Dean's Office and the day-to-day operation of all student housing and college faculty housing and commercial rentals.

Hopkins has been named Assistant Director of Alumni Relations for Williams. Among the first women to graduate from Williams, in the early 1970's, Hopkins will assist with the promotion and administration of a variety of alumni activities, including reunions, summer seminars, "Williams Today" programs, regional events, travel groups, weekend seminars, Homecoming and Alumni fund meetings.

Harold Weyers, who has worked at Williams since 1970, has been promoted to Supervisor of Custodial Services and Campus Fire Marshall, and will assist Fowler in the administration of College Housekeeping services.

Languages receive grant

Williams College has received a $500,000 grant from the Pew Memorial Trust for improvements in some of its humanities programs. The college plans to create the Center for Foreign Languages, Literatures and Cultures to expand its programs in these areas and to foster interaction among the languages and other departments.

Williams was one of 30 colleges competing for 15 five-year grants ranging from $250,000 to $500,000. Colleges were asked to submit proposals for strengthening the humanities and their relations with other disciplines. Williams's proposal targeted foreign language, literature and culture studies as major areas of the humanities that deserved increased attention and support during the coming years.

The Center should improve the effectiveness of foreign language instruction, increase opportunities for the study of literature and interdisciplinary topics in an international context, and create new opportunities for Williams students to study abroad, according the Bruce Kieffer, associate professor of German and chairman of the committee that penned the proposal.

"This will result in a big boost for foreign studies at Williams," said Kieffer. "The time is right for such a boost, given the burgeoning awareness of the need for Americans to gain a better knowledge of foreign languages and cultures."

ST. GEORGE'S UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE
GRENADA, WEST INDIES

St George's University School of Medicine, with more than 1050 graduates licensed in 33 states, offers a rigorous, nine-semester program leading to the degree of Doctor of Medicine.
In January 1985, The Journal of the American Medical Association published a report which ranked St. George's number one of all major foreign medical schools in the initial pass rate on the ECFMG Exam.
70 medical schools in the United States have accepted over 630 St. George's students with advanced standing.
St. George's has received probationary approval to conduct clinical clerkships in New Jersey subject to regulations of the State Board of Examiners.
A Loan Program for Entering Students has been instituted for a limited number of qualified applicants.

For information, please contact the Office of Admissions
St. George's University School of Medicine
The Foreign Medical School Services Corporation
One East Main Street, Bay Shore, N.Y. 11706, Dept. C-2
(516) 665-8500

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

Breakfast for Late Risers
Blueberry, Corn, or Bran Muffin .60
Toasted English Muffin .60 Toast with Jam .50
Fresh Fruit Selection 1.25
Fresh Squeezed Orange Juice 1.50
The Classic Omelet with Choice of Filling 3.00
2 Scrambled Eggs and Ham with Toast 1.50
And More . . .
A Bowl of Homemade Soup with Bread Slices 1.50
A Green Salad with Marinated Mushrooms 2.00
A Greek Salad with Feta Cheese and Imported Olives 3.00
Sandwiches
Peanut Butter and Banana 2.00
Cucumber, Sprouts, and Tomato with Tahini Dressing 2.50
Egg Salad with Spanish Olives 2.75
Tuna and Scallions 2.75
Black Forest Ham and Cheddar 3.50
Turkey Breast, Avocado, and Cheddar 4.25
Mexican Vegetarian Taco 3.50
Tomato, Avocado, Refried Beans, Cheese, and Salsa
Ratatouille in a Pocket 3.75
Crabby Bagel 4.00
Hot Roast Beef Sandwich in Mushroom Gravy 4.50
Beverages
Colombian Coffee .75 Brewed Decaffinated Coffee .75
Cappuccino 1.75 Espresso 1.50
Herbal Tea .90 Domestic Tea .60
Iced Tea or Coffee .90 Pot of Chocolate 1.25
SoHo Sodas: Sparkling Water, Lemon Spritzer, Fruit Punch, Lemon Lime, Black Cherry, Root Beer, Cream, Orange, and Ginseng Ginger Ale 1.25
Apple, Cranberry, or Cranapple Juice .75
Milk .60
Memorable Moments
Lemon LuLu 2.25
Double Chocolate Layer Cake 2.75
Linzer Torte 2.25
Carrot Cake 2.75
Fruit Pie 2.00
Grand Marnier Truffle Cake 3.75
White Chocolate Mousse Cake 3.75
Dove Bar: Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry, Coffee, Coconut 2.00
Other Desserts and Sweets (as available) priced variously

76 SPRING STREET · WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
Telephone (413) 458-5007

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

Also:

check out the best selection of cards in town!
Boynton, Far Side, The Neighborhood
etc.

TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

Moore and Stevenson opened this fall's music season with an impressive performance in last Friday's concert.

Top-notch musical opening

by Rick Nobleman

After the long summer vacation, Williams College's concert season has opened with a bang. Friday, September 12, Douglas Moore, cello, and Doris Stevenson, piano, dazzled a full house with their superb performance of three sonatas by Martinu, Beethoven, and Brahms.

The Sonata No. 2 by Martinu was brilliant. Its opening allegro burst with fury and energy, intermittently becoming peaceful and secure. This contrast took the form of a delightful cat-and-mouse game where the peaceful cello was teased by the taunting piano. Gradually both calmed down until the piano's temper heated up again, drawing in the cello. Deliciously exciting tension built slowly until the final note.

Martinu's largo movement began with a desperate mourning; the cello moaned with a grief which matured into resignation and perhaps an inkling of hope by the end.

Righteous mischief

The final allegro comodo was redolent of a mischievous playfulness with an underlying righteous air. Short staccatos spiced up the mood, while brief cello solos gave Moore a chance to show off his talent.

Moore is a sensitive and expressive artist. In addition to his powerful crescendos and crystal clear staccatos, his rich and sonorous vibrato makes the cello sing with pleasure. Beneath Moore's serious and contemplative exterior lie fervid and profound emotions, channeled into his instrument.

Stevenson complemented her colleague with vibrant and forceful, yet delicate strokes on the keys. Her skill is impressive. A consummate performer, she has made several records and has just been appointed Williams' new artist-in-residence.

Capricious Beethoven

In the Beethoven Sonata No. 2 in G Minor, Stevenson had the perfect vehicle to display her talent. In this sonata the piano takes

Continued on Page 8

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Charles Samuelson; photographs by Jeff Somers.

The Record recently asked students, "What did you think of the first week of classes?"

"What classes?" — Rebecca Salazar '89

"They made me really tired." — Jennifer Stayton '89

"Given that there was a party every night, I think that there was a good liberal arts balance." — Nat McCormick '88

"It seems we've been in classes for a long, long time." — Steve Branoff '90

"I missed my first class of the year." — Steve Gutterman '88

"I don't remember." — Troy Jenkins '90

WANTED

Students to serve as technical consultants at the Computer Center, 7-1/2 to 10 hours per week. Technical consultants will receive training to enable them to provide a high level of sympathetic support to the academic community in the use of the IBM PC, the Macintosh, and the VAX, including all software supported on these computers.

Applicants will be interviewed for these positions. Interested students should send a note to Dennis Aebersold, Jesup Hall. Include SU Box and telephone number.

JB'S Restaurant
Cuisine for the '80's
FEATURING Vegetarian & Daily SPECIALS
All items on the menu are prepared from fresh & natural ingredients; served in a casual Atmosphere.
159 Water St.
Williamstown, MA.
FOR RESERVATIONS:
413 458-9825

ON TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

The Deans of Admission from five Law Schools:

Harvard University
Columbia University
Cornell University
New York University
The University of Chicago

will present a discussion of the law school admissions process.

TIME: 12 noon - 2:30 p.m.

PLACE: Driscoll Lounge

THE CLIP SHOP

Serving the Students & Faculty of Williams for 13 years. We would like to say welcome to the Freshman Class and hope all have a successful school year. As always, we're looking forward to giving you the special service you deserve. And we would like to tell you something about us.

THE CLIP SHOP opened in 1974. Each and every member of our staff has participated in a year apprenticeship program at our Salon. But education does not stop there because the fashion world is always changing. We are believers in continual education for ourselves and our client, a must for a commitment to excellence. That is why we became Sebastian Artistic Centers in 1977.

Sebastian International is a leader in the field of educating hairstylists in all aspects of the industry. Through their video tapes and others, we are always learning about new directions and new possibilities for men, women, and children. Thus Sebastian Artistic Centers are unique and very fashion oriented.

We have a unique philosophy about hair, makeup, hair products, and hair styling. We pull it all together and take everything into account. The shape of your face, your height, color of your skin, the shape of your head, your lifestyle, and most importantly the individual "you".

We welcome the opportunity to serve you and hope you soon become better acquainted with us! Call or just stop in for an appointment or free consultation. And, as always, a discount for students.

Looking forward to seeing you soon,
All of us from THE CLIP SHOP

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®
The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary

Arrests—

Continued from Page 1

alcoholic beverage by minor, Zolto said

A police officer requested identification from Smith and at least two other students walking with him, Zolto said. The other students were age 21, Zolto said.

Smith called the arrest "really bad luck," but admitted "there are no grounds on which I can contest this arrest."

In the second incident, Freshman Geoffrey Beard, 18, was arrested on September 9, also for being underage and possessing an alcoholic beverage, Zolto said.

Zolto said Beard was seen carrying three 12-packs of beer and walking with a freshman woman near the corner of Main and Spring Streets. Zolto said police requested identification, from both Beard and the other student, and then arrested Beard for posession of an alcoholic beverage by a minor.

Both Smith and Beard will appear in Northern Berkshire District Court in North Adams Wednesday, Zolto said. At the hearing, Zolto added, the two must either submit to the facts of the case and be sentenced, or request a trial.

Zolto declined to name the arresting officers in the two incidents, and declined to release further details because both of the cases are pending in court.

In addition to the two arrests, two students received summonses to appear in court, Zolto said. Zolto refused to name the two students.

The freshman with Beard, who had apparently purchased the beer using a false identification, received a summons to appear at a "show-cause" hearing, Zolto said.

When the student went to the police station that evening, she was issued a summons to appear in court today, Zolto said. The student could face a maximum fine of $300 for purchasing an alcoholic beverage with false identification, Zolto said.

Zolto said that a second student was issued a summons to appear in court.

The driver was cited for being under 21 and transporting alcohol, Zolto said.

Fix said that if the college does take action regarding any of the students, it will not be until after the students have been to court. "We don't take action that would interfere with the court taking action."

Memorial held for Turkish Jews

by John McDermott

They gathered behind Thompson Chapel Wednesday to mourn the deaths of people they had never met. Twenty-three students and faculty members lit candles in honor of the dead, and together recited the Mourner's Kaddish.

It was an expression of solidarity with Jews around the world, and a memorial to the 21 worshippers who were killed during an attack on an Istanbul synagogue September 6.

The Turkish Jews, including seven rabbis, died when a barrage of machine-gun fire interrupted a Sabbath service, according to the New York Times. The bodies of two gunmen were found among the dead, the Times said.

"We as Jews around the world cannot be silent when incidents like these are taking place," said Barry Lovell, religious coordinator for the Williams Jewish Association, which sponsored the 20-minute service.

"The problems are not new, and the solutions to those problems are difficult," Lovell said, referring to anti-semitic terrorist attacks. "But we must continue."

After the service, students and faculty members said they felt both sorrow and anger after hearing of the attack.

The attack "tends to refute those who claim to separate being anti-Israel from being anti-Jewish," said Judith Wegner, an assistant professor of religion specializing in Judaic studies.

"Anti-Israel elements are prepared to attack Jewish people around the world," Wegner said.

During the service, as each of 21 candles was lit, English professor Suzanne Graver read one of the victims' names.

The Yarhzeit candles, which are traditionally used to commemorate the anniversary of a death, were left to burn for 24 hours after the service, Lovell said.

Included familiar names

Graver, whose mother and father were raised in Istanbul's Jewish community, said Friday that several of the family names she read occured in her own family.

The familiar names included her father's name, Levi. But Graver pointed out that both Levi and Levy, as her maiden name was spelled, is common in various Jewish communities.

Graver said that the community in Turkey is made up of Sephardic Jews, a group of people who fled their homes in Spain and Portugal during the Spanish Inquisition. Turkey, along with Greece and Holland, welcomed the Jews, Graver said.

Sephardic Jews have preserved a language known as Ladino, a form of medieval Spanish. Graver said that before her mother and father met and married in the United States in 1934, they had lived in Spain and Cuba, respectively. The result was that Graver's first language as a child was modern Spanish.

Graver and Wegner said that the attack was especially tragic because the Istanbul had lived in relative peace with the Turks for nearly 500 years.

C. C. M.
ICE SKATES
1/2 Price
GOFF'S SPORTS
Spring St. 458-3605

BIKE SALE

Triathalon/Racing

	reg.	NOW
• Miyata 710	$469	$375.20
• Centurion Elite	$465	$372.00
• Miyata 310	$399	$299.00
• Puch 230	$289	$215.00

15 to 30% OFF

Sport/Touring

	reg.	NOW
• Miyata 110	$335	$269.00
• Puch 190	$249	$210.00
• Puch 140	$189	$165.00
• Centurion Signet	$155	$130.00

SAVE UP TO $100.00

Touring

	reg.	NOW
• Miyata 610	$385	$285.00
• Miyata 210	$369	$295.20
• Puch 170	$298	$238.00

15 to 30% OFF

the Mountain Goat
130 Water Street
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445

The Chaplain invites your participation in

A National March/Pilgrimage on Washington, D.C. Sunday, Sept. 28

To stand in solidarity with the people of South Africa
the refugees of Central America
the slaughtered of Nicaragua
the homeless and those without work in the U.S.A.

What they all have in common is Ronald Reagan and they can't wait 'til we have time.

Departure: probably dawn's early light, Saturday 9/27
Return: after midnight, Sunday
Cost: some of your money, some of ours

Info: Rev. Carol Pepper x2483

if not now, when?

i no pasara'n!

Partial List of Sponsors:
National Sanctuary Movement
United Church of Christ
Nica Network
Witness for Peace
Sojourners
Union of American Hebrew Congregations
Rainbow Alliance Lobby
Pax Christi
National Coalition of America Nuns
National Federation, Veterans in Peace
Mary Knou
Williams College Chaplain's Office

Students hit the books, or more likely, the sun. (Bowers)

Krouse

Continued from Page 1

intense teacher, widely admired by his students. Gary Jacobsohn, chairman of the political science department, said, "There was nothing glitzy or gimmicky or revolutionary about Dick's approach to teaching. He was rigorous, careful, responsible. I don't know anyone at Williams who took the responsibility more seriously." If he had lived, Jacobsohn added, "I thought and the other full professors thought that he was well on the way to becoming one of the nation's most important political theorists."

President Francis Oakley had known Krouse for 11 years. In a statement after the accident, Oakley said, "I will not be alone in finding it hard to imagine a Williams College that lacks the devoted service of Dick Krouse. With his sudden death we have had taken from us a wonderfully gifted teacher, a creative and committed scholar, an admired and dedicated colleague, a sensitive and loving friend. Our hearts go out to his wife and family in their most tragic loss."

In a memorial service held last Tuesday, Jacobsohn quoted Felix Franfurter's eulogy of Alfred North Whitehead. He said, "For all who came within his range, arid professionalism was quickened into exhilirating meaning and the universe expanded. Such was the quiet, almost shy magic of his qualities that his influence imperceptibly but quickly permeated the whole university.' The words could have been written for Dick Krouse. It is not always the case that our character is reflected in our scholarship. Dick Krouse devoted his scholarly life to the pursuit of justice, and the object of his quest was embodied in his person. Some things are simple; for me the good society is Dick Krouse writ large."

Cared passionately

McPherson, who had teamtaught Political Economy 301 with Krouse, spoke of his admiration for him at the memorial service. He said, "If you were there in the classroom with Dick, you simply could not mistake the remarkable way he would seize hold of a class. He could make students and colleagues move with him intellectually — often well beyond what we thought we were capable of. The force and intensity of Dick's teaching flowed, I think, from the intensity of his passions."

Krouse was to have teamtaught two sections of Political Economy 301 with Professor Stuart of the economics department this semester. This responsibility will now be undertaken solely by Professor McPherson. Plans for Krouse's second semester courseload, including two sections of the Freshmen Residential Seminar and Political Science 103S have not been finalized.

Krouse was born on September 23, 1946 in New York City, and grew up in Red Lion, Pennsylvania, where he graduated from Red Lion High School in 1964.

He is survived by his wife, Patricia Leach, his father William J. Krouse, and son, Graham 3, and daughter, Olivia, 6 months.

Panel reviews Jewish experience at College

by Debbie Snyder

Jewish life at Williams is growing and improving concurred the six members of the panel discussion on Sunday entitled "Voices of Jewish Experience at Williams".

The panel discussion, which was sponsored by the Chaplain's office, included Professor of English Peter Berek, Professor of Chemistry Larry Kaplan, Assistant Professor of Religion Judith Wegner, Joan Ostrove '87, Phil Linden '88 and Barry Lovell '88.

Berek, speaking first, gave a brief history of Jewish involvement at Williams. He said Jewish Williams alumni were active as early as the nineteenth century, citing Herbert Lehman, a former Governor of and Senator from New York, who graduated from Williams in the late 1800's.

Kaplan discussed the growth of the Williams Jewish Association from his arrival at Williams in 1971, when the association consisted of two active members, to the present where there is a professor who was hired specifically to teach Jewish studies. He advocated more expansion, including a formal program of Jewish studies, saying it is "ten years past the time the Jewish community should have been given a sense of legitimacy."

Wegner, the professor hired for the purpose of teaching Jewish studies courses, spoke of the growing return by students to a more active form of Judaism.

Continued on Page 8

HOW TO CREATE A COUNTRY WITHOUT A KING

THE BIGGEST POLITICAL STORY OF THE LAST 200 YEARS

Nations have different strengths. Military or industrial might. Mineral wealth. Population for some, sheer size for others. History teaches us, however, that character survives, principles last. The government of the United States of America is now one of the oldest on Earth and, by any measure, surely one of the best.

The U.S. Constitution set forth the principles which embody the character of this nation. And as we near the bicentennial of this great document, it is clear: The more we understand the principles of freedom it set forth, the more surely those principles will endure.

In this spirit, General Motors is proud to present, on the CBS Network, Part II of the life of George Washington: The Forging of a Nation.

Based on James Thomas Flexner's Pulitzer Prize biography, it shows how Washington proved that a country could have a head of state who was not a king. Personal and political currents swirled around him. Thomas Jefferson's concern for individual rights clashed with Alexander Hamilton's support for a strong central government. The French were demanding that our new government take their side against England. At the same time there was open rebellion in the countryside and bitter criticism in the press.

The principles of freedom were being tested by reality. And through it all, Washington's moderate approach to the Presidency was defining the role of Chief Executive for the generations to come.

History makes perspective possible. With the present and future in mind, General Motors is proud to present this period of the American past. It is human, dramatic, and without question, the biggest political story of the last 200 years.

We hope you and your family will join us on Sunday, September 21 and Monday, September 22 for the General Motors Mark of Excellence presentation, George Washington: The Forging of a Nation.

GEORGE WASHINGTON
★ THE FORGING OF A NATION ★

Sunday and Monday, September 21 and 22 on CBS
Barry Bostwick and Patty Duke return in their roles as George and Martha Washington

This advertisement is part of our continuing effort to give customers useful information about their cars and trucks and the company that builds them.

GM
MARK OF EXCELLENCE

Chevrolet • Pontiac
Oldsmobile • Buick
Cadillac • GMC Truck

Tong honor

Continued from Page 1

they are. They must be challenged without undermining their values.

"This award is going to make me even more aware of my responsibilities," she said in an article run earlier this summer in USA Today.

In addition to her regular, interdisciplinary and team-taught courses, Tong offers seminars on professional ethics to business executives during the summer.

Jewish panel

Continued from Page 7

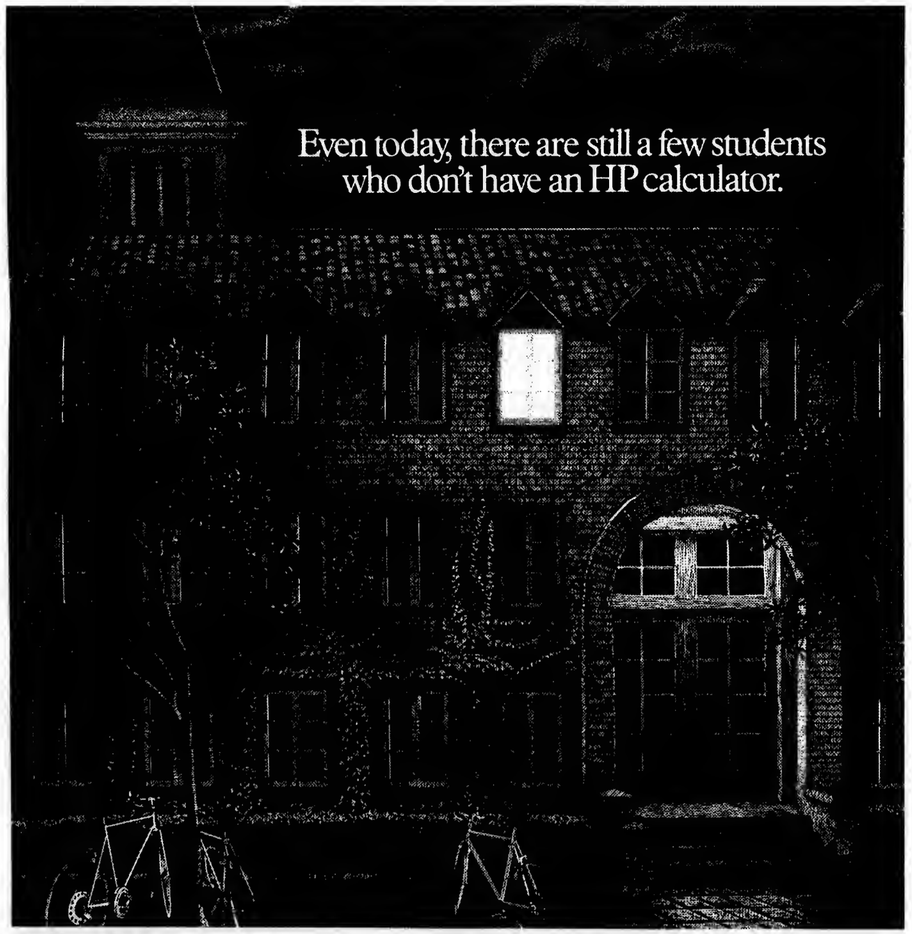
Ostrove, the first student speaker, maintained Williams is "a good place to be Jewish because it is not an easy place to be Jewish." She said this challenge helped students define more closely their Jewish identity.

Linden said that when he applied to Williams, people familiar with his Jewish background asked, "Why are you applying there?" He countered that the small size of Williams' Jewish organization is actually an advantage, because it allows students to become involved immediately.

Coming to Williams was a "culture shock", Lovell said, recalling a freshman roommate who could trace his ancestors back to the Mayflower. Although admitting, "Williams has not always been a really tolerant place," he said that the atmosphere now is much better and improving.

Concert

Continued from Page 5



the lead and selfishly savors the virtuoso parts. The piece begins in a stately manner, but in the second movement it abruptly becomes flirtatious and capricious, as if the parts represented two children playing tag.

The Brahms Sonata No. 2 in F Major cooled off this levity, instilling instead mystery and urgent suspense. Brahms' love for passionate emotion was clear in his gentle, comforting, and dreamy adagio affettuoso, which was followed by a joyful yet elusive final allegro.

Upon concluding, both performers gracefully accepted their audience's fervent applause. Both Stevenson and Moore seemed to have great fun making music, and the listeners shared every bit of it.

More Goodies Cafe
Hamburger Special
$1.25 reg. $2.00
Present this coupon
Mon.-Thurs. 4-7 p.m.
51 Spring Street, Williamstown
Store Hours: Sun. - Thurs. 8 a.m. - 8 p.m.
Fri. - Sat. 8 a.m. - 9 p.m.
breakfast — lunch — dinner
ice cream — desserts — ice cream cakes

JOSEPH E. DEWEY
THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123 - 3548 PHONE 458 - 5717

Burning the midnight oil may be necessary.

Burning the 2:00 or 3:00 or 4:00 AM oil is absurd.

Especially when an HP calculator can get the answers you want — in time to get a good night's sleep.

For instance, our HP-15C Professional Scientific Calculator has more built-in advanced math and statistical power than any other calculator. Our HP-41 Advanced Scientific Calculators have even more potential.

That's because there are better than 2500 software packages available for them — more than for any other calculator.

There's even a special plug-in software package (we call it the Advantage Module) that's designed to handle the specific problems an engineering student has to solve in his, or her, course work.

No wonder professionals in engineering and the physical sciences widely regard HP calculators as the best you can get.

So check one out. Then, when your mother calls to ask if you're getting enough sleep, you won't have to lie.

By the way, if you want more information, just give us a call at 800-FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658C.

HEWLETT PACKARD

Heading toward the tape, Dave Prockop '87 strains to catch his Middlebury opponent in the Science Quad on Saturday.
(LeBauer)

Men runners

by Steve Brody

The men's cross-country team hosted its first meet of the season on Saturday, trouncing the Middlebury Panthers 22-38, defeating them for the 15th time in 16 years and avenging last year's defeat.

Panther racers traditionally run a hard first mile, but few were to be seen in the lead pack, as the Ephmen showed their depth with nine runners in the lead, cruising through mile one in 5:06.

The pack spread somewhat on Varsity Hill, but the front nine refused to drop back, opening a large gap between themselves and the Panther runners. Captain Dave Grossman '87 moved to the front along with Gil McGabe '89, Mike Coyne '87, and Middlebury's sophomore sensastion Will Beebe.

Grossman takes second

Grossman hung with Beebe until coach Peter Farwell had him ease up with about three miles left, as the Ephs obviously had the race won. Beebe went on to win individually in 26:33 for the 8000 meter (5-mile) course. Grossman was second in 26:53 and McCabe third in 27:17. Coyne, returning impressively from a junior year at Oxford, finished fourth in 27:23.

All ten Eph runners finished ahead of Middlebury's fourth man, as they took ten of the top thirteen places. Running impressively was freshman Peter Stewart, as he took seventh place despite a hard fall at the top of Varsity Hill, finishing in 27:51.

Several veteran runners, including co-captain Jon Fisher '87, did not run, as Farwell is rotating runners in the early season so as to peak in October for the NESCAC meet and the Little Three race. This week both the team hosts the Williams Invitational at Mt. Hope farm.

WUFO

The Williams Ultimate Frisbee team travelled to SUNY-Purchase on Saturday where they joined seventeen east coach squads in tournament play. Williams posted a 2-1 record on the day, cialming victories over the Stuyvesent High team and W.P.I.

WUFO's first contest against Sticky Fingers of Stuyvesent from New York City began as a close match with both teams trading scores on crisp, efficient offensive sequences. With John Schafer '87 catching four straight scoring passes, WUFO broke the game open to take a 8-5 lead into halftime. The rest of the match belonged to WUFO, as Chris Jones '88 and Mike Syk '84 led an offense also keyed by Hans Humes '87, John Berger '89, Alex Gregory '89, and Ted Lange '88. Williams outran their opponents to claim an easy 15-8 victory.

The Ephs ran into difficulty in its second game, finding itself matched up with a squad named Mr. Bubbles. The opposition was a newly-formed club team from Boston which consisted of a dozen speedy and talented players, all of whom had played for national championship winners with various other teams at some point in their careers. Playing a group as talented as Mr. Bubbles, WUFO felt fortunate to be defeated by only 15-7.

The third game of the day pitted WUFO against W.P.I. WUFO clearly possessed the edge in skill and experience, and behind the hurdling of Mike Comtentino '85, Prof. Dave Levin, Mark Via '87, and Daryl Walsh '87, they rolled to a 8-0 halftime lead. Aiding in this effort were many turnovers by W.P.I., forced in part by the persistent defense of Brian Cameron '89 and Marcelo DaSilva '89. WUFO continued to cruise through the second half, getting timely scoring punch from the likes of Tim Allen '89, John Bellwoar '89, and Don Ousterhont '88. The final tally showed WUFO victorious 15-5.

Field hockey

by Lee Wierdsma

The field hockey team opened its season on Saturday with a convincing 4-0 victory over Vassar. The Lady Ephs were paced by Lisa Tenerowicz, last year's leading scorer, who scored a hat trick and sophomore goalie Wyn Holt, who played a strong net game in shutting out the opponents.

Tenerowicz opened the scoring at the 13-minute mark, shooting the ball past Vassar's Lynn Heitzmann off a penalty shot. After the opening score, the Ephwomen maintained complete control, peppering Heitzmann with 19 shots and scoring three more times, the other goal coming off the stick of left-winger Amy Kershaw '90 at the 25:47 mark.

According to coach Chris Larson Mason, the team was slow in getting started but "once the passing improved, people really started looking good. We're trying a 3-3-3-1 line up instead of last year's 4-2-3-1 set up, and the team is responding very well to this new positioning."

Women runners

Racing in their first meet of the year, the women's cross-country team finished third in a four-team competition last weekend, failing to Bates and Middlebury but topping Albany State. The final score was Bates 20, Middlebury 53, Williams 67, and Albany State 103. Junior Sarah Pierce led the charge by taking the seventh overall spot.

"We thought we could beat Middlebury," said captain Becky Conklin '87. The loss of Karin Johnson '89, one of the top five runners, hurt the squad. "I thought considering that that things went pretty well," continued Conklin.

Seniors Kate Pugh and Conklin followed Pierce for the Ephwomen, placing 11th and 13th, respectively. Sophomores Anne Thompson and Sara Hams took 15th and 23rd to complete the Eph scoring.

About 50 runners participated in the race, which was dominated by the contingent from Bates. All five Bates runners came in before Pierce crossed the line for the first Eph points.

This week the Ephwomen will host the Williams Invitational at Mt. Hope Farm.

Tennis

by Megan McNeill

The women's tennis team lost to Vassar in a close match on Saturday by a score to 5-4. Despite the loss of three of last year's top players, the singles play was strong but all three doubles teams fell to give Vassar the win.

Top player Mary Montgomery '88 easily defeated her opponent, Laura Parker, 6-1, 6-1. Senior Liz Keilson also won her match in an easy fashion against Julie Joyce, 6-1, 6-1.

Both Missy Crouchley and Amy Davidson were extended to three sets to defeat their opponents. Crouchley held off Lillian Best, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4. Davidson dropped the first set by 5-7 before rallying in the second and third sets, 6-3, 6-3, to beat Laura Quimby.

The number three and four seeds, Katie Kerr '87 and Annie Shuiman '88 lost in straight sets to their opponents. The three doubles teams fared just as badly, dropping all three matches. This proved to be the difference in the match, as Vassar rallied to their 5-4 win.

Coach Sean Sloane was pleased with the team's performance, saying, "We played a good match." Sloane also felt that the team played excellent doubles despite the losses.

The team faced Skidmore this afternoon before coming home to face Smith on Saturday.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE
This's week's recipient is junior Joyce Rogers, who played goalie for the first half of the women's soccer team's 11-0 pasting of Vassar on Friday, then moved up to forward and scored the first two goals of her Williams career. Joyce, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

tgl photoworks INCORPORATED
2 for 1 an EVERYDAY Film Developing Special

- FREE 2nd set of prints. (at time of developing)
- 4"x6" superprints or 3½"x5"
- Camera Shop quality.
- 24-hour service. (ask for details)

4 WATER ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 p.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown Spring Street 458-9009 458-8014
No. Adams Eagle St. 664-4134 664-6889
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

The men's soccer team starts its season on Saturday, and two-a-day practices have been the norm down on Cole Field. Here sophomore Rob Blank dives to stop a teammates' shot. (Millan)

Soccer looks to continue winning ways

by Greg Leeds

Coming off one of its most successful seasons ever, the men's soccer team is relying on a solid group of seniors and a talented crop of underclassmen to maintain its ranking as one of the premier teams in New England intercollegiate soccer. The team finished the '85 season at 11-3-1, tying the previous season for most wins ever, and were ranked fifth in New England Division III.

Missing from last year's team, however, are three-time All-American Jeff McEvoy and All-New England Mark Schroeder, both midfielders, stopper Pieter Mulder, and forward Clark Otley. Making up for the loss of McEvoy and Schroeder will be the team's biggest obstacle in rebuilding, but coach Michael Russo believes the gaps will be effectively filled. "Jeff and Mark were Division I-caliber players, and they raised the confidence level of the whole team, but we have the nucleus to be good. We just need to remain healthy and get some luck,." said Russo.

Three main goals

Russo has three main goals for the team this year: to win the Little Three, to win the ECAC tournament (after qualifying and competing for four consecutive years, Williams has never won), and to have the most wins (12).

The season will likely be full of tough matches, as many of last season's weaker opponents have improved considerably. Russo expects Connecticut College, Wesleyan, Amherst, and Trinity, in particular, to have stronger teams than in the past.

The Ephmen, however, have an experienced squad of highly talented players, including seven seniors. The starting lineup includes five three-year veterans and three two-year returners. Russo noted, "This senior class has been one of the best we've had in terms of recruitment, and they are one of the reasons we've been so successful. They have an excellent attitude and are very good soccer players."

The starting lineup features seniors Eric Von Estorff, Scott Walker, and John Austin up front, along with juniors Nikolai Nachamkin and Kurt Schroeder. Filling the midfield are three-year veteran and senior co-captain Denny Wright, who led the team with seven goals and four assists last year, and Mike Masters '89 (moved up from defensive back). The third midfielder is yet undecided.

Defense remains solid

The defense will continue to be solid as it has been in the past (last season they allowed only 11 goals, while the offense scored 34). Freshman Danny Calichman will be at the stopper position and Mike Morris '88 at left back, while seniors Jon Deveaux and Helge Weiner will fill their usual positions at sweeper and right back. Weiner and co-captain Deveaux are also three-year starters.

Goalkeepers Brad Bryan '87 and Rob Blanck '89, who allowed only .62 and .82 goals per game respectively in '85, complete the lineup.

The Ephs travel to Middlebury on Saturday for the season opener. The match has been traditionally very close; last year the teams played to a 0-0 tie, in '84 the Ephs won 2-0, and they tied 1-1 in '83. The Panthers were 11-2-1 last season and are expected to be tough again this year, although they are without their veteran goalkeeper and three of their four defensive backs from last year.

Lady Ephs win 11-0 to start 1986 season

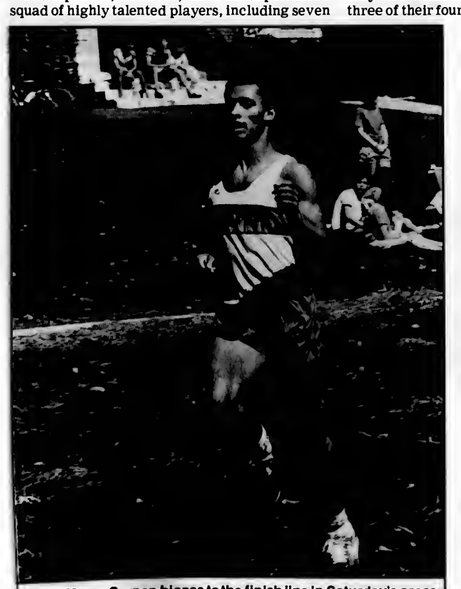
by Stewart Verdery

Buoyed by a relentless offensive attack and an impregnable defense, the women's soccer squad kicked off their 1986 campaign by pummeling Vassar 11-0 Friday on Cole Field.

The Ephs seemingly scored at will, cruising out to a 6-0 lead at the half and then recording five more goals after intermission. Halfback Lori Schaen '89 and Chris Boddicker '88 each scored a pair of goals in the first half, and were supported by single tallies by Lynne Brenner '90 and Michelle Barry '87.

Controlling the midfield

Vassar could not mount any type of a sustained attack, as the halfbacks controlled the midfield, denying Vassar any attacks on goal and feeding the forwards for scoring opportunities. Goalie Joyce Rogers '88 had little action in the net through the first 45 minutes.



Due to the large lead, coach Lisa Melendy was able to rest a number of players with injuries by entering numerous substitutes who played in varying positions. Rogers moved from the goal to the front line and scored the first two goals of her Williams career late in the second half. Co-captain Gigi Madore '87 also cashed in on two scoring opportunities in the half, while Boddicker completed her hat trick with a third score. Raquel Holmes '90 and Beth Edwards '89 finished up in goal, as the squad concluded a very successful season debut.

The 11 goals scored were nearly half of last season's total output of 24. A year ago, four players were responsible for all 24 goals, but this year's squad displayed better balance as six players recorded goals in the first game alone.

Coach Melendy was obviously "very pleased" with the team's showing. However, she expects the quality of the opposition to improve, with tough Smith and Hartford games later this month. The squad plays twice on the road this week, at Skidmore today and at Smith Saturday, before returning home against Middlebury September 23. More play such as that exhibited Friday will surely lead to an improvement on last year's record of 4-7-2.

Yuskiko Fujita '87 fights with a Vassar opponent for the ball in the women's soccer team's 11-0 rout last Tuesday. (Albright)

Senior Marco Curnen blazes to the finish line in Saturday's cross-country race, as the Ephs won their first meet of the year. (LeBauer)

2-5-1 last year

Renewed spirit drives footballers

by Al Mottur

"Anxious and very motivated" are the words head football coach Bob Odell uses to describe his players as they gear up for what he hopes will be a successful fall campaign or at least an improvement on last year's 2-5-1 mark. The season opens on Saturday at Middlebury.

Despite last year's poor showing, the Ephs are optimistic about the upcoming season. Sophomore quarterback Rob Gotti said, "With just six more points at the right time, we would have gone 6-2 last year." A renewed offensive confidence should combine with the team's traditionally strong defense for a more balanced squad.

Odell concurred, saying that he thought this squad had something to prove, "especially the seniors. This is their chance to show what they can do . . . that they can win here."

Offense improved

On offense, the line should be stronger than last year, combining experience in the likes of Taylor Watts '87, John Madden '87, and Andy Coyne '88 with talented sophomore center Joe Thompson and defensive convert Donnie Aselton '88.

Except for fullback Rob Miller '87, the backfield spots are currently undecided. At quarterback will be one of three sophomores: Gotti, Rob Neuner, or transfer Scott Kennedy, all of whom have performed excellently in practice, according to Odell.

The tailback spot is also up for grabs as a group of talented freshman runners will compete with Mike McLaughlin '89 for that position. The receiving corps comprises the most experienced part of the Eph attack, led by senior John Shaw, Lewis Collins '88, and tight-end Jim Poulsen '87. Odell characterized the offense as potentially explosive and quicker than last year's as well as more versatile. He did say, however, that the offense's overall inexperience could lead be a problem.

Defensive strength continues

Defensively, the team should be as strong as ever, especially with the addition of former quarterback Scott Powers '88 at the free safety position. Powers, who runs a 4.5 40-yard dash, will be free to roam "from sideline to sideline," according to Odell, and should be a definite plus.

On special teams, Powers, who finished third in the nation last year among Div. III punters, will once again handle the punting chores. Sophomore linebacker/placekicker Tony Fuller will kick off and kick on long field tries while Tim Shea '90 and John Birgbauer '90 will compete for the extra point and short field goal duty.

This year's squad has a decidedly different makeup than last year's largely because of the talented newcomers at many of the skill positions. Much of the Ephs' success this fall will depend on how these newcomers perform: at quarterback, in the backfield, in the trenches, and in the defensive backfield.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 2 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE SEPTEMBER 23, 1986

Corp. disinvestment adopted

by John Felkner
and John McDermott

The College will urge companies in which it holds stock to withdraw all operations from South Africa, the finance committee of the Board of Trustees announced Friday.

The policy of "disinvestment advocacy" will change Williams' relationships with some 30 companies which do business in South Africa, but the College's holdings in those companies, which total roughly $31 million, will remain intact.

The announcement of this "significant shift" in policy, as college president Francis Oakley termed it, came in a two-page statement distributed to students.

The move was approved by the trustees' finance committee at a September 9 meeting, according to college treasurer William Reed. The statement was finalized shortly before it was released last week, Oakley said.

"Disinvestment advocacy" represents a break from the college's previous policy of using investments as leverage to encourage companies to improve working conditions and lobby the South African government for an end to apartheid, Reed said.

"The prospects for any significant action to dismantle the core structure of apartheid now seem remote," the statement said.

Trustees saw that "the situation in South Africa was deteriorating to such a degree as to cast doubt on the ability of even the most enlightened of U.S. corporations to exert pressure on the Pretoria government to dismantle the structure of apartheid," the statement said.

Not divesting

Disinvestment is not to be confused with "divestment," which would mean that the college would sell its shares of these same stocks, noted professor James Wood, chairman of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR).

"The finance committee has decided that in its capacity as a shareholder, Williams must now extend further the logic of the shareholder activism it has pursued for the past eight years and shift its stance to one of disinvestment advocacy," the statement said. "That is to say, it will now begin to use its prerogatives as a shareholder to urge the companies whose stock it holds to withdraw from South Africa."

The decision, like most investment decisions, did not require a vote of the trustees, Reed said. It was reached after consultation between finance committee members and with some other trustees throughout the summer, according to Wood.

Reed said the trustees consulted some members of the ACSR, the committee which advises the college on matters of stockholder activism. He said that ACSR members who lived in the Williamstown area were consulted and that student members were not among them.

Trustee initiated

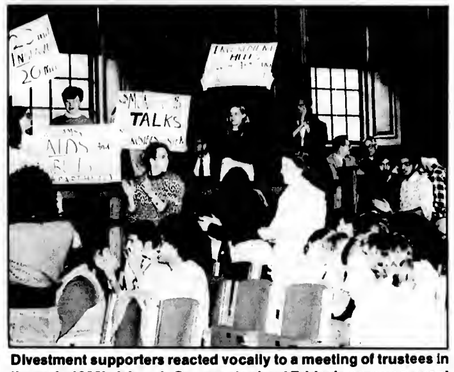
Reed acknowledged that it is unusual for the trustees to initiate policy ideas on issues of shareholder responsibility. In most cases, the ACSR has recommended policy changes to the finance committee, he said.

"Fincom sent us the official memo, basically telling us the policy they were implementing," said ACSR member Sharon Burke '88. "This is a break with precedent, because normally we send memos advising them on policy."

Wood said the ACSR will begin implementing the new policy by sending letters to the companies. He said that the ACSR will discuss such matters as what wording it would require on proxies, the shareholder balloting which ACSR makes recommendations each year.

The deadline for filing proxies for 1987 has passed, and many proxies calling for withdrawal from South Africa have already been filed, Wood said.

Asked if, hypothetically, Williams would initiate a shareholder proxy on the issue, Reed said, "There's a strong possibility that we would. That would be within the spirit of the finance committee's instructions."



Burke is skeptical of the policy. "They (the finance committee) have always been very passive about any type of advocacy, Burke said. "Then, all of a sudden it makes sense to do this, because it's no longer economically profitable to be in South Africa. They should have mentioned this fact in the memo."

"They have now taken a position which is very political, whereas before they tried to act apolitically," Burke added."

Tom Williams '87, a spokesman for the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC), said he was "mildly enthusiastic" about the change.

"It is definitely a step in the right direction," Williams said. "But they're not doing anything novel."

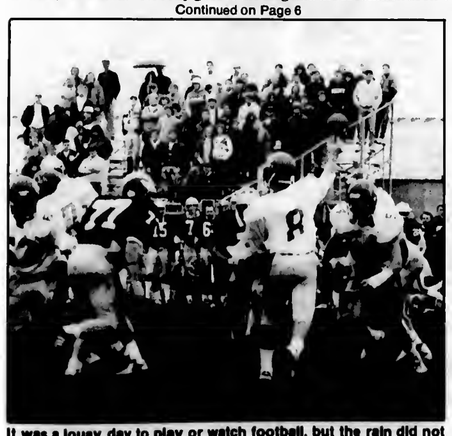
Continued on Page 7

Divestment supporters reacted vocally to a meeting of trustees in the early 1980's (above). Comments about Friday's announcement were mixed. (Glick)

CUL examines party policies, house dining

by Harwell Wells

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) decided to examine Williams' party policy and the possibility of new Row House dining as it set an agenda at its first meeting last Thursday.



The committee also agreed to consider the co-op housing situation and to study deficiencies in the student-faculty advising process.

The new CUL chairman, Assistant Professor of History William Wagner, said the group has "a very vague charge, somewhere between the faculty, students and administration." He added that while the committee is supposed to study undergraduate life, "I feel that most of the student life is what they make of it.

Mary Petersen '87 suggested that a major focus for the CUL this year should be the developing changes in the college's party policies.

"We should consider the new party policies that put pressure on houses," she said. "Nobody goes to the Log and the freshmen aren't

Continued on Page 6

It was a lousy day to play or watch football, but the rain did not deter the Ephs as they opened their season by defeating Middlebury 17-7. Williams fans descended on Middlebury in droves despite the weather. Sports has all the details. (Somers)

Weiner to Conte: end to fishy politics

by F. Craig Gangi

A congressional candidate, stopping in North Adams last week, used a fish to attack his opponent.

Democrat Robert S. Weiner charged Representative Silvio O. Conte, the incumbent, with inaction which has cost Massachusetts' 1st district $300 million in federal funds over the last five years.

Berkshire Focus

Weiner, calling the alleged loss the "$300 million fish that got away," reached into a box and pulled out a two-foot-long fish. The fish bore a sign with the same message.

It was one of several comic moments during an informal, half-hour press conference Thursday on the steps of the North Adams City Hall.

Weiner, who won the Democratic nomination September 9, heads a political consulting firm but has never held office. He said he has been a legislative assistant to then-Congressman Edward Koch, and a staff director for both the House Committee on Aging and a House subcommittee on health. His political experience includes work for Senator Edward Kennedy's 1980 presidential campaign and for the Democratic National Committee in 1971-72, Weiner said.

Conte has represented the diverse western Massachusetts district, which includes Williamstown, for 14 terms. He is a Republican who is considered to be fairly liberal on most issues and is ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee.

In 1984, Conte defeated Democrat Mary Wentworth, winning 73 percent of the vote.

Weiner's North Adams stop, attended by a handful of reporters, was one of a series of press conferences Thursday in cities ranging from Northampton to Athol to Pittsfield.

"Lost student loans"

The 1st district under Conte has lost about $25 million in federal student loans, Weiner said. He accused Conte of using the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction bill as a scapegoat for district's loss in revenue.

Weiner attacked Conte as a friend to "big business" who ignores the greater issues of social services, housing, day care and emergency jobs, all of which Weiner said he strongly supports.

The candidate vowed to work together with Governor Michael Dukakis and 1st district mayors to help the area's economically troubled cities, including North Adams. He said he appeared alongside Dukakis recently at a "Unity Day" rally in Springfield.

Continuing his attack, Weiner alleged that Conte's decisions are influenced by corporations, including Boeing, Lockheed and Litton Industries, which Weiner said have contributed to his opponent's campaign. A Litton subsidiary owns an Athol plant, but Weiner said the other two companies have no operations in the district.

"He does not represent the people when he is cutting jobs. He is representing the big companies that give him money," Weiner said. "I'm showing that overall, we (district residents) have lost money."

The candidate characterized Conte's campaign as a "a singles' bar of politics ... a sick form of politics."

Weiner said that many of the differences between the two candidates had to do with party affiliation.

"If Conte would become a registered Democrat, I would withdraw from this race," Weiner said. He said that Conte's weaknesses as a legislator, including the alleged corporate influences, stem largely from his affiliation with and deference to the Republican Party.

Being a Republican "means you want to represent big business," Weiner said.

Weiner said that Conte has not lived up to his reputation as a liberal legislator. "Overall, he has voted against the Democratic (Massachusetts Congressional) delegation," he said.

An example of this, Weiner said, was Conte's August 14 vote on a House bill which would prevent the premature discharge of Medicare patients from hospitals. Weiner says Conte voted against the bill.

Weiner said that he and Conte also differ on the recently enacted "tax reform" legislation. He said Conte supported a version of the bill which included a structure of income tax brackets designed to benefit

Continued on Page 6

September 23, 1986

Means to an end

The new South African investment policy announced this week by the President and Trustees represents an irreversible step towards divestment.

"The prospects of any significant action to dismantle the core structure of apartheid now seem remote," the announcement admits. "Williams must now ... shift its stance to one of disinvestment advocacy." Disinvestment advocacy, simply put, requires the college to use its rights as a shareholder to work for the withdrawal of foreign investments in South Africa.

Presumably, since corporate constructive engagement has failed, that is, the companies have not been able to pressure the South African government into change, stockholders should put economic pressure on the companies to get out. This policy cleverly shifts the onus of divestmentfrom the stockholder to the companies.

But what this amounts to is that the trustees (willingly or not) have opened the door on a radically new outlook for Williams' investment policy. Having admitted that constructive engagement is a failure and having begun pressuring companies in our portfolio to get out of South Africa, the trustees are now committed — like it or not — to severing all ties by which Williams might indirectly support the South African government. Although this policy is not divestment, it pursues, in effect, the same goals.

Because the relatively small amount of financial muscle behind the Williams vote leaves little prospect for success of disinvestment advocacy, the trustees must remember that DA is only means to an end, and not an end in itself.

To insure that the this policy is not simply a change of rhetoric, we suggest that a time table be set and stringently enforced for the withdrawl of all college-connected operations from South Africa. Having abandoned constructive engagement, the college is bound by its public statements to abandon disinvestment advocacy if that, too, fails. Our responsibility as members of the Williams community is to hold the trustees to their word.

Letters

Larceny

To the Editor:

In consideration of the act of incorrigible licentious larceny committed by one of the innumerable ex-convicts residing on Hoxsey Street in the guise of Williams seniors, I would like to offer my most sincerely humble apologies to Mrs. Stanley Bubriski for the inhumanly criminal act perpetrated by some as-yet unknown Williams student.

Williamstown Police Chief Zoito should simply jail everyone of the Hoxsey Street student residents until this malicious disrespecter of humanity either confesses or has been apprehended. Failing this, we can at least rest assured that while these delinquent hooligans are incarcerated, no laws will be broken in the general Williamstown area.

Jonathan Stanley '87

Committees

To the Editor:

As upperclassmen all know and as underclassmen are soon to find out, political power is not allocated in a democratic manner around here. A great amount of authority is entrusted not to those that we have elected but rather to those few in the committees appointed by the College Council Elections Board.

The "CUL," "CEP" and the rest of the committees are not open forums. They exist to serve the student community by providing detailed considerations of specific areas where problems might occur. By presenting these findings to the College Council and the administration, it is hoped that these committees facilitate informed and responsive action by those in power.

Under light scrutiny, however, the committee process reveals itself to be a joke. Any critique of the system could easily begin with the arbitrary method by which committee members are chosen. During my time on the Elections Board I saw the decision making degenerate down to a matter of picking likable names off a list. But the real problem with the committees is not the people on them. For the most part they are motivated, concerned Ephs willing to provide a community service.

They are also generally frustrated, however, because serious problems are in the committee machine itself. Accountability is not programmed into the process. Inefficiency, absence, overlapping and confusion characterizes the system. Committees can meet for weeks on end and yet ultimately fail to communicate their findings to the Council; meetings can consist of fruitless waiting for members who never show; committee issues can be lost on the Council agenda, and so on. All this results in ill-informed and unresponsive decision making by the College Council itself.

The problems of this system can clearly be solved by simple initiatives. 1) Each committee chairman should be required to submit concise reports to the Council. To maximize campus awareness and participation these reports should be photocopied and posted in all the housing complexes. Thus the Council can keep an eye on committee progress.

2) Each committee should send representatives to the Council's scheduled discussions on issues related to that committee's field of interest. This would not only inform the Council's debate but would also prevent the constant overlapping of issues that occurs on committees.

3) Finally, the Elections Board should create guidelines for the deposition and replacement of "dead wood" committee members who fail to perform the services for which they were appointed.

It is through a simple reform of the committee that student power can be allocated in a far more responsible manner.

Jeffrey Weinstein '87

MASSPIRG

To the Editor:

The past two weeks have been very busy for those of us who are returning to Williams and a new MASSPIRG chapter. We have been encouraged by the enthusiastic responses of so many as we talk to them about our plans for the semester and the year.

Already, an eager group of old and new PIRG members alike have been busy gearing up for our three big fall campaigns. Along with students all over the state, we will be working on registering voters, the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and the Massachusetts Campaign to Clean Up Hazardous Waste. Just last Tuesday, thirty Williams students braved the Berkshire cold and rain to talk to North Adams primary voters about hazardous waste.

This week we will be kicking off all three of our campaigns. We invite the entire Williams Community to join us on Wednesday, September 24, at 7:30 in Weston Lounge to learn about MASSPIRG and what we can do to help alleviate hunger in the Berkshires and clean up hazardous waste in Massachusetts.

James McGill '89, Jennifer Grant '89

Respect?

To the Editor:

President Oakley's statement on South Africa, dated July 27 and just printed in the September issue of Williams Reports, is incredibly frustrating. He asserts once again that we as an intellectual community must preserve an atmosphere of "openness, seriousness of purpose, civility, and mutual respect." I resent this assertion because I do not believe that the College is keeping these things in mind.

In June of this year, I tried to send letters to the College's twenty-two Trustees, asking each for a brief description of his views on Williams' divestment policies. The Administration refused to give me the Trustees' addresses, but agreed to mail my letters if I sent them to Williams first. I discovered last week that my letters have not yet been sent to the Trustees, ostensibly because the administrative office is holding my letters in anticipation of "a general mailing."

I was told at the end of a conversation with this office, however, that they wanted to make sure that I was "well-intentioned" — that is, that I would not spread any information I might receive to such forbidden outlets as newspapers. I do not believe that the College has the right to screen perfectly legitimate inquiries in this manner, and I certainly don't find this sort of treatment to be in keeping with any notion of "mutual respect."

The irritating thing is that President Oakley can easily afford to advocate a forum for infinite debate enriched with the "ethos" of intellectualism, because all the College needs to propel its policies in South Africa is inertia. As long as those who argue for divestment are kept within the neat boundaries of this intellectualism, the College will continue to profit from its South African investments. Meanwhile, the administration attempts to infuse meaning into such politically insignificant gestures as having an integrated South African theater company perform here.

Most upsetting is the realization that, just maybe, the underpinnings of our great arena of idea exchange are economic and not philosophical in nature. No matter what our rules for debate are, people are still being murdered every day in South Africa. The fact that we can quite calmly perpetuate our own financial security at the expense of all these lives leads me to question the worth of our intellectualism as the administration defines it. Have we nothing between our ears but dialectical space?

Chris Nealon '89

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Melissa Beack, Stephanie Brown, Clare Conlin, Mary Iliff, Kathy Ryan, Katrina Spragins
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267.
POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

A responsible alcohol policy should educate student body

by Andrew Harris '88

In its efforts to comply with the change in the Massachusetts' drinking age, the College Administration has modified the services of the Log, enforced "dry" freshmen days, implemented increasingly stringent party guidelines and, most recently, restricted all Junior Advisers, even those of legal drinking age, from filing party plans at all. Though not in agreement with these adjustments in policy, I can at least understand the College's position in having to make them: being a law-abiding and highly visible member of society (to say nothing of the concern surrounding the threat of civil suits), the College must obey the laws ascribed by that society.

Yet in seeking to placate state and local authorities and to protect itself against the afore-mentioned litigation, the Administration has underscored both the greatest single problem at Williams, and its own failure to address this issue. I speak of course about alcohol abuse. Drinking problems are something that few students arrive with; more likely these difficulties develop when alcohol becomes almost universally available, at a time when no further education about its danger is provided.

Regardless of its source, the drinking problem exists at Williams. We all hear statistics concerning the disproportionate percentage of Williams graduates who are alcoholics and most students know of peers who have trouble with drinking.

The College, in so diligently keeping records of a) party plans (and thus the amount of alcohol consumed at registered parties alone) and b) the number of people yearly that visit the Center for Health Services with alcohol related illnesses, cannot but be aware of the existing problems. Yet the only steps taken in the last three years have acted to appease Governor Dukakis and to ameliorate the nightmares of the looming spectre of civil suits. Practically, nothing has been done to help the students.

In spite of state laws and school policy, we of both legal and illegal age drink and will continue to do so. Drinking is an integral part of college life, both as a tradition and as a release; its participant should not be discouraged, only informed of the effects and/or dangers of alcohol consumption. None of this discussion is meant to suggest that x percent of each graduating class is alcoholic when the diplomas are handed out; only that it is the drinking habits we establish now that may lead to trouble in the future.

"Drying out" the college is not the solution, and as a drinker myself I shudder at the thought of such an extreme tack. The College has made clear enough its public position on alcohol. As a student I would appreciate the same attention and commitment to assuring the health of our undergraduates.

Williams is an academic institution and as such is obligated to educate actively its students about alcoholism, stress-related drinking and other such issues. Telling some of us that we can't drink is a moot gesture that conveniently protects the college both publicly and legally; real virute lies in explaining to all of us why we ought to moderate our drinking.

All this criticism is for nought if I am unable to offer some sort of solution to this problem. I advocate the foundation of some sort of college sponsored, student-run organization that assumes as its primary function the education of the College on those issues surrounding alcohol. Similar in format to Peer Health, this organization would visit freshmen entries, provide literature on pertinent subjects and offer some sort of call/walk in service.

In writing this article, I have no doubt skirted the border of hypocrisy. Some will say that I have crossed it. So, attempting to reduce the impending backlash of popular reaction, I will try to make my position clear. Alcohol has its uses and its responsible consumption is enjoyable; only when we are careless or ignorant or forgetful of its addictive potential does it become dangerous.

Williams is one of the most successful educational centers in the country. It seems so utterly tragic that such a disparate percentage of our graduates crawl inside a bottle when proper education now can circumvent such pain.

Williams in "moral caboose" on new disinvestment action

by Tom Williams '87

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility's policy shift, announced last week, is a mixed blessing at best. While it is encouraging to note that there is some flexibility in college investment policy, one cannot help being disappointed in the rather lethargic response to the increasingly alarming events in South Africa.

To advocate a general corporate pull-out of South Africa is commendable; to fail to back up that advocacy with any real threat of sanction is irresponsible. To quote Randall Robinson, Williams College is once again "in the moral caboose of the responsible investor train."

The Finance Committee, seemingly emergent from its coma, has awakened to the reality that corporations in South Africa have a remarkably small space in which to maneuver for change. Unable to bring about change, corporations are now urged by the College to disinvest. Overnight it seems that all the concern for the economic effects of disinvestment on South Africa's black population has vanished. Gone are the pious mouthings of Kiplingesque concern for carrying the "White Man's Burden" in South Africa.

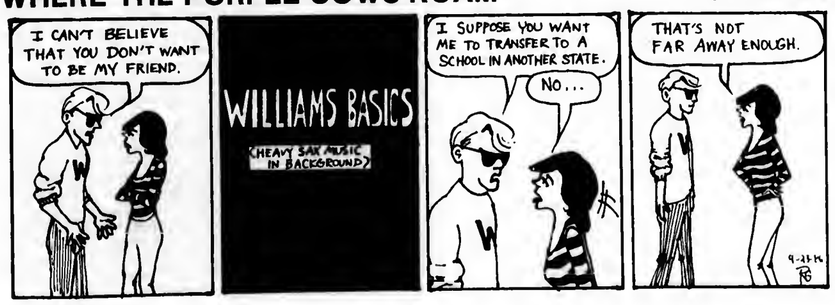
That the less-than-stunning policy change recently proclaimed should follow on the decision of the TIAA-CREF (the world's largest pension fund) to pursue an identical policy is a coincidence that should probably not be examined too closely. After all, we here in our ivory towers jealously guard our independence of action, our seemingly boundless "dialectical space."

Yet, again the College has missed the point. Of course the racist policies of the Botha government are abhorrent to all intelligent people, of course U.S. corporations cannot significantly change these policies, so of course American corporations should divest. The moral responsibility of this college must be to push for divestment. The logic of this is so clear, so obvious, that the fact that it has taken the College this long to make these realizations seems incredible. Nevertheless the college has finally gotten this far, and deserves congratulations up to a point.

What, however, is the logical extension of the new policy? What happens when proxy votes should fail to pass, when corporations should decide to stay in South Africa? Clearly, at such a juncture the position of Williams College as a stockholder will be identical to that of corporations in South Africa today: with no room to maneuver for change a pull-out will be indicated.

That there has been no enunciation of this simple point is deeply disturbing to those seeking a responsible investment policy for the college. Is Williams College going to grudgingly, slowly, in the wake of bold action by others, slink its way toward a divestment policy?

How unfortunate for the best small liberal arts college in the United States to be so timorous and weak in the face of one of the clearest moral decisions since the destruction of the Nazi menace! What message does this send to minority students at Williams when such a clear and abiding evil as apartheid cannot be met with courage and clearheadedness?



The general economic collapse of South Africa has generated a whole wave of corporate pull-outs. When the bottom line turns red, corporations divest. That this decision is an almost purely economic one says little for the morality of the American corporate establishment. Now Williams College, carefully weighing its fiduciary responsibility against the blood and suffering of millions of South Africans, is seeing its own bottom line turn red. Events on the world stage are gradually making independent action by this College unnecessary.

Undoubtedly the College will hold to its current policy of expediency until events make the divestment/disinvestment advocacy policy irrelevant. The College, comfortably nestled in the caboose of moral responsibility, will carry on much as before. But then, what can one expect from an administration that would raise money to send black students to university in South Africa, at a time when black students are boycotting their racist educational institutions and the African National Congress is denouncing the increasing governmental interference in even the "independent" universities?

We deplore apartheid, call for complete corporate withdrawal, but remain invested in corporations doing business in South Africa and even seek to pay for students to be "educated" under the watchful eyes of the oppressive racist state. It would be wonderful if for once rhetoric matched action, but perhaps that would be too much to hope for from this administration.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM

by Rich Gardella

Johnson on poetry

Wordsworth's and Poe's stand on poetic language was the subject of Harvard profesor Barbara Johnson's lecture entitled "Strange Fits: Poe and Wordsworth on the Nature of Poetic Language," held last Thursday.

Wordsworth, Johnson explained, believed that the language of poetry should not differ from that of prose. Disliking the tendency in eighteenth century England toward witty and polished verse, he wished to state plainly and always spontaneously the feelings he wished to reveal.

Poe, a believer in "the materiality of language," according to Johnson, tried intentionally to separate verse from prose. He believed in setting down words in order to evoke a particular reaction in the reader and avoided the long sentimental and didactic works which were then popular in American literature.

(Somers)

Barbara Johnson

Johnson examined Wordsworth's "Preface to the Lyrical Ballads" and "Strange fits of passion I have known" in discussing Wordsworth's view on poetic language. She concluded he could never divide natural from mechanical language.

Poe, conversely, believed in personifying using poetic mechanisms. Rather than writing for himself, as Wordsworth did, he wrote for the reader. He believed in using many cliches, feeling that they had not been rendered meaningless because of overuse. Johnson said that Poe believed "the mechanical must have some naturalness."

Johnson ended her lecture by stating that, although neither Wordsworth nor Poe was able to separate mechanical from natural language, "if one could differentiate, there would be no need for criticism on the subject (and) maybe no need for poetry."

Johnson is a professor of French, Afro-American Studies, and comparative literature at Harvard University.

— Suzann Silverman

Town-gown group meets

The Town-College Liason committee met for the first time last Wednesday to discuss problems in the relationship between the College and Williamstown.

Williamstown selectman Alan George, chairman of the committee, suggested the creation of the committee last spring, because he said he sensed "a real desire on the part of the town and the college to grow and progress in relations." The committee will meet for one year on a trial basis

In addition to George, committee members include Williams director of information James Kolesar, Williamstown residents Mark Weimer and Dagmar Bubriski, and one additional member from the college. This "variable" member, George explained, will be chosen according to the specific problem to which the committee is addressing itself.

Kolesar said he hopes that the comittee will "further cement a good start" in terms of college-town relations. He explained that the intended purpose of this committee is "an exchange of information." Kolesar said the committee will provide a forum for students, town residents and landlords to express their concerns.

Bubriski said forming the committee was a good idea, because she has always felt the need for "more organized public participation."

The committee will meet this Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the Williamstown Municipal Building. Topics to be discussed include off-campus housing, the location of the new gym, college expansion, summer conferences and the pesticides that the college uses.

George stressed that "sympathy and empathy" will be important on the part of all involved. He said that the public is welcome at the meeting Thursday, because "it's everybody's committee."

— Allison Wertheim

Stoddard on Williams dig

Visiting Professor of Art Whitney Stoddard lectured last Thursday on "The Williams Excavations at Psaimodi, 1970-1986," excavations by Williams faculty and students on an island in the Rhone Delta in France.

Stoddard, who has delivered a similar lecture every fall after each summer of excavation, said the digs in the past two years have been the most successful of the excavations. He claimed that he does not want to complete the project too quickly, however, since he has enjoyed it so much.

Stoddard showed slides of the site which included the living quarters, work, planning and elaborate stone foundations that were discovered.

The team of excavators began working on the site in 1970 after convincing the owners of the land and the French government into letting them dig there.

At that time, Stoddard said, a 67-foot wall protruded from the ground, and it was uncertain whether or not more than that existed. In the last five years, however, the team has uncovered foundations that stretched to nearly the size of a football field and early Christian pottery and tombs dating back to the fifth and sixth centuries A.D.

Stoddard said that the team is now trying to establish some long-term funding to pay for continued excavations and the preservation of the artifacts in a museum.

— Alysa Doyle

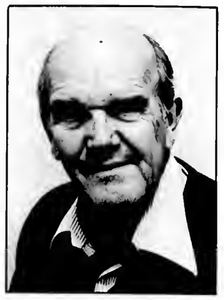
Math gods win chicken

The Ephmen triumphed on many fields last Saturday at Middlebury, including an academic one. A 14-member team won the coveted Green Chicken Exam, an annual contest of mathematical skill between the two schools. As its reward, the college will possess the Green Chicken prize, a green soup tureen cast in the shape of a chicken.

The exam consisted of six math questions to be solved within a two-hour time limit, with Williams' team matched against 11 Middlebury mathematicians. Williams proved it was there to play, scoring a decisive victory against the Panthers, with a final score of 152 to 68. High-scorers for Williams included Mark Conger '89 with a perfect score of 60, Joseph Francis '87 with a score of 53, and Will Dudley '89 with a score of 39.

The win brings the team's total record in the event to 6-2-1, and breaks a two-year losing streak by the embattled Williams players.

Gifford on vision



"The Triumph of the Eye, 1786-1986" was the subject of a lecture by Professor of English, Emeritus, Don Gifford, given last Thursday and sponsored by the Freshman Residential Seminars.

Gifford's lecture consisted mainly of explanations of how various inventions during the last two centuries have led the quiet revolution of how our eye learns to perceive objects. The three areas of innovation Gifford emphasized were photography, motion pictures and television.

As the methods of picture development in photography improved, said Gifford, the realism of photographs improved as well. This did not lead to the replacement of pictures and drawings, however.

Gifford called pictures "contemplative," explaining that they can be studied more deeply than photography due to the aspects of the picture that come from the artists' imagination. Pictures are less realistic than photos, Gifford admitted, but our eye's perception often makes pictures just as descriptive and detailed.

An avid supporter of movies, Gifford has continually praised the authenticity of film images. In May 1974, Gifford gave a lecture entitled "The Film as an Art Form," which was the first off-campus seminar ever given at the college.

Don Gifford

Speaking poetically, Gifford claimed that the images of a movie often seem larger than the screen itself in the "darkened illusion of the theatre."

He went on to compare television and movie theatres, a comparison that television did not do well in. Television, he contended, projects poor quality pictures and offers little realism. He claims the small screen "miniaturizes nature," minimizing reality and altering the viewer's sense of space. Furthermore, he claimed, commercials ruin the reality of the action.

Television news broadcasts are unimpressive due to the brevity of their stories, according to Gifford. As an example, Gifford maintained that President Reagan is alloted only about 1200 words per speech.

Gifford said that our eyes and ears get so many impulses of sound and sight that they slip into a "passive receptivity," where we block out certain images and noises with our mind.

The question of whether the "ambiguous triumph" of the eye is a veritable triumph or a disaster was still not completely resolved at the end of the lecture. Gifford suggested that the revolution in perception will continue in film, and that such an evaluation can only be made in the future.

— Paul Kwon

Funding begins revival in languages

by Karen H. Costenbader

A $500,000 grant from a philanthropic foundation may help the College revive its language departments, which have suffered from declining student interest in recent years, according to professor Bruce Kieffer of the German department.

The five-year grant from the Philadelphia-based Pew Memorial Trust will be used to update the College's curriculum in foreign languages, literatures, and cultures, and to renovate Weston Hall, the administration announced two weeks ago.

The grant will allow the College to reorganize language and other humanities programs into a Center for Foreign Languages, Literatures, and Cultures, according to Kieffer, who chaired the committee which submitted the grant proposal.

"The Pew Memorial Trust has given us a lot of money in order to stimulate us to recover the interest in the humanities which has been declining over the last 15 to 20 years," said Kieffer.

Last winter the foundation's Liberal Arts Enrichment Program invited Williams to compete with 30 other colleges and universities for 15 grants ranging from $250,000 to $500,000, Kieffer said. All of the institutions were asked to submit proposals which would strengthen the humanities. College President Francis Oakley chose the modern foreign language departments to make the proposal.

The proposal aims to strengthen the existing foreign languages through the new Center, which will also strengthen interaction and cooperation among the modern foreign language departments and other Division I and II departments, especially those with an Area Studies component.

Weston renovation

The College is also planning to renovate Weston Language Center, Kieffer said. A new reception area, Office for Study Abroad and classrooms for language instruction will be built, as well as a new, tiered-seating video theatre and "the best little language lab in the country," according to Kieffer.

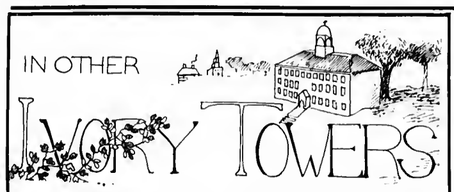
In addition to the physical changes, many curriculum and faculty changes are also being considered. Possibilities exist for the creation of a new major, "Literary Studies," which would serve as a comparative literature major, and a

Continued on Page 7

ANC: South African ties must be severed

by Debbie Snyder

Likening South Africa under apartheid to Nazi Germany, Jeanette Mothobi of the African National Congress (ANC) demanded last Tuesday that the international community place sufficient pressure on the South African government to force the dismantling of apartheid. She called for the creation of a new, non-racist South African government and constitution.



Mothobi began by emphasizing that the ANC, which was formed, she said, "basically to unite the African people against the inferior treatment against them by the colonialists," initially intended to change the racist system through peaceful protests.

Mothobi said that when the ANC was declared illegal in 1961, however, leaders such as Nelson Mandela said they could either fight or submit. "We decided, of course, we were going to fight in defense of freedom, in defense of justice and in defense of a non-racial society," Mothobi added.

This decision, she said, resulted in the members of the ANC being labeled as terrorists and communists. The government, however, engages in far more brutal practices with only mild comments from other countries, Mothobi said.

In discussing the government's inhumane treatment of blacks, Mothobi cited the allo-

Continued on Page 9

Wesleyan

The shanty erected last February by Wesleyan's South Africa Action Group was dismantled and put into storage this summer by order of the university's administration.

Director of Public Information Bobby W. Clark explained that the shanty was taken down "for the obvious health and safety issues surrounding an unoccupied structure of that sort." Clark also cited the "considerable expense it took Public Safety to monitor both the shanty and its surroundings" as a reason for the dismantling.

Many of Wesleyan's student activists were outraged by the administration's decision. "Their (the administration's) reasons are totally hypocritical," proclaimed Ted Bardacke '89, "they care more about the expense to police the thing than the lives of millions of South Africans."

Not all Wesleyan students were as upset. "You know, I never even noticed it was gone," said one senior. "I'm so embarrassed! I was never glad it was there or anything, but I sort of respected its right to be there."

Worcester Polytechnic Institute

New campus parking regulations announced this fall at WPI have spurred controversy among staff and faculty. According to the student newspaper, "The regulations are designed to alleviate the problems caused by having at least 1000 cars a day compete for approximately 800 parking spaces." Students, faculty, and staff at WPI must pay a $35 fee in order to receive a parking authorization sticker.

Having such a sticker does not, however, guarantee the availability of a parking space, and many faculty members are protesting what they view as an unreasonably high fee.

Hamilton

Hamilton College students returned to campus this fall to find a new food service company in their dining halls.

The new food service company, Hallmark Foods promises to provide a greater selection of food to the Hamilton College community and will schedule a variety of what Godsill calls "monotony breakers" for students. These events will include theme dinners and meals at which special items, such as pretzels, will be offered. Many students are already skeptical as to whether or not Hallmark will be able to live up to its promises, and some are already discontented by Hallmark's classification of entrees and portions. One student complained that, "They are too hard nosed about extras."

P.S. 122: Is performance art really art?

by Chuck Goforth

I strode into the Adams Memorial Theatre on my first assignment for the Williams Record, took my seat with confidence, removed my sports-coat, and looked toward the stage.

Bang! A slide presentation!? Ah! Can I review this? Big huge slides! No, stay calm ... it was the projected image that was huge; the slides themselves were probably the standard two inch squares, although ... oh! they covered the whole back wall of the set. No! no set, no comforting conventions at all, no curtain, nothing but the slides. Images of people and maps ... road maps, star maps, political maps, geographical maps ... and the people on them, in them, coming through them.

My confidence was shaken. What was I in for here? I needed something familiar. I looked to the program, hoping it would help me feel on top of the concept the way a good critic should be. I found it: "Robert Flynt: Transparent Routes/Hidden Drives." Not much comfort.

Ring leader

In comes Gayle Tufts, our "master of ceremonies." (I thought later that "ring leader" might have been more accurate.) She thanked us all for coming despite the Madonna/Rambo party, told a few jokes about Massachussetts to make us all feel comfortable and promptly introduced Bill Obrecht, a composer/musician armed with a saxophone. He played and she sang. Their number together was, in some general ways at least, like most of the other pieces that made up two consecutive nights: sensitive, intensely creative and fresh — an intriguing mix of a certain raw quality with a definite dose of polished talent. Both nights, each a totally different set of works, were alive with that kind of driven, creative hunger that young, New York artists often suffer from — usually to everyone's advantage.

Converted school

So who are these people? And what were they doing at Williams? They come from the lower East Side of NYC, and "home base" is a converted public school building, and so Bingo! they have their name: P.S. 122. They call themselves "Performance Artists," and apparently that can mean just about anything one has a fancy to try. The two shows I saw on Friday and Saturday nights were part of their stay here at Williams as artists in residence — a brief residence.

They came in early September and, thanks to various grants and foundations, were able to spend some time creating original works of performance art, in cooperation with our very own theatre department and dance society. They performed at the Log, hosted various workshops in dance, music, even "the use of junk on stage," and their efforts culminated in the two performances at the AMT last weekend.

Critical challenge

In those last two evenings, they treated their audiences to twelve different performers, and treated this critic to a serious challenge. Everything that happened was under the title "performance art," and yet what we're really talking about here seems to be a great

Continued on Page 8

Where did all these little purple signs come from? Enquiring minds want to know. You want to know. Watch next week's Record for the inside scoop. (Marcus)

Muir Quartet holds audience by a string

by Catherine Hirshfeld

The Muir String Quartet gave a remarkable performance in the first Thompson Concert of the year on Friday, September 19. They began with the Beethoven Quartet in D major, Opus 18, No. 3. This piece was followed by the Bartok Quartet No. 6 and the main attraction of the program, the Dvorak "American" Quartet, Opus 96 in F Major.

The Beethoven, a classic in the quartet tradition, showed the superb ensemble sound of the group; the two violin parts could have almost been played by the same performer. The viola and the cello provided excellent support for the dialogue between the upper instruments. Precision in rhythm and articulation and a great deal of expression marked this performance of the Beethoven. Performed with perhaps overexaggerated interpretation in some places, the piece as a whole was presented very well.

If the Beethoven was traditional, the Bartok, composed in 1939, was anything but. Bartok, like many composers of his time, was concerned primarily with texture rather than classic melody and harmony.

Varied techniques

The members of the quartet did a superb job with the range of playing techniques demanded by this work, yielding a composition that was fascinating in the variety of sounds produced.

The tonality of the Bartok was also a great contrast to the Beethoven. Dissonance and tension throughout the four movements made the work emotionally gripping. Its stormy nature was further emphasized by the musical intensity of the artists.

The violist had his first opportunity to really shine in the opening of the Bartok with an anguished solo requiring a great deal of control and expression. This solo was followed by an equally anguished passage for all four instruments. Later, in the third movement (Mesto: Burletta), the cellist had a similarly emotional solo, which he played extremely well.

The entire work seemed to be a despairing cry, torn from the strings of two violins, a viola, and a cello. It ended with a haunting whisper from all four instruments that died away into even more haunting silence.

The real tour de force of the program was the Dvorak. The Muir Quartet gave an outstanding interpretation of this extremely well-known work, playing with great musicality and perfect ensemble. Their rich, sweet sound was perfect for the piece.

As in many of Dvorak's compositions, the themes of the American Quartet have a simple folk-tune character to them, and yet the sophistication with which they are incorporated into the piece is anything but simple.

Triumphant chord

In particular, the theme of the second movement traded between the first violin and the cello, is a very simple but absolutely gorgeous melody reminiscent of a Slavic folksong. The Molto Vivace that follows is a dancelike movement which the artists played with grace and life. The performance ended with a spectacular Finale: Vivace ma non troppo, with the last triumphant chord ringing through the recital hall.

The audience's applause for this masterly performance called back the artists for an encore, another piece by Dvorak. This work was a short tone poem, the eighth in a series of love songs for string quartet, entitled "On the Shore of the Brook." In contrast to the lively nature of the finale, this work was a wistful, gentle composition showing well the sweet sound of the ensemble.

The Muir String Quartet members are Lucy Stolzfus and Bayla Keyes, violinists, Steven Ansell, violist, and Michael Reynolds, cellist. The quartet has been together since 1979 and has won the Naumburg and Evian competitions. They have toured extensively and are currently in residence at Boston University.

After a spectacular performance including compositions by Beethoven and Bartok, the audience at last Friday's concert brought the Muir String Quartet out for an encore. (Albright)

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight at 8:00 on the MainStage, Williamstheatre will present a performance of "Asinamali!," a work that provides a look at urban, black South Africa.....Tomorrow at 8 p.m. at the Clark Art Institute, Marcia B. Hall, Robert Sterling Clark visiting professor of art, will give a lecture entitled "Michelangelo's Late Frescoes: Divine Grace and Human Gracefulness".....At the Clark on Friday afternoon at 5:00, Robert Rosenblum, professor of fine art at New York University, will present a lecture entitled "John Martin and the End of the World"; the lecture marks the opening of the Clark's new exhibit of the prints of John Martin.....For more music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146.

College goals, policy discussed by faculty

by Jocelyn Shadforth

President Francis Oakley announced last week that the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) will start submitting the results of its two-year curriculum review this spring. Oakley also announced the new college trustees and discussed changes regarding the faculty during his address at Wednesday's faculty meeting.

The topic of curricular review was discussed with an announcement that there is a March-April deadline for the report by the CEP on the non-major part of the curriculum. Oakley said that other areas of concern involved "the degree to which non-major structuring intersects with staff allocation ... and faculty workload."

Professor Thomas Jorling, chairman of the CEP, discussed the committee's schedule, reiterating that the non-major part of the curriculum would be the focus of CEP's attention and of a report due in March or April. Jorling said the panel would address the distribution requirement, core course options, a senior course proposed by philosophy professor Rosemarie Tong in morals and ethics and a look at minimum skills, particularly in writing and in oral presentation skills.

Oakley announced the four new trustees of the College. Andrea Diehl Katz '75, editor-in-chief for the National News Bureau, Anthony Cummings '73, dean of admissions at Princeton University, Dustin Griffin '65, professor of English at New York University, and Allan Fulkerson '54, president of the Massachusetts Fiduciary Advisors Inc. and chairman and managing trustee of Century Shares Trust, all joined the board this summer.

"Tenacious effort"

Oakley spoke of his goals for the year. Important among them, he said, "is the tenacious effort to maintain the capacity to administer financial aid to all students demonstrating need for assistance," pointing out that 35% of the Class of 1990 is receiving aid.

He also emphasized the continuing diversity of the student body, and said 16 percent of the Class of 1990 are members of racial minorities, of whom 6.9 percent are black. Oakley claimed these figures had "significant importance and reflect the sustained efforts of the Admissions Office to maintain student diversity."

He discussed initiatives to continue the college's dedication to faculty excellence, chief among them a new faculty development plan. Aimed at second-year faculty, the proposal includes a reduced teaching load and participation in informal seminars with senior faculty focusing on teaching strategies, curriculum, and the special challenges and opportunities presented by race and gender in the classroom.

A program of competitive awards to supplement sabbatical salaries for professors was also announced. The awards would increase the usual three-quarters of a year's salary for professors on full-year and one semester mini-sabbaticals to full salary and would be available for three years, six semesters or a combination of both.

Continued on Page 7

Weiner—

Continued from Page 1

the wealthy.

Efforts to reach Conte's office for comment Saturday were unsuccessful.

Defeated Burns

Conte won his first term in Congress in 1958 by defeating Williams political science professor James MacGregor Burns. He is now the only republican member of the Masssachusetts congressional delegation.

He has been a leader on legislation dealing with acid rain and hazardous waste and has opposed Reagan administration cuts in programs to feed the poor and elderly, as well as student loans, according to the 1986 Almanac of American Politics.

Robert Weiner

In 1983, Conte voted for a resolution calling for a "mutual verifiable freeze on and reduction in nuclear weapons," and voted against aid to the contras in Nicaragua.

In 1984, Conte's positions included votes against prohibiting the use of health benefit funds to pay for abortions, in favor of the Equal Rights Amendment and against an increase in military and economic aid to El Salvador.

Council debates tenure, town relations

Party Policy Questioned

by Meg Thomas

The College Council discussed the role of students in the tenure process at its meeting last Thursday. The council also continued work on the improvement of relations between students and administration and students and Williamstown residents.

Concerns expressed

President Amy Jeffress '87 reported that while response to calls for more student involvement in the tenure process was generally positive, some departments expressed concern about making public a list of those professors up for tenure. They maintained that a published list would be detrimental to those professors who were denied tenure.

In response to student concerns about lack of input in the tenure process, David Kane '88 suggested that the council send a letter to all students informing them of both the procedure for determining tenure in various departments and how students may make their opinions known. Jeffress said that Dean of Faculty John Reichert had assured the subcommittee that when direct student input was given, it was taken into consideration in tenure decisions.

More involvement

Council members Martin White '87 and Sharon Burke '88 expressed their view that a simple letter to the student body was not enough of an answer and their desire to see even more direct student involvement in the determination of tenure.

Hans Humes '87, Wendell Chestnut '88 and Amy Jeffress '87 contemplate policy at last Thursdays College Coucil meeting. (Marcus)

Other representatives disagreed, feeling it inappropriate to have students directly involved in the tenure process. Further action will include discussions with individual departments and an additional meeting with Dean Reichert.

Town-Gown Reps

Secretary Wendell Chestnut '88 suggested two student representatives attend community meetings as a means of improving relations with the community. Working with Professor Thomas Jorling, a Williamstown selectman, these representatives would know when an issue concerning the college was to come before the selectmen.

Representative Hart Murphy '88 expanded on this idea to suggest a sizeable organization of students to which townspeople could register complaints, "instead of through (Williamstown police) chief Zoito." A subcommittee was formed to study the feasibility of this idea.

Jeffress suggested improving college-community relations through student participation in the Fall Foliage parade, and having campus medical trainees help with first aid during the parade. A previous suggestion of entering a float was dismissed.

Questions were raised about college policy prohibiting freshmen and JA's from filing party plans. Jeffress urged council representatives not to pressure the College into a decision on party policy which could lead to a far more conservative position by the administration. She added that the CUL was in the process of looking into the issue.

In other council business, Hans Humes '87 was elected liason to the CUL, Tom Perkins '87 was named representative to the CEP and Tim Hamilton '88, Sarah Marcus '89 and Kevin Hinton '89 were appointed to the elections committee.

The council also decided to contribute $100 to the Richard Krouse Memorial Fund.

CUL

Continued from Page 1

allowed to have parties anymore."

Hart Murphy '88 agreed with Petersen, adding that "if you plan a party for 75 people and 125 freshmen show up, security will shut the party down."

"Undermining unity"

The policy forbidding freshman parties "seems to be undermining freshman unity," said council vice-president Suzanne Biemiller '87, adding that freshmen go to upperclass parties and do not form bonds with other freshmen.

Petersen also complained of the Log's new drinking policy, which discourages attendance. "If there are only five or ten students there, they (food service workers) are going to entertain themselves by watching us," in an attempt to catch underage drinkers.

Amy Jeffress '87 said the situation involved "the legal level and the subtext. There's the way things are in the handbook and the way things actually are."

"We'll certainly deal with things the way they are," said Wagner, adding that the "issues seem to be tied together by alcohol."

Wagner also said that he would like the committee to examine the possibilities of re-establishing Row House dining. "The impression I get is that its elimination was a diminuation of house cohesiveness," he said. The original decision to eliminate row house dining was at least partially financial, Wagner said, adding, "now that the situation looks somewhat rosier, it might be possible to restore dining in some of the houses."

Dining in Tyler?

"It (elimination of the dining) has really wreaked havoc with the senior house associates," agreed Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta, newly returned from Harvard. College Council President Amy Jeffress '87 suggested that dining be started in Tyler House, considering the distance that house is from the dining halls.

Wagner said the committee "could be done with the row house dining fairly quickly," and have a report to submit concerning it by the end of the semester.

Wagner said after the meeting that the reason he brought the issue up was "partly from past students and partly from faculty and administration who have felt there was some kind of loss (when the dining was eliminated)," and that he has "heard from alumni who are also interested in the matter."

"It's unlikely the dining would be fully restored," said Wagner, "but I could see each house cluster having at least one dining facility."

Dean Mary Kenyatta brought up the issues involved with co-op housing.

"When the co-ops were established, they were another way for students to live together," she said. "My experience has been that we have groups now who live in the same house but have nothing to do with one another.

"I've begun to wonder if co-op housing provides services for people who want to live together or prime real estate for seniors." While little discussion followed this suggestion, the committee agreed to place it on their agenda.

Petersen then suggested the committee consider "the whole issue of academic advising." She contended, "Right now the quality of freshman advising varies tremendously. Then the floor drops out after the freshman year."

Murphy agreed with her, citing last spring's CUL poll which, he told the committee, "said that 63 percent of students felt freshman advising was 'of little or no value.'" While Jeffress said it was "not a priority issue," the committee also agreed to consider the advising process, noting that the Committee on Educational Policy and the curricular review might also deal with the issue.

The CUL agreed to create four subcommittees, dealing with party plans and College alcohol policies, Row House dining, Co-ops and Advising. Wagner said the subcommittees will "define what they see the problem to be and provide information," but they will not make decisions.

Faculty meeting—

Continued from Page 6

Oakley also thanked professors Antonio Gimenez, Bruce Kieffer, Eleanor Jorden, George Pistorius and James Wood for their efforts in bringing the College a recent $500,000 grant from the Pew Memorial Trust for programs in language, literature and culture.

The problem of classroom space was also addressed as Oakley spoke of the need for some "sprucing up" and the possible building of a new structure for classroom and office space.

Oakley then announced that Assistant Professor of Economics Morton Schapiro is the new Assistant Provost, and Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber will be chairman of the Freshmen Residential Experiment. Dean of the College Stephen Fix will head the experiment's evaluation committee.

Language grants—

Continued from Page 4

new introductory course, tentatively entitled European Literature 101-102, would survey French, German, Spanish and Russian literature in translation. New advanced language and summer programs abroad may also be introduced.

The executive committee to oversee funds distribution is chaired by Dean of the Faculty John Reichert and includes Kieffer, associate professors of romance languages Antonio Gimenez and Susan Dunn, Assistant Professor of History William Wagner, and Associate Professor of Chinese Jing-Heng Ma.

The first director of the Center, according to Kieffer, is to be a distinguished scholar of Comparative Literature from another college who will be able to teach a foreign language. The position of assistant professor of linguistics will also be created.

Kieffer said he hopes the grant will, by "moving foreign studies to the center of Williams interests," double the current 20 to 30 graduating students who major in a foreign language.

At the end of this academic year, Williams will also sponsor a conference to "share experience and insight with peer colleges," one of the grant's conditions. Representatives of 14 other New England colleges will attend to learn about Williams' progress in strengthening foreign language, literature and culture studies.

Disinvestment—

Continued from Page 1

Friday's statement pointed out that the college was following the precedent set by TIAA-CREF, a national pension fund, which opted for disinvestment advocacy.

"My question is, what's the next logical step? The logical progression would have it that if the companies don't pull out, then we divest from them. In other words they haven't gone far enough."

Williams said that the new policy doesn't really affect the strategy of WAAC. "The (finance committee) report really doesn't change anything, because they really haven't done anything."

Williams and Martin White '87, a spokesman for the Williams Black Student Union (WBSU), both said that Oakley informed them of the new policy before it was officially announced.

"He said we should consider it a victory for WAAC," Williams said, adding that he was disappointed that the decision wasn't publicly debated in the Williams community but "wasn't surprised, they have never really tried to include the students on the financial policy decisions."

ACSR members were informed of the shift after their meeting Monday, but the statement was not presented to them at the time, according to Reed.

Dave Treworgy '88, a former member of the disbanded Coalition for a Free South Africa, which opposed divestment as a means to end apartheid, does not support the new policy.

"It is not the proper step," Treworgy said. "I personally feel that we should encourage our companies to stay in, but only because I believe they can affect a change for the better. They have a potential for social good. If they did pull out, they would probably be selling their stocks to Europeans or white South Africans."

Treworgy said he was surprised by change in policy. "I was surprised because in the 'Williams Reports,' Will Reed argued in an opposite direction."

Reed said that in writing the article, he supported shareholder activism both as a tool to effect change in South Africa and as a tool to get companies out of South Africa.

White said he considered the new policy a "partial victory."

"This new policy is definitely a positive step," White said. "True, it is rhetoric more than anything else, as they can now say that they have done something, even though its not really a change. But, if nothing else, it represents a change in attitude. The college used to imply that it had no pull with the companies, now they're saying they can do a lot. However, we should have done it a year ago."

White said he was sorry that the college did not have an open forum to debate the validity of the new policy, but he wasn't surprised: "They have never really wanted students involved in the decision making process."

White said he believes the next logical step is divestment: "what it requires in my eyes is that they set a deadline for divestiture, say 6 months."

Oakley said the announcement that Coca-Cola Co. would sell its South African holdings suggested this might be the time "for shareholder resolutions to have the maximum effect."

Asked whether the college might divest its stock in the long run if it is unable to influence the companies involved in South Africa, Reed said, "That's a possibility, sure. But we have got to do it on a case-by-case basis, and we have to be patient, too."

Oakley said that the College's investment policies have been open to change as conditions in South Africa have changed. He cited the decision last year to acquire new stock only in companies must have signed the Sullivan principles.

Correction

Wendell Chestnut '88 was incorrectly listed as treasurer of the College Council in last week's article. His position is C.C. secretary.

. . . and then there was

"Necessitees"

Williamstown's Emporium of Questionable Taste
Located at the Williamstown Marketplace
857 Cold Spring Road (across from 1896 House Restaurant)

We feature Custom Silk Screening done-on-the-premises, vintage clothing, uniforms, jewelry, hats, etc., etc., etc.

We at Necessitees firmly believe that

"BOGUS IS BEAUTIFUL"

Now offering a student special!

Original Design T-Shirts sizes S-XL are 2 . 4 . 1 and — you will receive a 10% discount on anything else in the store this week only —

I'm just a hop, skip and a jump away people!
So get your buns down and check us out!

reviews since we opened

"This place is a hoax!" (double knit tourist)

"What is the meaning of this store?" (troubled individual)

"alright!" (someone who understands)

THE CLIP SHOP

Call for an appointment or just walk in.

Always special discounts for students

49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585

125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
802-447-2648

122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576

SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTERS
THE SALONS THAT MAKE THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OK AND EXTRAORDINARY

Performance art

Continued from Page 5

mixing bowl of the more traditional forms of the performing arts. At least this is the theory.

Performance art?

In reality the "mixing" doesn't seem to take place all that often. Some of the works, each about ten minutes long, were easily recognizable as dance. Others were obviously film, stand-up comedy or music. In these cases the definition of performance art is questionable; there didn't seem to be a reason to give these works a new category.

The pieces themselves were for the most part striking, funny and beautiful. The performers are unquestionably talented, and energetic beyond belief. But all these pieces of performance art put together were sometimes indistinguishable from just a very good talent show.

Particularly notable was Ann Carlson's compelling and technically expert dance piece, entitled "Visit woman move story, cat cat cat." (and I'm pretending I'm qualified to describe this stuff). She convincingly recreated the movements of an ape in a graceful and natural way, brought a cat on stage and painted curious and lovely images with the two very different bodies.

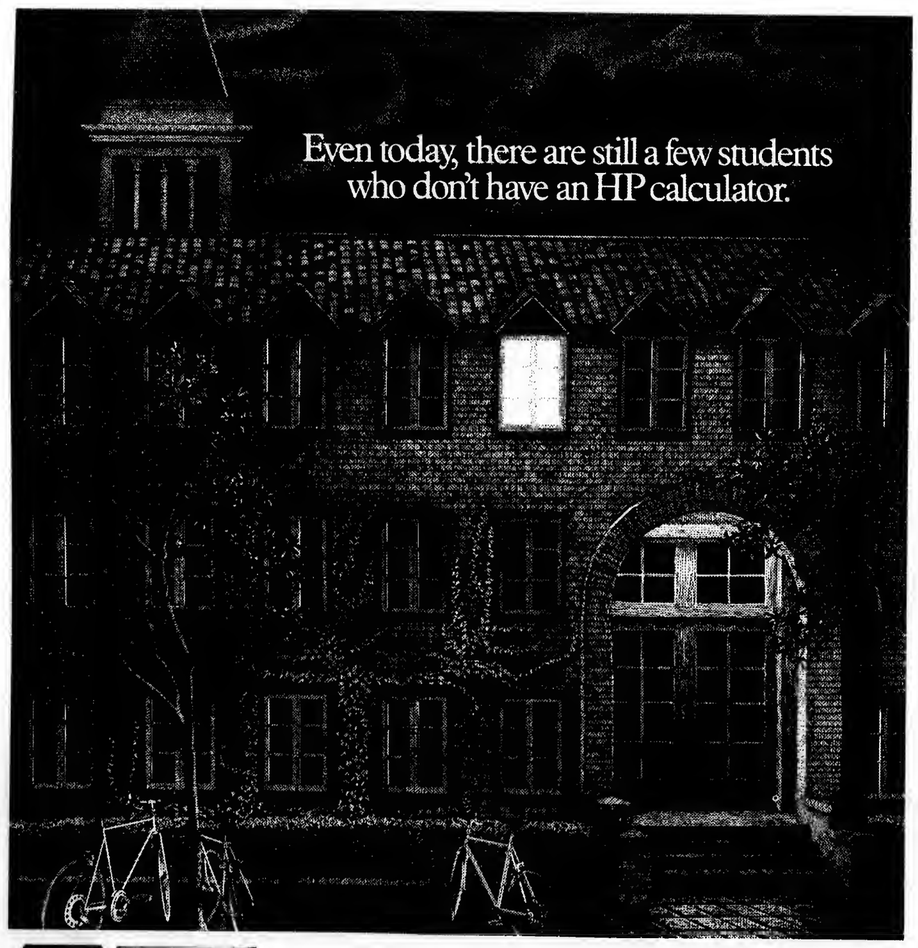
The audience loved Paul Zaloom's biting social commentary. The man had more props than Universal studios and with ingenious technique used them all to make angry, but hilarious, personal comments on eating, farming, education, and prison.

Tin foil

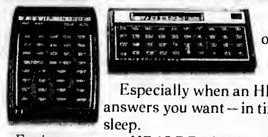
I can't finish this review without mentioning Mimi Goese, whose work really did need a brand new category. In a piece called, "Tin Foil Sandwich," she strode out onto the stage completely covered in tin foil. She moved slowly down stage to the rhythm of a deep and primitive music, looking like a cross between the living statue in "Don Giovani" and the mummy in a Laurel and Hardy movie. Then she ripped it all off, and put on other costumes of similar novelty. She shattered puzzles, poured chocolate sauce on her head, threw cigarettes into the audience, spray painted the Mona Lisa and then her own mouth, painted her face with broad strokes of make-up, and then, dressed herself in a tu-tu that was equipped with two bags of marshmallows (like holsters). She strode toward us and launched them in high arcs over the audience.

It was terrific to see all these performers at Williams, being for the most part so exquisitely original and vastly different from what usually appears on any stage. They will be in New York until November when they head for Boston, and then to Portland, Maine for New Years Eve. Whatever they want to call themselves, and whatever the questions about performance art, these people have wells of talent, and they're welcome here anytime.

Soccer



Continued from Page 11



"awesome." Reserve goaltender Beth Edwards '89 said it was "a great win", especially after the loss to Skidmore.

Loss to Skidmore

At Skidmore, Williams struck first when Madore converted a pass from Boddicker early in the first half. Skidmore evened the count five minutes later on a score by Cindy Leach. The next sixty minutes were scoreless, as the Ephs could not capitalize on shot advantage. Finally, with fourteen minutes remaining, Skidmore's Maren Batchelor broke the tie with the home team's second tally. Williams could not knot the score, eventually falling.

With their record now standing at 2-1, the squad returns home against Middlebury today on Cole Field. On Saturday, Wesleyan comes to Williamstown for a date with the Lady Ephs at 12:30.

Burning the midnight oil may be necessary.

Burning the 2:00 or 3:00 or 4:00 AM oil is absurd.

Especially when an HP calculator can get the answers you want -- in time to get a good night's sleep.

For instance, our HP-15C Professional Scientific Calculator has more built-in advanced math and statistical power than any other calculator. Our HP-41 Advanced Scientific Calculators have even more potential.

That's because there are better than 2500 software packages available for them -- more than for any other calculator.

There's even a special plug-in software package (we call it the Advantage Module) that's designed to handle the specific problems an engineering student has to solve in his, or her, course work.

No wonder professionals in engineering and the physical sciences widely regard HP calculators as the best you can get.

So check one out. Then, when your mother calls to ask if you're getting enough sleep, you won't have to lie.

By the way, if you want more information, just give us a call at 800-FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658C.

HEWLETT PACKARD

MORE OF THE ACTION in the Ephs' grid contest Saturday with the Panthers of Middlebury up in the Green Mountains. Purple prevailed by a tally of 17-7 (see story, photo on P. 12). Newcomers brightened the Eph football prospects as the team tackles the Hamilton Continentals on Weston Field this Saturday. (Somers)

ANC lecture

Continued from Page 4

cation of 30 percent of the budget to the twenty-seven million blacks compared to 70 percent to the fourteen million whites, the death rate of 5 black children per hour and the low life expectancy rate for South African blacks. "The racist regime has not only murdered us physically," she said, "they have murdered us spiritually."

Mothobi denounced meaures taken by the government such as the repeal of the pass laws and proposed reforms. She spoke of one proposed law that would allow blacks to marry whites, commenting, "We, the ANC, say we have not been dying for our men to marry whites." The ANC is fighting for a change in government, she said, not simply reforms in the present system.

Sullivan Principles wrong

She also attacked the Sullivan Principles: "The Sullivan Principles can't do anything about the apartheid system itself. They don't address the fundamental principles our people are fighting against. Our people are saying, 'We don't want our chains polished.' "

Pressure from other countries is essential for forcing the government to change its policies, Mothobi said. She maintained that South African Prime Minister Pieter Botha sees the world consenting to the apartheid system, because South Africa has not suffered any negative effects from international opposition.

She compared South Africa to Nazi Germany, saying, "Unless the international community takes some position like the world took against Nazi Germany, they will continue to cushion the apartheid regime."

Addressing her audience specifically, Mothobi urged divestment as a way of fighting the apartheid system. "Sanctions alone won't bring an end to the suffering," she said.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717

The Chaplain invites your participation in

A National March/Pilgrimage on Washington, D.C. Sunday, Sept. 28

To stand in solidarity with
the people of South Africa
the refugees of Central America
the slaughtered of Nicaragua the homeless and those without work in the U.S.A.

What they all have in common is Ronald Reagan

and they can't wait 'til we have time.

Departure: probably dawn's early light, Saturday 9/27
Return: after midnight, Sunday
Cost: some of your money, some of ours

Info: Rev. Carol Pepper x2483

if not now, when?

no pasarán!

Partial List of Sponsors:
National Sanctuary Movement
United Church of Christ
Nica Network
Witness for Peace
Sojourners
Union of American Hebrew Congregations
Rainbow Alliance Lobby
Pax Christi
National Coalition of America Nuns
National Federation, Veterans in Peace
Mary Knoll
Williams College Chaplain's Office

THE LOG
YOUR CAMPUS PLACE FOR
Monday Night Football
Join us each Monday for FREE POPCORN and "Affordable Refreshments"
Try Our Pizza Special
Ham & Cheese Pizza
Small $2.95 Large $5.95
Coming Attractions:
The Movie Back to the Future!
Thursday, September 25 at 7:00 Admission $.75
Log Hours:
Monday-Friday 9:00-12:00
Saturday 9:00-1:00
College I.D. Required for Admission.
Valid Drivers Licence Required to purchase Alcoholic Beverages

Harvard Business School
MBA Program
An informal information session for prospective applicants, hosted by a representative of the Admissions Board, will be held on October 23.
For details, please contact
Office of Career Counseling.
Harvard Business School is committed to the principle of equal educational opportunity

SPORTS SHORTS

Tennis

The women's tennis team chalked up their first victory of the season with a win over Smith on Saturday. The 8-1 rout puts the team's record at 1-2 after a loss to Skidmore last Tuesday.

Captain Katie Kerr '87 battled her opponent ,Caroline Diehl, for three hours before winning, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4. Coach Sean Sloane summed up the match, "Katie's was the big match. She came from behind to win by being especially tough at the net." Other winners included Amy Davidson '90, Anne Shulman '88, Missy Crouchley '89, and Liz Kellison '87.

All three of the doubles teams also defeated their opponents. The number one pairing, Davidson and Crouchley, were extended to three sets in their 6-2, 3-6, 6-2 victory. Cathy Paper '89 and Anabel Sheinberg '89 dropped the first set 1-6 before rallying in the second and third sets with a 7-5 tie-breaker in the third to win. Nancy Shore '89 and Norah Vincent '90 had a much easier time, defeating their opponents in straight sets.

Loss to Skidmore

On Tuesday, the Lady Ephs fell to Skidmore 8-1. The Thoroughbreds took all of the doubles matches and five of the singles matches in their victory. The only victor for the Lady Ephs was the number two seeded Davidson, who defeated her opponent in straight sets, 6-2, 6-2. Kellison and Crouchley took three sets to be defeated as did the doubles team of Paper and Sheinberg.

The team looks to even the record today against Mt. Holyoke at home at 3:30. Saturday they host Middlebury at 1:00.

—Megan McNeill

Volleyball

Displaying a "higher skill level than teams in the past" according to senior co-captain Becky Moehring, the women's volleyball team stands at 2-1 in the N.I.A.C and 2-4 overall after losing three of four matches this past weekend at the Great Dane Tournament at Albany state.

The squad traveled to Albany on Friday and defeated Skidmore in two games before falling to Rochester in two. On Saturday, the team's hopes of finishing relatively high in the tournament were dashed as the Lady Ephs were swept by Suny-Stonybrook and Suny-Courtland.

Earlier in the week, the team hit the road for a tri-meet with Amherst and Smith, emerging with a split and a second place finish, defeating Amherst in two games and falling to Smith in two.

According to Moehring, the team's problem is that it has yet to fully tap the potential pool of talent that it seems to posess: "We haven't come close to playing up to our ability," she said, "but we're looking forward to getting a lot better."

Golf

A week and a half ago Williams hosted the two day Williams College Invitational golf tournament on their home course, the Taconic Golf Club. The Eph linksters took sixth place in a ten squad field, and the Williams-B squad finished seventh. Despite the low finish, the A-team ended the match only 13 strokes behind first place R.P.I and a whopping 52 shots ahead of last place Trinity.

Also encouraging is the fact that the B-team placed ahead of three varsity squads, an impressive feat considering the fact that B-members are not the top varsity golfers at Williams.

Individual standouts for the Ephs included sophomore Tim Frechette, who captured seventh place with a two day total of 157, Chas Foehl '87, in twentieth with a 160, and Mike Harrington '88, who shot 168 for twenty-seventh. The most impresive effort, however, came from Guy Kurtz '87, who rallied from a disappointing 81 on the first day to post a closing round of 73 catapulting him into third place overall.

Rugby

Continued from Page 11

The Killer-B's took the pitch soon afterwards and proceeded to reveal to Middlebury the amazing strength and depth of the WRFC. The first score came early in the metch when Michael Sullivan '88 placed a beautiful pop kick into Middlebury territory which Charlie Lazor '87 chased down andcarried in for the try.

The rest of the half was dominated by Williams but no more points were scored. In the second half the B-side exhibited the reason they are called the Killer-B's, going on an offensive spree. With senior Andy Anselmi, junior Andy Harris, Pierre Swart '90, Denis Newcomer '87, Lazor and Sullivan burning up the pitch, the B's scored four unanswered trles.

Next the mighty C-men hit the pitch to eat up Middlebury, as the show was led by Bill Boyd '88 who, with the help of Lazor and Barton George '87, took control of the pitch. The pack, led by the hard hitting of sophomores Tom Bottern, James McGill, and Chris Palmedo, battered Middlebury's scrum, and although the first half was scoreless, Boyd found the try zone in the second half to give Williams the lead, 4-0. With another try by George and a conversion by Boyd, the C-men triumphed, 10-0.

Williams' fourth side came out to put the final touch on this victorious, wet, cold day, and handed Middlebury its last defeat, 16-0, with a beautiful try by Tom Newhall '88, and a Jeff Roth '87-Steve Linen '90 connection for another in the first half, both converted by Whitney Wilson '90.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS
The most jazz, blues, reggae and rock at the lowest prices
WE BUY AND SELL USED LP'S
131 WATER ST. 458-5229

Gateway to London and Beyond
ITHACA COLLEGE
London Center
■ SEMESTER OR YEAR PROGRAM
■ ITHACA COLLEGE CREDIT
■ BRITISH FACULTY
Learn about British and European cultures through courses in literature, history, business, music, sociology, communications, politics, and much more. Special program offered in Drama. Internships available to qualified students in international business, social services, communications, political science, and economics.
Visits to the theatre, museums, galleries, schools, social and political institutions are an integral part of the curriculum.
For further information write:
International Programs -SP
Ithaca College, Ithaca, New York 14850

Two ways to leave the pack behind.

From grade point averages to grad school applications to preparing for the (gasp) real world, there's one thing that stands out about higher education.
The higher the education, the stiffer the competition.
But don't despair. Apple® has two ways to make sure the competition eats your dust.
Just take part in a five minute demonstration of the Macintosh™ personal computer.
You'll see how Macintosh can help you work better, faster and smarter.
You'll also qualify to win a Trek® 12-speed touring bike. Just by showing up.
What's more, you'll walk away with a free bicycle cap.
And the knowledge that you can dramatically change the course of History. Biology. And whatever else you may be studying.
Macintosh and a Trek bike.
Both will do more than help you get ahead. Both will take you anywhere you want to go.

Colonial Pizza
"The best in the area"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown, Spring Street, 458-9009, 458-8014
No. Adams, Eagle St., 664-4134, 664-6889
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Andrew Anselmi '87 evades several Panthers during rugby's B-side win over Middlebury on Saturday. (Somers)

Rugby sweeps Panthers to open season

by Sean Brennan

A bloodthirsty horde of Williams ruggers arrived in Middlebury Friday night to prepare for the season's first battle on the following day. With only one seasoned A-side veteran returning from last year, the men of the WRFC were banking on their strong depth to lead them to their first victory of the new season. It was a hungry pack of White Dogs that appeared on the pitch Saturday morning with high hopes for the four matches scheduled for the day.

The A-side got off quickly to a dominating start, demonstrating the speed and skill of its backs as they consistently executed their smooth and loose line play. Seniors Matt Salisbury, Mark Tompkins, Dave Koota, Steve Patterson, and Gary Sheff worked together to keep Williams in Middlebury's end of the pitch while Thomas Connolly '87 held his own at fullback.

Meanwhile, the forward eight, Mike Goldstein '88, Davis D. Davis, Sean Brennan '87, Evan Zahner '87, Brad Roegge '88, John Stanley '87, Gene Mazzaro '87, Jeff Heilman '87, and Kurt Oeler '88, physically had their way with a Middlebury pack that could intimidate the bravest of men.

The first score of the day came late in the first half when Stanley broke away with the ball, squib-kicked it into the try zone where the ever-present Tompkins touched it down for the try.

Minutes later Salisbury took a pass from Tompkins and broke open on a long run in for the try. Nearing the end of the half, Williams was still rolling when Mazzaro placed another perfect kick into Middlebury territory and initiated another scoring play when he dished the ball to Koota who got it to Patterson, who ran it in to make it 12-0 at the half.

The second half was a little slower for Williams as Middlebury scored both a try and a penalty kick to make it 12-7, but the White Dogs held on with some excellent defensive play and came out victoriously.

Continued on Page 10

Soccer tops Smith 3-2 and loses to Skidmore

by Stewart Verdery

Shaking off the effects of a tough loss to Skidmore last Tuesday, the women's soccer team hung on to a tenuous 3-2 lead for part of the second half to defeat nationally-ranked Smith on Saturday in Northampton Williams took the upper hand early when Chris Boddicker '88 handled a short pass from Susan Piper '90 and beat the goalie for her fourth score of the season. 23 minutes into the match, the Ephs upped their lead to 2-0 on a goal by co-captain Gigi Madore '87 with Boddicker assisting.

Kim Hatch '88 concluded the offensive onslaught with an unassisted goal, and Williams had a commanding 3-0 advantage after only twenty-nine minutes of play. Meanwhile, goalie Joyce Rogers '88 was turning away the Smith scoring threats, grabbing most of her game-high 15 saves during that time.

Smith comes back

In the second half Smith showed why their team was ranked by the pollsters. Midway through the period, Betsy Herrmann beat Rogers for the home team's first score. Rina Colombo, who had assisted Herrmann's goal, then added a tally of her own with eleven minutes remaining to pull Smith within one at 3-2.

The Ephwomen could not recover their first half offensive attack, as the ball consistently stayed in the Smith scoring area. Rogers continued to garner saves throughout the concluding portion of the game, as Smith could not get the equalizing goal. The squad was understandably happy about the win, Boddicker calling it

Continued on Page 8

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE GENUINE
This week's recipient is senior Dan MacCarthy, who had a key interception and led the defensive charge from his linebacker spot in the football team's 17-7 win at Middlebury on Saturday. Dan, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
Come see our fine selection of books, including
London, Paris, Rome, Williamstown and
THE FAR SIDE T-SHIRTS
as well as
Science Fiction, Biography, Humor, Mystery, etc.
Come visit us soon.
Open from 8:30 a.m. - 9 p.m.
Located next to THE LOG

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects
Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, antique looking jewelry.
TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
76 SPRING STREET · WILLIAMSTOWN
MONDAY · SATURDAY 10 am · 5 pm
Telephone (413) 458-5007

Football takes opener as newcomers sparkle

by Al Mottur

New faces and strong defensive play combined last Saturday to provide the football team with a 17-7 win over the Middlebury Panthers in Middlebury, Vt. The Ephmen, despite steady rain throughout the majority of the game, came out strong from the start, building an insurmountable 14-0 lead in the first quarter.

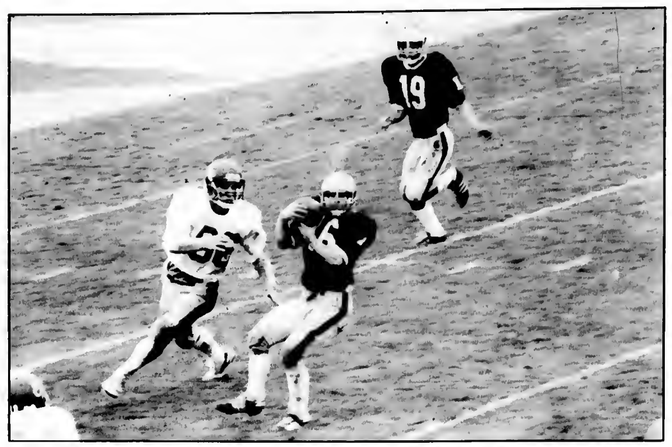
The first score came with 2:59 left in that period as freshman tailback Neal Chesley lept into the end zone from the one-yard line to give the Ephs their first score of the season. The team padded their lead just two minutes later when Panther quaterback Jim Hackett, under intense pressure, tossed the ball into the hands of Williams defensive end John Ciolek '87, who rumbled untouched for 40 yards and a 14-0 lead.

As the half wore on, the Ephs seemed to be in control of the contest, moving the ball well under the direction of starter Rob Gotti. The sophomore looked reasonably sharp in his first varsity start, running the option well and throwing occasionally downfield.

The Panthers, however, were given an opportunity to get back into the game when Scott Powers '88 shanked a quick-kick, giving Middlebury the ball near the Eph 30-yard line. Hackett quickly marched his team into the end zone, firing a clutch two yard TD pass to senior split end Mark Odom on fourth down.

Ephs hold the lead

Leading by seven at the intermission, Williams looked impressive, maintaining good field position and playing excellent ball-control offense behind Gotti and the running of fullback Rob Miller '87 and Chesley. The defense was especially strong as it kept the Panthers from seriously threatening at any time other than after Powers' muffed kick.



The presence and immense impact the many newcomers were having on the squad was clearly a high point for the Ephs. Gotti at quarterback and Joe Thompson '89 at center worked together smoothly except for one mishandled snap. Chesley ran exceptionally well for a freshman in his first college start, carrying the ball 27 times for 84 yards and a TD. Also a pleasant surprise was the consistent kicking by John Birgbauer '90 who booted two extra-point attempts and later added a game clinching 27-yard field goal late in the fourth quarter.

As the second half opened, Gotti was still at the helm, and the Ephs opened with the ball. The team could not get anything going and were forced to punt. In what became a key factor in the second half, Powers boomed the first of five 50 yard punts, pinning the Panthers deep in their own territory.

About the only excitement of the third quarter was the entrance of transfer QB Scott Kennedy '89 into the game. Kennedy, who took over for Gotti midway through the quarter to gain some valuble game experience, and showing a keen touch in his passes, one of which he lofted over the fingers of a Panther linebacker into the hands of tight-end Jim Poulsen '87 on third down, keeping a time- consuming drive alive.

With the victory over Middlebury, head coach Bob Odell was pleased with his team at this early juncture in the season. His most expressed worry before the game, that inexperience would hurt the team, proved not to be the case, as Gotti and Kennedy both performed well as did Chesley, Birgbauer, and Thompson. Odell also got defensive help from first time starter Dave Montgomery '89 who had a key sack in the fourth quarter. The stellar play of linebacker Dan McCarthy '87, who picked off two passes and was in on several tackles, reemphasizes the strength of the defense.

A win over the Hamilton Continentals this Saturday at Weston field would go a long way towards furthering this young team's already confident posture and towards providing Williams with its first winning football season in several years.

Junior Lewis Collins looks back as a Middlebury defensive back halts a long Eph drive in the second quarter with an interception off Eph quarterback Rob Gotti '89. (Albright)

Soccer falls in 1-0 in OT to Panthers

by Greg Leeds

In a typically close and very physical match, the men's soccer team battled through 90 minutes of regular time and two overtimes before letting Middlebury slip by, 1-0, on Saturday. Throughout the game both teams played very evenly, though the Panthers presented a quicker offense to the clearly more experienced Eph defense.

Callchman shines

Most notable in the Williams defense was freshman Dan Callchman at stopper, who had an outstanding game and was instrumental in holding off the Panthers. Senior Brad Bryan had a very solid game in goal, turning back a dangerously close one-on-one situation early in the game and totaling eight saves. Also particularly impressive were forward Scott Walker '87 and midfielders Mike Masters '89 and co-captain Denny Wright '87.

The game's only goal came with 3:24 left in the first overtime period. Helge Welner '87 had just saved a shot on an open net, but seconds later Middlebury's Erik Vigsnes headed in a corner kick from teammate Tom Hand.

Outshot 13-9

The Panthers outshot the Ephmen 13-9, yet Williams had eight corner kicks to Middlebury's two. Middlebury had played twice prior to Saturday's match, but it took the Ephmen very little time to present a cohesive opposition. They pressed the young Panther defense early on but were unable to score. Coach Mike Russo noted "It was a tough game, and very even throughout. Being our first match, I was very pleased."

The Ephs play their first home match on Wednesday against Clark.

Now 3-0

Unbeaten field hockey rolls over Smith

Outclassing the opposition all over the field, the field hockey squad has jumped out to 3-0 record by easily defeating Vassar, Skidmore, and Smith.

At Cole Field on Saturday, the Lady Ephs downed Smith 2-0, "dominating the game offensively", according to coach Chris Larson-Mason. Lisa Tenerowicz '88 scored her sixth goal of the young season on a penalty stroke for the first Williams tally. The one-sided game's only other score came when Maureen Flaherty '90 fed Amy Kershaw '90 for the Ephs' second goal.

Smith could mount only a token attack, getting off only two shots on Eph goalie Stacy Minyard '90. The freshman was substituting for injured starter Win Holt '89, and "did a good job", said Larson-Mason. An indication of how completely Williams controlled play was in the area of penalty corners, where Smith could only manage one to the Ephs' 24.

Earlier in the week, the team had travelled to Skidmore and returned with a 3-1 victory. The home team took a quick 1-0 lead when a Skidmore player emerged from a "mob scene" to score past Eph goalie Holt. This lucky break, however, was a futile gesture against the powerful Williams team. In the second half, Tenerowicz cranked in a pair of goals to give the Ephs a 2-1 lead. Kristin Frederickson '90 added a solo goal to clinch the win.

The young, aggressive squad hopes to build on the rousing successes of the first three games, hosting a pair of games this week. Mt. Holyoke arrived today for a 3:30 matchup, and Wesleyan is the opponent on Saturday.

During the field hockey team's 2-0 victory over Smith on Saturday, Mary Vandersteur '87 fights for the ball with her opponent. (Gannon)

Harriers race to fifth in home Invitational

by Steve Brody

The annual Williams Invitational was run on Saturday at Mount Hope Farm, with nine teams competing in the men's race and fifteen in the women's. Both the men's and women's teams placed fifth in their respective races.

The men's race was dominated by the teams from Bates and Albany St., with Bates coming out on top behind the stellar performance of John Fitzgerald. He finished the tough course in 25:30, well ahead of second place finisher Gregg Cornell of Bridgewater, who ran 26:10.

The top five teams in the race were Bates with 43, Albany St with 55, Hamilton with 105, Amherst with 107, and Williams with 128.

The Ephs' top finisher was Dave Grossman '87, who continued running in mid-season form. He ran with the leaders through the entire race and finished sixth in 26:37. Also racing impressively were seniors Mark Gilrain '87, Mike Coyne, and Ted Arrowsmith, who finished 19th, 27th, and 35th, respectively. Rounding out the scoring was Jon Fisher '87, in his first meet this year, in 41st place with a time of 28:09.

The Williams men once again did not run all of their top competitors, as they continue to look toward meets later in the season.

Women tie for fifth

Springfield ran away with the women's race, taking second, sixth, seventh, 10th, and 11th place to finish with 36 points. Closest to Springfield was the University of Vermont, which finished with 65 points behind the race's individual winner Celesta Leon.

Williams tied for fifth place in the race with Albany St., as each team had 220 points. The top Eph runner was Sarah Pierce '88, who took ninth place overall with a time of 19:27. Pierce was followed by Becky Conklin '87, 35th in 20:22; Sarah Hams '89, 47th in 20:41; Karin Johnson '89, 62nd in 20:55; and Kate Pugh '87, who finished 84th with a time of 21:36.

The Ephwomen have looked stong in the early season and can be expected to challenge once again for the Little Three title. Both the men's and the women's teams will travel to Amherst on Saturday for the Amherst Invitational before resuming their dual meet schedules in October.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO.3 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE SEPTEMBER 30, 1986

Dodd House Saturday night. Complaints have been made that new policies are causing freshmen to overcrowd parties like these. (LeBauer)

Freshman and J.A. party plans banned

by Alysa Doyle and Rob Wilmers

A new college policy forbids freshmen or their junior advisors from filing party plans, in an attempt to curb freshman drinking.

Because alcohol-serving parties without party plans will be shut down, the policy outlaws alcohol at freshmen events. According to Williams security director Ransom Jenks, the change was made to better comply with Massachussetts drinking laws.

"Preventing freshmen from filing party plans was a conscious decision to comply with the 21 year old drinking age. The new rule does not mean that they cannot have parties that are alcohol free," said Jenks.

Overcrowding

According to Spencer House president Mary Petersen '87, house presidents have recently complained of an influx of freshmen overcrowding parties. Jenks said that complaint was unfair and claimed that security will not close a party on the basis of the number of people who show up for that party.

He also pointed out Williams' 1500 non-freshmen on campus and said it was very possible that sophomores, juniors and seniors make up most of the party-goers.

Continued on Page 8

Hopkins to close; class space needed

by Debbie Snyder

Extensive renovation of Hopkins Hall will probably begin after the end of this school year, according to members of an ad hoc committee appointed last May by President Francis Oakley. The committee's task is to recommend options for redesigning the building, which houses most of the administration and a floor of classrooms.

The Hopkins renovation will force the college to build new classrooms, Oakley said. He added that an addition to an existing building or a free-standing structure would be created to satisfy interim needs, but said another structure will be needed to meet the demands of the next 25 five years.

Williamstown building inspector Michael Card told the college last March that the top floor of Hopkins Hall would not be certified for classroom space effective September of this year, and the third floor would not be certified as of September 1987 due to inadequate fire-safety provisions.

In addition to renovating Hopkins, the committee is trying to solve the problems of temporary relocation of the administrative offices occupying Hopkins Hall and creation of additional classroom space and faculty offices, committee members said.

Offices scattered

While Hopkins Hall is being renovated, the offices occupying it will be dispersed among various, as yet undetermined, buildings. Oakley said that some offices will probably be moved to the part of the new gym facing Spring Street.

Hopkins Hall will need more stairways than this to meet building codes.

According to committee member Winthrop Wassenar, director of the physical plant, Hopkins Hall will "essentially be stripped inside, and existing sources (of circulation) will be removed." In compliance with the building code, Wassenar said, the new interior will have two stairwells and an elevator.

The renovated building will include increased space for some expanded administrative offices and space to allow for flexibility in the future growth of offices. Nancy McIntire, assistant to the president and member of the committee, described the offices in Hopkins Hall as "pretty tight, not very flexible, crowded, and with little privacy." She cited the registrar's office and the comptroller's office as examples of large operations squeezed into small quarters.

Classrooms lost

Available classroom space will shrink due to the Hopkins renovation, college treasurer William Reed said.

The committee and Architect Resources of Cambridge, Inc., the consulting firm with whom Wassenar said they meet regularly, are "evaluating the possibilities of renovation with or without an addition (to Hopkins Hall) and maybe an addition to another building," he said.

Reed, who chairs the ad hoc committee, said, "We started off looking at Hopkins Hall, but we're now looking at other loca-

Continued on Page 8

Manager plans entertainment

Losing money, the Log struggles to attract students, without beer

by Alexandra Glover

Over a year after the raising of the Massachusetts drinking age to 21, student use of the Log continues far below what it once was. Log manager David Lamarre acknowledged that attendance has fallen because three-quarters of the student-body cannot drink alcohol at the Log due to the change in the law.

"About 99 percent of the rules that we enforce about drinking are dictated by state law," said Lamarre. "It's Massachussetts state law, right down the line, but last year a majority of students said 'bull' and had nothing to do with the Log at all."

According to Lamarre, the Log's attendance has varied between 142 people on a recent Thursday night to a total of eight people at the Log on the first Friday of school. On the average, he said, attendance is about 50 people a night.

Losing money

Currently, Lamarre admitted, the Log is losing money, but he hopes that an end to some unpopular policies, as well as an increase in programs and performances, will increase student interest.

The two-beer limit, which was enforced last fall, was "a major headache for everyone," said Lamarre. "Also, we collected ID's at the door and returned them when people left. That was very unpopular, to say the least." Both policies are no longer in effect this year, he added.

Programs to attract students to the Log are being continued this year, according to Lamarre. "Last year, what was most successful was the student open-mike night. That gets students involved," he said. That will be back, and the Log will also be hosting student musicians and stand-up comics.

Open-mike nights will be run by sophomores Timothy Cohan and Christopher Collingwood. "It really is a good place to do it, if we can get more people in here," said Cohan. "I wouldn't be surprised if we got more interest than last year."

The admission charged for movies will be 75¢, a fee Lamarre says he's "hoping to take and start other activities with." Cover charges for events have become necessary, due in part to the low attendance and the fact the Log is losing money. "The charges aren't exorbitant," says Lamarre. "In most cases they won't go over a buck."

With the changes, Lamarre said he was "hoping that people would say, 'OK, they're going as far as they can go.' They're saying it, but they're still not filing in the door."

The Log in 1984, before the state drinking age was raised to 21.

Memories

Senior Becky Conklin remembers the Log as it was before the change in the law. "The other night a bunch of my friends got a crowd to go down to the Log," she said. "A lot of the reason is just memories. If anyone's going to go down there, it's going to be mostly seniors. A lot of younger people don't remember what the Log used to be like."

Conklin's feelings were echoed by a student who didn't see the "old Log" in action, sophomore Katherine Kevill. "I have never seen the Log as a fun place," said Kevill. "People don't want to go down there where they can't drink, but I'd go down there if I had a friend performing.

"I strongly think that a nice eating place is the best idea, a place for a reasonable dinner and entertainment. You could go there for a date."

"Drinking is not the focus of the Log, at least not anymore," Lamarre said. "I would hope that people use the Log for other things now. I want to see students come and just hang out.

"Last year is gone," he added, "and hopefully forgotten."

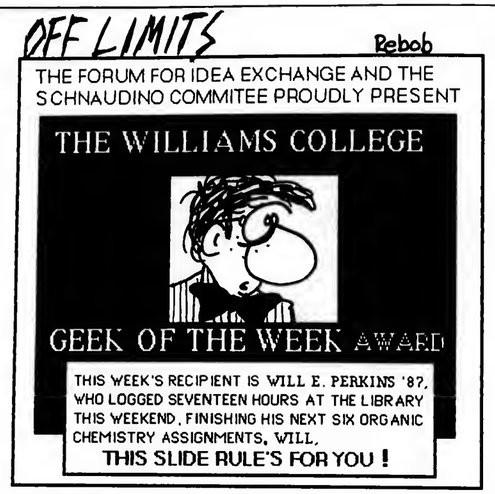
Inside the Record

Moose visits campus ..... p. 4

Profile: Ransom Jenks ..... p. 5

Football takes it on the chin ..... p. 12

September 30, 1986



Spending for the long run

Time heals all wounds — even those which Williams students received from the "new" Log. The Log was anathema last year. Most upperclassmen were unwilling to give the Log a chance as a new type of social space. Those of us who had known the Log as a popular student-run pub were angered that the college administration had taken this away. Even when we understood the liability and licensing factors that made it impossible for the Log to continue in its old capacity, the feeling that the college was restricting our social life bothered us. In short, there was no way we would let the Log be repaced by a shiny, Food Service-run establishment that served designer soda-pop.

Well, the new Log was never meant to fufill the function of the old one, and students should accept the new social role of the Log. The attendance should be more impressive, but manager Dave Lamarre's estimate of 50 patrons on an average evening is an improvement over last year when more often than not the employees outnumbered the patrons. Certainly, student antipathy seems to have diminished.

The Log is not a place to socialize over a pitcher, but students should realize that there is a place for it in their social lives and use it. Refusing to use the Log because it does not serve the purpose it once did is ridiculous.

Performances by students and local entertainers as well as movies and TV are important attractions at the Log. In order to continue to attract students and reestablish the place of the Log, however, the college is going to have to continue to provide money for these events. In any such operation, the first years are spent developing a reputation and clientele.

The excellent entertainment which went mostly unappreciated at the Log last year must again be provided. If the administrators responsible for the Log's budget give up due to last year's poor showing, the Log's reputation will never re-develop. A one-year shot in the arm was not enough, especially given the hurt feelings last year.

A wait-and-see attitude is the worst business approach that the college could take on the Log. At the same time, it is up to students to utilize its resources and provide feedback to the college. It is hard to justify spending lots of money to entertain the Log employees.

Student voices were instrumental in getting the two-drink limit at the Log repealed. Let's be instrumental in convincing the college to take the necessary steps to make the Log a popular place.

Op-ed

Is Williams really pursuing a policy of affirmative action?

by John Canty '88

How seriously is Williams taking its commitment to affirmative action?

That question has a strong power in light of the College's continuing problem in gaining and retaining tenured minority professors on its regular faculty. Moreover, in the last five years only three black professors have come up for tenure consideration, according to information released by the Dean of the Faculty's office. Only one black is currently tenured.

Williams sees the need for attracting such professors to its campus. "I cannot too strongly emphasize the tremendous priority which we in the administration attach to this concern," said Dean of the Faculty John Reichert. Both the Dean of the Faculty's office and the powerful Committee on Appointments and Promotions (CAP), which has oversight over both faculty hiring and the granting of tenure, "exert themselves strongly in the hiring process on behalf of this goal," according to Dean Reichert.

These efforts find support from the work of Nancy McIntire, assistant to the president for affirmative action. Ms. McIntire works to increase the size of the minority pool applying for open positions advertised by the College.

Unfortunately, beyond a certain line the administration can go only so far. "I think the administration has a great deal of oversight," commented English Department professor David L. Smith. "Strictly speaking, that's not a problem. However, the individual departments here have a long tradition of autonomy in their appointments. It's very difficult to force departments to go against their will."

"I'm certain that the president is very serious about affirmative action," Smith said, the only black tenured faculty member. "I'm equally certain that many departments are indifferent or outright hostile to it."

With the initiative for hiring resting primarily on the individual chairmen, some departments have distinguished themselves for their efforts in this regard. The political science, sociology, English, and history departments have won praise for the intensity with which they pursue the goal of affirmative action. All these groups have made their efforts in a period in which, nationally, fewer blacks are electing to teach, with a commensurate decline in doctorate recipients emerging from graduate schools. Several other departments, however, have come under criticism for insufficient devotion to recruitment and hiring according to affirmative action.

Williams also suffers from what D.L. Smith describes as a "rate of attrition" which black faculty undergo. In the tenure process the College accords a definite home-field advantage to its own junior faculty; Dean Reichert says they receive "an almost unqualified" preference. The junior faculty, besides carrying the load for their academic courses, also shoulder most of the responsibility for student-faculty relations, with many of them voluntarily serving on standing student-faculty committees.

For many black faculty, these obligations, coupled with living in the uncomfortable Williamstown environment, may be unsettling. Smith commented, "it's a claustrophobic community, very small, very homogenous. It does not offer a wide range of cultural opportunities, and it does not extend possibilities in jobs for spouses."

Black students at Williams frequently form "special bonds" with black professors, though that specific professor might not be teaching those students. "I do think that black faculty in mostly white institutions face special burdens," Smith said. "Williams is not unique in that regard. Those demands are less pronounced, though, than they were ten years ago. Then black faculty had to educate the community to areas of special sensitivity. That is a sign of some progress."

Nevertheless, in its efforts to gain a more pluralistic faculty and to achieve its affirmative action goal, Williams College is fighting a losing battle. Specifically, the College needs to give a greater scope to the oversight over affirmative action exercised now by the CAP and the Dean of the Faculty's office. In addition, Williams should make less rigorous and more direct the road to tenure for black faculty. The College currently has a policy, initiated last year, where it will offer an appointment to an outstanding minority professor at another institution, at no sacrifice to the individual department in their hiring request. Yet, the College needs to go farther in making Williams a more congenial home. This could include the active recruitment of minority faculty at other institutions. This ought to entail no sacrifice to the quality of teaching prized so highly here.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT OPED ..... John Canty
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Stephanie Brown, Danielle Dixon, Synje Holleck, Mary Iliff, Kathy Ryan, Eda Suh
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

A liberal arts curriculum is incomplete without Italian by Kathi Rosenbaum '87 and Michael Zebrak '87

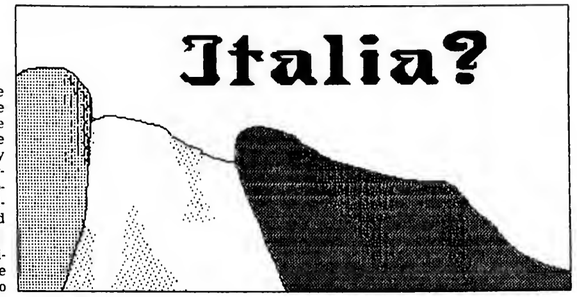
Williams, a so-called bastion of liberal arts, fails to provide a sufficient curriculum for the study of Italian.



At present, Williams offers solely an introductory course designed to equip students with rudimentary skills in speaking and reading Italian. The opportunity to study the language, literature, and culture of Italy at a more advanced level does not even exist at Williams.

However, having recently received a $500,000 grant to strengthen its foreign language program, Williams is now in an extraordinary position to augment (or is it create?) the Italian department. Williams proposes to allocate the grant towards improving language instruction, fostering interdisciplinary interaction, and expanding opportunities for study abroad; the neglected state of Williams' Italian department also deserves immediate attention.

It is not unreasonable that part of the grant be allotted to salary a full-time Italian professor (Williams employs the present instructor in only a part-time capacity). Although interdisciplinary interaction and study abroad are important elements of a foreign language program, their eventual success is dependent upon comprehensive language and literature instruction.

Unfortunately, many students at Williams who would like to study Italian are caught in a vicious cycle: they hesitate to enroll in the introductory course because they have no further means for pursuing Italian here at Williams, and yet the college does not offer advanced Italian courses because it fears a lack of student interest.

Even though this situation would seem to curtail any interest in studying Italian, there continues to be a thriving enrollment in the introductory course since its inception three years ago. In fact, the sole reason this introductory course exists is the persistence of interested students.

During the 1970's and early 80's, Williams students were forced to journey to North Adams State College in order to study Italian. In 1983, student interest — as well as transportation difficulties — at last prompted Williams to meet this obvious need by instituting an introductory Italian course. Since that time, the Italian "department" has remained at a virtual standstill.

Currently, a number of students have expressed their desire to study Italian at a more advanced level. The College's failure to acknowledge and act on this need has in effect thwarted students' pursuit of their liberal arts education at Williams.

From literature to art to music, a working knowledge of Italian is indispensable to a fuller understanding of these disciplines. It is a shame that Williams falls so painfully short of providing its student with the means with which to heighten their intellectual and cultural awareness.

Therefore, it is imperative that the College emphasize the strengthening of its Italian curriculum in conjunction with the already targeted grant areas. In this way, Williams students can have a solid basis from which to pursue and appreciate the benefits of improved interdisciplinary and study abroad programs as they strive for the well-roundedness of a true liberal arts education.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM

by Rich Gardella

How five minutes can change the way you move through college.

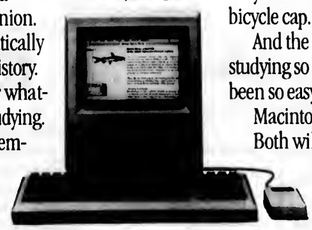
Think of what you can do in five minutes.

Read three pages for English. Write the folks for a few extra bucks. Maybe even get a burger at the student union.

Or you could dramatically change the course of History. Economics. Biology. Or whatever else you may be studying.

Just take part in a demonstration of the Macintosh™ personal computer from Apple®.

You'll see how Macintosh can help you work better, faster and smarter.

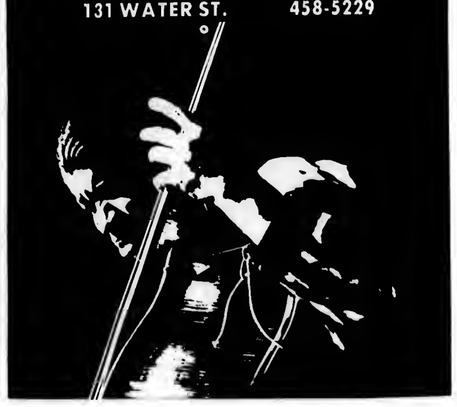


You'll also qualify to win a Trek® 12-speed touring bike.

What's more, you'll walk away with a bicycle cap. Absolutely free.

And the knowledge that studying so hard has never been so easy. Or so much fun.

Macintosh and Trek. Both will do more than help you get ahead. Both will take you anywhere you want to go.



Spend five minutes with a Macintosh and walk away with a free bicycle cap. You may even win a Trek® 12-speed touring bike.

The CHEFS Taconic RESTAURANT

Monday-Saturday 5-10 pm
Sunday 12-9
Junction of Routes 2 & 7
413-458-3090
Williamstown, Massachusetts
413-458-5683

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS
The most jazz, blues, reggae and rock at the lowest prices
WE BUY AND SELL USED LP'S
131 WATER ST. 458-5229

Gym work at night

Night-time construction by the College this week will not create noise problems for students and townspeople who live nearby, said Winthrop Wassenar, director of the physical plant.

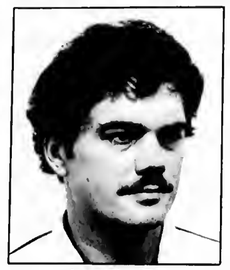
But the College project, including the installation of gas, electric, and water lines under Spring Street to the new Chandler Gymnaisum, will cause the street to be closed to traffic at night, Wassenar said.

The work will take place between 6 p.m. and 5 to 6 a.m., Wassenar said. During the day, the hole will be covered by metal plates to allow cars to pass over, he said.

The work was scheduled to begin yesterday, and Wassenar said he was optimistic that it would be finished early Thursday morning. If further work is needed, it will be done for one or two more days, Wassenar said. He said that the noise would be much less than that created by the current gym construction during the day.

— Paul Kwon

Drickamer wins grant



The National Science Foundation has awarded Biology professor Lee Drickamer a two-year, $60,000 research grant to continue his study of factors influencing puberty in rodents, entitled "Behavioral Aspects of Rodent Urinary Chemosignals."

Drickamer's research will investigate the behaviors associated with the release and reception of urinary chemosignals that accelerate or retard puberty in female mice. The results of the study should show whether young mice can exert some direct control over their sexual development by seeking out or avoiding certain odors which may trigger sexual maturation.

By understanding the factors that influence puberty in rodents, it may be possible to ascertain similar factors in other animals, including humans. The findings might also suggest methods of biological pest control.

Sexual maturation of rodents has been a central focus of Drickamer's research for the past 14 years, and has led directly to several published papers.

Drickamer is a graduate of Oberlin College, and received a Ph.D. in zoology from Michigan State University in 1970. He came to Williams in 1972, following a National Science Foundation postdoctoral fellowship at

Lee Drickamer

Drickamer has received major grants from both the National Science Foundation and the National Institute of Health, and served six years as Associate Editor for Animal Behavior for the "American Wildlife Naturalist." He is coauthor of the textbook Animal Behavior: Concepts, Processes and Methods.

Symposia on memory

"Memory: An Interdisciplinary Approach," will be the subject of a major series of psychology symposia to be held at Williams this weekend.

The program, which will run Thursday through Saturday, will focus on a discussion of memory from the standpoints of behavioral neurosciences, developmental psychology, cognitive psychology and social psychology.

It was organized by professors Paul Solomon, George Goethals, Colleen Kelley, and Benjamin Stephens, all of the psychology department.

The symposia will ask all participants to indicate their approaches to the problems of memory, which questions they feel are most important, why they feel their approaches are most accurate, and which questions can be best answered by a collaboration of different approaches.

Participants are drawn from universities in the United States, Canada, and Great Britain. They include Alan Baddeley of Cambridge's Applied Psychology Unit, David Hamilton of the University of California at Santa Barbara, George Mandler of the University of California at San Diego, Brenda Milner of the Montreal Neurological Institute, Carolyn Rovee-Collier of Rutgers, and Richard F. Thompson of Stanford.

A limited number of tickets to the symposia will be available from the psychology department. They will be sold for $25 on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Council looks at Row House dining

by Tracey Blankenship

The College Council debated this year's meatless-meal program, as well as a proposal to restore Row House dining, at its meeting Thursday.

The meatless-meal program was instituted last year to increase campus awareness of hunger and poverty. The program calls for a dinner without meat to be served regularly. The council proposed having the meal once a month in four of the five dining halls.

But at Thursday's meeting, council member Kevin Hinton '89 said that food service director Jim Hodgkins was "not encouraging" about the idea.

Hodgkins proposed that only one dining hall serve the meatless meal, and ruled out Baxter Hall, Hinton said. "I don't agree with those terms," Hinton told the council. Hinton said he was disappointed with Hodgkins' reluctance to implement the larger program.

Council President Amy Jeffress '87 said the council will vote on the proposal only after

Continued on Page 9

Williams students enjoyed vistas like this Sunday during the Outing Club's annual "Mountain Day." They climbed, biked and hiked to the top of Mt. Greylock, where they drank cider and listened to music by the Springstreeters. This is a view of Mt. Prospect, with Hemlock Brook in the foreground.

Moose loose; visits Clark, pub

by Anne O'Malley

A 400- to 500-pound young bull moose was seen in the Williamstown area Monday, September 22.

According to Cameron Davis, a state environmental officer, the moose is actually from either Vermont or New Hampshire. "We see one about once a year in the Berkshires," he said. "It could have been the same one spotted in Pittsfield Saturday (September 20) and in Sandisfield about a month ago."

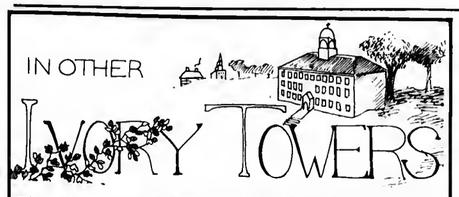
The moose was first reported in Williamstown by employees of the Clark Art Institute and was reportedly also sighted in the Knolls, on Hoxsey Street and on Bank Street, near the Purple Pub.

Squash team members Matt McCall '87 and Jack Phillips '88 saw the moose while jogging on South Street at about 4:30 Monday afternoon. According to McCall, they first saw the moose coming out of the bushes of a yard, a few houses up the street from the Clark and then saw it cross the street and disappear between two houses on the opposite side. McCall said that the moose "looked like a huge horse with antlers tied on its head."

Hallucination?

Other members of the squash team, running on Gale Road both ahead of and behind Phillips and McCall, failed to cor-

Continued on Page 9



WSP Music & Opera Trip to Northern Europe
— Question and Answer Session
— All students welcome
— Places still available
Thursday, Oct 2nd 4:30 PM
RM 30 BMC

SPRING BREAK '87
Earn a free vacation to Fort Lauderdale or the Bahamas. Students seriously interested in becoming a campus repre sentative, call
1-800-87-BEACH

Capers
Boston Comedy Night
Thursday, Oct. 2nd 9:00
call for more information
Friday & Saturday
"THE SHRUGGS"
412 Main St. 458-9180

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717

EST. 19?1 Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS | SPORTING GOODS
SALE
the Co-op
LEVI'S
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Worcester Polytechnic Institute

"Humpty Dumpty was pushed," and so were many of his smaller relatives, as the engineers at Worcester Polytechnic Institute held an "egg drop" contest last Friday. The objective of the competition was to preserve an egg through the fall and impact of a three story drop.

The winning entry was a winged egg-gliding device constructed of cardboard from an empty Budweiser case. In testing his entry, winner Gordon von Stuck '90 said, "I threw it out of the fourth floor of Morgan about ten times and it never failed." Some of the other devices used pudding or marshmallow fluff to protect the egg. The event was covered live by WPIC TV.

Middlebury

WPI was not the only place where things were dropped this week, as John Zaccaro Jr., son of former vice-presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro, dropped out of Middlebury College. Zaccaro, who is still undergoing trial for "possession of cocaine with intent to sell," pleaded innocent to all charges, despite having sold a quarter-gram of cocaine to an undercover police officer.

When questioned as to the reasons for his withdrawal, Zaccaro, who was due to graduate in March, claimed that "it was purely a family decision." Both he and the college declined further comment.

Wesleyan

At Wesleyan, for only $22 a year, members of the "Eclectic House" can paint their dorm room walls in any style from high Gothic to modern New York subway. The $22 damage bill represents a dramatic reduction from last year's $132 fine.

Eclectic residents were pleased about the fine reduction, since last year the house residents were "overcharged $200 per person in damages." Despite the lower cost for being eclectic, the college is still not willing to completely trust house members, as the new regulations call for weekly damage inspections.

Bowdoin

Bowdoin students have finally found the best way to beat the rising cost of alcohol: home-brewed beer. For an investment of $26, Bowdoin students can "outfit themselves with all the necessities for home beer making." After cooking malt, hops, water, and various other ingredients, the would-be beer drinker must add yeast to the concoction and let it ferment for one week.

Although homemade beer can be brewed for as little as five dollars a case, many drinkers are still skeptical of the quality of anything fermented in a dormitory kitchen. True devotees to home beer, however, claim that "nothing tastes as good as your own home brew."

NASC

Four North Adams State College students have been charged with selling alcoholic beverages without authorization. Michael J. Skidmore, Robert E. Hawley, Donald McDonough III, and Thomas Fahey were arraigned last Thursday in Northern Berkshire District Court following a keg party held at their off-campus home on September 5.

City police responded to a noise complaint and then observed tickets to the party being sold at the door for two dollars. The tickets, which had also been sold prior to the party, covered unlimited consumption of beer and noted the time, date, and cost of the party.

District Attorney Gerald Downey said that the state does not want to seek charges for a permanent record on the students but that they did want this case to be an example because of the difficulties and dangers "with unlicensed and illegitimate enterprises such as this." The case has been continued until June 1, 1987, after the close of the current school year, at which time it will be dismissed on the condition that the four students "do not host or participate in further keg parties, pay $100 in court costs, contribute 20 hours of community service within 60 days and turn over all money raised from the party to the commonwealth." (The North Adams Transcript)

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Jim Hartnett and Caroline Koeppel from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Profile: Ransom Jenks

by Bill O'Brien

He's been in Williamstown for years, and he knows the area well. He worked for the local force as a patrolman and then as a sergeant. About seven years ago, when he'd had enough of police work, he came to the college. He likes his job, and he plans to stick around until his retirement, which is "some years down the road."

The office is large, white, rather plain, and well organized. The desk is orderly and plaque reading "Ransom Jenks — Director of Security" is somewhere near the front. There's a notepad that says "from the desk of GOD" tucked under the pencil holder. And then there are the ever present parking tickets.

Green grass

"Parking is my biggest problem," he said, "We simply don't have enough spaces ... the college likes to see green grass more than black hot top."

The bookcases hold some anticipated titles ("Massachusetts Criminal Laws," "How to Protect Yourself From Crime," "Security Letter Handbook"), along with some paper supplies, instant plant food, a toy machine gun, and some convisicated heating devices, one very familiar toaster oven among them.

His appearance is neat, clean, somewhat stiff. His manner is intense, business-like, but not without some sort of grandfatherly warmth. His height is an issue for him. At the time of his hiring, he, at five feet, six and three quarters inches, fell short of the required five seven to be a Williamstown cop. He went to a doctor, got some stretching exercises and reached the mandatory height. He's now resting comfortably, safely back at five six and three quarters.

Parking may be his most troublesome, time consuming problem, but it is not the most serious. He is concerned about drinking, especially by minors, on the Williams campus.

"I think there's too much emphasis on student drinking. It's mostly because of peer pressure. Students may come here not wishing to get involved in the drinking scene but they do ... they are expected to do it. Their friends are doing it."

Probable cause

He expects town police to get more involved. They can, with probable cause, go into a party, card, and arrest minors who are drinking. Probable cause, he says, could mean waiting outside of a party, taking into protective custody an obviously intoxicated person, and finding that that person is under 21. They would then have reason to suspect that there are other minors at the party. He notes that this has happened at North Adams State three times this fall.

Another concern is the tension

Continued on Page 7

Assinamali's highly political theatre

by Chuck Goforth

Good political theatre exposes the small details of policy or reveals the underside of broad ideology. It shines demanding light into the corners of government that some would keep hidden, and reminds us that human beings are the top priority, always. It can threaten beliefs and spur people to action. It is a powerful and dangerous weapon.

But good political theatre must first be good theatre. The political thrust can be achieved only to the extent that the play is a good one. Usually those who do political theatre are deeply involved in the politics, and can forget this priority. The writers and directors can be misled theatrically by their need to deliver an urgent message. Not trusting their play to deliver it, they mistakenly let the message loose, and allow it to rise up outside of the play, when instead it should be kept underneath, as the subtle and confident driving force. This priority problem is particularly unfortunate when, as in last week's production of "Asinimali!," a play is good enough to deliver meaning all by itself.

Writer/director Mbongeni Ngema, and his company "The Committed Artists" from Durban, South Africa, have created a strong and moving work, to the extent that they have trusted their play. They slip when they try to drive home certain points by interrupting the play and turning the stage into a podium for public speaking.

Funny and haunting

"Asinimali!" tells the story of five black men who are in prison in South Africa. The events that lead to their arrests are recounted through song, dance and elegant dramatic sketches that are at once funny and haunting. There is the pickpocket who describes his friend as "a beautiful stone thrower who never missed an informer," and creates a genuine but uneasy laugh in the audience. We also hear from a pig farmer who is teased by his boss's wife. One day she comes to visit him in the pig pen and forgets to close the gate. The wife is certainly not the one who goes to prison when the boss comes home.

These and the other tales that were told were performed by the five actors with stunning commitment and energy. The play was also often accented with a cappella folk music which, besides being very well sung, had a folk origin that helped to make clear the very human importance of the politics in South Africa. And all of the sketches were done with tight, disciplined ensemble work, that in many cases gave them the ability to convey the chaos and the sense of accident that plague a society at war. In all these areas the company was solid and compelling.

So they had us, right where they wanted us. When the acting talent came together with the committment and trust of the director, "Asinimali!" brought the human weaknesses and very real human tragedies right to the doorstep; the audience sat there as attentive coprisoners and members of the cause. At those moments, the belief that we are all responsible for each other as human

Continued on Page 7

Purple signs spring up all over campus

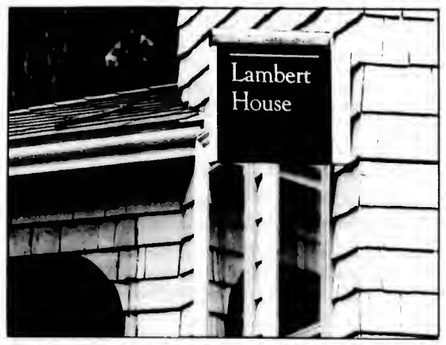
by Michael Erard

Think of things that beautify the campus: green grass, litter clean-up, thorough blanketings of snow that cover the dead grass. How about a new graphics system as a beautifying concept?

Winthrop Wassenar, director of physical plant, thinks that there used to be a "hodge-podge of really ugly signs" on campus. He believes that signs designating buildings weren't really helpful and didn't add to the campus.

"The (old) signs are repulsive," he said. "Some are made of metal, some are hand-carved wood, others are made of plastic. Some the campus police have made, some have been made by people in my own department."

Canadian graphics



A new graphics system, a brainchild of Wassenar's, is on its way, and some signs have already appeared. The system was designed during the summer of 1985 by a Rhode Island School of Design architecture student who had also worked with a major graphics firm in Boston. The project proposal was then approved by the President and the Board of Trustees. A firm in Toronto is manufacturing all of the signs for a total cost of $30,000. This cost does not include the installation of the signs.

By Wassenar's description, the color of the signs already installed is "eggplant." Wassenar acknowledged that the purple squares and their small white letters blend in to the side of the building when seen from more than 50 feet away.

"I prefer them that way," Wassenar said, "I wouldn't want them to be obtrusive."

Wassenar's justification for the use of the smaller signs is that, because the building signs can't be read from the street, visitors looking for specific

Continued on Page 6

These unobtrusive new signs will complement the campus maps currently available to visitors. Some students are skeptical as to how much help they will actually provide. (Marcus) buildings will have to go to the directory at Hopkins or get a map from the Admissions Office. Wassenar figures that people who have taken the time to become familiarized with the area will see the smaller signs, because they are looking for some kind of building designation.

Purple signs

Continued from Page 5

Main points of interest, such as the Admissions Office and the art museum, will have more prominent, freestanding signs in front of them.

"We hope to get these up soon, maybe before the ground freezes," Wassenar said. Holes have to be dug for the posts, and the signs will be made theft-proof by imbedding the posts in cement. But who would want to steal them?

"Amherst kids, probably," guessed Wassenar.

Wassenar believes that the more time taken to put up the signs, the better. He says that it's a big change, and he doesn't want people to wake up one morning and suddenly find new signs all over. According to Wassenar, all the signs should be up by the end of this school year.

Prejudiced opinion

Signs that were any larger, more readable, or freestanding than already planned would be "visually obnoxious," believes Wassener. "Can you imagine having a sign in front of every house on Main Street? It's awful. You don't want that in Williamstown."

When asked his personal opinion of the signs, he replied, "I like them. Of course, I'm prejudiced. I've lived with the whole thing from the beginning. It satisfies a demand for a unified, attractive system."

President Oakley said that the signs are "discreet, clear, with good lettering." As far as the size of the signs is concerned, he believes there is a trade-off between clarity of marking and obtrusiveness. Despite their unobtrusiveness, "they are certainly readable. I don't think they're too small."

Other people said, "What signs?" and one supposes that this is exactly what Mr. Wassenar had in mind.

ARTS IN VIEW

Thursday afternoon at 4:30, there will be a question and answer session for all students interested in a Winter Study trip entitled "Operas and Concerts in Northern Europe"; room 30 in Bernhard Music Center.....Thursday at 8 p.m. in Currier ballroom, Cap and Bells will present a contemporary one-act play entitled "The Conduct of Life"; admission is $1.....At the Log on Friday night at 10:00, the Springstreeters will perform a short set.....Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon in Lasell Gymnasium, Assistant Professor Sandra Burton will conduct a seminar entitled "Modern Dance: Its Origin and Evolution"; admission is $8, free with a Williams ID.....At 8:00 on Saturday night, song stylist Betty Carter will give a jazz concert in Chapin Hall.....For more music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!

Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

No. Adams
Eagle St.
664-4134
664-6889

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

CAREERS
and PROFESSIONAL GRADUATE PROGRAMS
in
GOVERNMENT & INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS an informal discussion with representatives of both the John F. Kennedy School of Government
Public Policy Program
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
&
Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs
PRINCETON UNIVERSITY
DATE: Tuesday, October 7
TIME: 1:00 & 2:00 groups
LOCATION: Please contact your Career Placement Office for this information.
All years, all majors welcome.
For additional information, please contact your school's Career Development/Placement Office.

THE CLIP SHOP

EACH YEAR THE PEACOCK GROWS A NEW PLUMAGE. SOMEHOW WE HUMANS PERIODICALLY WANT TO RENEW OURSELVES ALSO. IT CAN GIVE US A NEW VIEW OF THE WORLD, BUT MORE IMPORTANTLY IT CAN CHANGE THE WORLD'S VIEW OF US.

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary!

125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
802-447-2648

49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585

122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ SAVE 10% ★ SAVE 10% ★ SAVE 10% ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS

10% 10%

PRESENT THIS FLYER AT

"THE ICE CREAM STORE"
406 MAIN STREET, WILLIAMSTOWN MA 01267
(Next to Burger King)
And receive 10% OFF your purchase
We have real Soft Ice Cream, (not ice milk)
Hard Ice Cream, Frozen Yogurt, Non-dairy Ice and of course Sundaes Shakes, Malts etc.

See you soon at:

★ ★ ★ ★ THE ICE CREAM STORE ★ ★ ★ ★
Tel.: 458-9800

Daily 12 PM — 9 PM
Sunday 1 PM — 8 PM

Theatre

from Page 5

beings rang through the theatre.

But Ngema didn't trust his play all the way. At times the simple and delicate action of the play was interrupted so that one actor or another might shed his character, come to the apron of the stage and tell us all what it was about apartheid that we'd better remember. At one point the actors left the stage to find informers and verbally abused chosen people. The technique is not new and isn't even that interesting.

Because of these breaks in the rhythm, the audience was forced to play two different roles: that of a privileged friend who could listen and experience the stories and then that of a rally member who sat down to be reminded of his or her duties to the cause. The end effect wasn't too different from draping a sculpture with a cardboard sign to clarify what the piece of art is about.

There were other problems. There were no women in the play, and the thrust often seemed to be the problems of men in South Africa as opposed to all of its people. This feeling was strengthened by a great deal of penis grabbing and crude talk about women.

Though the lighting design neatly enhanced the clean simplicity of the show, being only a set of white lights at different levels, the set, which was five chairs for the most part, was dirtied a little by a hanging window that looked like it was there because it was artistic; the actors only used it once.

But in the end the strength of the writing and the acting was the most important. Though the standing ovation may have been more for the message than the performance, "The Committed Artists" are impressive actors and do vibrant, thought-provoking theatre.

Jenks

from Page 5

between Williamstown kids and college students.

"I don't understand why that has even occurred. There needs to be more local law enforcement on Spring Street. It's only a select group of folks and with a little more effort that can be stopped."

Whether it's parking tickets or monitoring a few misguided individuals on Spring Street, if it concerns the safety and well-being of Williams students, it is the responsibility of Ransom Jenks. He credits the democratic system of the college for making the operation run smoothly. His fifty hours a week certainly help.

He's talked about the serious stuff. Now he wants to finish with Aldo. Aldo used to stand in the Purple Pub, selling a particular wine. Aldo was all of cardboard. A student rushed out with Aldo under his arm and a frantic search followed. Aldo was recovered and brought into security. The Pub was called and told the good news. About ten minutes later, a student came in and said the Pub sent him. Aldo was released. About ten minutes later, a second student came in from the Pub to pick up Aldo. Jenks calls this case a "learning experience." He laughs. Aldo was again recovered.

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Amy Catala; photographs by Beth Gannon.

The Record recently asked students, "What do you think of those new purple signs all over campus?"

"Great way to figure out where you live — after parties." — Tom Higgins '88

"I want one for my room." — John Robinson '88

"Godlike in its intensity." — Chap Peterson '90

"I haven't seen them. What purple signs?" — Ann Levy '87

"If you haven't been here for more than a week you wouldn't realize they were there. They are too high and too small." — Fiona Joseph '90

"I think they're great. They add to the colorful nature of our school. They should stay, but ... where are they?" — Erik Burns '90

Real deal.

The IBM Personal Computer.

Now you can get a real IBM PC at a real savings.

$1,137.00 Plus tax and shipping

(Standard IBM PC and Monochrome Monitor Package with DOS 3.2 and Asynch Adapter)

For information and ordering contact
the Williams College Technical coordinator,
Cheryl Brewer, Jesup Computer Center, 597-2724;
or stop by the IBM PC Fair, Jesup Computer Center;
Wednesday, October 8th; 11:00 a.m. — 6:00 p.m.;
Thursday, October 9th, 9:00 a.m. — 2:00 p.m.

Drinking

Continued from Page 1

College Council Vice President Suzanne Blemiller '87 expressed concern at the CUL meeting two weeks ago that freshman unity has been hurt by a lack of alcohol-serving social events for freshmen. Dean of Freshmen Robert Kavanaugh questioned this assumption.

"I read that someone said freshmen can't have parties. That isn't true; there is a difference between parties and alcohol. People can live with (the change in rules).

"I have asked the JAs, who in some ways bear the heaviest burden, to use their imaginations to come up with non-alcoholic social events for freshmen to participate in." Kavanaugh cited last year's Halloween "Octoberfest" and this year's non-alcohol Casino Night as successes.

Kavanaugh added that the administration felt it was "the time to be consistent" in its policy on drinking. It is not consistent, he said, to sponsor freshman class dances during homecoming and spring weekend which are dry and at the same time allow kegs in the freshmen quad.

Upperclass parties are different "because we don't want to regulate behavior on campus," Kavanaugh said. "These are the laws, you are responsible adults."

"Arbitrarily severe"

"The new party policy represents an attempt by the college to shift its legal responsibility to the junior advisors," said John Canty '88, a JA in Williams E. "The college has reserved to itself a gray area to be arbitrarily severe on whoever it pleases. It has left the junior advisors in the middle."

College Council President Amy Jeffress '87 said she expects future college policy to be determined by several pending lawsuits against other colleges, echoing Dean of the College Stephen Fix's statement to the classes at the beginning of the year.

Charles Samuelson also contributed to this article.

Hopkins

Continued from Page 1

tions for classrooms and faculty offices." He mentioned additions to Hopkins, Griffin or Stetson Halls, or a free-standing building in that area.

Wassenar said that the classrooms and faculty offices are needed primarily for courses in divisions I and II, so they should be put near other classrooms and offices in the same divisions.

Reed said that the loss of the classrooms in Hopkins Hall compounded an existing problem regarding classroom space. Last year, he said, an ad hoc committee chaired by professor Russell Bostert recommended that approximately six rooms, accomodating 30 to 40 students, and 20 faculty offices be built. Reed said that Bostert's committee chose its recommendations because of what it saw as the popularity of certain hours in the schedule, and the lack of quality in certain classrooms.

An addition to a building would only provide temporary relief until a new building is built, Reed said, because an addition, "won't solve, once and for all, the classroom problem."

"The tightening of the (building) code was an unexpected development," Oakley stated. As a result, he said, there is a greater need for classrooms. He emphasized that improving the quality of existing classrooms is as much of an issue as building new ones. "We have to add to the stock of classrooms and improve the variety of the stock," he said.

Oakley said the money to pay for the renovation of Hopkins Hall may come directly from the college endowment, but that the future classroom structure will probably be paid for by the college bicentennial fund drive.

COMPUTERIZED INSPECTION EXHAUST LUBRICATION CENTER
COMPUTERIZED TUNE UPS
CITGO
TOWING
Nicklien's Service Station
364 Main Street, Williamstown
458-3511
HAVE A COOL SUMMER!
CONDITIONERS
Air-Conditioning Service Center
WE RENT RYDER TRUCKS
FRONT END ALIGNMENTS RADIATORS

— Cycling Clothes & Accessories —
SHORTS $24.95 to $60.00
JERSEYS $19.95 to $49.00
SHOES $39.95 to $89.00
GLOVES $12.95 to $29.95
— Custom Service to all makes
THE SPOKE
408 Main St. 458-3456

Dox
Rt. 2, Williamstown
413-458-4420
Amiga • Epson
COMPUTERS
IBM & APPLE SOFTWARE

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est 1848 Betsy Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
Come see our fine selection of books, including
London, Paris, Rome, Williamstown and
THE FAR SIDE T-SHIRTS
as well as
Science Fiction, Biography, Humor, Mystery, etc.
Come visit us soon.
Open from 8:30 a.m. - 9 p.m.
Sunday 10-5
Located next to THE LOG

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects
Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, antique looking jewelry.
TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
Everyday after 7:00 pm
Coffee 25¢ per cup
Sunday Brunch Special:
Omlet, Juice, Coffee for 2 $5.00
76 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN
MONDAY-SATURDAY 9 am - 9 pm
SUNDAY 10-5
Telephone (413)458-5007

Moose

Continued from Page 4

roborate their story, and McCall's suitemates, fearing that he had been hallucinating after a tiring run, put an ad in the Daily Advisor asking if anyone else had seen the moose.

McCall says he got about ten phone calls as a result of the ad, mostly from people who had either been chased by the moose in their cars or who had seen the moose on the Taconic Golf Course.

This moose wasn't as lucky. (Somers)

The moose was sighted on the college campus by residents of Chadbourne House. Mollie Cavender '88 said she was sitting in her room reading when she looked up and saw the rear half of the moose as it passed by her window. She added that the moose was on the grass at first, but "it was hanging out in the parking lot later."

Teresa Spillane '88, also a resident of Chadbourne House, called the security office, which she said responded by sending over one officer in a van with a walkie-talkie.

Enormity of moose

"It was huge," Spillane said, "I thought a moose was the size of a deer, but this was like a horse." Cavender and Spillane agreed that the moose was obviously scared or upset about something.

Spillane said that the moose was running around the parking lot, looking for a way to get out. "It wasn't kicking cars or anything," she added. Cavender said that the moose ran towards Hoxsey Street when Chadbourne residents came out into the parking lot and started screeching.

Cameron Davis was quoted in the North Adams Transcript as saying that the moose was last seen eating apples on Ide Road. Williamstown selectman Henry E. Bratcher, Jr., advised residents to keep dogs inside until the animal is out of the area the Transcript reported.

Council

Continued from Page 4

further negotiations with Hodgkins, which include a college-wide evaluation in January to determine the program's effectiveness.

Row House dining

Also considered was the reinstituting of Row House dining, which was ended in the spring of 1981. Since then, former college president John Chandler and professor William Wagner, chairman of the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL), have both called for its restoration, council members said.

Row House dining supposedly "facilitates better faculty-student relations," said Jeffress. She explained that the administration is ready to reinstitute dining, which was originally ended despite heated opposition from students.

Jeffress supported one member's suggestion that the Row House kitchens be renovated to accomodate "provisional dining" for special dinners and faculty-student meals. Jeffress added that the council will vote on the issue after the complete figures on the cost-effectiveness of the change are released from the Provost's Office. The statement is expected next week, Jeffress said.

Soccer

Continued from Page 11

fourth of the campaign. However, despite a commanding 11-4 advantage in shots, the Ephs took only a one goal lead into the half.

Scoreless second half

The second half was marked by ragged play by both squads, as kick-and-run soccer dominated the game. Boddicker continued to take shots, but the outstanding junior could not convert the opportunities into goals. Meanwhile, Wesleyan managed to mount more of an offense during the second 45 minutes, putting increased pressure on Eph goalie Joyce Rogers '88 and the defense of Kim Hatch '88, Susie Piper '90, Amy Barstad '87 and others.

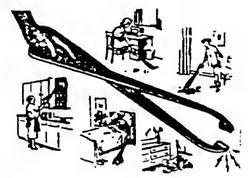
Rogers totalled six saves in the half and nine for the game in her second consecutive shutout. The last few minutes were played in the heart of the Williams goal, but Wesleyan could not get a score, falling 1-0.

Despite the win, coach Lisa Melendy was not completely satisfied with the team's performance, commenting, "It wasn't a very good effort, but we'll take the win." She also noted the Ephs inability to "complete the attack", as Williams could only score once on 18 shots. While happy with the victory, Wednesday's game against Middlebury was a much better showing by the team, according to Melendy.

In this contest, the Ephwomen dominated play in the first half, jumping out to a 3-0 lead at halftime. Boddicker tallied two goals, her fifth and sixth of the year. The first was assisted by Lynne Brenner '90 and the second by co-captain Gigi Madore '87. Later, Schaen took a pass from Barstad and scored from long range into the top of the net for the third first-half goal.

The second half was more of the same, as the Panthers could not penetrate the Williams defense to score even a single goal. Madore rounded out the scoring with a 20-yard shot off a feed from Katie Hogan '87.

The Ephs hope to continue to feast on visiting teams this week, as Williams hosts two more games. A strong Division I squad from University of Hartford comes to Williamstown today, and Trinity visits on Saturday.



WILLIAMSTOWN
CAPTAIN'S TABLE
The Lobster House
Of The Berkshires
Fresh Live Lobsters . . .
. . . and so much more
Routes 2 and 7
Williamstown, MA.
(413) 458-5645

Put your degree to work where it can do a world of good.

Your first job after graduation should offer you more than just a paycheck. We can offer you an experience that lasts a lifetime.
Working together with people in a different culture is something you'll never forget. It's a learning experience everyone can benefit from.
In Science or Engineering, Education, Agriculture, or Health, Peace Corps projects in developing countries around the world are bringing help where it's needed.
OCTOBER 8
Information Booth - 10:00 - 4:00, Baxter Hall.
Film/Info Session - 7:00 p.m. Career Counseling Office.
OCTOBER 9
Senior Interviews - 9:00 - 5:00, Career Counseling Office
The toughest job you'll ever love
PEACE CORPS

Solve your HANG-UPS
Magnabar Mark XII Lifetime Guarantee. Convenient, practical, versatile, trouble-free Fyson-Power Outage?

NEED HELP TO STAND ON YOUR OWN TWO FEET
Ideal for the aged, infirm or convalescent.

"SAVE YOUR HEART"
IT SIMPLIFIES YOUR LIFE
NOW — AT LAST! A Simple Solution To One of Your Everyday Problems!
Two-Way PET DOOR
FlexPort
Why be a doorman for your pet? Flexport ends scratched doors and whining. Keeps out flies, wind, rain
Chaplains To The Rescue
Baxter Hall - 597-2483
Tender Loving Care

Indispensable for invalids, orthotics, mothers-to-be — everyone! Sturdy 5-ply birch $7.95. Add 50¢ postage and Spend a weekend with me, and we'll roast a leg of venison, etc.
COMFORTERS RE-BUILT READY WHEN YOU NEED IT!

Getting comfortable with an IBM PC now can put you in a good position later.

See the IBM PC and the Rest of the Family at the:

WILLIAMS COLLEGE PERSONAL COMPUTER FAIR

JESUP COMPUTER CENTER
• Wednesday, October 8th; 11:00 a.m. — 6:00 p.m.
• Thursday, October 9th; 9:00 a.m. — 2:00 p.m.

WIN AN IBM PC!

Come and enter your name
in the PC drawing,
Open to all students, faculty and staff.
Drawing will be held October 9, 1986
at 2:00 p.m.

SPORTS SHORTS

Water polo

The water polo team started its season last week with a disappointing string of four losses. On Sunday, the Ephs travelled to Amherst to face UMass, RPI, and archrival Amherst.

In their first game, the Ephs were narrowly defeated by the RPI Engineers by 11-9. Freshman Andy Kaplinsky, a prep school All-American, led the Ephs, scoring five of their nine goals.

In their next two games, Williams suffered heavily from defensive lapses, and their opponents scored on nine of 10 penalty four-meter shots against Eph goalie Jean Sohn '88. Those nine goals helped UMass and Amherst to 15-7 and 12-8 wins over Williams. High scorers for the Ephs in the tournament were Will Dudley '89 with eight goals, Kaplinsky with seven tallies, and Dean Pomerleau '87 with four.

In B-game action, the freshman contingent of Dan Snyder, Mike Lane, Chris Cleurzo, and Mike Barsanti each scored twice in their debut against UMass and RPI.

After a loss to Deerfield Wednesday, the Ephs are looking forward to their first home tournament this weekend against UConn and Amherst. However, they will be without the services of two key starters: Kaplinsky with a shoulder injury and co-captain Adam Ifshin '87 with a broken toe.

— Jim Jordan

Field hockey

Junior Lisa Tenerowicz tipped in a shot with just seconds left in the game to give the field hockey team a 2-1 victory over Little Three rival Wesleyan on Saturday and set their record at 4-0.

With less than ten seconds remaining, the score was tied 1-1 and the ball was deep in the Cardinal zone. A Wesleyan defender kicked the ball out of the zone, a move recognized by the referee as a blatant stall tactic. "It was a really good call he made," said coach Chris Larson-Mason, "it was the right call."

The Ephs took a resulting free hit, and a Cardinal tipped the ball as it went into the goal mouth. Tenerowicz, standing next to the goal, got the shot with barely any time on the clock.

'Just good enough'

"This was our toughest game," continued Larson-Mason. "We didn't play our best, but we controlled the ball well enough and played aggressively enough to win. Technically, we were just good enough."

The Ephs had scored first in the opening half when Sue Scarborough '87 tallied. Wesleyan scored on a penalty shot with just under four minutes left in the game to set up the storybook ending.

Several of the team's toughest opponents are coming up, including Middlebury and Trinity tomorrow and Saturday. "We're a quick, aggressive team," said Larson-Mason. "It's a really enjoyable team to work with."

Golf

Last Saturday the golf team went to Middlebury for the two day Duke Nelson Invitational at Middlebury. Despite what senior co-captain Guy Kurtz called "the worst weather I ever played golf in," the Eph linksters managed to hold their own against a field of 12 teams on the way to a tie for third place with Salem St.

Coach Rick Pohle was pleased with the team's performance, especially because the first place team "the University of Maine is a Division I school (and) you're giving something away when you play them." The team's performance was highlighted by sophomore Tim Frechette's sixth place finish after shooting rounds of 77 and 80.

Perhaps the most important part of the team's showing at Middlebury was the fact that was that the team recovered from a poor showing at their own tournament to beat the teams that they are competing with to gain entry to a tournament in Florida at the end of the season.

The team must outperform Amherst, Salem St., and Westfield St. to gain entrance to the tournamant which invites the top 20 Division III schools on the country. Guy Kurtz said that the tournament is "what we're working for," and their performance at Middlebury certainly improved their chances.

Earlier in the week played in the sixth annual Skidmore Invitational Tournament and scored an impressive victory over the rest of the field. The team shattered the tournament record by 16 strokes with a five player total of 306. Kurtz starred in the tournament, setting a tournament recrd with a one round total of 70.

— Chuck Samuelson

Cross-country

Both the men's and women's cross-country teams travelled to Amherst on Saturday for the Amherst Invitational, running to fourth place under sunny skies with mild temperatures.

The men's team sent a squad that was without three of their top four runners and finished with a somewhat expected disappointing outcome. The Ephmen finished fourth in a five team field behind Westfield, Amherst, and Fitchburg St. Williams finished with 95 points, ahead of North Adams St. with 190.

The race's individual winner was Ken Pilska of Westfield, who ran the fast Amherst course (4.8 miles) in 25:05. He was followed by two teammates, Greg Callahan in 25:06 and Mike Keegan in 25:10.

The top finisher for Williams was Peter Stewart '90, placing ninth with a time of 25:49. Jon Fisher '87 also looked strong, finishing 14th in 25:55, as did Dale Johnson '90, who was 22nd in 26:14. Gil McCabe '89 and Ted Arrowsmith '88 rounded out the top five for Williams, taking 24th and 26th, respectively.

The meet showed that the Ephmen will face a tough battle when they meet Amherst in the Little Three Championships in late October, and in the NESCAC Championships on October 11 at Bates.

Pierce leads Ephwomen

The women's team looked impressive as they took fourth in a seven team field behind the third-place finish of Sarah Pierce '88. Smith won the race with 49 points, and was followed by Fitchburg St., Westfield, Williams, Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and North Adams St.

Kim Bresnahan of Fitchburg ran 18:17 for the three-mile course to win the race, and was followed by Kathleen Norton of Westfield in 18:18. Pierce, continuing to run well, finished the course in 18:37. Second for Williams and eighth overall was captain Becky Conklin '87, back in form, running 18:54. Completing the scoring for Williams were Cathy Cocks '89, Kate Pugh '87, and Katherine Brennan '90, as they finished in 25th, 32nd, and 33rd places, respectively.

The women run at the Mount Holyoke Invitational on October 4th.

— Steve Brody

Rugby

Saturday was the start of a season of hard, physical rugby from the women's rugby team. The Killer B's faced a tough University of Maine squad while the A-side fought to preserve their honor against a wily alum squad of Used Bags.

With their greater game knowledge and quickness, the B's dominated the road-weary northern visitors from the opening kickoff. The Williams scrum was consistently lower and stronger than the Maine pack. Minutes into the game the alert scrumhalf Kerry Kliander '89 picked up a bouncing ball and dished it off to crafty wing Gemma Burgos '89. She gave it to classmate Britty Shaw, who barelled forward for twenty meters and scored the contest's first try.

In her first game, sophomore fullback Lauren Boeschenstein stopped a Maine breakaway with a devastating tackle. The second Williams score was set up by a strategic kick from Sharon Burke '88. Kliander got the kick and Janet Mansfield touched it down to make the score 8-0. Scrummies Monica Crossman '87 and Amy Asadourian '88 displayed aggressive mauling techniques throughout the first half.

Promising recruit Heather Adams '90 completed the Williams scoring early in the second half with a 20-meter run around the dazed Maine scrum and into the try zone. Outstanding defensive play dashed Maine's hopes of even scoring once. Lauren Boeschenstein '89 unleashed several key kicks under pressure. Nancy Clapp '87 and Ellen Lee '88 provided strong pushing and solid tackles, while sophomore Ingrid Dankmeyer flattened several Maine ruggers with crab-like wraparound tackles.

A-side victorious

It was a motley crew of Used Bags who faced a younger squad of lean A-side ruggers. The Bags got off to a surprising start as Sunny Edelstein '85 popped the ball over the surprised a-side's heads. Dorie Dewar '85 eventually scampered in for the try.

The A-side stormed back to within meters of the alums zone but to no avail as Ginger Greene '85 unleashed one of her legendary kicks and sent the action back to the 50-meter line. Haley Clifford '87 gained impressive yardage on a run before the Bags shut her down.

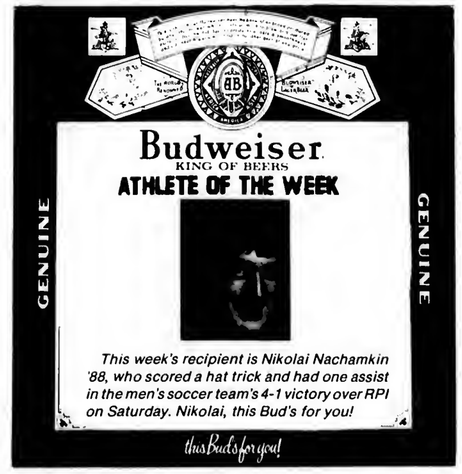
Determined to secure a victory for her teammates, standoff Missy Wilcox '87 opened the second half by booting the ball into the Bags' zone and touching it down for the A-side's first try. Senior Mary Petersen later placed a beautiful conversion between the uprights to make the score 6-4.

Sonja Legnick '88 was always to be found in the middle of the rucks clawing for the ball, while Ann-Marie Plankey frightened the alums with her admirable ball handling and well-placed kicks. Steph Jacon '87 stopped a Dewar breakaway in the closing minutes of the game.

As the final whistle sounded, the Bags refused to leave the field until they were victorious. Quite by accident a surprised Dlana "Slink" Roberto '86 found herself holding the ball in an open field. She sped 85 meters for the Bags' final charity try.

— Steph Jacon

Soccer holds off Wesleyan 1-0



by Stewart Verdery

Bolstered by a stifling defense which posted two shutouts, the women's soccer squad raised their record to 4-1 this week with home victories over Middlebury and Wesleyan. The win total equals the team's output of the entire 1985 season.

Saturday, playing before a partisan crowd on Cole Field, the Ephs and the visiting Wesleyan Cardinals battled through much of the first half with neither squad able to capitalize on good scoring opportunites. Wesleyan had a shot hit the top post near the midway mark, and the Ephs' Chris Boddicker '88 missed on a one-on-one encounter with Alison Lineen, the Cardinals' outstanding freshman keeper.

About eight minutes before intermission, Boddicker unleashed a vicious shot which was blocked back out to halfback Lori Schaen '89, whose attempt from 15 yards hit both post and goalie before trickling into the left side of the net. The tally was the sophomore's

Continued on Page 9

Nachamkin scores hat trick in 4-1 victory

by Greg Leeds

Nikolai Nachamkin '88 scored three goals to give the men's soccer team its first victory of the season on Saturday, a 4-1 pounding of RPI.

Nachamkin got the Ephs off to a strong start early, putting in a penalty kick just 2:30 into the game. The penalty was awarded as RPI goalkeeper Gary Schipper tripped Nachamkin while going after a loose ball in the goal box.

Williams extended its lead one minute later as co-captain Denny Wright '87 scored with an assist from Nachamkin. Wright drove a shot at Schipper, which he deflected, but the ball rolled into the left corner of the net. Ahead 2-0 just 3:30 into the game, Williams continued to assert its dominance throughout the entire half, passing very well and creating many scoring opportunities.

With 15:28 left in the half, another Wright/Nachamkin combination further dampened RPI's hopes for a comeback. This time Wright assisted as Nachamkin drilled in a wide, hooking shot across the goal to the far corner, which bounced off the post and into the net.

The Eph defense was particularly solid, shutting down all potential threats and allowing the Engineers nothing. At halftime RPI had taken five corner kicks but had registered only one shot on net, as compared to the Ephs' 14 shots.

Williams did not relent its offensive pressure or become complacent as the second half started. 9:55 into the period, Nachamkin scored his third goal, making it 4-0, capitalizing on a ball set up by Eric Von Estorff '87. Von Estorff had a fine game and was instrumental in maintaining offensive pressure throughout the game.

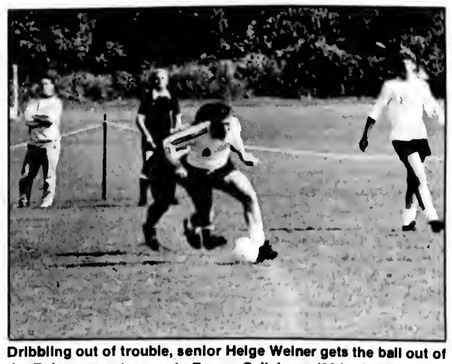
RPI's single goal came with 2:57 remaining to play, as forward Ed Gray passed to teammate Joe Mannino in front of the goal, who hit an uncontested shot past Rob Blanck '89.

The Ephmen completely outplayed the Engineers, outshooting them 28-3, much of which was the work of Nachamkin and Mike Masters '89, who each had nine shots on goal. Wright and Doug Brooks '90 were impressive in the midfield, as were the "back four" of co-captain Jon Deveaux '87, Dan Calichman '90, Mike Morris '88 and Helge Weiner '87.

Coach Mike Russo noted, "The defense tightened up a lot today and played much better. Nikolai, Mike Masters, Jon and Denny all played very well."

Tied by Clark

On Wednesday the Ephs fought a tough match with Clark, tying 1-1 after two overtime periods. Clark was 2-0-1, ranked fifth in New England Division 3, and unscored-upon going into the game.



Both offensively and defensively, Williams seemd to lack intensity early on, failing to capitalize on several good scoring opportunities and at times lapsing in concentration on defense. Clark scored first with 12:21 remaining in the first period as Todd Typrowicz has a one-on-one situation against Brad Bryan '87 in goal. Bryan made the initial save but the loose ball was put in by Clark's Mike Badia.

Eight minutes later Williams scored but the goal was nullified as the referee claimed the Ephs were offsides, despite the line judge's signal to the contrary.

Brooks had an outstanding game for Williams, effectively filling the midfield gap created by the loss of last year's captains Jeff McEvoy and Mark Schroeder. Scott Walker '87 also played well and tied the score 1-1 eleven minutes into the second half. Walker took a pass from Nachamkin and dribbled past several Clark defenders before beating the goalkeeper with a low shot to the far post, ending Clark's three-game shutout streak.

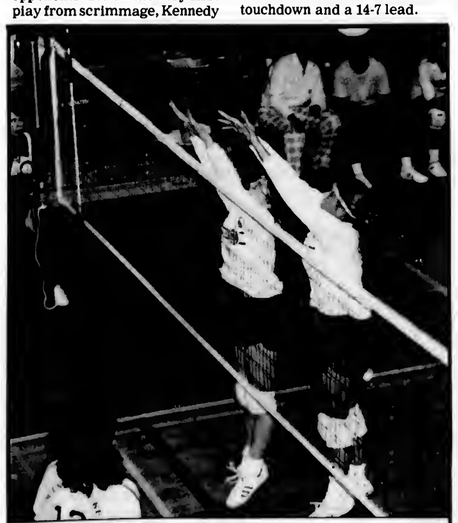
Through the overtimes a series of missed calls by the referee cost Williams two potential goals. Over ten yellow cards (warnings) and one ejection were handed out by the referee in the questionably-officiated game. Again the Ephmen outshot their opponents 28-13 but were unable to make the most of their 9-2 corner kick advantage.

The Ephs are now 1-1-1, as they were this time last year before going on to an 11-3-1 season. They face neighbor/rival North Adams State tomorrow on Cole Field.

Dribbling out of trouble, senior Helge Weiner gets the ball out of the Eph zone as teammate Danny Calichman '90 looks on during the men's soccer team's 4-1 win over RPI on Saturday. (Ward)

Football falls by 3 TDs

by Al Mottur



Plagued by penalties and turnovers, the football team fell to the Continentals of Hamilton this past Saturday at Cole Field by a 41-20 score.

The game was much closer than the final score indicated. The Ephs rolled up four more yards offensively than their opponents and equaled them in first downs, and with little more than three minutes left in the third quarter the score was tied at 14.

The game started in incredible fashion for the Ephmen and for sophomore transfer Scott Kennedy, making his debut as the team's starting quarterback. The Continentals took the opening kickoff, but the return man coughed up the ball, and Williams recovered on their opponents' 26. On the very first play from scrimmage, Kennedy teamed up with split-end John Shaw '87 on a beautiful timing pattern down the left sideline for the game's first score.

The Continentals retaliated by scoring two touchdowns on the Eph offense. On Hamilton's next possesion, the defense held and the Continentals were forced to punt. But as the Ephs attempted to drive upfield, Hamilton safety Robert Alexander picked off a sideline pass from Kennedy and raced 25 yards untouched into the end zone, tying the game at seven.

Another Eph turnover halfway through the second quarter provided Hamilton with the lead. Kennedy, about to pass from his own end zone, was blind-sided by a Hamilton lineman. The ball popped into the air where it was plucked by another Continental for the touchdown and a 14-7 lead.

Junior Mo Brand and sophomore Nancy Hedeman go up to try to block a Mt. Holyoke spike last week in Lasell Gym, but the ball sails above. The Ephwomen topped Holyoke in a tough three-game match and have won six straight on the year. (Somers)

The football team was ripped 41-20 on Saturday by Hamilton, but you couldn't tell by looking at senior John Shaw's stats: eight catches for three touchdowns, including the one above. (LeBauer)

Trailing by seven at the half, the Ephs came out strong in the third quarter. They marched downfield after receiving the kickoff and knotted the score at 14 with nine minutes left in the quarter. The key play in the drive was the last: faced with a fourth and goal on the Hamilton 5, coach Bob Odell decided to go for the TD. What resulted was another pretty timing pattern from Shaw who beat his defender into the left corner of the end zone where Kennedy nicely deposited the ball into his hands.

It was after this touchdown that things began to unravel for the Ephmen. Hamilton started to move the ball well by throwing the ball deep, and subsequently poured 20 consecutive points on the board, putting the game out of reach.

Trailing 34-14 with six minutes remaining, the Ephs did manage to score again, once more the result of the Kennedy-Shaw connection. The four-yard touchdown pass was clearly not enough however, as the Continentals scored again, upping their margin of victory to 21.

Despite the disappointing loss, there were several bright spots for the team. Kennedy performed well at the QB spot and seemed to add excitement to the offensive play-calling, some of which included a flea-flicker pass for 35 yards and an unsuccessful halfback pass on a two-point conversion try. The offensive standout of the game was clearly Shaw. He played a brilliant game, constantly beating his defender and hauling in eight passes for 119 yards and three TD's, playing a part in every Eph score.

On the defensive side of the field Dave Clawson '89 performed well in his secondary slot, picking off one of the two interceptions thrown by Hamilton starter Mike LoPresti. Sorely missed, however, was safety Scott Powers '88, who injured his knee against Middlebury and could only punt against Hamilton.

With perennial New England power Trinity coming to Williamstown next Saturday, the Ephs will have little time to mourn this unfortunate loss. However, one should rest assured that if the squad can avoid the costly penalties and turnovers which haunted it against Hamilton, the upcoming home contest could prove to be a profitable one.

Tennis evens record with shutout

by Megan McNeill

Last Tuesday, the tennis team stunned Mt. Holyoke with an astonishing 9-0 romp to even their record at 2-2. Despite the move indoors because of adverse weather conditions, the Lady Ephs showed no mercy.

Captain Katie Kerr '87 and junior Mary Montgomery dispatched of their opponents swiftly as they took every game of both sets. Also rolling to easy victory in straight sets were number four Anne Shulman '88, number five Missy Crouchley '89, number six Liz Keilison '87, and number two Amy Davidson '90. Davidson's victory extends her undefeated record to 4-0.

The doubles' teams had little trouble with their opponents as well. Sophomores Anne Petersen and Kathy Paper combined their efforts to win 6-2, 6-1. Annabel Sheinberg '89 and Nancy Shore '89 teamed up to defeat their opponents 6-3, 6-1. In the only three-set match of the day, Nora Vincent '90 and Dagne Maidman '90 won 2-6, 6-2, 6-4.

Tomorrow, the Lady Ephs host Middlebury at 4:00, attempting to break the .500 mark. On Saturday they face Trinity in another home match at 11:00.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 4 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE OCTOBER 7, 1986

Williamstown's first traffic signal may ease congestion at the intersection of Cole and Main. (Ward)

Town to install traffic light at Cole and Main

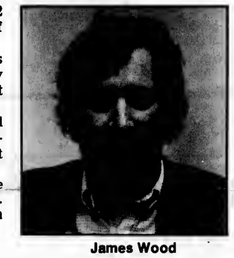
by Alexandra Glover

The Williamstown Board of Selectmen voted 3-2 on September 22 to advise the state to install a traffic signal at the intersection of Cole Avenue and Main Street.

"Our traffic engineer had traffic flow figures, and he said this was the place to put the light," said Dean Amidon, district highway engineer. "We don't like to put stoplights where they aren't needed."

Thomas Jorling, a selectman and a professor of environmental studies at Williams, voted against the measure. "I am not persuaded that the state has in any way studied that position, to see if it is the best site," he said.

Jorling named Water Street and Stratton and Luce roads as three other intersections that could have been considered for the light. "Why does the state do what they do? I wish I knew. I'd like to see an engineering study to see what site would be preferable."



Continued on Page 6

ACSR divided on trustees' move

by Peter Balaban

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) last week decided to implement "disinvestment advocacy" by informing companies of the change in policy and warning them that Williams will vote in the spring for shareholder resolutions calling for corporate withdrawal from South Africa. The decision came despite marked opposition from some ACSR members.

At the meeting last Monday, committee members attacked the college Board of Trustees on two fronts. Some said that they favor a continued stance of "constructive engagement" toward South Africa, rather than the newly-adopted policy of "disinvestment advocacy." Members also criticized the trustees for making the decision without first seeking the recommendation of ACSR and without full consultation of ACSR members.

James Wood

It was the first meeting of the committee since the September 19 announcement that the college had adopted the new policy, under which it will urge the roughly 30 companies that have South African operations — and in which it holds stock — to withdraw their operations.

At least four of the committee members — professor Fred Greene, junior John Canty, and alumni Charles Alberti '50 and Donald Dubendorf '75 — said they were angered that the Trustees had made the decision without a recommendation from the ACSR.

Alberti maintained that the ACSR is becoming a "rubber stamp" committee for the finance committee, and he suggested that the 'A' in ACSR be dropped because the committee is no longer serving an advisory function.

In addition, some committee members said they were opposed to the general idea of disinvestment advocacy.

"I don't agree with this goddamn policy we're adopting," Greene said. "If we divest we have no leverage in the companies. The companies should stay in South Africa for the benefit of the black people."

But professor James Wood, the chairman of ACSR, who over the summer was involved in the framing of disinvestment advocacy, defended the policy. "The shareholder responsibility movement does have a positive impact, and I have no problem with the new policy of disinvestment advocacy," Wood said.

Fred Greene

College treasurer Will Reed, who defended the policy after its announcement, said little during the open meeting.

Later last week, Tom Williams '87, a spokesman for the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC), called for the resignation of those members of the ACSR who opposed the college's new policy and who doubted the effectiveness of the shareholder responsibility movement.

The consensus of the committee was that it would continue to urge companies to act according to the Sullivan Principles, despite the call for them to withdraw. It also advocated a policy of "constructive disengagement," or the systematic turnover of businesses to blacks.

Dubendorf said he feared that American companies now

Continued on Page 7

Moore, Morris at convocation

College museum set to reopen

The reopening of the Williams College Museum of Art and the granting of honorary degrees to museum architect Charles Moore and sculptor Robert Morris will highlight Williams' convocation on October 19.

Since it closed in 1980, the museum has undergone $8 million of expansion and renovation by Moore and architect Robert Harper of Centerbrook Architects and Planners.

A four-story addition designed by Moore and completed in 1983 added new galleries, classrooms, offices and storage space, as well as a three-story entrance atrium, to the museum. The addition bears Moore's postmodernist signature, the juxtiposition of classical elements with modern design.

Work also included the renovation of the original central rotunda of the building, designed by Thomas Tefft and completed in 1846. Originally used as the college's first library, this rotunda, with eight ionic columns supporting a 30-foot-high dome, is considered by many to be the finest example of 19th century architecture on campus.

Oakley delighted

"We are truly delighted with the variety of spaces in the newly expanded museum and with the way in which the architects have designed additions that are unmistakably of our own era but congruent with the original 1846 structure," said Francis Oakley, president of the college. "The physical expansion and renovation of the museum makes possible not only the display of a greater portion of the permanent collection, but also an expanded program of changing exhibitions of national and international importance.

"Complementing the resources of the neighboring Clark Art Institute, the (museum) offers Williams students as well as members of the surrounding community an outstanding opportunity for the study and enjoyment of visual arts," Oakley added. "It affirms resoundingly the college's continuing commitment to the fine arts as an integral part of the liberal arts."

Architect Moore will give an address entitled "Tradition and the Museum" to the convocation audience. Born in Benton Harbor, Michigan on October 31, 1925, Moore is a noted postmodern architect. Educated at the University of Michigan and Princeton University, he has chaired the departments of architecture at both the University of California, Berkeley and Yale University. In 1978, he took over as Program Head in the School of Architecture at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Moore believes that architecture should exhibit myth, fantasy and whim, and recall the historic connotations of its setting. His teachings have helped to bring his views and the views of architects like him greater respect since he first began his work.

"A chameleon"

Sculptor Robert Morris will receive an honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree from Williams along with Moore. Born in Kansas City on February 9, 1931, Morris has studied at the University of Kansas City, the Kansas City Art Institute, the California School of Fine Arts, Reed College and Hunter College, where he also has taught. In January of last year New York magazine cited Morris as being "in the forefront of every major movement since minimalism," adding that "for his adaptability, he has been called a chameleon."

Shape is the most important element in sculpture, according to Morris. Scale and surfacing take precedence in his work over color. His works are often a commentary on artistic trends of the time, and sometimes reflect his strong political stands. Commenting on a recent show, New York concluded that "Morris's current offering is a rebellious, thunderous, brilliant critique of modernist dogma. For an artist as smart as Morris, some of the pressingly mortal concerns of the twentieth century are beginning to intrude."

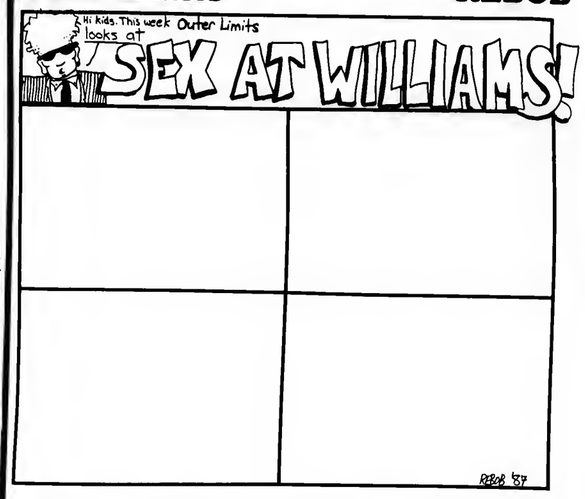
The rotunda of the newly-renovated Williams College Museum of Art.

Convocation ceremonies will be held in Chapin Hall at 11:00 on Sunday, October 19. At noon the same day, the college museum will open with highlights from its permanent collection and three special exhibitions, including one on the architecture of Moore.

This article was compiled by Alysa Doyle.

October 7, 1986

A pitch for the Log



The College Council's proposal for a "tap night" at the Log is a good initiative to revive the popularity of the Log. Students, though primarily responsible for the repeal of the two-drink limit last year, seem to have lost interest in the Log this year both as a topic of conversation and as a place to socialize.

The much-needed CC initiative calls for one night of each week on which only those of legal drinking age are admitted, and beer is served as it was in the old days — in pitchers. This initiative is feasible and, if enacted, would surely spark increased attendance.

Besides the absence of pitchers, students also complain about the requirement to present two identifications at the door in order to drink. It is ironic that the Williams-issued Id card is not valid proof of age at the Williams-operated Log, but it is at the Purple Pub across the street. Though not really objectionable, the need to present a driver's license to drink and the rule of one beer per customer per trip are inconveniences that are symbolic of an attitude of distrust. These regulations, enacted on the assumption that students will try to buck the system unless watched with an eagle eye, have led many to shun the Log.

It is not a violation of any law to listen to student input or to make students, who are after all the customers, welcome at the Log.

Outer Limits REBOB

Quotation of the Week

"I don't agree with this goddamn policy we're adopting. If we divest we have no leverage in the companies. The companies should stay in South Africa for the benefit of the black people."

— Fred Greene, political science professor and ACSR member

Op-ed

A personal appeal for an end to the U.S. war on Nicaragua

by Carol Pepper

During much of the summer of 1986 I worked as a public health nurse with members of the International and the Nicaraguan Red Cross in the many displaced persons camps all along the Rio Coco, in the mountains that range northeast of Esteli, and along the Nicaraguan-Honduran border. Many thousands of Nicaraguan families have been displaced from their homes, farms, and villages by the U.S.-sponsored contra war. The people were forced by the war to flee; they were forced to leave everything behind.

The camps are staffed by young Nicaraguan teachers, social, health, construction and agricultural workers, many of whom have been killed or kidnapped by the contra. In the camps everyone works cooperatively. Resources are shared by all; scarcity, exposure, hunger and disease are endured by many.

As a registered nurse I participated in the distribution among the people of countless tons of food and helped to care for people suffering from adult measles, malaria, hepatitis A and B, malnutrition, dysentry, parasites, dehydration and tuberculosis.

The C.I.A. has taught the contra to mine the roads of Northern Nicaragua with mines made in the U.S.A. This summer, trucks, civilian buses, and private vehicles were blown up by mines. Many civilians were killed in ambushes. Four of the displaced persons camps in which I worked were attacked by contra mercenaries.

If I had not seen it with my own eyes, I would never have believed the U.S. capable of such costly violations of human rights, assassination by proxy, and terrorism.

In 1985 I worked as a venipuncture nurse with the Nicaraguan Red Cross in Managua. I had the opportunity to speak with many hundreds of young Nicaraguan soldiers while I drew or transfused their blood. They are not our enemies.

What we are doing in Nicaragua horrifies me. No matter what we may think of Sandinismo, we have no right to ruthlessly and systematically kill the people of a country we have an obligation as human beings to befriend.

Perhaps you have already read of the "Veterans Fast for Life," an open-ended water fast begun on September 1 by George Mizo and Charles Liteky, and joined on September 15 by Brian Wilson and Duncan Murphy, Williams Class of 1943.

Mizo was awarded the purple heart during service with the U.S. Army in Vietnam; Liteky, an Army Chaplain, was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for heroism in Vietnam by President Lyndon Johnson. Wilson served in the U.S. Air Force from 1966-1970, and served one tour of duty in Vietnam. Murphy, a political science major at Williams, drove an ambulance from 1942-1945 with the American Friends Service in North Africa, Syria, Lebanon, Italy, France, and Germany, and was part of the liberation of Belsen concentration camp in Germany in 1945.

Three of the four veterans have visited Nicaragua. They fast as an expression of a deeply felt desire to do everything and anything they can — even giving up their lives — to stop the war with Nicaragua.

I invite students, staff, and faculty of this college to participate in the Fast for Life. A juice or bread and water fast, or any reasonable attempt to reduce caloric intake for twenty-four hours, can be sustained each week without harm to most people in good health. If in doubt, do consult a physician before undertaking the fast.

I suggest concerned persons fast weekly, in solidarity with the veterans and the suffering people of Nicaragua. To fast is to experience briefly and in one's own body what hunger is. As a spiritual discipline it can unite the faster again and again with the people of Nicaragua, who fast every day.

Prayer and meditation for a new commitment to peace and a transformation of the hearts and minds of those who orchestrate this war can be augmented by political action: vigils, marches, letters to government officials, civil disobedience, the refusal to pay war taxes, etc.

At Williams, Bob Peck, Bill and Pony Oliver, and I are already participating in the Fast. They do not necessarily agree with everything I have written here. You are welcome to contact any one of us. If you do fast or meditate or do political work on behalf of Nicaragua, please contact me so that we may do that together.

Carol Pepper is the Chaplain of Williams College.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Stephanie Brown, Mary Iliff, Eda Suh
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

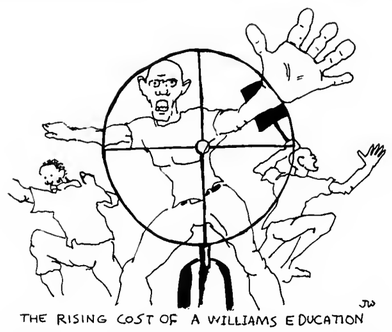
Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Come out and say it: the clear implications of disinvestment

by Charles Goodwin '87

Williams College must now begin the process of divesting itself of equity in those companies which do business in South Africa.

If it is wrong for corporations to do business in South Africa, then it is wrong for Williams to own stock in these corporations. Williams has acknowledged the truth of the first clause of the preposition. We have become disinvestment advocates.



The Sullivan principles, which we have eschewed, are based upon the notion that companies can attenuate the viciousness of apartheid and agitate toward democracy. We declared that, in the face of the ever-worsening situation, corporations can do nothing to aid in the elimination of apartheid. Thus, because these companies are impotent in the face of this enormity, we find ourselves demanding that they withdraw.

However, if voting our proxies and writing letters does not move these companies to withdraw from South Africa, then we are also powerless. Therefore, we must vow to sell the equity we hold in those companies if they do not leave South Africa. We have chosen the path of freedom and justice. We have proclaimed it to be the correct path to travel. Now, we must begin to walk it.

Perhaps one might think that I fail to appreciate the progress that the college has made since 1983. However, I do. The air is no longer filled with the rhetoric of four years ago. Those arguments have been scattered like autumn's leaves. Questions that were raised by divestment opponents have been answered.

Can American corporations contribute to productive change in South Africa? No. American companies only support the economic viability of apartheid.

Won't corporate withdrawal hurt the Blacks more than the Whites? No. Our companies cannot make up for the support they contribute to apartheid by giving a handful of Blacks a job. What is it to employ 500 Blacks in a refinery when the gasoline will flow into the tanks of the rhino buses owned by the South Africa security forces? Moreover, the Blacks of South Africa have overwhelmingly requested our withdrawal.

A college shouldn't take a political stand, should it? We are already involved in political action by holding equity in those companies in the first place. Second, we have always been political: the world is not a vacuum (remember President Chandler's 1984 letter denouncing the elimination of the charitable donations tax break?). Third, we are an educational institution and must always and everywhere support the freedom and tolerance necessary for education. Fourth, the children, many under the age of fifteen, who were murdered in the streets of South Africa by the police were not political either. On this issue, nothing is non-political.

Yes, we have come a long way. Yes, we have reached a fork in the road and chosen the just path. But there is a long way to go and we must continue. Let us begin.

Massachusetts question No. 1 is a threat to personal freedom

by Leslie Jeffs '89

Several referenda on the upcoming Massachusetts ballot are eliciting intense student interest. One of these is Question No. 1, which involves an amendment to the state constitution regarding abortion funding and rights.

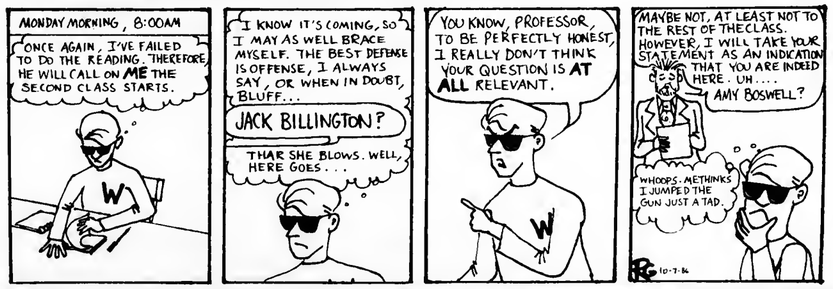
While I am not going to attempt to make a case here for the morality of the abortion procedure, I think that all Williams students as well as all members of the general community have a vested interest in seeing this referendum defeated. The issue transcends the question of moral rightness or wrongness; it is a matter of personal autonomy and the freedom to make choices.

The amendment itself, if passed, will not immediately outlaw abortion. Rather, it will severely complicate the process of obtaining a safe, legal abortion. The Massachusetts State Legislature will be granted the authority of "regulating or prohibiting abortion unless prohibited by the United States Constitution." Since "Supreme Court protection of safe, legal abortion," as upheld by the landmark Roe vs. Wade decision can be changed right now by a mere one-vote switch, the people of Massachusetts may be left with neither state nor federal protection.

The amendment will also curtail "public or private spending on abortion, or the provision of services or facilities therefor." Here is the real problem. Initially, all Medicaid funding will be easily shut off. Private spenders such as Williams College, an institution we should like to consider as independent, could lose its tax-exampt status if it provided any abortion related services at all — even counseling or referrals. The woman choosing to have an abortion would be alone both emotionally and financially.

Perhaps the most alarming sentence in the amendment defines under exactly what circumstances abortion will not be subject to control: "to prevent the death of the mother." Note the use of the word "death." There is no mention of life, of quality of life, of benefits. A woman would have to be in severe medical distress before an abortion could be performed.

Young girls, rape victims, physically or emotionally needy women: none of these conditions are made exceptions. Women would be given uniform status as a group, unable to decide whether or not to terminate their pregnancy regardless of external circumstances.



It is critical that this referendum be defeated at the ballots. Massachusetts is one of the first states to have such an issue; we can only hope it is not part of a larger trend. If more states, even just one, follow this sorry example and pass similar amendments, women's rights will take a quantum leap backward.

No one needs to believe in the moral "rightness" of abortion to know that an adult person deserves the right to control his or her own body. Let's not let "pro-life" factions overwhelm us with illusions of over-riding fetal rights and force an entire state into their personal morality. Passing this antiquated amendment will be a drastic defeat for conscientious and aware citizens everywhere.

This referendum can be defeated by one thing only — "no" votes and a lot of them. If you want to help a lot of Massachusetts women (and just as many men) retain their reproductive autonomy, register to vote before October 7 (at Town Hall on North Street). And spread the word to your friends and the entire Williamstown community. The most important thing to do is publicize the issue, informing voters of potential injustices and the crucial rights at stake.

Remember, you may only be here for four short years, and chances are that you will never need abortion services, but we can't live in ivory towers or plastic bubbles forever. Do something productive and stand up for reproductive rights.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, antique looking jewelry.

TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

SKATERS
C.C.M. Skates ½ Price
SKIERS
Boots - Save 15 to 60%
GOFF'S SPORTS

PURCHASE shipped anyplace in the country for only $2.50
WILLIAMS SHOP

News analysis

Building weapons in the Berkshires

by James Spallone

United States defense policy decisions made at the Pentagon and on Capitol Hill can have direct reprecussions in Berkshire County, home of the General Electric Company's Pittsfield plant. G.E. holds important defense contracts and sub-contracts through its ordnance systems division.

The sprawling plant in Pittsfield is composed of three components employing about 7000 people, 4000 of whom work in the plant's ordnance division. Among important projects underway at G.E. are the manufacture of transmissions and turret stabilization drives for the contoversial Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the manufacture of fire control systems and inertial guidance equipment for Trident II nuclear missiles, carried aboard the Navy's nuclear-powered submarine fleet.

The Bradley Fighting Vehicle, designed to withstand heavy fire while moving U.S. infantry forces across streams, rivers, and difficult terrain made headlines in Pittsfield and elsewhere in recent weeks as skepticism concerning the vehicle's ability to "swim" across rivers flared up in Congress. The vehicle has come under heavy criticism over the last few years, its opponents declaring it top-heavy, impractical in size (it can only carry about six infantry men), and built of flimsy and unsafe aluminum.

Pittsfield's congressman, Silvio Conte, has been in the fray over the Bradley vehicle, and during the summer found himself involved in a floor fight to maintain funding for the project and the jobs it provides for 850 of his western Massachusetts constituents.

"Does its job"

In a statement typical of the republican lawmaker's unwavering support for the project, Conte said on August 11, "The soldiers and the field commanders love the vehicle. There are a lot of defense programs that need to be curtailed, but the Bradley is not one of them. It does its job better than any vehicle of its type in the world, and we should try not to halt or cripple the program."

Berkshire Focus

Early this year G.E. had to fend off a job-threatening attempt by the government to "second source" the Bradley parts manufactured in Pittsfield. Second sourcing involves the government's seeking another supplier of parts in order to lower prices through competion and reduce security risks.

A source at the Berkshire Eagle, however, said that the second source threat to G.E. is dead, or at least temporarily dormant.

By far G.E.'s most important contract involves the manufacture of the fire-control and inertial guidance systems for the Trident II. The fire control system is a giant computer-electronic complex which establishes the trajectory of the missiles' flight, prepares for launch and controls the launch process.

G.E. employs 2000-3000 workers, including scores of engineers, in the Trident program, accounting for over half of ordnance division employees. Earlier this year a spokesman at G.E. said that "G.E.does not make nuclear bombs and does not handle any more nuclear material than a hospital."

Students picketed

Williams students and faculty have picketed the Pittsfield plant in the past, protesting its contribution to the manufacture of nuclear weapons. According to religion professor John Eusden, a protest in the early 1980's, in which he did not participate, ended with strong words being exchanged between students and workers.

Eusden said the students, taking action without consulting interested faculty members, approached workers at the plant, asking them to consider the moral implications of their participation in the manufacture of nuclear weapons. "The workers responed with strong comments," said Eusden. "They claimed the students wanted to take away their jobs. It was an adventure and learning experience in realism. The students had to see their idealism in light of hard facts and paychecks. It was a lesson in proper tactics."

Part of the General Electric Co. complex in Pittsfield. (LeBauer)

Eusden said he did participate in protests at G.E. during the Vietnam era when he was Chaplain of the College but added that a less confrontational approach was used. G.E. spokesmen could not be reached for comment on the protests.

Since the first ordnance plant was built in Pittsfield during World War II, G.E. has played a major role in producing ordnance equipment for the Navy, particularly for the Fleet Ballistic Missle Program. After the war, G.E. produced fire control and guidance systems for the Polaris, Poseidon and Trident I programs as well as Trident II.

Early this year a study conducted by a graduate student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology revealed that government contracts involving nuclear technology bring one billion dollars annually to Massachusetts and supply jobs for 30,000 Bay Staters.

This news analysis is based on information gathered by Record reporter Spallone from the Berkshire Eagle and the General Electric Co.

CUL dismisses Row House dining option

by Debbie Snyder

The possibility of reinstituting Row House dining was dismissed by the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) at its meeting last Friday because, CUL members said, students were indifferent to the issue.

The CUL, working with a new subcommittee system, also discussed the allotment of a certain number of hours worth of security to each housing unit, options for improving student advising and ways to evaluate the selection process for co-op housing. The subcommittee on Row House dining was reassigned to exploring new functions for the Log.

At its Thursday meeting, the College Council had voted to recommend to the CUL that the Row House dining issue be dropped, but resolved that the college should consider serving meals at the Log.

Professor William Wagner, chairman of CUL, said that "there's simply very little demand and, in fact, some significant opposition to the idea. It seems illogical to force something on students that they don't want."

The issue was debated at length among the residents of the Row Houses and Tyler House, reported College Council President Amy Jeffress '87, a CUL member. She said those students were ambivalent about the idea, because it would mean the loss of kitchen facilities in their houses, and they felt it would create more isolation.

"It was less a case of massive student opposition than of massive student indifference," Jeffress said.

On the subcommittee's new topic, the Log, Jeffress said they had discussed having the Log serve lunch. She suggested that three meals could be offered there daily as an alternative to eating at one of the dining halls. "I don't think you'd have to have the same food you

Continued on Page 8

Vandals break into Dodd, Driscoll

by Alexandra Glover

Both Dodd and Driscoll dining halls were broken into and vandalized last week. The incident at Dodd forced it to close for two days.

The break-ins occured sometime between 7:45 on the night of October 1, and 7:30 the following morning, according to Officer Willard Busl of Williams security. The Williamstown police are investigating.

The Dodd House dining hall received extensive damage when vandals, who had climbed in through a window above the dishwasher, triggered a fire extinguisher located above the grill, Busl said.

The extinguisher is used in the event of grease fires, according to food service director James Hodgkins. When triggered, the extinguisher emits a viscous chemical substance to smother the fire and to prevent combustion, he added.

"It is not inconceivable that (the intruder) got ahold of this thing in the dark and pulled it," said Busl, "but I don't think it's likely."

"I don't think it was intended," said Don Chilson, first cook at Dodd. "The pull-station said 'pull'. They might have thought it was a light switch."

"Wasn't fun"

"It wasn't fun to walk in on first thing in the morning," said Chilson, who discovered the damage when he arrived at work on Thursday. "It took 16 hours of work to clean it up. Everything had to be cleaned with mild soap and water from ceiling to floors."

"The actual damage included at least 60-odd man hours, and a broken window, but the real cost was that Dodd wasn't able to feed students for two days while the place was cleaned up and the extinguisher recharged," said Hodgkins.

"I would hope that it wasn't a student. It could have been a non-student involved in random hell-raising. But it makes me very angry and disappointed." Hodgkins added.

"All I can say is, I wish we all could have been here when they pulled it. It sounds like a gun," said Chilson.

"I've been there when one of those things let go," said Hodgkins. "It is absolutely ear-piercing. It really lets out a roar."

Damage at Driscoll was less extensive, according to Rob Parkinson-Shutt, manager of the dining hall. "They broke in downstairs at Driscoll, and possibly got to the cereal, because it was out," said Parkinson-Shutt. "The drop-gate had to be repaired."

"We were a little shocked here at Driscoll. We're frustrated that they'd want to break in. We're just fortunate that they didn't get to our fire extinguisher," added Parkinson-Shutt.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.

Caper's
"Harvest Hoot"
Cajun Cabaret & One Act Musical, "The Apple Tree"
Thursday, Oct. 9th at 8:30 p.m.
Friday & Saturday Night
"WHITE HOT AND BLUE"
Albany's Newest Rhythm and Blues Band
412 Main St. (Call For Reservations) 458-9180

EST. 19 '1
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
SALE
The Co-op
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Profile: Rosemarie Tong

by Beth Levine

Associate Professor Rosemarie Tong (or Rosie, as her students and colleagues affectionately call her) somehow found half an hour in between lecturing her ever popular "Introduction to Feminist Thought" course, organizing paperwork, and presenting a talk to an alumni program, to answer a reporter's questions. Recently named national Professor of the Year by the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education, she manages to juggle full-time teaching in the Williams philosophy department and women's studies program, a husband, two sons (ages 9 and 14), and a home in Williamstown.

Despite her numerous commitments, she still finds time to speak at campus forums such as the Feminist Alliance coffeehouse and to address such groups as the American Philosophical Association, where later this semester she will be speaking on the ethical implications of reproductive technology and economic justice for women.

Tong received her undergraduate degree at Marygrove College in Detroit, where she majored in German and Religious Studies. She spent the first five years after her college graduation as a housewife in New Jersey, before enrolling at Temple University in Philadelphia to obtain her Ph.D. She explained that pursuing an advanced degree was something she had always wanted to do, but she wanted to wait until her husband's career as a professor at Glassboro State College in New Jersey was firmly established. Tong said that her husband supported her career goals and she was able to begin graduate school after he was rapidly tenured and promoted. "If you're a housewife in New Jersey for five years, that's part of the motivation (to go back to school)," she added.

Commuting couple

Tong commuted an hour in each direction for four years while attending Temple, taking advantage of the university's daycare center to care for her two young sons. She taught at Temple during the last two years of her graduate studies, especially during her final year when she taught two courses each semester in addition to writing her dissertation. Her husband has been doing all the commuting since Tong came to Williams upon receiving her doctorate eight years ago. He spends every other weekend, in addition to Winter Study Period and the three summer months, with the rest of the family in Williamstown. Their youngest son was only a year old when this separation began. "He's never known any other way to live," she commented, "He thinks it's normal."

Tong cites student interest as the main factor for her involvement in women's studies issues. She was not able to pursue women's studies during her own undergraduate career because,

(Bowers)

"There was no such creature at that time." Tong has noted a change in the students at Williams since she began teaching here in 1978. "Williams' student population was much more homogeneous," she said, "Today, Williams is definitely a more comfortable place for women to be."

This semester, Tong has teamed up with a colleague "from the other side of Route 2", chemistry's Professor Lawrence Kaplan, to teach a new course entitled "Genetic and Reproductive Technologies: A Scientific and Philosophical Overview."

Professor Tong obviously enjoys teaching, and her classes remain popular with students. "Feminist Thought is the most popular among students," noted Tong, "as well as being my favorite course to teach.

'Conduct of Life' riddled with problems

by Chuck Goforth

Last Thursday night, Cap and Bells brought the curtain up on its first production of 1986-87. Happily, the curtain came down again, and Currier ballroom is, once more, a really nice place to read. This production, which ran for three nights last week, was riddled with problems; some of the mistakes were so pervasive, that every scene, even the more active ones, inspired little more than another glance at the old watch.

The play itself is not a bad one. It was written by Marlea Irene Fornes, receiver of an Obie Award for Sustained Excellence in Theatre, and it is titled, "The Conduct of Life." Though she has lived in the U.S. for most of her life, Ms. Fornes was born in Havana. Many of her plays are actually set in Latin America, and she seems to share with other Latin American writers (Julio Cortazar and Cuban born Italo Calvino are two) a taste and distinct ability for the psychological and, sometimes, as illustrated by the talking mirror in her play, "The Office," even the fantastic. "The Conduct of Life" might be more on the realistic side, but these elements are not entirely lost.

The plot of "Conduct" simply put, well, cannot be simply put. The setting is "somewhere in Latin America," and it involves one particular family, whose home life has long since buckled under the stress and horror of war. The man of the family is a soldier, whose new job is the interrogation and torturing of enemy soldiers. He keeps a twelve year old girl in the basement of the house, whom he visits and rapes throughout the play. In the end, Oriando is shot by his wife. The girl has since become the second servant of the household, and will take the blame for the murder. The first servant stands by submissively.

Feminist angle

But the linear movement of the plot line is not the most important thing. The meat of the play is the chance this situation offers to view certain cycles of victimization, and, to quote Susan Sontag, to explore "the psychology of a torturer." There is also Fornes' feminist angle, and the important questions about the subservience of women.

The play runs about an hour, and within that time there are nineteen scenes. Their emphasis is on the quick and telling exposition of each characters' needs and wants.

Last week's production did not do justice to this play. Firstly, because there are so many little scenes, it is vital that both the director and the actors make clear specific choices about the objective of each one. Otherwise, and this is exactly what happened, the quick, sharp edged staccato is lost entirely. The director didn't make these choices and left the lights with no good reasons for all that going off and on.

The matter of choices was the big problem throughout. The very first choice, the choice of the play, is questionable. It is a credit to director Kristin Sziarto '88 that she is aware of and willing to try a play that is both fresh and representative of what theatre is up to these days (this play premiered in New York in 1985). But this particular play calls for three Latin men, two Latin women, and a twelve-year old girl. Now you say, that doesn't matter, that can be changed. True, but changes, especially major ones, require choices.

Necessary decisions

The environment of Latin America has a specific nature in this decade, one that we're all aware of at least to some degree. Do you keep the play in Latin America with caucasion actors? Or do you abandon location altogether? The decisions were never made. And the matter of age, even though it is an area in which allowances are made all the time in college theatre, must be dealt with. If the play calls for a wide variety of ages in the cast, and the cast available is all one age, that's a problem. The choice not to try to "play age" is one that should be made carefully. This production lost a great deal of impact when it entirely let go of the fact that Oriando is ten years younger than his wife, and the girl in the basement is only twelve. It seems that even if recognizable choices had been made in these areas, the options would not have been promising. For just that reason, the choice of this play seems questionable.

Another major problem was the utter loss of all the humor in the play. This play had funny stuff in it. Quick ping-pong conversations about avocados and luggage; the saavy servant Olimpia, and hidden one-liners, all were part of that. It was, in this production, mostly gone. Dorothy Lee, as the laconic and witty Olimpia, did have her funny moments, and so gave a dimension to her character.

Continued on Page 9

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight at 7:30, photograph and slide librarian Dustin Wees will present an informal gallery talk in conjunction the John Martin exhibition; at the Clark Art Institute.....Tomorrow at 3 p.m., a film entitled 'Winslow Homer: The Nature of the Artist," will be shown in the Clark's auditorium; the film will be shown again Thursday afternoon at 3:00.....Friday at 3 p.m., session one of the three-session, two-day conference entitled "Three Current Controversies in Renaissance Studies" will take place at the Clark; co-sponsored by the Clark and Williams College, parts two and three will be on Saturday at 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. respectively.....For music information, call the Concertline at 597-3146

in other IVORY TOWERS

Dartmouth

Dartmouth security guards had to use the freshman face book to identify the thirty students arrested for "rushing" the opposing team's stands during halftime of last week's football game. The age old tradition of "rushing" in which the entire freshman class runs to the top of the opposing team's stands and sings "Men of Dartmouth," was deemed "inappropriate" by school officials this past summer. All of those apprehended were fined 100 dollars. Many students thought this was an excessive penalty, and in response raised more than 360 dollars to help pay the fines.

More Dartmouth

Students at Dartmouth with late night munchies won't be able to get pizza delivered from "Everything But Anchovies" restaurant anymore. "EBA" delivery trucks have been banned from college roads due to their outrageous driving antics. The ban was put into effect after an incident in which an EBA driver maneuvered around a construction site and was arrested for speeding on a sidewalk. "Ironically," noted the Dartmouth student newspaper, "the incident occurred immediately after he had delivered pizza to the campus police."

Wesleyan

"The job of a nude model is not easy" — especially when it's you. One art course at Wesleyan requires "mandatory nude self-portraits." This requirement has received much criticism from students and parents, because it exposes students to many of the problems paid models encounter regularly. Paid nude models not only have to hold difficult poses for long periods of time but must also confront the sexual implications of their work. Despite the fact that most students are "not seeing the model as a sexual object," one female model was upset to discover that "students in her section (were) starring at her pussy." Nevertheless, nude modeling will continue at Wesleyan because both students and faculty agree that "the human body is beautiful."

RPI

Some engineers at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute spend their free time "standing in a meadow wrapped in string." Some students wondered if this behavior was part of a "physics experiment, fraternity prank, or even an avant-garde sculpture." But actually, the string-wrapped students were acting as giant fingers in their attempt to form "the world's largest human cat's cradle" as part of RPI's Professional Leadership Program. The exercise was designed to help the students learn about "cooperation, communication, and frustration" in order to provide them with "the skills they need to compete" in the real world.

Convocation Speakers

This past week, Dr. Benjamin Spock, noted pediatrician, spoke at Dartmouth on "the tensions American children face while growing up." Also at Dartmouth, "statesmen-industrialist" Sol Linowitz gave the Convocation keynote address, calling on academia to "help rid society of prejudice and ignorance." Yale University President Benno Schmidt Jr. spoke on "adherence to freedom of expression and academic freedom" in his inaugural address last Saturday. At Siena College, New York State Senator Olga Mendez lectured on "the experience of minorities in America" as part of the celebration of "National Hispanic Heritage Week."

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Jim Hartnett and Caroline Koeppel from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Town acts to halt river dumping

by F. Craig Gangi

The Williamstown Board of Selectmen, led by member and environmental studies professor Thomas Jorling, have protested the standards set for the Carol Cable Company's waste discharges into the Green River.

The selectmen sent a letter to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) two weeks ago charging that the agency's actions regarding Carol Cable's waste discharge in the river were "hardly environmental protection."

The company, located on Water Street in Williamstown, manufactures electrical cords. Water is used widely in the company's operations, and at the end of its course flows from the plant into the Green River, according to the EPA.

The selectmen are questioning the EPA's decision to issue a permit allowing the company to discharge waste water which, the EPA admits, is completely untreated.

In a draft permit, obtained by the Record, which will replace an expired permit issued in 1978, the EPA and the Massachusetts Division of Water Pollution Control set maximum limits for the temperature of all waste water discharged into the Green River, from their water fountains to their cooling tanks and "continuity test tanks."

The EPA set the temperature at 28.3 degrees Celsius (83 Fahrenheit) which, according to the selectmen's letter, "exceeds the state water quality limitations for a cold water fishery, which is 68 degrees F." The Green River is a Class B water body, a cold water fishery stocked with trout by the State Fish and Game Department, according to Jorling.

"Treasured asset"

"The river is a treasured natural asset in Williamstown, and we are working hard to protect and enhance it," reads the letter to the EPA, dated September 24, 1986.

As a possible solution to Carol Cable's waste water problems, the selectmen suggested having the company hooked up to a sewer collection system which runs along Water Street and leads to the Hoosic Water Waste Treatment plant. According to the selectmen's letter, all other companies both upstream and downstream of Carol Cable along the river have been hooked into the system. Carol Cable appeared unwilling to do this voluntarily, the letter said.

According to the EPA's draft permit, Carol Cable would continue to be allowed to dump 8.7 pounds of oil and grease into the river per day. This oil and grease would come from waste water used in the cooling process, according to the draft permit.

The cooling process involves coating and insulating each cable and then submerging it into a cooling bath, according to the permit. From there, the water is discharged untreated into the river, the permit said.

Shopkeeper spots slick

Sandy Kelly is the owner of the "Mountain Goat," a small shop next to Carol Cable. Kelly said that she and Town Manager Stephen Ledoux visited the river downstream from the plant on September 20.

"We saw a big slick coming out of a gulley, possibly coming out of a town sewer, but not necessarily from Carol Cable," said Kelly. They took a sample of the water from the river, which has since been sent to the Williamstown health inspector, Michael Muzyka, for analysis.

Both Ledoux and Muzyka were unavailable for comment at press time.

Kelly, expressing concern over the dumping, explained that "kids tube down the rapids (of the river) every day in the summer."

She asked, "should the police post the river until Carol Cable gets it together with their water purification system? I think it should be posted in every backyard." She was referring to signs warning residents of the dangers of bathing in the river.

James H. Reilly, general manager of the plant, declined comment when contacted Friday. The company also did not allow a reporter to visit the plant.

"History of spills"

The selectmen's letter, which Jorling said he wrote, accuses

Continued on Page 8

Boston University
WASHINGTON
INTERNSHIP PROGRAMS

- Interested in learning about—and working in—governmental and political affairs in Washington, D.C.? Juniors and Seniors with at least a 3.0 average are invited to apply for a one-semester, 16 credit learning experience in the nation's capital.
- Supervised internships based on your specific interests are arranged with members of Congress, Executive Branch agencies, media organizations, trade associations, public interest groups, corporate public affairs offices, and education associations.
- Seminars with leading government experts, supervised by Boston University faculty, focus on legislative and current policy issues.
- Scholarship assistance is available. The application deadline for the spring semester is October 27, 1986. For information and an application, complete and send the form below.

Please send information and an application for Boston University's Washington Internship Programs to:

Name
Telephone
Address
State Zip

Mail to:
Boston University
Washington Internship Programs
College of Liberal Arts
725 Commonwealth Avenue
Room 106
Boston, MA 02215

Boston University is an equal opportunity institution

Signal

Continued from Page 1

The possible installation of a light has been discussed for some time, and Amidon explained why it is only now being implemented. "We've been actively working on the design for a couple of years. Now we're ready to begin construction next year," Amidon said.

The signal light should be completed within a year, according to Amidon, who expects it to improve safety on other streets as well. "It is not only Cole Avenue that will be safer, but the lights will queue up traffic so you can get out of the other streets better, too," he said.

Jorling told the Record that the installation of the light was not related to the September 5 accident on Cole Avenue which killed Williams professor Richard Krouse. Krouse was killed when his car was struck by another vehicle as he was turning from Cole Avenue onto Prospect Street, according to the Berkshire Eagle. Jorling said that the light's installation "was independent of the kinds of circumstances that caused Dick's death."

Main Street (Route 2) runs through the center of the Williams campus, and the addition of a signal light "could very well affect the school situation," said Ransom Jenks, Director of Security.

"This is a thing that's long overdue," Jenks said. "There should be a break in the traffic on Main Street, which this will provide.

"You have to run"

"As it is now, you have to run. I don't think students should have to run across Main Street. I think it's an excellent thing — it will slow traffic down."

Jorling said he forsees some improvement in the situation for pedestrians. "The light should cause a pulsing of traffic in a westerly direction," said Jorling. "It shouldn't affect the easterly flow."

The question of additional safety for students crossing Main Street has inspired some talk in the past about the possibility of a college-built over- or under-pass for Main Street.

"I don't think it's really been discussed in at least three years," said David Westall, assistant director for Architectural Services of the college's buildings and grounds department.

Jenks agreed. "I don't know if it's possible. I think it would be a good solution to the problem if you could funnel all the people into that area (of the crossing), but they're going to cross the street where they want to. That may be the reason it was shelved."

Dox
Rt. 2, Williamstown
413-458-4420
APPLE • IBM
SOFTWARE
COMMODORE

— Cycling Clothes & Accessories —
cannondale
BICYCLES
ON SALE
15% OFF
MORE THAN A BIKE SHOP
THE SPOKE
408 Main St. 458-3456

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
$19.95
TENSEGRITOY
76 SPRING STREET · WILLIAMSTOWN
MONDAY · SATURDAY 9 am · 9 pm
SUNDAY 10-5
Telephone (413) 458-5007

A NEW WAY
TO CHANGE OLD PATTERNS.

125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
802-447-2648
122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576
49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585
With daring
"checkerboard" colouring.
And the most wonderfully wispy,
ragged cut yet.
We make the difference between ok and extraordinary.
We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary!
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER. 1985 SEBASTIAN INTERNATIONAL, INC. Woodland Hills, CA
Artistic Center is a trademark of Sebastian International.

20 students travel to D.C. protest

by Allison Wertheim

"Our students participated very enthusiastically" in last week's National March on Washington, said college chaplain Reverend Carol Pepper. Twenty students made the trip, sponsored by the Chaplain's Office.

The march was designed to focus attention upon government policies concerning South Africa, Nicaragua, the sanctuary movement and homelessness in America, Pepper said.

Before the trip began, Pepper said she was excited about the group because she felt it was comprised of very different types of people who had different political experiences. Pepper herself expressed particular concern for the situation in Nicaragua, after spending the summer there.

"It is so easy for people not to care," she said, expressing special encouragement from the students' participation.

The march began the morning of Sunday September 28, starting in Washington's Thomas Circle and ending at the Lincoln Memorial. Speakers included refugees from Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala, as well as leaders of national peace and solidarity movements. According to Pepper, music, street theatre and mime also added to what she called a "beautiful march."

The marchers numbered between 3000 and 5000, and they included people of varying social classes and ages, Pepper said.

Few students

John Gillen '88 was surprised by the small number of students at the march. "The majority of the marchers were middle-aged adults and senior citizens," he said.

Having never been to a march of this sort, he said, he was struck with the difference between this group and the groups he believed would have attended such an event in the 1960's. He said the marchers included many "patriotic Americans" who opposed the nation's policies.

David Diamond '89 was equally impressed by the marchers. He explained that cardboard crosses and tombstones bearing actual names of people killed in Central America were distributed at the beginning of the march, a step he described as "very symbolic." He also spoke of numerous banners raised during the march, bearing statements such as "Boycott South Africa — not Nicaragua."

Williams students had a variety of reasons for attending the

Continued on Page 8

ACSR reaction

Continued from Page 1

attempting to sell their South African operations would "cut their deals" with white, not black, South Africans.

Wood distributed drafts of the letter that will be sent to each of the 30 companies conducting business in South Africa in which Williams holds stock. The letters expressed sadness over the fact that Williams, as a result of the worsening situation in South Africa, will now be pursuing a policy of disinvestment advocacy and will support appropriate shareholder resolutions in the spring.

Alberti questioned the effectiveness of both the shareholder responsibility movement and of the ACSR. "The position of the finance committee is naive ... the companies are trying to get out anyway."

The committee's student members, Canty and Sharon Burke '88, reluctantly accepted the policy. Canty said he was "saddened by (the finance committee's) decision and developments in South Africa over the summer."

The committee also proposed inviting speakers to address the issue on campus, possibly in late October or January. The names suggested included U.S. Senators Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), and John Kerry (D-Mass.).

Williams said that the policy is "a step in the right direction" but that the means of implementation "is a time-buying, face-saving gesture."

"I think that the reaction of (WAAC) to the ACSR meeting was one tantamount to disbelief," Williams said.

Log senior night proposed

by Meredith Miller

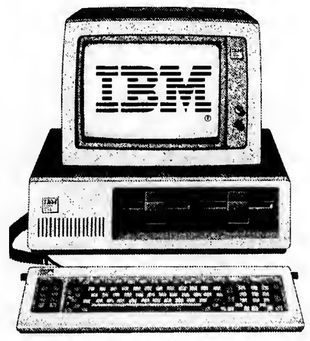
The College Council approved a proposal to institute a "Senior Night" at the Log during its meeting last Thursday. It also voted to recommend to the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) that renewal of Row House dining be dropped.

The proposal to create a "Senior Night" at the Log passed the council easily. The council voted unanimously in favor of suggesting to the deans and to Food Service that a cold tap be provided once a week, and that on that night only those of legal drinking age be admitted to the Log. At present, the campus pub only serves beer in cans and bottles.

"I'd love to get pitchers in there even one night," said College Council Treasurer Alec Dawson '87. "That would set a valuable precedent."

College Council Vice President Suzanne Biemiller '87 said that the move might sound self-serving on the part of the seniors on the council who brought up the idea. But she reminded underclassmen that they, too, would eventually benefit from the proposed tap night. The younger members, apparently heeding the advice of John Cloiek '87 that they "build for the future," did not voice any displeasure with the proposal.

The council again discussed the possible reinstitution of Row House dining. There was little support on the council for the suggestion, initiated by CUL chairman William Wagner, that the feasibility of Row House dining be investigated.



Chandler supported

The Row House kitchens were shut down in 1981, in order to save an estimated $60,000 to $100,000 a year, Jeffress said. She said that former college president John Chandler and several alumni had contacted Wagner to express support for reinstituting the service.

At Thursday's meeting, Row House representatives agreed that house unity, supposedly damaged in 1981 when dining service was discontinued, had ceased to be an issue. "A-Gar-Wood is all spit up, but I don't know, maybe that's the way they like it," said representative Coleman Yeaw '87. The fear that the small dining areas would isolate house members from the larger community concerned representatives much more than potential house unity.

Although no council members strongly defended Row House dining, some asked that the matter be explored more thoroughly. Martin White '87 said he was attracted by the possible improvement in student-faculty relations. Students would be more likely to invite professors to meals, he said, if "you could have an intimate space where people could talk."

In other council business, Jeffress announced that a meatless meal would be instituted once a month in Mission Park and Dodd House dining halls, starting Wednesday, October 22.

Real deal.

The IBM Personal Computer.
Now you can get a real IBM PC at a real savings.
$1,137.00 Plus tax and shipping
(Standard IBM PC and Monochrome Monitor Package with DOS 3.2 and Asynch Adapter)
For information and ordering contact
the Williams College Technical coordinator,
Cheryl Brewer, Jesup Computer Center, 597-2724;
or stop by the IBM PC Fair, Jesup Computer Center;
Wednesday, October 8th; 11:00 a.m. — 6:00 p.m.;
Thursday, October 9th, 9:00 a.m. — 2:00 p.m.

Protest

Continued from Page 7

march. "These are issues that need to be spoken out for," said Gillen, who explained his interest in social justice influenced his decision to participate.

"Gratifying"

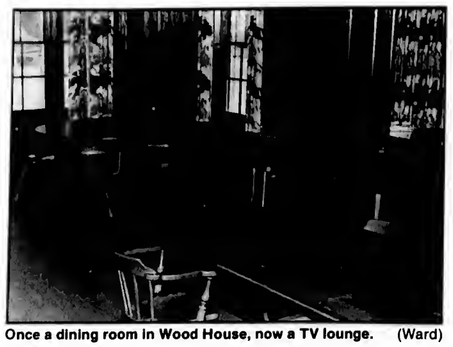
Martin White '87 explained that marches provided him with a forum to protest for his beliefs. He said marches of this scale cannot effect policy, but sees these movements as "personally gratifying."

White said the importance of the march was in its ability to "focus the issue and keep it in the general conciousness of the press and of Congress." He also stressed the crucial part he feels activists play in initiating change.

"I was convinced of the integrity of these people," said Gillen, speaking of the marchers and the speakers. "I feel I've done my part as an American and as a person who is able to speak out for people who aren't able to speak for themselves." He also argued his belief that it is important for a person to be able to protest against one's own country and that this should not preclude an individual from being considered patriotic.

Pepper said her next project involves a "juice fast" to stress the urgent need for change in administration policy in Central America. It will involve students drinking only juice for one day each week as an expression of solidarity with a water fast which several people are undergoing in Washington as a protest against Central American policy.

CUL



Continued from Page 4

have in the dining halls. In fact, you probably wouldn't want to," she commented.

Security fund

Mary Petersen '87 proposed on behalf of the party policy subcommittee that a fund derived from the house maintenance tax be used to provide each housing unit with a certain amount of hours worth of security for which the house would not have to pay. She explained that because security guards have different rates per hour, ranging from $8.80 to $14.40, some houses must pay more than others for security at a party. With the fund, she said, house presidents will not hesitate to arrange for security.

Hart Murphy '88 introduced the problem of faculty advising of students on all levels, stating, "There's a sense of dissatisfaction in the formal roles faculty have in their roles with students. The faculty feel informal roles) don't develop into relationships. Yet, those roles are necessary for the students."

Once a dining room in Wood House, now a TV lounge. (Ward)

Murphy said there is a need for continuity in advising between the freshman and sophomore years and mentioned what he termed "the lunch problem" — the degree of comfort or discomfort students feel in initiating social relationships with faculty.

In response to the question of how freshmen can be matched with faculty advisors with whom they would be more likely to develop a relationship, assistant professor of biology Marsha Altschuler suggested that when freshmen preregister they indicate three departments from which they would like an advisor.

The co-op subcommittee concluded the meeting by presenting findings from its examiniation of the college's co-op housing system. The CUL agreed that co-op housing is a valuable part of the residential system, but that the selection process for them needs to be examined.

"I received the impression that there are people who wanted actually to live cooperatively who didn't get in, and there are people who just wanted to live somewhere else who did get in," Wagner said. The next step, he said, is for the CUL to put down in writing its support for the co-ops and then begin to examine the selection process.

River

Continued from Page 6

the company of having a history of oil spills, including one this spring. Attacking the EPA, the letter goes on to allege that the selectmen "do not belive the draft permit carries out the mandate of the Clean Water Act to protect and enhance water quality and to move towards elimination of the discharge."

In response to the EPA's allowance of an 8.7 pound discharge, the letter accuses the federal agency of "turning environmental regulation on its head."

The selectmen's letter, in commenting on the permit, says "We are especially troubled by statements ... to the effect that the waste water is 'relatively clean and does not contain pollutants in significant amounts to warrant stringent regulations.'"

In its statement about the "relatively clean" water, the EPA referred to water from self-contained boiler systems, not to the water from the other systems such as the cooling tanks, which the draft acknowledges as being filled with oil and grease.

According to the September 24 Advocate, Carol Cable has since sent a letter to the selectmen advising them of the company's intention to spend $250,000 to develop a recirculating cooling process, in which no water at all would be dumped in the river.

Harvard Business School

MBA Program

An informal information session for prospective applicants, hosted by a representative of the Admissions Board, will be held on October 23.

For details, please contact Office of Career Counseling.

Harvard Business School is committed to the principle of equal educational opportunity.

Gateway to London and Beyond

ITHACA COLLEGE

London Center

■ SEMESTER OR YEAR PROGRAM
■ ITHACA COLLEGE CREDIT
■ BRITISH FACULTY

Learn about British and European cultures through courses in literature, history, business, music, sociology, communications, politics, and much more. Special program offered in Drama. Internships available to qualified students in international business, social services, communications, political science, and economics.

Visits to the theatre, museums, galleries, schools, social and political institutions are an integral part of the curriculum.

For further information write:
International Programs -SP
Ithaca College, Ithaca, New York 14850

THE PASSION OF AYN RAND
A BIOGRAPHY BY BARBARA BRANDEN

"Ayn Rand's eyes haunted me through nineteen years. Perhaps they haunt me still."
Out of those years of intimate friendship and professional association, Barbara Branden has produced a landmark: the first major biography of one of the most controversial and enigmatic literary figures of the twentieth century.
"A fascinating insight into one of the most thoughtful authors of this century."
—Alan Greenspan
DOUBLEDAY

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!

Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

No. Adams
Eagle St.
664-4134
664-6889

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Taking 2 of 3

Lady ruggers scrum with Albany

by Steph Jacon

All three sides of the women's rugby team faced worthy opponents Saturday on soggy Cole Field. Albany Women's Club faced off against the A and C sides as the killer B's battled MIT.

The A ruggers faced opponents who were noticeably older and larger than the Williams' 15. The Albany women used good ball handling and strategic kicking to advance up to the Ephs' try zone in the opening minutes of the match.

This initial scoring threat was contained by a bruising tackle from Haley Clifford '87. The reliable Mary Petersen '87 then booted the ball deep into Albany territory, but the game's first score came as the tenacious Albany women advanced the ball again with aggressive mauling and devastating break-throughs on line-outs. The Albany scrum then pushed the ball down and scored a hard-fought try.

Scrum action dominated the remainder of the first half. Mary Petersen converted a penalty kick outside the 22-meter line to complete the first half scoring at 4-3.

Albany broke open the scoring in the second half, converting several alert weak side runs from five meter scrums, resulting in two trys. Despite the final score of 18-3, there was some excellent play by the Lady Eph ruggers: scrummies Katie Gerber '88, Sonja Legnick '88 and Kerry Cullen '87 all played with great abandon in the scrum.

The killer B's upped their record to 2-0 with a hard fought 6-0 victory over a motley band of MIT women. As in the A-side contest, the game was played primarily in the scrum. However, in this contest, the Ephs consistently dominated play as they were constantly inside their opponents 22 meter line. Kerry Kilander '89 continued her scoring streak by scoring the game's only try early in the first half, providing the necessary margin of victory.

Scrum action never ceased during the match with Julie Norton '89 and Amy Asadourian '88 continually ripping MIT hands off the ball in mauls. The entire white pack's intensity was the key to victiory.

The C-side battle was unfair from the start as the Albany women strategically placed some of their A ruggers into the match. The stacked lineup ran away with the game, simply over matching the valiant lady ruggers. The final score was 18-0. Strong play was registered by Jody Skidd '88, who had several excellent pop kicks and by Shannon Brennan '89, who played admirably with low, effective tackles and aggressive break throughs on line-outs.

Ruggers 2nd at Berkshire

by Sean Brennan

The White Dogs of the men's rugby club sent two sides to Pittsfield on Saturday to participate in the annual Berkshire Rugby fest, and spent the day wallowing of the flooded fields while getting a taste of both victory and defeat.

The A-side did battle first against North Adams, displaying their fast and loose line play as senior Mark Tompkins brought in the initial try. Seniors Steve Patterson and Gary Sheff and junior Mike Goldstein also put the ball in for tries, and David Katz '89 went in for two. With three conversions and solid play from Tom Connally, the first game was won 30-4.

The other Eph side — the A-primes — went into their first match of the day and were involved in a deep-sea battle which saw a large Springfield club score sixteen points. But the A-primes, led by strong play from juniors Chris Swindell and Tom Higgins, held their own and kept the second half scoreless.

A long run by Tompkins gave Williams the lead against the Berkshire men's club in the A-side's second game. He dished the ball to classmate Steve Patterson for the try. With Connally's conversion, the White Dogs took the lead by 6-0.

The team eventually won 6-4, while the A-primes fell by 12-4 to the Mad Dog rugby club.

After two tough games, the A-side hit the pitch for the championship game for the tourney. The same Springfield club that defeated the A-primes was the opponent. Given physical rugby and an extremely tolerant referee, the match was a battering one, but the Ephs' loose line play kept them in the lead most of the game, as both Tompkins and Patterson went in for tries.

Springfield never let up, however, and in the tail end of the game took the lead at 14-8 with a final try and conversion. The last five minutes of the game, but could not put together a scoring drive. It was a disheartening loss for the Ephs as they left for home.

The B- and C-sides stayed home this weekend to fight it out against Northeastern's first two sides. The Killer B's played a tough game against a massive squad, but the first half saw three tries against the White Dogs, setting the final score at 14-0. The C-side fell 4-0 in a similar fashion.

Theatre

Continued from Page 5

These problems might not be exclusively the fault of the director. It was plain that the lead actors were not ready to take on the emotional life and complex mix of motivations that their roles called for. Mark Barr '88, as Orlando the husband, shied away from the immense inner strife that his character obviously suffered from, and played only a rigid, slightly edgy exterior that said nothing about the man's problems. It should be said that the role is not an easy one by any means. In fact, after this review, it should be said that nothing about this play is easy, and on the parts of both the director and the actors, it took real guts to try it.

More Goodies Cafe

Hamburger Special
$1.25 reg. $2.00
Present this coupon
Mon.-Thurs. 4-7 p.m.
51 Spring Street, Williamstown
Store Hours: Sun. - Thurs. 8 a.m. - 8 p.m.
Fri. - Sat. 8 a.m. - 9 p.m.
breakfast — lunch — dinner
ice cream — desserts — ice cream cakes

Put your degree to work where it can do a world of good.

Your first job after graduation should offer you more than just a paycheck. We can offer you an experience that lasts a lifetime.

Working together with people in a different culture is something you'll never forget. It's a learning experience everyone can benefit from.

In Science or Engineering, Education, Agriculture, or Health, Peace Corps projects in developing countries around the world are bringing help where it's needed.

OCTOBER 8
Information Booth - 10:00 - 4:00, Baxter Hall.
Film/Info Session - 7:00 p.m. Career Counseling Office.

OCTOBER 9
Senior Interviews - 9:00 - 5:00, Career Counseling Office

The toughest job you'll ever love
PEACE CORPS

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est 1968 Betsy Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

Come see our fine selection of books, including

Largest Literature Section in the Tri-State Area from Achebbe to Zola classic to modern literature for every taste

Come visit us soon.

Open from 8:30 a.m. - 9 p.m.
Sunday 10-5
Located next to THE LOG

If you would like to find out more about the Williams - Mystic Program
Please join us for an illustrated talk
Wednesday, 29 October, Noon
Gibsom Room - Dodd House or See Assistant Dean Sheila Spear

Fall or Spring Semester

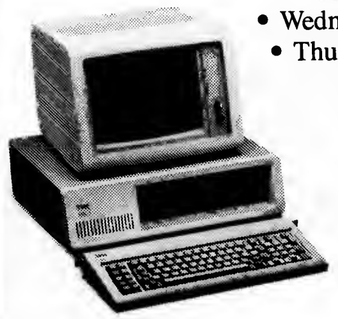
AMERICAN MARITIME STUDIES

Accredited by
WILLIAMS COLLEGE
Taught at
MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM

☐ Ecology ☐ American Studies
☐ Economics ☐ Public Policy
☐ Biology ☐ Oceanography
☐ History ☐ Off-Shore Research
☐ Literature

The Williams Mystic Program offers you a challenging opportunity to learn in a number of real studies-oriented relationship with the ... Affiliation with ... outstanding materials, collections and library ... and equipment ... laboratories ... and diverse coastal environment. You can ... Williams College courses in history, literature, oceanography, ... and marine policy. You can also develop your own program ... for ... seasonal institutions, including boat building, maritime ... sailing ... and liberal studies. You spend ten days offshore with the school's ... in coastal and ocean research and sailing ... aboard ... sailing vessel. The oceanographic ... of the Museum, Mystic ... raised marine habitat, and the companionship of like-minded ... exist in the real ... as a background setting for maritime studies.

WILLIAMS-MYSTIC PROGRAM • MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM, INC. • MYSTIC, CONNECTICUT 06355 • (203) 572-0711 Ext. 359

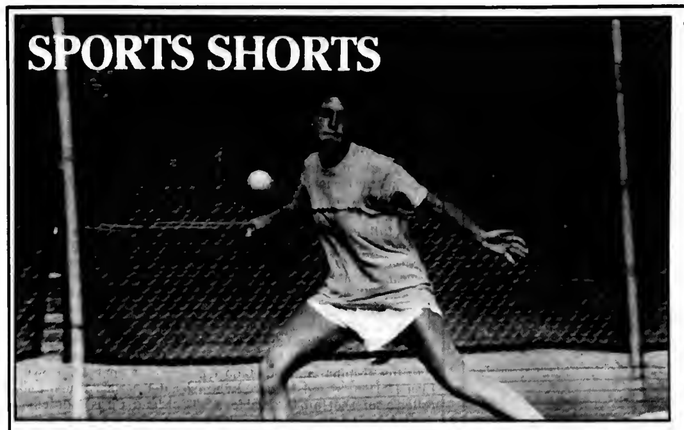


Getting comfortable with an IBM PC now can put you in a good position later.

See the IBM PC and the Rest of the Family at the:

WILLIAMS COLLEGE PERSONAL COMPUTER FAIR

JESUP COMPUTER CENTER
- Wednesday, October 8th; 11:00 a.m. — 6:00 p.m.
- Thursday, October 9th; 9:00 a.m. — 2:00 p.m.



WIN AN IBM PC!

Come and enter your name
in the PC drawing,
Open to all students, faculty and staff.
Drawing will be held October 9, 1986
at 2:00 p.m.

SPORTS SHORTS

Water polo

The water polo team improved its record to 2-4 last week with two wins over RPI and Rhode Island. Wednesday, playing in the home water of Muir Pool, the Ephs sank RPI 11-7, though the game was not as close as the score indicates.

The Ephs jumped out to a 9-3 lead at the half, and then held on for the win with most of the starters on the bench. Dave Dudley '89, Adam Ifshin '87, Jim Jordan '87, and sophomore Dave Canter '89 had two goals each to lead a balanced scoring attack.

On Friday night, a large home crowd looked on as Williams battled Amherst, who had defeated the Ephs 12-8 two weeks earlier. The Lord Jeffs took an early 2-0 lead, which they never relinquished despite intense play from the Ephmen. Five times in the game, Williams pulled within one goal, only to be denied by an Amherst response.

With under 30 seconds to go, trailing 7-6, Eph co-captain John Cook '88 caught a breakaway pass on the left wing, and the crowd came to their feet as he was isolated on-on-one with the Amherst goalie Joe Kline. However, Cook's shot at the lower left corner of the cage was smothered by Kline, and Amherst had sealed the victory.

The next morning, drained by the loss to Amherst, yet buoyed by a victory in the post-game boat races, the hardy Ephs regrouped to defeat URI 15-4. Andy Kaplinsky '90 had four goals, leading a pack of ten different players who pumped in at least one goal.

The B-team was also successful over the weekend, defeating Amherst 9-4, and tying URI 9-9 in OT. Dan Snyder '90 scored six goals in the two games to lead the squad. The Eph swimmers will next take to the waters against Hotchkiss, tomorrow at 4:15 in the Muir Pool.

- Jim Jordan

Women runners

Paced by the strong running of senior Becky Conklin, who finished fifth individually, the women's cross country team sprinted to a third place finish last weekend at the Mount Holyoke Invitational in South Hadley, Mass. Smith was the team winner with 21 points, followed by Trinity in second with 41. The Lady Ephs rounded out the top three with 73 points, 37 points ahead of fourth place Mt. Holyoke, and a whopping 86 ahead of last place Amherst.

After Conklin, senior Kate Pugh turned in an impressive performance, taking 13th in a time of 20:43. Sophomore Anne Thompson, junior Anne Knott, and sophomore Cathy Cocks followed, finishing up the Lady Ephs' scoring effort.

Conklin, who turned in a time of 19:58, will travel along with the team to Medford, Mass. this coming Saturday to compete in the NESCAC meet at Bates. Having lost to six NESCAC teams already this year, the squad will be looking to finish in the top seven.

Men runners

The cross-country team trounced Trinity and North Adams last Friday on a wet and muddy course. Williams finished with 18 points as they completely dominated the race. Trinity and North Adams finished far back with 54 and 58 points, respectively.

The race conditions made navigating the course extremely tough, and many falls were taken as a result. Perhaps the most spectacular of these was by Gil McCabe '89, who fell off the side of a slippery foot bridge and into a small creek below it. McCabe was up immediately after the fall, however, and charged up Varsity Hill.

The race was won by Mike Coyne '87, who ran ahead of the field to finish in an excellent time of 26:57. Gilrain took second in 27:16, just ahead of a muddy McCabe, who was timed in 27:17. Senior Dave Prockop ran a strong race to place fifth overall in 27:30, and Dave Glendon '88 completed the scoring by taking seventh in 28:17. The Ephmen's front five looked strong, an encouraging sign after disappointing team performances the last two weeks.

- Steve Brody

Field hockey

Setting their record at 5-2, the field hockey team fell to Trinity on Saturday in overtime by a 2-1 count.

After Trinity jumped out to an early lead, freshman Amy Kershaw tied the game for the Lady Ephs by firing the ball into the net at 15:56 of the first half. Lisa Tenerowicz picked up the assist, setting the halftime score at one-all.

The second half was scoreless, and the two teams went to a ten-minute overtime period. Williams had four shots on goal in that period, as did the Bantams. But with 25 seconds left in that overtime period, Trinity's Jennifer Brewster scored to finalize the score at 2-1.

"Trinity was by far the best team we've played so far," said coach Chris Larson-Mason. "We played an aggressive game,and we were able to dominate a lot of the offensive action. But we weren't strong enough in the Trinity goal area.

The Ephwomen had started the week by splitting two games, a 4-0 destruction of Mt. Holyoke and a 2-0 loss to Middlebury. Four different players scored in the Mt. Holyoke game, while the Ephwomen could muster no consistent attack in the Middlebury game.

The Ephs travel to Union on Thursday in an attempt to get back on the winning track.

- Lee Wierdsma

Golf

Last Monday and Tuesday the golf team went to the New Englands at the New Seabury Country Club; despite a first round wind-hindered score of 335, the linksters stormed back to a second-place finish on the next day with a 306 to finish with an overall score of 641.

Although Williams and Amherst both finished with a 641, the Ephs were ranked ahead thanks to the tiebreaking formula which gives victory to the team with the better fifth score on the second day.

According to Sophomore Tim Frechette,who led the second day's charge with a 70, the team was "disappointed with our first round but we came back pretty well." The comeback was highlighted by the performances of both Tim Frechette and Sophomore John Lapey, who shot a 72.

The team's overall performance was good enough to give them an eighth place finish against the field of 39 which included several Division I and II schools. Salem St., which finished with a score of 628, came in first in Williams' division.

- Chuck Samuelson

Tennis

On Saturday the tennis team fell to Trinity in a match that went down to the wire. The Bantams edged Williams, 5-4, bringing the team's record to 2-4.

Number two player Amy Davidson '90 and number four Missy Crouchley '89 took the only two singles victories of the day. Davidson kept alive her undefeated record as she swept Patti Neuman in straight sets, 6-3, 6-3. Crouchley had a little more difficulty with Margret Driscol who extended Crouchley to a tiebreaker. Winning the tiebreaker, 7-4, Crouchley quickly put the match away, 6-1, in the second set.

Davidson and Crouchley combined their efforts in the number one doubles spot to defeat their opponents, Chris Sonden and Patti Neuman. The Davidson-Crouchley team needed three sets to win, 4-6, 6-1, 6-3. Also winning in doubles were seniors Katie Kerr and Liz Kellison who won an easy straight set victory. Coach Sean Sloane was pleased with the team's performance despite the loss, "It was an excellent match. We just came out on the wrong side."

The Lady Ephs also fell to a strong Middlebury squad by a score of 6-3 on Wednesday of last week. The Middlebury team extended their undefeated record to 6-0 with its victory over Williams. Once again, Davidson and Crouchley played outstanding tennis as they chalked up the only victories for Williams. Winning their singles' matches, the pair teamed up to take one of the doubles' matches.

The team squares off against North Adams today and Union on Thursday. Both matches are away.

- Megan McNeill

Volleyball takes Conn. College tourney

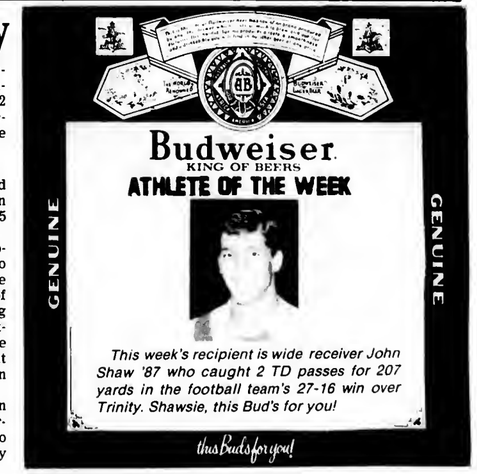
by Marc McDermott

The women's volleyball team extended its unbeaten streak to thirteen games this week by taking the Connecticut College Tourney this Saturday. The Lady Ephs dominated their opponents, winning their first four matches by a combined score of 120-29.

The Ephs did not lose a game in the tournament's opening round robin. While using its superior bench to stay well rested, the Ephwomen plowed through Albertus Magnus, host Connecticut College, and Colby Sawyer, never once giving up more than seven points in a game.

Coach Nancy Roberts expected a tougher time in the semi-finals against a reputably strong Trinity squad, but the Ephwomen laid her fears to rest by sailing past the Bantams in two games, 15-4, 15-3.

The Ephwomen continued to be overpowering in the finals, where they met Roger Williams College. Using tight defense and strong teamwork, the Ephs jumped to an early lead in the first game of the best of three series. Five different Ephwomen launched powerful kills in Williams' 15-6 opening victory.



Roger Williams refused to be another easy victom, however, and capitalized on a lapse of concentration by the Lady Ephs to jump to a quick 7-2 lead in the second game. Williams could not recover from the deficit and lost 15-8, causing the match to go to a deciding third game.

Third-game victory

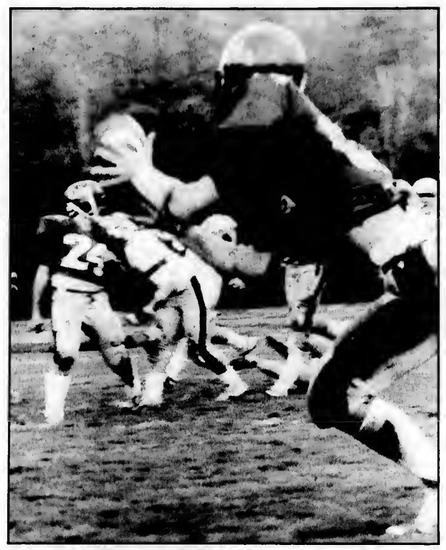
The Ephs refused to collapse and rallied behind the strong serving of junior Laura Wefing and an awesome offense to put away Roger Williams 15-5 and seal first place.

Senior co-captains Becky Moehring and Caroline Teer both stressed teamwork as the key to Williams recent success. "Everyone came together to play real well, and there was alot of support from the bench.," said Teer. Moehring singled out freshman Shelly Wheipton for her outstanding play and expressed satisfaction at the team's use of newly learned skills, saying that they may point toward continued improvement in the future.

The Ephs play A.I.C. away this Wednesday in preparation for this weekend's Little Three tournament at Wesleyan. Williams has lost only two games in its last thirteen matches and the Lady Ephs' record now stands at sparkling 15-4.

Ephs now 2-1 after beating Trinity by 11

by Mark Via



Behind the strong passing arm of sophomore quarterback Scott Kennedy and two TD catches by senior split end John Shaw, the football team beat Trinity on Saturday by a 27-16 count.

Freshman running back Todd Strieter broke a 7-7 tie at the end of the fourth quarter with a one-yard touchdown plunge, and the Ephmen were in control for the rest of the contest. Williams struck for two more scores before time expired, including a 86-yard touchdown strike to Shaw. Shaw finished the game with five catches for 207 yards and the two touchdowns, giving him five scores in only three games on the year.

Strieter's first touchdown came after sophomore defensive back Dave Clawson '89 blocked a Trinity punt, giving the Ephs the ball on the 30-yard line. Clawson also had an interception in the fourth quarter, which led seven plays later to another Strieter touchdown drive.

Despite the Ephs' decisive victory, Trinity seemed to be very much in the game in the first half. On their very first possession, the Bantams drove 54 yards behind senior quarterback Dan Tighe. Senior halfback Ted Shannon pulled in a 13-yard dart from Tighe with only a little over five minutes gone in the game to put Trinity up 7-0. The Eph defense then clamped down behind the hard hitting of linebackers Dan McCarthy '87 and Rick Fearon '88 and did not allow another first down until the third quarter.

Meanwhile, Kennedy and Shaw brought the Ephmen right back into the contest. Halfway through the second quarter, Shaw beat his man on a post pattern and with Kennedy's perfect lob tucked neatly away raced 65 yards to tie the game. Kennedy on the day completed 12 out of 17 passes for 283 yards and the two touchdowns.

Looking the ball all the way into his hands, an Eph receiver gets set to grab a pass during the team's 27-16 shellacking of Trinity on Saturday. (Camp)

Defense turns game around

The Eph defense was responsible for turning the game around in the third quarter. It killed one Bantam drive at their own eight-yard line, stuffing the Trinity runner for no gain on fourth and one. It was during Trinity's next possession that Clawson blocked the punt, leading directly to Strieter's game-breaking touchdown.

Trinity moved to within 14-10 in the fourth period with a 32-yard Tim Jensen field goal, but the Ephs scored on each of their next two possessions to put the game out of reach. Shaw's 86-yard grab for paydirt and Strieter's second one-yard score, following Clawson's interception, put the score at 27-10.

The Williams defensive front, led by senior captain Brian Nixon and sophomore Dave Montgomery, looked particularly commanding in the game, forcing the interception and sacking Tighe six times. Most of the running load for the Ephs on offense was borne by freshmen Strieter and Neal Chesley, the starting halfback who was knocked out of the game in the third quarter. These two combined for 38 carries and 123 yards.

Madore leads Ephwomen to 5-0 ripping of Bantams

by Stewart Verdery

Tasting both sides of blowout games, the women's soccer squad split a pair of games last week to run their record to 5-2. On Tuesday the Ephs were dominated by the University of Hartford 3-0, but the team struck back Saturday by thrashing Trinity 5-0.

The Ephs took control of Saturday's contest against Trinity early, tallying four goals in the opening 26 minutes. Leading the offensive attack was co-captain Gigi Madore '87, who turned in a spectacular half, scoring once and tying a school record by assisting the three other goals.

Lisa Phillips '88 was the first recipient of Madore's passing magic. The sophomore took the captain's diagonal pass about ten yards out and beat the goalkeeper into the right side of the goal. Madore's second assist was converted by Lori Schaen '89, whose shot again blew by the left side of the Bantam keeper

At the 21-minute mark, Madore picked up a goal of her own. Lisa Dorion '87 fed Madore, who executed a sharp turn and rolled a soft shot into the goal for a 3-0 Eph lead. Chris Boddicker '88 finished up the onslaught with her seventh goal, driving in a Madore pass.

Holding off Trinity

Trinity was able to mount attacks, frequently pushing the ball deep into the Eph side of the field. However, the visitors could not finish off their opportunites, often falling victim to the long clearing kicks of Amy Duncombe '89. Goalie Joyce Rogers '88 made a great save on a Bantam corner kick, leaping high in the air to frustrate an attempted head ball. Later, the junior stopped a one-on-one try by deflecting the Trinity shot with her feet.

After intermission, the offense slowed down, adding a single goal by Lynne Brenner '90. The defensive intensity never wavered behind the unit of Duncombe, Kim Hatch '88, Amy Barstad '87, and co-captain Anne Gilbert '87. Raquell Holmes '90 replaced Rogers in the net and closed out the shutout. The final whistle blew with a 5-0 Williams victory.

"Passing and moving the ball well" was the key offensively, according to Coach Lisa Melendy. She noted that it was "gratifying to have had five different players score" in one game, as the team had been relying heavily on the offensive outputs of Boddicker and Schaen.

The week's other contest saw the Ephs thoroughly beaten by Hartford, ranked sixth in New England in Division I. The visitors picked up a goal by Karen Schiebe in the first half and two more after the half, firing 35 shots at Eph goalie Rogers; however, she allowed only three goals. However, the Ephs could only manage one shot from within 18 yards, failing 3-0.

Coach Melendy expected that the Ephs would remain close to their previous rankings when the new polls came out today. Last week, the squad was picked 5th in New England. In addition, an independent poll this week ranked the Lady Ephs 15th in the nation.

Tommorrow the Ephs host Albany on Cole Field. Then on Saturday, Williams will travel to Springfield to take on Amherst in their annual meeting.

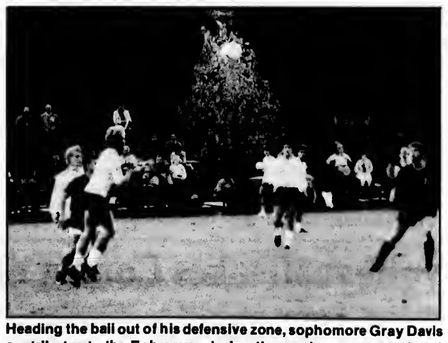
Brooks scores 2

Soccer squad tops Trinity by 4-1

by Greg Leeds

Freshman Doug Brooks had two goals and an assist as the men's soccer team decisively defeated Trinity on Saturday. Earlier in the week the team fought a tough match with North Adams and tied 1-1 in their third overtime game of the season.

Williams outshot Trinity 25-14 in a strong effort, an impressive stat considering the injuries striking the Eph squad. Trinity, 4-2 coming into the game, was unable to match Williams' intensity as the match started and were quickly put on the defensive. 17:30 into the half Scott Walker '87 fed Brooks a pass to the middle, and Brooks took it straight through the heart of the defense and pounded a shot past the goalkeeper.



Freshman Amy Kershaw scored a goal for the field hockey team on Saturday, and here she looks to take the ball from a Trinity opponent. For the details of the team's 2-1 loss, see story on P. 11. (Albright)

Co-captain Denny Wright '87 scored ten minutes later on a cross from Kurt Schroeder '88, putting in an uncontested shot right in front of the goal. With Wright assisting, Brooks put in his second goal at 34:38 to make it 3-0 by halftime.

Masters caps scoring

The Ephmen came out strong in the second half and scored again after just 30 seconds of play. Brooks crossed the ball to Mike Masters '89, who beat the astonished goalkeeper with a soft shot which casually found its way into the far corner of the net.

Trinity's Peter Voudouris spoiled the possibility of a shutout for Rob Bianck '89, hitting in a shot which bounced off several players before looping into the goal halfway through the period.

Heading the ball out of his defensive zone, sophomore Gray Davis contributes to the Eph cause during the men's soccer team's 4-1 win over Trinity this weekend. (Albright)

Most notable in the victory were the solid performances of Brooks, Wright, Walker, and defensively, Helge Weiner '87 and Rob Swann '90, who filled in for injured starter Mike Morris '88. In fact, with injuries nagging most of the starters — Morris, Masters, Wright, Walker, Dan Calichman '90 and co-captain Jon Deveaux '87 — the backup squad proved themselves very capable in holding off Trinity late in the game.

Battle with NASC

On Wednesday the Ephmen fought a tough North Adams team to a 1-1 draw. Walker scored early in the game with Nikolai Nachamkin '88 assisting. The efforts of Walker, Brooks, and Schroeder were most noteworthy. Eleven minutes into the second half, North Adams' Bassem Maher scored unassisted with a well-placed drive to the far upper corner. Brad Bryan '87 had a fine game in goal in turning away the Mowhawks — the first team to outshoot the Ephs this season.

Coach Mike Russo said "The game was a very emotional, intense one, and very direct, fast-paced." It was also overly physical, as 29 fouls were called against North Adams and 15 against Williams.

The Ephs are now 2-1-2 and will travel to Hanover, N.H. to face Division I Dartmouth tomorrow.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 5 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE OCTOBER 21, 1986

WAAC erects white crosses

by John McDermott

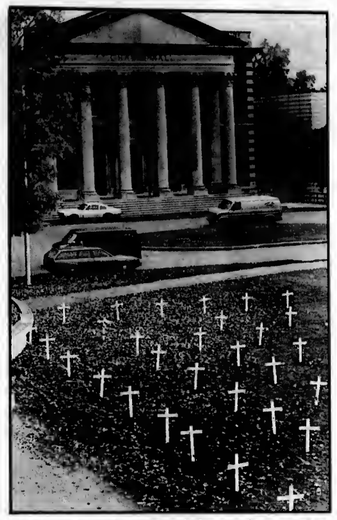
A member of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC) said Sunday that the organization will no longer be responsible for attending the wooden crosses it placed on Baxter Lawn between sunset and 2 a.m.

Tom Williams '87 said that an agreement, worked out Thursday, with Dean of the College Stephen Fix, to have WAAC members present at the site from sunset to 2 a.m., would not be followed effective Sunday.

The 159 white grave-markers were placed on the lawn Thursday morning between 4 and 5 a.m. by eight WAAC members, according to member Charles Cochran '88.

"The crosses are in commemoration of the people who have died in South Africa in the last three and a half years in the struggle to end apartheid," Cochran said later Thursday morning.

The crosses attracted attention of visitors at Sunday's convocation, and remained standing at the Record's presstime Monday.



Williams said the organization was not seeking a confrontation with the college, or increased media coverage, by leaving the crosses open to possible damage or removal.

"Having (the crosses) up is much more meaningful than getting into some battle with the administration," Williams said.

Williams said College Security, which has monitored the crosses since early Thursday, should be responsible for any proctection given, although he said WAAC members would continue to regularly walk by the crosses.

"I'm not sure that there's anything there that WAAC should be responsible for," Williams said. "Why should we stand there and just wait for some crazy person to come and knock them down?"

Williams, while relating the decision of WAAC, said he was not a spokesman for the organization.

Baxter Lawn sprouted 159 wooden crosses Thursday morning as activist students opened a weekend of protest against apartheid. (Camp)

Attempts to contact some other members of WAAC late Sunday were unsuccessful, though members had commented on the crosses earlier in the weekend.

Fix, contacted Saturday, declined to comment on the crosses, saying "I have nothing to add to what was in the written statement."

The statement, sent to students Thursday morning, was similar to a one issued last year after WAAC built shanties on Baxter Lawn. "At the moment this form of expression does not

Continued on Page 5

Council passes entire budget in 45 minutes

by Tracey Blankenship

Dispensing with its traditional heated, lengthy budget session, the College Council approved every budget recommendation by its Finance Committee (FinCom) within 45 minutes at its meeting last Wednesday.

FinCom chairman Alec Dawson '87 prefaced the voting by reminding council members that several organizations were "cut pretty bad last year" and that the FinCom "tried to take this into account."

Dawson proposed the Council vote on the recommended allotments in groups of five to streamline voting. Except for a few technical questions, no objections were raised by council members to the budget requests. No budget requests were tabled for further consideration.

Total outlays for the Council in the 1986-87 fiscal year will reach $134,645, up $2,922 from last year, while organizational requests increased to $237,565, up $36,566 from last year. Included in the council expenditures is "about $5,000 for the Daily Advisor" according to Dawson, with approximately $15,000 held for Council expenses and future organizational requests.

The three organizations traditionally having the largest budgets in the school, the Student Activities Council (SAC), WCFM Radio, and the Record, were each given a substantial budget increase.

The SAC received $34,000, an increase of $3,300, WCFM received $19,250, up by $9,050, and the college newspaper's budget was increased to $18,007, which is $3,007 above last year's sum.

Anticipating questions about the increase to the once-mismanaged SAC, which lost sixteen thousand dollars two years ago, Dawson said "it's worth giving them a bit of money" to facilitate a spring concert. He also assured council members, "They can't screw up like they did before, because I monitor their books."

Amy Jeffress '87, council president, questioned the allotment of $5,000 to pay off the SAC's debt incurred in 1985. "Aren't we, like, giving them their debt payment?" she asked.

Dawson replied that the SAC had been "punished enough" without elaborating, and that the student body was best served by a healthier SAC.

"WCFM has not had an increase in six years," said Dawson, explaining the station's near-doubled budget. He spoke of a letter from the sta-

Continued on Page 6

Trustee responds to complaints by ACSR

by James Spallone

Divisions among members of the Advisory Committee for Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) following announcement of the Trustees' new "disinvestment advocacy" policy have given rise to questions concerning the committee's role in shaping financial policy for the College.

At its meeting two weeks ago, some ACSR members expressed dissatisfaction over the Trustees' latest move. While there was some disagrement with the policy itself, as expressed by political science professor Fred Greene and others, four members, Greene, Charles Alberti '50, Donald Dubendorf '75, and John Canty '88, went on record saying they were upset over the Trustees' failure to seek the reccomendation of the ACSR before making the announcement. At the meeting Alberti said he felt that the 'A' ought to removed from the title ACSR, since the committee no longer served an advisory function.

On Thursday, Charles H. Mott '53, chairman of the Trustees' finance committee, said he felt the matter had been made clear in last weeks' Record, in an article which stated that professor James Wood, chairman of the ACSR, was involved in helping to shape the new policy.

Wood said that he, along with College Treasurer William S. Reed and Neil Grabois, College Provost, all ACSR members who were in Williamstown over the summer, worked together on the policy. Thus Mott and Wood maintain that the committee was not wholly uninformed before the Trustees announced their decision.

When asked to comment on Alberti's remarks at the ACSR meeting, Mott said, "I don't want to get into a discussion with Chuck Alberti over this through (the Record), I'd rather discuss it with him myself." He added that the ACSR "has, is, and hopefully will continue to give us good advice. But the policy-making body makes policy, and the Trustees are the policy-making body."

Wood pointed out on Saturday that there is no division with respect to the ACSR's willingness to carry out the new policy. "All of the members pledged to me that they would work to implement the policy," he said.

The ACSR advises the Finance Committee in three ways, according to Wood. It discusses shareholder's proxy votes and advises the Trustees on how to vote on them, advises the Trustees to sell off stock in companies that are not living up to acceptable standards of conduct in South Africa, and gives advice in what Wood termed the "nebulous" area of College policy itself. He said that the Trustees' are very responsive to ACSR advise and as far as he knew, had never rejected an ACSR proxy position or request to sell certain stock.

CUL seeks to clarify party policy

by Karen Costenbader

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) began its examination of Williams party policy at its meeting last Friday. A survey to research the Co-op housing system and plans for new student-faculty meals at the Log were also discussed.

Re-examination of the college party policy was the central focus of the meeting. The party policy recommendations which were submitted to Dean of the College Stephen Fix in November 1985, and never approved, were amended, with the sections regarding party plans, security, and liability changed the most.

Clarifying the present ambiguous wording of the college party policy concerning the filing of party plans was the subject of most of the discussion. Currently, a party plan must be filed for a party larger than a suite gathering.

"There needs to be a clear understanding what constitutes a 'suite party', as opposed to a 'small party,' " said Mary Petersen '87.

"Many other clarifications are necessary. People need to know that if they file a party plan they won't necessarily be assigned security," she said.

Hart Murphy '88 suggested that the CUL, "propose a definition of 'suite' that allows a little latitude." CUL members agreed that a party not needing to file a plan should be defined

Continued on Page 5

CONVOCATION '86

Inside The Record

Acting class marshals Mike Weber and Sara Bolton lead seniors through the Hopkins gate on Sunday. For extended coverage of the weekend's events see pg. 8-9. (Camp)

If not you, who?

The recent statements by several WAAC members disavowing responsibility for protecting the crosses that have been erected on Baxter Lawn call into question the motivation of the organization. There is no question about the right of WAAC members to express themselves in this way, but by the time we reach college, we have to learn to accept the responsibilities that come with rights.

Since the crosses were erected, students have been staying outside to ensure that other members of the community do not try to obstruct or destroy their form of protest. This is a responsibility that must go along with making a political statement utilizing such poignant symbols as grave markers. WAAC's more recent claims that they are just a group of students who should not have to bear the burden of protecting the graveyard are blatantly irresponsible.

Stated or tacit, the fact remains that WAAC would have the most to gain if the graveyard were destroyed. The publicity that would result would be sympathetic to WAAC and their right to express their feelings.

By not stating a time or condition for the removal of the crosses and not agreeing to protect their own right of expression, WAAC members are shifting the burden of this responsibility to the rest of the community. Why should we protect the rights of WAAC members while they settle behind a facade of self-declared moral superiority?

Hopefully, no one in our community would be closed-minded enough to infringe on the rights of WAAC members to protest, but it is not hard to point out other campuses where such strong symbols as crosses and shanties have been attacked. Wesleyan, Dartmouth and Johns Hopkins serve as a few examples. WAAC is certainly aware of these cases and should bear part of the responsibility for ensuring that there are no such incidents here, if only as a show of good faith.

If not you, why us?

Letters

Style?

To the Editor:

Regarding the sign on Baxter lawn ("Is this in poor taste?"), is this the best criticism the Republican club can make of the crosses and what they stand for? When the conservatives start arguing on matters of style, we who stand for divestment know that we have won the debate.

Sarah Lawton '87

Clean-up

To the Editor:

One in ten people in our state may be drinking water that is contaminated by toxic waste. In fact, it is currently estimated that 500-1000 unidentified hazardous waste sites exist in Massachusetts. The number of known sites has nearly tripled to 345 since last year; only 97 of these have been cleaned up.

Massachusetts' citizens are taking strides to solve this problem. After three years of legislative inaction, citizens acted directly through the initiative process. As a result of their efforts, the Hazardous Waste Emergency Clean Up Bill will appear on the November 4th ballot. This bill requires the identification, containment and permanent clean up of hazardous waste sites in Massachusetts within a strict time frame. At current rates it will take 50 to 100 years to clean up our state.

The hazardous waste problem will not disappear without our efforts. On Tuesday night at 8 p.m. a panel of experts will address the problem and possible solutions. The panel will approach the hazardous waste problem from legal and technical perspectives on local, state and national levels.

Students and Berkshire County residents are encouraged to attend the panel, ask questions and get directly involved in the Massachusetts Campaign to Clean Up Hazardous Waste.

Beth Stein '88
Matt McQueen '89
Marnie Stetson '87

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Kathy Ryan
GRAPHICS ..... Jeff Weinstein
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Crosses on the lawn bring apartheid closer to home

by Elizabeth Camp '88

Thursday morning at 4 a.m. eight students gathered on Baxter lawn to erect 160 crosses to commemorate those who have fallen (since the entrance of the class of 1987) in the last three and a half years in the struggle for freedom in South Africa. The students finished before sunrise and left their art to stand alone and to greet the awakening campus. The theme of this weekend's protest is "Art Against Apartheid" and was planned to coincide with the reopening of the Williams College Museum of Art.

Because the demonstrations are political art, there has been little explanation. Hopefully, this art has stirred your emotions surrounding apartheid. Now, I want to suggest at least some of the connections between Williams College and South Africa.

In erecting the crosses, the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition also volced its support for the jailed leaders of the South African Students' Union and the black students boycotting their racist educational institutions in South Africa.

Last year a fund was started to send blacks to predominantly white universities in South Africa, but black students are boycotting these schools. They are refusing to receive the education offered them, because they feel it is biased and limited. This year, WAAC is trying to start a fund to bring black students to Williams to receive their education.

South Africa still seems removed from Williams, but Williams College holds stock in American companies that do business in South Africa. Less than one percent of the population is employed by these companies, but they provide economic growth, which aids political stability, and instruments which the South African government uses to enforce the apartheid system. This assistance, at its minimum, is the payment of the 50 percent tax which helps with the large cost of maintaining and enforcing the apartheid system.

Since 1980, the college requires companies to be Sullivan Signatories, in an attempt to affect change. Over the past six years the college has advocated this policy of constructive engagement. Unfortunately, the situation in South Africa has not improved and in fact has worsened. The Trustee's Finance Committee has stated, "The prospects for any significant action to dismantle the core structure of apartheid now seem remote."

In the face of the failure of constructive engagement, WAAC and the Williams Students for Divestment are calling for the divestment of College funds, which we hope will lead to corporate disinvestment. Merely requesting disinvestment with no time table or threat of reprisal is not enough.

Even if divestment does not achieve disinvestment, divestment is still doing a service to the college community. The college would be making a stamement that it finds apartheid morally abhorrent and does not want to be associated with or make a profit from the legalized oppression of other human being on the basis of race.

Elizabeth Camp is a member of Williams Students for Divestment.

The moral alternative: opposition to apartheid and divestment

by John Canty '88

This September I took my seat as an at-large student representative on the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility, a position I will hold for the next two years. As earnest voices raise the call once more for the divestiture by Williams of all investments in companies with operations in South Africa, I think it only right to make known my views on this vexing issue. Through the coming year we are sure to find it a persistent concern.

I oppose divestment. If there are those who might oppose divestment principally for the financial costs it would incur upon the College, I do not agree with them. Williams College draws its strength as a moral educator, and the value of justice it attempts to instill in its students are equally those precepts by which it must live. Moreover, divestment transcends other concerns here at Williams; it has a uniquely American power to it in that it taps a moralism deeply held in our culture. Either there stands a moral alternative to divestment greater in its impact, or we ought to divest.

In opposing divestment, one need not take back seat to any individual in hatred for the iniquity practiced by the South African government toward its overwhelming black majority. That the system of apartheid espoused there is destructive of the human spirit and repugnant to American ideals of justice is not in question; we must see this last form of racial slavery pass from this planet.

Last spring, with foreign pressure on the government of South Africa reaching a fever pitch, I admit I had some optimism that a peaceful, transition to majority rule still lay within reach. Against the backdrop of increased bloodshed and heightened repression so evident this past summer, however, the narrow program of racial reform advanced by the South African government marks the intransigence of that regime to maintain the institutions of apartheid against all pressure. A classic Afrikaner image is that of the "lager," with the wagons pulled close in a circle to fend off the outsider. Past is the time for conciliation.

Yet, we now must decide, what is our goal? Here I fail to see the relevance or logic of divestiture. Divestment would entail the sale of all the College's South Africa-related investments. As a moral statement such an act would carry a powerful meaning. Nevertheless, what good does it accomplish? As a decision which would aid the withdrawal of American corporations from South Africa, however, divestment would be empty of actual result.

Most importantly, divestment signifies an abdication of a moral responsibility. By selling our stock in these companies, Williams loses its ability to place its pressure for their withdrawal. In many ways, to hurt South Africa by divestment is akin to a resolution to hurt the air by not breathing it.

In this sense the current policy ratified by the Trustees commits itself to a policy of actual result. When our voice is joined to that of TIAA-CREF, an investment group managing some $42 billion in assets, I do not doubt that this course will bear fruit. Management responds to stockholder grievances long before such questions reach their final stages.

In this whole debate we must continually bear in mind the good faith which our opponents have. I cannot overstate the eloquence of the activists of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition and the Williams Students for Divestment, I cannot too highly praise their commitment. I hope they would agree that on this problem, no organization, no individual, can speak with a monopoly on virtue. All whom I know on the ACSR approach the divestment question with the best intentions, and I am deeply resentful when I hear the motives of any person called into question.

As history lengthens the thread for the fate of South Africa, I must share a most numbing sense of despair. I wish that it had been otherwise. I wish that the whites of South Africa would feel the depth of their sins and would join in overturning an evil system. Perhaps peace and justice can yet come to that troubled land. Then, again, perhaps the time for peace is past.

The Boston Red Sox: virtue, loyalty, and authentic heroes

by Charles P. Goodwin '87

If you try to be intellectual about baseball, you're going to sound like a fool. Baseball is a game of the heart. So when I try to convince you to root for the Red Sox this fall, I am going to sound pretty foolish. But you should root for the BoSox anyway.

Baseball is the American game. It has been for a hundred years. The Red Sox are what baseball is all about. When you come out for the Red Sox, you're coming out for everything that is right with America.

America is not a nation of superstars. It is a nation of folks whose names are not remembered too long. The Red Sox are like that. Marty, Spike, Roger, Wade and Oil Can are names that you would find at any lunch counter or truck stop. Guys with names like that do not advertise designer underwear.

The true heroes of our country have always been the people who knew what their job was and did it, not glory-seeking, platinum plated egos that take every bow that they can squeeze in. Jim Rice and Wade Boggs have played the game in good years and in bad. Some of those must have been heart-breaking, but they played just the same.

Authenticity is a virtue. The Red Sox are authentic — like Levi's or Classic Coke. They've been playing ball in the same town now for something around ninety years. People all across New England have stood by them for that long, too. That's authenticity, that's loyalty.

I could go on. And I could be more convincing. But I'll tell you, if you believe in baseball, if you believe that the common man is the hero, then you should support the Sox. Otherwise, you should support that expansion team named after an opera house. But then you probably also think that Dustin Hoffman is more sensitive than Jimmy Stewart, that Al Pacino is more masculine that Humphrey Bogart, and that Jane Fonda is more independent than Katherine Hepburn. But, hey, this is America. You've got the right to be wrong.

The New York Mets: a team of style, personality and skill

by Steve Theodore '87

The "Shuttle Series" is here, and all of us uptight Easterners (whether of New Yorker or Bostonian persuasion) can sit back and rejoice in our superiority to the rest of you. Still, it's not fun to just sit back and not take sides at Series time, and everybody ought to have something to say on the subject.

I don't imagine I can convince many devoted New York haters to actually like the Mets — but in the best liberal arts tradition, I think a little consideration will show that even if you hate them, the Mets are the team to root for in the coming series.

The Name. Come on. "Mets". It's hip, it's happening, it's a name for the eighties. Besides, who wants to root for a bunch of guys who can't even spell "Socks?"

The Uniforms. Let's face it. The Red Sox can't make up their minds. In the past ten years they have shifted from red hats to blue hats and back twice. Make up your minds already. The Mets have those neat stripes which make them all look so tall and thin.

Stadiums. You have to love Shea Stadium. Who ever went to a Beatles concert in Fenway Park? Did the Reverend Jimmy Swaggart ever hold a crusade there? Most of all — can you get a hot potato Knish in Fenway Park? Nosiree Bob. The Mets souvenir stands are among the best stocked in baseball, second only to the Yankees (but let's not talk about them).

Queens. The Mets come from Queens, which means that they are automatically authentic. Heavy Metal comes from Queens. 24-hour bowling comes from Queens. The Frank Perdue Chicken Restaurant, all Norman Lear sitcoms (even the Jeffersons at first), and all the Greek food in America comes from Queens. Jeff Weinstein comes from Queens.

The Players. Forget about talent, let's talk personality. Nobody can possibly have more personality than a guy named Mookie Wilson. Now that Carl Yazstremski's gone the Sox haven't got any funny names to speak of. "Jim Rice". How can they hope to win?

Any reasonable accounting of the strengths and weaknesses of the two teams proves that the Mets are where it's at. Boston likes to think of itself as the "American Athens." Queens is the New Rome. Just remember who kicked ass the first time.

by Rich Gardella

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM

Burglars hit four dorms

Williamstown police are investigating a series of burglaries that occurred on October 8 in which a number of valuable items were taken from students' rooms in Sage and Lehman Halls, Dodd House, and Mission Park, College Security said.

Security director Ransom Jenks said the burglaries, which occurred between 9:30 and 11:30 p.m., appear to have been committed by the same group of offenders. "The time frame involved and the descriptions given by some of the students seem to indicate that the same people were involved in all of the incidents," he said.

Jenks said that a complaint has been filed with Williamstown police, who are investigating the thefts.

"I have a feeling that it was done by people from off-campus," Jenks said. "Students who saw them said that they didn't look like Williams students, that they were older."

Jenks added, "It's very important that students lock their rooms. It's nice to think that we don't have to, but we do."

— Jocelyn Shadforth

Bubriski: Build Apts. on campus

Williamstown resident Dagmar Bubriski, a member of the newly-formed Town-College Liaison Committee, suggested last week that Williams College build apartments for students in the Poker Flats area at the north end of campus.

Bubriski, speaking at the committee's meeting last Wednesday, said the apartments would reduce the need for student off-campus housing, whose residents she contends are often noisy and disrespectful of their neighbors. She also said that housing student off-campus contributes to a housing shortage in Williamstown.

"The biggest problem we have is a town with very little room for residents," Bubriski said. "I would like very much to see Williams have student apartments on campus. Poker Flats would be a great place to build a whole bunch of student apartments."

Dean of the College Stephen Fix, a guest and "variable member" of the committee at Wednesday's meeting, said the students who live off-campus "incur more, rather than less responsibility" for their actions.

Bubriski also suggested having supervisors live in off-campus apartments, and requiring students to take a course on the sociology of the region.

Wednesday's meeting was the liaison comittee's second. The goal of the five-member committee is to be a forum for the town and the college to discuss mutual problems, said Selectman Alan L. George, who founded the group earlier this year.

"I view Williamstown and Williams College as a marriage of sorts," George said. "For any successful marriage, communication is crucial."

— Rob Wilmers

All that was necessary

Two weeks ago, the New York Post launched George Steinbrenner as a post-season baseball columnist, giving him a photo-byline and a prominent position on the paper's back page.

Steinbrenner, a 1952 Williams graduate, was assigned to cover the New York Mets.

Some New Yorkers must have questioned the assignment: a new man covering a team whose behavior has arguably been quite out-of-character this season.

The Post assured readers of the columnist's experience in an editor's note at the top of Steinbrenner's first story.

"George Steinbrenner — ," the editor's note began, "former sports editor of the Williams College Record...."

The Post did not list any other qualifications.

Morris and Peters speak

Artist Robert Morris and museum director Hans Albert Peters presented dedication lectures last Friday in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. The lectures, which were held in conjunction with the re-opening of the Williams College Museum of Art, were attended by approximately 100 people.

Morris, who was introduced as one of the most important American artists since World War II, gave a lecture entitled "Words and Images in Art of the Recent Past." He spoke of the dichotomy of the visual and linguistic in art, especially in modernist and minimalist painting and sculpture. The "mutual contamination" of the two comes from the dualism of Western philosophy, said Morris, which also seeks to divide mind and body, subject and object, illusion and truth, work and play.

Peters, director of the Kunstmuseum in Dusseldorf, gave a lecture entitled "Titian as a Draftsman." He showed several examples of drawings done by the master Venetian artist as life studies for paintings and singled out characteristics of Titian's drawings. Titian, he noted, used emphatic lines, cross-hatching, and rubbed crayon for shading and contour. According to Peters, Titian's emphasis was on showing the effects of light and shade involved with movement, and not in showing the body from different angles in different stages of movement, as Michelangelo preferred.

— Michael Erard

Give blood tomorrow

The Williams community is asked give blood this week. The Bloodmobile will visit the First Congregational Church, on Main Street, between noon and 5 p.m. Wednesday.

The most generous student donors will win prizes for their houses in the blood drive's annual "Vampire Sweepstakes."

SKI PACKAGES
Alpine
Skis, Boots, Bindings, Poles, Mounting
$470.00 value your cost $295.00
X-Country
$188.00 value your cost $129.00
"Ski Haus of the Berkshires" only at
GOFF'S SPORTS, Inc.
Spring Street

Stately 100-year old Victorian, in beautiful in-town neighborhood. Seventeen rooms of spacious living, eight bedrooms, six fireplaces. Four separate apartments. Three-car garage. C-403 $365,000 458-8307
Coldwell Banker Isgood
610 Main St., Williamstown

A NEW WAY TO CHANGE OLD PATTERNS.
SLICKER™ GEL
Slicker Gel is used on dry hair to mold, separate and define hair and create new shapes. Pixie points, feathered fringes and wild wisps become ultra-shiny accents that stay in place.
Leaves hair soft and natural-looking, never feeling stiff or hard.
GEL MODELANT
SLICKER GEL s'utilise sur cheveux secs pour séparer les mèches entre-elles et souligner les accents de votre coiffure
SLICKER GEL laisse les cheveux souples et crée un look naturel. Il maintient dans la forme donnée sans durcir, ni coller
49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585
125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
802-447-2648
122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576

CLIP SHOP
We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary!
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER. 1985 SEBASTIAN INTERNATIONAL, INC. Woodland Hills, CA
Artistic Center is a trademark of Sebastian International.

Grabois sees slight tuition hike

by Peter Balaban

A tuition increase and the accreditation process were two of the topics at last Wednesday's faculty meeting. The process of self-assessment and the College's health and psychological services were also brought up at the meeting.

Reacting to the desire expressed by some faculty members to finish the meeting quickly because of the impending Red Sox-Angels game, Dean of the College Stephen Fix refused to rush his presentation on the accreditation process, stating, "I don't give a damn about baseball."

Fix said the New England Association of Colleges and Schools will evaluate the school for accreditation on October 4 to 7, 1987, and in preparation the college will perform a self-study by forming committees to study the curriculum, the possible inadequacy of academic advising, admissions and financial aid, inconsistencies in academic regulations and procedures, and institional goals. He said that he viewed the process as a positive opportunity to improve the school and not as an external imposition. College Provost Neil Grabois then announced what he described as a "slight" tuition increase, caused by an increase in the College's projected budget deficit from $140,000 to $200,000, an increase he described as due in part to rising insurance costs. He said the college will continue its salary increases for faculty and staff and intends to continue to expand the staff consistent with the development drive for the college's 200th anniversary.

He mentioned that it is a serious goal of the college to increase the percentage of students on financial aid, which has been 39, 37 and 35 percent over the past three years, respectively.

Grabois also talked about the process of assessment, which is being developed in response to a concern raised among educators that colleges and universities are not effective in different areas. Questions such as "What do students know when they leave?" have been asked, and an evaluative procedure will have to be developed to address them, according to Grabois.

Health Center services

Director of Medical Services James Corkins spoke on the Health Services at Williams. He stressed that the Health Center was different than a walk-in clinic, and it was a perfectly acceptable student use of it as a "haven for the stresses and strains that (the faculty) inflict on them." Corkins mentioned that visits to the Health Center have increased 42% over the past four years.

On the subject of making up missed work, Corkins said that Health Services assumes that it is the responsibility of the student and enourages direct contact with professors by the student. He said that "We don't have the authority to modify the work schedule, and we don't usually intercede on behalf of the student."

John Howland, director of Psychological Counseling Services at Williams, spoke about the services offered to students, which include group psychotherapy, counseling for eating disorders, and workshops for students raised in families with an alcoholic. He said the Counseling service provides referrals, and when necessary, medication, evaluation, treatment, and follow-up.

He stressed that all services and records were kept strictly confidential. Most problems the counseling service deals with are developmental in nature, he said, but they do handle students with serious disturbances and who are mentally ill.

Crosses

Continued from Page 1

interfere with the rights of others to speak and assemble freely," the new statement said. "As in the past, we expect responses to demonstrations of this type to be focused on the issues they attempt to raise."

Elizabeth Camp '88, one of the students who erected the crosses, stayed with them Sunday night until 2 a.m. Camp said she felt responsible for the crosses. She said she was one of the students who met with Fix Thursday.

Williams said the organization had not made a decision on when to remove the crosses — or whether to set a date for removal.

"We're not looking to make something happen, he added. "I think that would be an incongruous conclusion."

The decision is "hardly saying that we won't be watching them," Williams continued. "There has been a regular gathering of anti-apartheid people there every night, and we are always walking by there. We're saying that we're not guaranteeing that there is someone watching all the time."

Another WAAC member said he expects only a very careful, measured response from the administration. "I don't think they're going to do much, said WAAC member Martin White '87. "The less they do, the less the conflict involves them."

The crosses brought with them a resurgence of activity by WAAC. A candlelight vigil, held at the crosses Friday night drew about 70 people. The students sang songs, including "We Shall Overcome" including the verse "We shall soon divest." No speeches were made, but at the end of the vigil the participants walked to College President Francis Oakley's house, carrying candles and chanting, "Don't deplore, divest."

In addition, a demonstration called "Art Against Apartheid" was held outside the reopened Williams College Museum of Art Saturday afternoon. Participants painted banners with slogans including, "Don't Deplore, Divest!" and the statement "Money in South Africa is Blood."

Williams said that the WAAC's disgust with the ACSR's conservative reaction to the Trustees' "disinvestment advocacy" decision three weeks ago was an additional motivation for the crosses protest, but he said the protest would probably have occured anyway.

Alexandra Glover contributed to this article.

CUL meeting

Continued from Page 1

as a contained party of under 35 people. Dean Mary Kenyatta observed that, if a number limit were imposed, "we all will have to accept it as a means of determining whether there is liability or negligence. If you have a restriction, you must enforce it."

Seniors Mark Tompkins and Tom Fitzgibbon brought up problems posed by "the spontaneous party that starts at 8 o'clock". They said that this new, more specific definition of a party not requiring a plan would give more freedom to spontaneous parties.

Security process

Concerning the fear that filing a party plan meant having security assigned, CUL Chairman William Wagner suggested that Ransom Jenks, director of security, be consulted so that the CUL would know "his general guidelines for assigning guards." Many CUL members felt that this was an arbitrary process in which Jenks weighed variables such as the number of people, amount of alcohol, location, and other campus activities that night, in order to make his decision.

Murphy said the threshold for security assignment provided by Jenks could be useful in amending the CUL's proposal in ways that, "won't impose on Jenks' authority". The Committee agreed that it should attempt to make Jenks' set of conditions public knowledge.

The sections of party policy concerning party clean up in dining halls and closing hours were also amended. Suzanne Blemiller '87 said that regulations for dining hall clean-up are to prevent food service workers finding the halls a mess after a party.

"No matter how well you mop up, they are never satisfied and call at 7:30 am to complain," said Hans Humes '87. The CUL decided to include the requirement for a food service supervisor to direct clean-up in their proposal.

The CUL also discussed the idea of extending the closing hour of weeknight parties during Winter Study Period from midnight until 1 am, with most members favoring the idea. Kenyatta, however, felt "extending party hours might undergird the seriousness of Winter Study." Wagner suggested that the proposal as a whole might have a better chance of being approved by Fix without this change. However, most of the members agreed, as Fitzgibbon put it, to "go for it and see if they'll take it. If not, we haven't lost anything."

Other business

The Log subcommittee reported that it agreed with the Food Service to begin student-faculty lunches at The Log during Winter Study. Students can use their ID cards and faculty members can sign for these meals, to be held Monday through Thursday.

A weekly coffee, tea, and cookie hour for faculty and students will also be tested out during Winter Study. According to Wagner, "The goal is to provide a relaxed informal setting for students and professors to get together and talk."

The Co-operative Housing subcommittee, headed by Assistant Professor of Mathematics David Levine, is composing a survey which will measure student opinions and feelings about the present co-op system. A draft version of this survey, to be given to upperclassmen next month, was distributed to CUL members.

you are invited to discuss
THE MICHIGAN MBA
Wednesday, October 29
Jane Lieberthal
Assistant Director of Admissions
Appointments may be scheduled at the Career Counseling Office

Colonial Pizza
"The best in the area"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014
No. Adams
Eagle St.
664-4134
664-6889
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Shop the
WILLIAMSTOWN MARKETPLACE
Open 7 Days, Fri. til 8
Pat's Country Shoppe
895 Cold Spring Rd.
458-9834
— Unique Gifts For All Occasions—
Casual Wear for Women In All Age Groups
STAINED GLASS windows lamps mirrors and sillies!
Kaleidoscope Glass
CUSTOM DESIGN and REPAIRS
FREE GIFT WRAPPING!
458-3688 895 Cold Spring Rd.
"Holidays" Country Store
...and a whole lot more!!
Now Featuring Halloween, Thanksgiving and Christmas Items.
Cold Spring Rd. Williamstown
Parents and students come by during Parents' Weekend
Also many other stores & eatery!!

CC Budget

Continued from Page 1

tion's FCC licensed engineer saying the "equipment was virtually falling apart."

"It's a victory for WCFM which will allow us to improve the quality for years to come," said station Treasurer Rob Greenfield '87.

Four organizations found themselves completely cut from the Council's disbursments. Two of these, Parallax, and the Williams Sailing Team, were faulted by Dawson for having "no organization whatsoever." Dawson said that, with Parallax, the "person who signed the request said he wasn't in charge of it." The Williams College Social Science Review was faulted by Dawson for "failing their test" by spending none of their money last year, and the History Club was cited for the same reason. None of these groups sent representatives to the meeting.

The Williams Cycling Team will be granted money in the Spring, said Dawson, and the Williams Hunger Action Project, which neither requested nor received money, "simply wanted to be recognized by the College Council."

The major point of discussion at the budget meeting wasn't the budget but this year's selection of minority representatives to the College Council.

"I was not pleased by how the minority representatives were selected. I was really displeased with the way this was done," said Kevin Hinton '89.

For this school year, the minority representatives to the College Council were chosen by the council Election Committee from a list of self-nominees.

Jeffress said the student body voted just last Spring to add minority representatives to the Council, to be elected exclusively by the minority students, and that the process will take effect for the elections in April. This year's selection, she explained, was only for a one year interim period.

College Council Treasurer Alec Dawson '87 (right), presiding over Thursday evening's meeting at which the council's budget process was begun ... and completed. (Marcus)

"There was a general sense that people were dragging their feet on it," said Council member Martin White '87.

Jeffress ended the meeting by emphasizing this year's first meatless meal, to be held tomorrow in Mission Park and Dodd dining halls.

"(Director of Food Services James) Hodgkins was fed up about the last Meatless meal," she said, stressing the need for "all students to eat in Dodd and Mission Park" dining rooms to demonstrate the strong student support for saving money for charity by the meals.

JB'S Restaurant
Cuisine for the '80's
FEATURING Vegetarian & Daily SPECIALS
All items on the menu are prepared from fresh & natural ingredients; served in a casual Atmosphere.
159 Water St.
Williamstown, MA.
FOR RESERVATIONS: 413 458-9825
Look for flyers with 10% student discount on meals with valid ID.

— Cycling Clothes & Accessories —
Moms & Dads!
Winters Trainers —
Exercise at home during winter
TRAINER
THE SPOKE
408 Main St. 458-3456

the VIDEO STOP
Rte. 7
Pownal, VT 05261
Phone (802) 823-5076
Member rates for college students. Monday thru Thursday—overnight rentals only (must have current student ID)

THE TRAVEL STORE, INC.
105 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
(413) 458-5786
MASS. TOLL FREE 800-221-3701
OUTSIDE MASS. 800-225-5052
The Travel Store has a wide range of services to help with all your travel needs—And No Additional Charges To You!!
Computerized Air Reservations with advance seat selection and boarding passes on most flights
Hotel and Car Reservations worldwide
Access to Charter Companies all over the world
Toll Free Number for easy accessibility when you're out of town
Student Ride Book — Have A Ride? Need A Ride? Register in the Travel Store's Ride Book and solve your airport transportation costs!
Travelers Checks in Domestic and Foreign Currencies up to the value of your trip without the service charge any time you arrange your trip with us.
Gift certificates available
Remember!! We can use your parents' credit cards for any tickets you purchase.
The Travel Store is an American Express Representative extending card members All-American Express services including emergency check cashing.
Group Discounts available on request
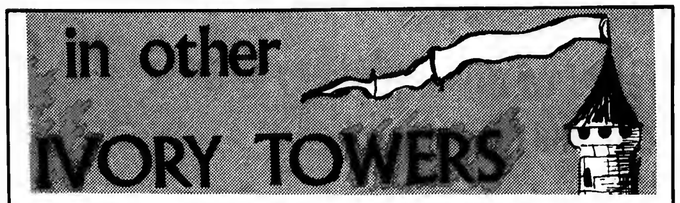
Offering Reduced Rates For:
★ THANKSGIVING
★ CHRISTMAS
★ WINTER STUDY
★ SPRING BREAK
Book now and save save save with the Lowest Prices Anywhere!
The Travel Store is open from 9:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Monday - Friday and 9:00 a.m. - 12:00 p.m. Saturday.

Screw your roommate: the tradition continues

by Sunita Duggal

Until you have flumed and until you have screwed, you have not become truly Williamized. The bewildered prospective, with the Baxter experience under his belt, might now be wondering about the second part of the phrase, perhaps with thoughts of tools or nasty little drinks with orange juice in his head. Actually, as even freshmen know by now, to screw is to participate in a Screw Your Roomate function.



You know the scenario. The phone rings. You are asked to be someone's date for Friday night. You stammer incoherent phrases as you search, madly, for a face book. Why can't your sultemates keep the important resource materials in one place? You finally find it, and desperately hoping the picture isn't in the torn-out section, you realize the person on the phone hasn't even told you the name of the person they want you to go with. Should you ask for the name? You can't — they'll see right through you. You take a deep breath and do the honorable thing: depart for Canada.

Actually, students tend to willingly comply with such requests, supporting the Screw Your Roommate tradition and becoming statistics in the aftermath phenomena of finally finding the picture of one's date right after hanging the phone up. As freshman Dan Drezner quips, "What results is one of two spontaneities: A) an exultant ballet remotely resembling Baryshnikov, or B) a disfiguring dive out of a fourth floor window following a scream of sheer agony off the decible scale."

The majority of students interviewed enjoyed the experience and found the Screw Your Roommates to be a good way to meet new people. Most of the parties were held in upperclassman houses and lasted for three or four hours, until people split up and went to other parties.

Some students expressed feelings of anxiety over who to set their roommates up with. In some cases, rather unsubtle hints guided clueless matchmakers. People also found the initial atmosphere at the parties nerve-racking, but few felt, as one student did, "terrified beyond the capacity for rational thought." Many students treated the affair as a casual opportunity to get to know someone, rather than as a serious date.

The interviewed students unanimously agreed that the tradition should be continued, although some expressed the sentiment that it should be later in the year, when freshmen know more people that they would feel comfortable asking.

Dartmouth

Dartmouth College president David McLaughlin announced his plans to retire, effective next fall, at a faculty meeting October 6. McLaughlin cited "personal reasons" for his decision, but many students and faculty have speculated that the controversy surrounding the shanty town erected on the Dartmouth campus last year was also a factor. According to The Dartmouth, McLaughlin's announcement did not come as much of a surprise to students, faculty and alumni, who were generally supportive of his decision.

Wesleyan

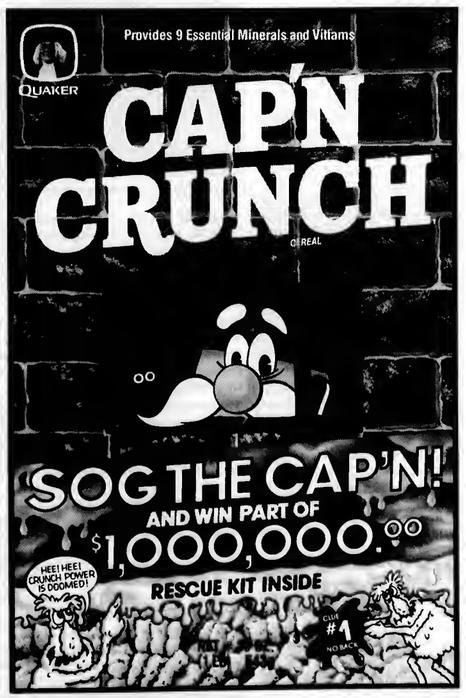
"Hello, I'm Rich Winter and I'm running for state representative." These are the words of America's youngest candidate for political office, who finds time to campaign between classes at Wesleyan University. A twenty-year-old junior, Winter is running on the Republican ticket for Connecticut's thirty-third district legislative seat. Ironically, his opponent is a Wesleyan alumnus who has held the office for the past eight years. Winter was nominated by the Republican Town Committee, on which he served. If elected, he will take a leave of abscence from school while the legislature is in session.

North Adams State

Drinking and riding don't mix, at least not on an Englander bus. Two North Adams State College students were kicked off the bus in Turners Falls, Massachusetts, on a return trip to North Adams. The unruly students, who were apparently drinking at the time, were "being too loud" and were forced to hitchhike home. According to the North Adams Beacon, this incident represents a toughening of the bus line's policy regarding rowdy behavior.

Bowdoin

Abbie Hoffman, radical activist and former member of the Chicago Seven, took time off from his million dollar advertising career to speak about "the emergence of activism today" at Bowdoin College last week. Arguing against manditory drug testing and sodomy laws, Hoffman said, "Where the hell are you when the cops want to come into your bladder or bedroom to tell you which of the two or three major orifices are illegal." Despite the fact that he lives in a Beverly Hills mansion, Hoffman still claims to be an activist, saying, "I still have the fire in my belly."



Hoffman perceives the resurgence of a kind of activism similar to that of the sixties. "It was not Vietnam that triggered the 1960's, it was apartheid. We had apartheid in our own country, the southern part," Hoffman stated.

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute

What do you get when you combine two engines, a propeller, a chair, and a permanently open parachute? Answer: a paraplane. Students at RPI weighing under 215 pounds have been safely flying around at twenty-six miles per hour since the invention of the machine in 1984. After watching a fifty minute video and reading a twenty page manual, the prospective paraplaner is ready to go. According to the RPI Polytechnic, paraplaning is extremely safe since the permanently open parachute makes crashing virtually impossible. Students can get their first flight course for only $85 at Gay Valley Airport. Many students consider the price a bargain. One flyer even claimed that paraplaning was, "the most fun I've ever had with my pants on."

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Caroline Koeppel and Jim Hartnett from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

What's wrong with this package?

As if capturing our hero Cap'n Crunch, threatening Crunch Power and the future of crunchy breakfast weren't enough, now the soggies have made a mess out of the Cap'n's cereal box! A cause for major unrest with breakfast eaters everywhere! Not to mention the outrage at Quaker Oats!

Authorities have noted 30 mistakes on the box you see here. Find 20 of them and solve the three "Free The Cap'n" clues on special boxes of Cap'n Crunch cereal and you're on your way to being on your own brand new Honda Scooter!

WIN ONE OF 5 HONDA SCOOTERS!

CAP'N CRUNCH CEREAL
"FREE THE CAP'N" CAMPUS SWEEPSTAKES
NAME: _____
ADDRESS: _____
CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____
TELEPHONE ( ) _____ AGE _____
Where in Sogland is the Cap'n? _____ Which door is the Cap'n behind? _____ Which key opens the door to free the Cap'n? _____
1. _____ 2. _____ 3. _____
Send To:
"Free the Cap'n" Campus Sweepstakes
P.O. Box 1302, Boston, MA 02277
Official Entry Form

"FREE THE CAP'N" CAMPUS SWEEPSTAKES OFFICIAL RULES

1. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. To enter the "Free the Cap'n" Campus Sweepstakes you must highlight 20 of the 30 mistakes found on the picture of the Cap'n Crunch Cereal box shown in this advertisement by comparing it to the picture contained on 16 oz. boxes of Cap'n Crunch Cereal as sold in grocery retail stores. Write the mistakes on a separate piece of paper. In addition, you must answer the three questions located on the Campus Sweepstakes Official Entry Form. The clues to the answers of these three questions and the rescue kit can be found by purchasing specially marked package of Cap'n Crunch Cereal, or by hand printing your name and address on a 3" x 5" piece of paper and mailing it to: "FREE THE CAP'N" Kits, P.O. Box 3078, Syosset, NY 11775. One request per envelope. Requests must be received no later than January 15, 1987. Requests honored while supplies last.

2. Mail your completely filled out Campus Sweepstakes Official Entry Form with your name, address, phone number, age, answers to the three questions and the copy of the highlighted picture of the Cap'n Crunch package with your separate list of mistakes to: "FREE THE CAP'N" CAMPUS SWEEPSTAKES, P.O. Box 1302, Boston, MA 02277. DO NOT USE THE ENTRY FORM WHICH IS INCLUDED IN THE RESCUE KIT TO ENTER THE CAMPUS SWEEPSTAKES. Enter as often as you wish. Mail each Official Entry Form separately.

Sweepstakes begins approximately October 1, 1986. All entries must be postmarked by February 2, 1987, the ending date of the sweepstakes. No facsimiles or mechanical reproductions of the Official Entry Form will be allowed.

3. Entries must be received no later than February 14, 1987. Illegible and incomplete entry forms and lists of mistakes will not be eligible. The sponsor is not responsible for lost, late or misdirected mail. All Campus Sweepstakes Official Entry Forms become the property of the sponsor and none will be disclosed or returned.

4. Five (5) winners of Honda Scooters (individual retail value $758.00) will be selected in a random drawing from among all eligible and correct entries received. The random drawing will be held on approximately March 1, 1987, by an independent judging organization. All decisions by the judges will be final. Winners will be notified by mail on or before March 31, 1987. Winners must return signed affidavit and release within 30 days of receipt or an alternate winner will be chosen. Odds of winning are dependent upon the number of correct entries received. All prizes will be awarded. Limit one prize per person.

5. Only residents of the USA may participate. Void where prohibited by law. Taxes are the sole responsibility of each winner. All Federal, State and Local laws and regulations apply. Prizes are non-transferable and no substitutions are allowed. Employees of The Quaker Oats Company, its affiliates, advertising and promotional agencies, and their immediate families are not eligible.

6. For a list of winners, send a stamped self-addressed envelope after May 30, 1987, to: "FREE THE CAP'N" CAMPUS SWEEPSTAKES WINNERS, P.O. Box 1303, Boston, MA 02277.

7. This Sweepstakes is being sponsored by The Quaker Oats Company, Merchandise Mart Plaza, Chicago, Illinois 60654.

Convocation panel

Panel of directors discuss designs of recent renovation

by Marilyn Germano

Speaking before an audience that filled the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall last Saturday morning, five museum directors and one architect addressed the topic of "Museum Architecture: Form vs. Function." Thomas Krens, director of the Williams College Museum of Art, acted as moderator of the Convocation panel discussion and opened the program by asking the other four museum directors to explain the programs of renovation underway at their respective museums. The panel then discussed the question "How much of a relationship is there between art and the building in which it is housed?"

Earl Powell, director of the Los Angeles County Museum, explained that the Los Angeles museum's budget and staff doubled in size between 1965 and 1980. As a result, he said, the building of 1965 was no longer suitable. Powell said that he wanted a switch to something new; thus, the museum renovations include much change from the original structure. The museum has now reorganized all its collections, from ancient to modern, and there is even a separate building for modern and contemporary art.

James Wood, director of the Art Institute of Chicago, spoke of a program which was begun about five years ago and is quite different from Powell's in that it sought to preserve the existing facade of the museum. His desire, he said, was to "reassert the original quality of the building." The Art Institute had a "renovation priority," which included details such as new roofing, as well as priorities which included the addition of a new wing. Within this wing, he said, is a separate pavilion exclusively for special exhibitions, to remove them from permanent functions.

"Geometry and nature"

Heinrich Klotz, of the Deutsches Architekturmuseum of Frankfurt, was the only museum director to come from Europe. Like Wood, Klotz sought to preserve the original structure of his museum. There are, for example, trees which grow out of the building that were maintained after the renovation. Klotz said that he sees these as a nice mix of "geometry and nature." The renovations also included the creation of different environments throughout the museum, where every story has a different character.

The final speaker was Robert Buck, of the Brooklyn Museum. Everything he spoke of, he said, was "purely theoretical," as the museum has not yet undergone any changes. To develop a program, Buck said, the museum compiled a "wish list," department by department.

Requests for an architect to undertake the program were sent to 103 firms, 57 of which responded with interest; last week the museum announced its choice of an architect for the renovations. An interesting feature of the proposed plan is the existence of a left and right lobe; one lobe would house the non-exhibition aspects of the museum, and the other lobe would be strictly for exhibitions.

Architectural complexity

During the discussion segment of the program, Charles Moore, the architect behind the renovations of the Williams College Museum of Art, addressed complexity as a key idea in the relationship between art and architecture. The building in which art is housed, he said, should be complex but not overbearing; the architecture should not come out on top of the art. However, he stated, a well-designed building could help art "realize a dimension which might not otherwise have been reached." He stressed the idea that "art should feel comfortable."

The discussion then turned to the issue of public interest vs. art interest. Klotz stated that it is not necessary to pay a great deal of attention to the public's views, but by the same token, they cannot be ignored. He elaborated by considering the role of a museum in society. People often come to a museum, he said, to "see art and experience a place in the city unlike any other place; (in some cases) they enjoy themselves without even thinking about the art." However, he added, it is good to bring together different interests under the same roof; they should be allowed to co-exist.

Moore addresses Class of '87

by Harwell Wells and Paul Kwon

"I am only gradually beginning to see that tradition must be at the base of all we do," said Charles Moore, the architect for the renovation of the Williams College Museum of Art (WCMA), at the college's Convocation Sunday.

Moore's addreess on "Tradition and the Museum" was the focus of the hour-long, annual ceremony, which began with a procession of seniors and faculty down Chapin Hall Drive. The procession did not take its traditional route down the middle of Baxter Lawn, which was occupied by white crosses placed there Thursday by the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition.

A sign placed to the south of the crosses before the convocation, and removed later Sunday, asked, "During Convocation: Is this in poor taste?" Convocation speakers did not mention the crosses.

This convocation "is not assembled to launch a new academic year," said College President Francis Oakley.

"If this has not begun already, we're probably destined to be dry docked," Oakley said. Rather, he said, the convocation was a celebration of the WCMA's re-opening.

"Williamstown may henceforth boast of possessing not one extraordinary museum, but two," Oakley said of the WCMA and the Clark Art Institute.

Honorary Doctorates of Fine Arts were awarded to Moore, a renowned postmodernist architect, and to the minimalist sculptor Robert Morris.

'Unpredictable creativity'

"You have forged on the anvil of a quarter century's restless and unpredictable creativity a formidable reputation as one of the most influential and articulate of American artists," read the citation for Morris' degree, praising him for seeing "the artistic potential of mirrors and felt, tree stumps and highway embankments."

Morris was artist-in-residence at the college in 1977.

The citation for Moore's degree praised him for "rejecting the remorseless attitudes of the recent past and accepting the burden of history less as a mortgage on the imagination than as a challenge to enhanced creativity." The citation also spoke of his "playful and exuberant originality that inspires affection as much as it commands respect."

Human energy

"Buildings are the recipients of human energy," Moore began his address. "They must receive energy from people other than the builders — those who are going to inhabit them, ... even those employed by the state to make it difficult to get them built."

Architect Charles Moore received an honorary degree at Convocation. (LeBauer)

Moore spoke of putting energy into a building which would return to the people who invested in it, "like bread cast upon the waters coming back as club sandwiches."

He then spoke of the modernist tradition that has dominated the twentieth century. "It was in 1915 when the (modernist) revolution started to take place," he said. Much of architecture and classical art "became musty. It seemed right that these things should be banished for a while." Speaking of his own education, he said "I was, of course, brought up in that tradition."

Borrow and steal

"I could travel three-fourths of the way across the United States," from Michigan to California, he continued. "I would not see a single building we had studied ... what we were about was, for God's sake, originality." He said this emphasis is still one of the major problems facing architecture.

"It would be very nice for everyone if architects would relax a little and stop trying to be so original," Moore said. In describing the work of recent architects who consider tradition, he quoted T.S. Eliot's phrase "the good poet borrows, the great poet steals."

Moore added, "It seems about time to see if we just can't join the rest of humanity and make things that fit."

Interview

Charles W. Moore

Record reporter Susan Christenson recently interviewed architect Charles Moore. Moore designed the newly-completed additions and renovations to the Williams College Museum of Art, along with his associate Robert Harper of Centerbrook Architects and Planners, and was awarded an honorary degree at Convocation on Sunday. The following are excerpts from the interview:

Architect Charles Moore

Record: One of your architectural goals is to respect the history of a building by maintaining aspects of the past while creating very modern structures as well. How did you coordinate innovative, modern ideas with the Greek-revival style in your renovation of the 1846 rotunda?

Moore: Well, I guess like everybody I get more conservative as I get older. But it seems to me that although my generation of architects was brought up to think that we had to be original, in some way push aside everything else and make some new thing, less and less does it seem to me that that is right. Of course, a museum or any building has to work well within the limits of its time, meaning they have to be fireproofed, they should have humidity control and all sorts of things like that ... Part of our task is to make those things happen.

Another part of our task is to make the building a little bit bigger so that it can hold more stuff. Past that, I don't see any need to to try to lash our own personalities against the 26-year old architect who did the rotunda in the first place, or anybody else who did the pieces in the first place. So I am most happy to make something that does fit and is interesting itself. I am anxious to have it this way to make it touch people. A lot of what we've been remodeling is old, of various ages.

Record: Would you almost like people not to be able to distinguish between what is old and modern?

Moore: No, I'm happy enough if people can distinguish. I had a teacher once long ago who used to say that building a building is like a young person riding with an older person on a train. It was not nice not to be congenial and to defer to the older person, but it was not at all necessary to ape them. I certainly believe that a building does not have to be just like the old one, in fact it can't, but that it ought to remain congenial (with it). I stayed last night with some friends of mine in an old house that they have, and the greatest thing about it was that it didn't feel like a stupid old house and now the new part. It all felt like part of the same house. The rooms had been made to be just as pleasant in the old parts as in the new parts. I think that comes as close to how things ought to be. When we were doing the new part of the building, the cliff at the bottom of the building wasn't too dictative to the new building that went along with it, and it was at an angle to the door and made a triangular space between, which we were thrilled with because it was kind of unprogrammed space. For me, it is one of the nicest parts of the building, and I was delighted when I knew that art students sit on the stairs and eat their lunch and things like that.

Record: Are you worried about what will happen to that back space once the new gym is completed?

Moore: I think it is going to stick up in the way of the view all right, but they have to make the gym as high as they have to make it.

Record: Could you speak to your use of playful, imaginative aspects to embody a fantasy element in your design for the college museum, particularly in regards to the atrium?

The nice thing about the atrium is that there wasn't any real program for it. It's just something we picked up because it was best to put the new building there and that gave us the chance to have something. It doesn't really have a specific function like a gallery space. It is just a space that is indoors, which is important in this climate, and it is a big space that is not already used up with specific uses. It's a nice place to have a party, or sit on the steps, or wander around, or get some distance.

Record: There does seem to be two trends going on in your designing, one being a use of the imaginative and playful element and the other being a need to make buildings functional by creating useful spaces, particularly

Renovations complete

WCMA reopens

by Debbie Snyder

When he was 14 years old, Charles Moore wrote in a notebook the steps he would take to become an architect: the college he would attend, the cost of tuition there, the courses he would take, the ideal population of a town for his practice, the number of hours he would work, the amount of money he would earn.

The pages of that notebook hang in an exhibition, "The Architecture of Charles Moore: Buildings and Projects 1949-1986)," in the newly-renovated Williams College Museum of Art (WCMA), and demonstrate the determination of the internationally renowned architect, who designed both his life and the museum with an impressive sense of direction.

The museum reopened on Sunday after six years and $8 million worth of expansion and renovations. One hour before the opening, Moore and sculptor Robert Morris received honorary degrees at Williams's convocation.

Morris's new work, "Hearing," was recently purchased by the museum. It consists of a lead bed and a galvanized table, both electrically charged, and a copper chair filled with boiling water. "There's no question about it," said WCMA Director Thomas Krens. "The piece is an aggressive piece. It is possibly the most important piece of post-modernist art."

"Hearing" occupies the domed octagon, a restored room in the oldest part of Lawrence Hall. The octagon is now one of 14 galleries of various shapes in the museum.

Moore said that the restriction of having to design around an existing structure has resulted in a better museum. "It's probably a nicer building than if we had started from scratch," he said.

Moore designed the first phase of museum construction in 1983, and he and architect Robert Harper, of Centerbrook Architects and Planners, collaborated on the second phase.

The reopening of the Williams College Museum of Art is highlighted by a retrospective exhibition of the architecture of Charles Moore. (LeBauer)

In addition to the Morris piece and the exhibition on Moore's work, the museum will feature "Raphael to Beuys: European Master Drawings from the Kunst museum Dusseldorf" and "Maurice and Charles Prendergast," as well as the WCMA's permanent collection.

The master drawings consist of 55 works by 15th-20th century Italian and German artists. This is the first time that they have been exhibited in the United States. Krens said the museum sought the works in part because, "We wanted to indicate our ability to work with museums outside of the United States." He added, "I really think it's an awesome exhibition."

The Prendergast exhibition occupies the Prendergast Galleries, and is drawn from the collection of Mrs. Charles Prendergast. "This exhibition is very special, because it is the first opportunity any museum has had to show a significant part of the most important collection of privately held works by the Prendergasts," said Carol Clark, curator of the exhibition.

The permanent collection is marked by the juxtapostion of diverse pieces within each gallery. Krens said the museum concerns itself more with the quality of the pieces than whether or not pieces in the same room are from the same period or medium. "We look for the finest examples of contemporary art that we can find," he said. He cited the recently acquired Self Portrait by Andy Warhol, stating that it is essential for any exhibition of Andy Warhol's works by any museum.

Two features of Moore's plan for the museum that do not yet exist because of a lack of funds are the courtyard, to be designed by Moore, and a fallen column sculpture, to be designed by Anne and Patrick Poirier. Moore explained that the column will start at the front of Lawrence Hall and continue around the side of the building, leading people to the museum entrance.

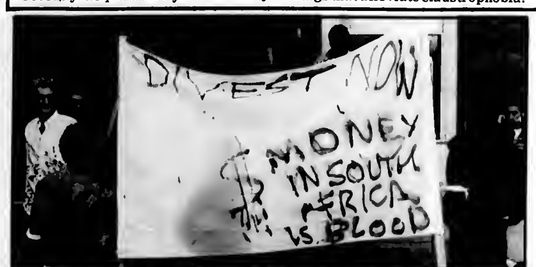
Moore's exhibition consists of four parts, focusing on the different aspects of his work. Moore said, "It's in retrospective, which makes it seem like I should probably lie down and die now."

The first part, "Houses for the Architect", shows eight houses which Moore designed for himself. He describes them as "places where I could do things for myself that I couldn't do for other people, or I'd be sued. The second section, "Houses as the Center of the World" displays houses he designed for clients.

The section entitled "Frivolous and Serious Play" reflects Moore's humorous approach to architecture. "I have a reputation," Moore noted, "sometimes good and sometimes not, for being playful."

"Fitting", the final section, demonstrates the architect's belief that a building should belong to its setting. Moore said, "In an increasingly cluttered world, it's important to do things that alleviate claustrophobia."

The interior of the newly-renovated WCMA.



with museums designed primarily to hold works of art. How did you coordinate these two aspects in your design for the college museum?

Moore: I guess that it is just direct with the galleries of this museum being simple backgrounds for the art works that are in them. They do their thing by being humidified correctly and I think they make a nice sequence of spaces so that coming to the museum and going to gallery after gallery is a deeper experience. And then there is that place in the middle where our bets are off and fantasies can begin.

The entrance towards the inner court is, I hope, one day going to be part of that with the Poirlers' sculpture. I was interviewing them (the Poirlers) and talking about what they might do, and they had done something in the south of France with a huge column with the top off, and the notion of having that fallen down just right so as to reach around to the otherwise invisible door. I think if they do it just right ... it will reach around and into the door which they (the museum) did, I think, brilliantly to put the big banners on the building now so that it is the only thing really that makes it clear that that is where you are supposed to go.

Record: Were you originally going to have the entrance way in the rotunda?

Moore: At the very first, we were going to. The director before Tom Krens (the current WCMA director) was anxious to use that north door to the rotunda as an entrance. It was very impractical because there is no vestibule and no way of making some sort of an entrance stuck on that would not destroy the building ... If you don't use that, that really leaves only where we've managed to get to it. We've had all kinds of notions, most of them much too big to carry out, on how to sneak you out there.

A demonstration protesting South African apartheid and supporting divestment was held outside the art museum during the Saturday afternoon opening reception for students, faculty and staff. (Camp)

Lecture examines Moore innovation in his architecture

by Meredith Miller

"Charles Moore: A Personal Perspective" was the title of a lecture presented last Thursday by Heinrich Klotz, director of the Deutsches Architekturmuseum in Frankfurt. The talk, one of the events marking the reopening of the Williams College Museum of Art, addressed the work as well as the life of the Museum's architect. The lecture combined slides and personal observations of Moore, a friend of Klotz's for the past twenty years, with a discussion of his major works, such as Sea Ranch in California and the Plazza d'Italia in New Orleans.

Klotz said of his friend, who is known for juxtaposing classical and modern elements in his buildings, "I think he himself is a walking irony." To illustrate this point, he showed a slide of the architect sporting a set of Victorian whiskers. "He consciously ironized himself," said Klotz. "He does not want to be a monument, but sometimes he tries to be, to irritate people."

According to Klotz, Moore was the first architect to take into account the issues of urban sprawl and unfriendly-looking social housing that developed in the late modernist period. He reacted against "container architecture where one box stands next to the other, without any idea of wholeness, of relationship."

Klotz maintained that Moore also eschewed the insistence on pure functionality and efficiency championed by the architects of Walter Gropius and Le Corbusier, preferring a more humane style of building. Moore, Klotz declared was, with Robert Venturi, the first architect who "managed to get away from a boring tradition of corrupted modernist architecture."

"Relativization"

In 1961, showing characteristic humor, Moore added a spare, modern-style facade to a pre-existing nineteenth century structure, creating the Citizens Savings Bank Building in San Francisco. He added a French mansard roof to one side to match the original facade, including a Victorian-looking dormer window. The "relativization," or making the new building pay attention to the character of the old, defied modernism's demand for pure form. "This looked completely different from anything that it was allowed to do at this time," said Klotz.

The lecture emphasized ways in which Moore's buildings, such as the Sea Ranch Condominiums on the California Coast, were conscious of and in harmony with their environments. Materials such as wood shingles blend into the setting and the original local architecture. The buildings follow the natural lines of the cliff where they are located.

The buildings are also conscious of the needs of those who live in them, especially a person's need to feel his or her environment is a specific, special place. Klotz described the center of Moore's credo as being the statement "I make places." "These are very identifiable places," emphasized Klotz, places that give one "a very special feeling that you are centered somewhere."

Klotz pointed out that Moore's use of incongruous elements stems not from a mere fascination with Victorian forms, but from a desire to create "architectural events" that make people think about their surroundings.

Historical motifs

To illustrate this desire, Klotz showed slides of the Kresge College facilities in California, where a container for trash cans was designed to resemble a rostrum for making speeches, and Roman arches were designed out of thin wood resembling cardboard. Similarly, at the Plazza d'Italia in New Orleans, Corinthian columns are topped by neon lights.

Klotz called these "monuments in quotation marks," that enabled Moore to collect motifs out of history, and bring them into the present, without bringing in the elements of hierarchy and power that were associated with them. A conflict is created between the present and the past, between the viewer's expectations and his experience of the architecture.

Klotz concluded his talk by re-emphasizing the opposition Charles Moore had faced from his colleagues, especially concerning the extravagant Plazza d'Italia, where masks of the architect's face spit water into the fountain. He ended by thanking Moore, who was seated in the front row of the audience, for his courageous innovations.

Williams Trio displays considerable potential

by Alex Oh

The Williams Trio, in honor of Convocation and the reopening of the Williams Museum of Art, presented a concert on the evening of Thursday, October 16, in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

The Trio, comprised of Doris Stevenson, Pianist, Carol Lieberman, Guest Violinist, and Douglas Moore, Cellist, performed a varied array of repertoire, including George Rochberg's Ricordanza, Beethoven's Trio in E-flat Major, Opus 1, No.1, and Mendelssohn's Trio No.1 in D Minor, Opus 49.

The concert opened with the Rochberg's resonant, melodic statement of the cello with a delicate piano backdrop. The Ricordanza, a soliloquy for cello and piano, was brief, yet rich in sound and melody. Rochberg's harmonies were carried out wonderfully as Stevenson and Moore exchanged musical interludes; at times, however, the melodies were bit muddled by unclear pedalling and incoherent phrasing on the part of the pianist.

Slipping intonation

The quasi cadenza for the cello was performed solemnly, with all due motions, but it lacked the resonance and the sense of fluency inherent in Rochberg. Also, Moore seemed to experience slight problems in technique as intonation slipped near the end of the cadenza.

Continued on Page 11

Plan will aid second year faculty

by Beth Broadrup

Freshmen and other new students are not the only ones at Williams to feel a bit daunted at the prospect of beginning an educational career here. In their first years at Williams, faculty, too, feel a certain pressure.

As President Oakley explains, Williams is a hard place to begin a teaching career, as students' expectations of professors are "very high." Oakley cited another reason for this pressure in the "comparative novelty" of Williams' nature as a small liberal arts school, especially to faculty coming from an "increasingly broad array of institutions, both graduate and undergraduate." He noted that a college like Williams represents a "new encounter, inside and outside the classroom."

In an attempt to alleviate this problem, the president recently proposed a program targeting second-year faculty that would help them cope with the pressures, course load and challenges of teaching at Williams. Oakley noted that second-year faculty will be involved because first-year faculty need time to "get their feet on the ground," and also that pressure is often greater in the second year of teaching.

The first aspect of the program will attempt to relieve pressure on faculty by offering course relief. A lessened course load will give new professors more time to concentrate on developing effective teaching methods and skills. Secondly, the program will bring the inexperienced faculty together in an informal seminar group led by three senior faculty members of "proven teaching skill, wisdom, and experience," as Oakley explains. The second-year faculty will benefit from getting to know each other in a group setting.

The senior faculty, through close contact with their newer colleagues, will acquaint them with issues such as Williams' history, current developments or even the challenges of being a faculty advisor. The senior faculty will be especially valuable to new faculty in smaller departments, where less advice is available to them.

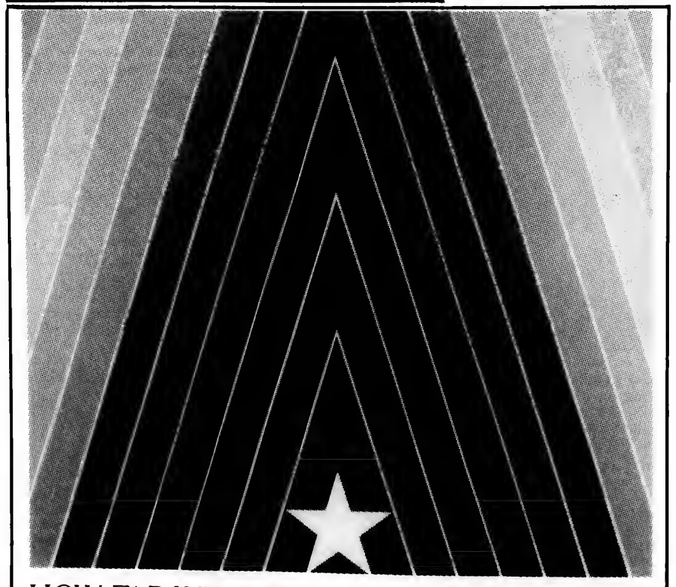
President Francis Oakley has proposed a plan to ease transition of new faculty members to teaching at Williams.

The seminar, which would meet throughout the year, will focus on concerns new professors share. The group will be able to shape its own agenda, but Oakley expects that some topics discussed will include the strengths and limitations of various teaching techniques and the challenges posed by teaching students of different genders and races. Outside specialists may also speak to the group.

Oakley believes that this "pooling of knowledge and experience in a comfortable setting" will benefit the new faculty greatly. He says this attempt to "institutionalize the meeting of faculty" will be an invaluable system of support for new professors.

Oakley has a long-term goal for the program, which will begin in the 1987-88 school year. In the next decade, many professors that entered teaching before the educational "revolution" of the 1960's, when college

Continued on Page 13



tech systems
audio & video
Offering Quality Component Systems Since 1974
170 North Street Bennington, Vermont 05201
Mon - Sat. 10-6 (802) 447-0350

Collectors Warehouse
ANTIQUES
Furniture Glassware
Jewelry Kitchen Collectibles
Lace Lamps Linen
Postcards Prints
Quilts
Records Sheet Music
Tools Toys Vintage Clothing
COLLECTIBLES
Literally a warehouse every kind of collector will enjoy. We are located off Route 7 next to Le Country Restaurant in the McClelland Press Building
105 North Street (Rt. 7)
Williamstown, Mass.
413-458-9686

WILLIAMSTOWN
CAPTAIN'S TABLE
The Lobster House
Of The Berkshires
Fresh Live Lobsters . . .
. . . and so much more
Routes 2 and 7
Williamstown, MA.
(413) 458-5645

Shirl's STUDIO 2 HAIRSTYLING

Complete Hair Care
For Men - Women - Children
Open Tues. thru Sat. 9 to 6
Eves. by Appointment
877 Simonds Rd.
Williamstown
Special Price $12.00
with Student I.D.
★ Hair cut and blow dry reg. $15.00
★ We do punk or conservative
★ Open Wed. and Thurs. evenings

HOW FAR WILL YOUR TALENT TAKE YOU?
Apply for the TIME College Achievement Awards and find out. TIME Magazine is searching for 100 college juniors who have distinguished themselves by their excellence, in academics and, more importantly, exceptional achievement outside the classroom.
The top 20 winners will be awarded $2,500 and profiled in a special promotional section of TIME. Eighty finalists will receive $250 each. All 100 students will be given first consideration for internships with participating corporations.
Deadline for applications is December 31, 1986. Details at your dean's office or call 1-800-523-5948. In Pennsylvania, call 1-800-637-8509.
TIME
The College Achievement Awards

Williams Trio

Continued from Page 10

The Beethoven fared better, although it started out in a weak fashion. With the addition of Lieberman on the violin, the Trio performed a bouncy and playful version of the Allegro. The arpeggios were well-handled with just the right touch of lightness and humor, although at times, the violin's delicate runs were drowned out by the harsh, almost banging sound of the piano. In addition, Stevenson sounded unclear and brassy on her trills and runs.

The Adagio Cantabile was an improvement, as the beautiful harmonies of cello and violin were voiced together; the movement was movingly fluent at times, and overall, was a clear indication of the high potential of the Trio.

The mood suddenly changed as the group tumbled into the festive and carefree Scherzo . Despite a boisterous performance on the part of Douglas Moore, this movement was the weakest of all four, as the Trio sounded incoherent in many places.

Cooperative grace

The Finale provided the saving grace; the delightfully pleading melody with its sense of urgency was complimented with light, yet wavelike roar of the piano; by this time, the Trio seemed to have settled down comfortably, to ensemble playing, as each member displayed brilliance and grace. There were decisive, yet cooperative playing on the individual player's part, and the Trio culminated with an energetic and triumphant finish.

The audience eagerly anticipated the return of the Trio after the intermission; the famous Mendelssohn Trio would have been the perfect finish to an already impressive performance.

The piece started out quite well, with Stevenson displaying her technical prowess on the keyboard in the Molto Allegro; Stevenson seemed quite at home in the Romantic style whereas in Beethoven, she seemed to experience certain difficulties. The second half of the concert, however, grew progressively worse as the Andante started out a trifle fast to be tranquil and then the Scherzo became too swift as to the point of frenzy.

There were, of course, flashes of brilliance; Lieberman and Moore's beautiful interplay of melodies their sense of musical unity and communication in the Andante was quite visible to the audience. Also, the ending of the third movement was delightfully subtle and forgiving. The Finale, however, was less than impressive.

The entire second half of the concert was considerably affected by Stevenson's careless timing of the individual movements: she did not allow for enough time in between movements for the audience to fully disgest the musical idea of the previous movement and to get ready for the next. Without this needed 'break,' the Mendelssohn became incoherent, and many musical ideas were lost or forgotten.

'Macbett': fast-paced and full of surprises

by Chuck Goforth

Williamstheatre opened its season last week with Eugene Ionesco's "Macbett," and has turned the theatre of the absurd into the theatre of surprise. These two are not entirely incompatible. Director J. Bernard Bucky seems to believe, at least in this case, that the best way to serve us Ionesco is quickly, and on a sterling platter, with a break-away bottom and rubber handles. And as long as the surprises keep coming, this is a lithe and effective production.

There are problems, however, with trying to maintain two hours of surprise. For the most part, both the direction and the acting are good, and when both are succeeding at the same time, the show is smooth and evocative. However, when either Bucky or his cast momentarily weaken, which does happen occasionally, the cracks in the surface reveal a strangely incomplete understructure.

Bucky's approach is very well suited to much of this play. It clearly and memorably communicates its points about the meaninglessness of blood and power, killing and victory. But there are other parts of this play, although the message is congruent, that require deeper, more complete interpretation and character, and that require less emphasis on pace and surprise, to be as effective. This production is insensitive to some of these elements. In trying to "pace" over them, it falls short and, ironically, loses momentum. This happens mostly in the second act, leaving the audience to wonder if there are meanings in this play that go deeper than a denial of meaning.

The actors, in light of this approach, have little opportunity to really find a character, but the cast is strong and deftly handles most of the problems. Blake Robison '88 captures what moments he can to create the once noble, then swaggering Macbett, and in the face of the more typical, quick, and varied scenes, deftly holds on to as much of the character as is possible. Ben Voorhies '88, whose acting is consistently outstanding, gives a solid and amusing performance as the cringing Duncan. But he doesn't ever really achieve the brightness and depth that are typical of him; perhaps he was the one most affected by this production's neglect of its characters.

Standing beside these two is newcomer Melissa Levine '90 as Lady Duncan. Despite the fact that she's beautiful, she can act! She more than holds her own among the more experienced cast members. She is responsible for more than one role, and the skill with which she switches from one to the other, and the final clarity of each one, amidst the blinding speed of it all, are reasons to hope that she continues to appear in Williams theatre performances.

Both Macbett and Lady Duncan have their counterparts. Although Eric Burns '90 and Jill Shulman '87 give satisfactory

Continued on Page 13

Napolitano's
Italian Restourent and Pizzaria
Oasis Plaza
North Adams, Mass 01247
Serving fine Italian Food and Pizza
Tuesday and Wednesday only with this advertisement
Free Pitcher of Pepsi with any Lg. or Xlg Pizza in our dining room

Dox
Rt. 2, Williamstown
413-458-4420
APPLE • IBM
SOFTWARE
COMMODORE

Capers
Have you tried our new menu?
For Starters
CHICKEN FINGERS
CHICKEN WINGS
FRIED BRIE with almonds and honey mustard
Burgers
TEX MEX with Cheddar Cheese quacamole and jalapenos
HOPKINS HOUDINI with ham mushrooms and swiss cheese
Sandwiches
PHILLY STEAK AND CHEESE
BERTHA'S BEEF
ROCHELLA REUBEN
HOT PASTRAMI
Entrees (after 5 p.m.)
CHICKEN MONTEREY
PRALON PIE
CURRIED LAMB
Watch the World Series on our new color T.V.
402 Main St. 458-9180

The Investment Banking Division
of Goldman, Sachs & Co.
invites all interested Seniors to an information session on its Financial Analyst Program
Monday, October 27, 1986
Williams College
Office of Career Counseling
7:00 p.m.

EAT WEDNESDAY DINNER IN MISSION PARK or DODD HOUSE!

College Council Sponsored

MEATLESS MEAL

Wednesday, October 22

— Every portion served without meat saves almost $1.00 —
— All proceeds will be given to needy Berkshire County residents —

WE DEPEND ON YOUR PARTICIPATION!

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

Welcome Freshman Parents!

Come see our fine selection of books, including:
classic to modern literature for every taste

Come visit us soon.

Open from 8:30 a.m. - 9 p.m.
Sunday 10-5

Located next to THE LOG

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, antique looking jewelry.

TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

Serving Complimentary Hot Cider
All Day Saturday

76 SPRING STREET·WILLIAMSTOWN

MONDAY·SATURDAY 9 am·9 pm

SUNDAY 10-5

Telephone (413) 458-5007

'Macbett'

Continued from Page 11

performances as Banco and "someone who shall remain a secret," neither really balances against Robison and Levine, especially when these four characters are repeating each other word for word, or talking together for long periods of time.

Some of the smaller parts, being much less in need of serious acting efforts, and therefore much more in harmony with the overall beat of the show, were very well executed for what they were. Particularly noteworthy was the hilarious duet which opened the show, Glamiss and Candor, played by Craig Breon '87 and Jon Gray '90. Julie Welborn '87 and Kate Schiele '89 also deserve mention. The casting of Schiele in the part of Macol (who cannot be explained without imperiling the final plot twist) was a little strange because of her size in juxtaposition with the character's purpose. Although this may have been intentional, it didn't quite work.

The set and lighting design are creative and sensitive to Bucky's point of view. It is noteworthy that Lenore Doxsee '87 is designing lights that are both independently forceful, but simultaneously sensitive to the overall design of the show, and is working beside Arden Fingerhut.

In the end, the strength of the actors definitely carries much of this very busy play, and the direction, though not as ready to switch gears as it might be, is communicative and, at times, piercing. The lighting and set designs complete this production to make it very much worth seeing. "Macbett" abounds with interesting imagery, provocative performances, even some terrific jokes, including the oldest ones like, "you can say that again." And the visual humor and all the business are great when they're working.

Again, when the message as seen by the director is one with all the depth of "man's impulse to kill as an exorcism of his own fear of mortality," perhaps the "element of surprise cannot win the war entirely."

"Macbett" will be performed again on October 23, 24, and 25.

Faculty plan

Continued from Page 10

enrollment tripled, will retire. Faculty that began teaching after this period tend to have more specialized interests than their predecessors. This program, as Oakley states, "looks to building continuities across a period of large differences in the faculty of American education during a major shift in personnel."

Initial reactions of current second-year faculty are enthusiastic about the program's benefits. David Haberman, assistant professor of religion, said he would appreciate a course reduction, more time to develop teaching skills and the advice of senior faculty. Marsha Altschuler, an assistant professor of biology, expressed her opinion that there is a real need for a support program for second-year faculty at Williams. She feels that, under the guidance of outstanding senior advisors, the second-year faculty will profit from this program going "hand in hand with the teaching experience."

One special aspect of Williams is its extraordinary emphasis on teaching, as Peter Lipton, assistant professor of philosohy, noted. Lipton's initial reaction to the program was one of disappointment — disappointment that he had come to Williams a year too soon to participate in the program!

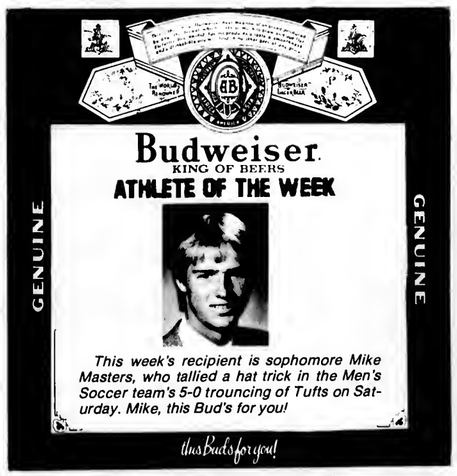
W. Soccer

Continued from Page 15

Laueren Barnett only 55 seconds after the Eph score. Up until this point, the defense had been outstanding, but their play went for naught, as the game ended in a frustrating 1-1 tie.

Against Albany two weeks ago, Chris Boddicker was the star of the game, recording her second hat trick of the year, accounting for all of the game's scoring in the 3-0 Eph win. Boddicker got assists from Kelly Collins '90 and Madore and scored once unassisted. Raquell Holmes replace the ailing Joyce Rogers in the net and made seven saves in her first collegiate shutout.

The team continues its travels on the road this week, playing its fourth consecutive away game against Mt. Holyoke tomorrow. The Ephs return home Saturday against North Adams in a 11:00 contest.



HIKING BOOT SALE
for men and women

- Danner Light Gore-tex® $74.50
  Waterproof and breathable with a Vibram® Kletterlift sole for great traction. Reg $115.00
- Asolo SuperScout $59.00
  Silicone waterproofed suede and coated Cordura® with light insulation. Reg. $97.00
- Asolo Voyageur $59.00
  Silicone treated suede and blue Cordura® with Asoflex® insole and steel shank. Reg. $68.00

the Mountain Goat
Unique Clothing, Bicycles & Cross-Country Skis
130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass
(413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m., Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.

LEVI'S

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

SPORTS INC.
SKI PACKAGES
ADULT PACKAGES

*ROSSIGNOL E550	$195
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$179.95 SAVE $145
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$325
*DYNASTAR VISA	$215
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$179.95 SAVE $165.00
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$345
*DYNASTAR CX	$250
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$259.95 SAVE $120
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$380
*ROSSIGNOL 750	$250
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$259.95 SAVE $120
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$380
*DYNASTAR SUPRA	$265
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$259.95 SAVE $135
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$395
*DYNASTAR SL	$275
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$279.95 SAVE $125
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$405

JR. PACKAGES

*ROSSIGNOL TEAM U.S.A.	$85
SALOMON 137	$65	$119.95 SAVE $67 WITH BOOT $169.95
SCOTT JR. POLES	$16
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$182
*DYNASTAR BORA	$90
SALOMON 137	$65	$119.95 SAVE $62 WITH BOOT $169.95
SCOTT JR. POLES	$16
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$187
*ROSSIGNOL STS JR.	$120
SALOMON 137	$65	$139.95 SAVE $77 WITH BOOT $189.95
SCOTT JR. POLES	$16
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$217

ADULT CROSS-COUNTRY PACKAGE $89.95

JR. CROSS-COUNTRY PACKAGE $69.95

Lay-A-Way Now!!!

Don't Forget! All our Skis • Boots • Bindings • Poles are on sale individually too.

Always Free Parking at the Door

sports INC.

VISA MasterCard

Allendale Shopping Center
Pittsfield, Mass.
Mon.-Fri. 10-9, Sat. 10-6
413-442-1824

107 Main St.
North Adams, Mass.
Mon.-Sat. 9:30-5:30, Thurs. 'til 9:00
413-664-1008

Tennis

Losing its fifth stright contest, the women's tennis team dropped eight of nine matches on Saturday to Tufts, the defending New England champions.

The sole winner for the day was sophomore Mary Montgomery, playing the number two position after a shuffle of the ranks. In a very close first set, Montgomery and her opponent, Diane Intrivia, stayed even at four games apiece. The ninth game of the set proved to be the breaking point as Montgomery worked Intrivia's weak backhand.

Montgomery capitalized on short groundstrokes by closing in at the net for easy put-aways to the backhand corner. With the 5-4 edge, Montgomery sealed the first set, winning the next game easily. "It was really close in the first set. After I won the first set, I felt upliftted mentally," Montgomery said. Intrivia never recovered and dropped the second set 6-1.

Playing at the number four position, Captain Katie Kerr '87 staved off defeat as she went to a tiebreaker in the first set against her opponent Lynn Maloney. In the second and third sets Maloney rallied 6-4 and 6-0, respectively to win the match. Missy Crouchley '89 kept her match close in the first set against Kristen Collar but dropped the second set 6-1 in her defeat.

The doubles' team of Kathy Paper '89 and Annabel Sheinberg '89 also went to a tiebreaker in the first set to hold off defeat. Their opponents, Lisa Burch and Robin Natiss held on to win the second and third sets.

Coach Sean Sloane commented on the match: "The courts were much faster, and Tufts was tougher for us."

The team hosted Wesleyan this afternoon and travels to Union tomorrow as they close out the season and start looking forward to the New Englands.

— Megan McNeill

Golf

Last Saturday and Sunday the golf team finished up the 1986 fall season at the Dartmouth Invitational, where they scored an impressive third-place finish in a field of ten behind only Dartmouth and Skidmore. The team's two day score of 611 was highlighted by sophomore Tim Frechette's 148 and 156's by sophomore Ian Lapey and senior Tim McKone.

Dartmouth was only one site of the Eph linksters' several fine performances this fall. Earlier in the week the team had an outstanding second place finish against Holy Cross in a three way meet against Holy Cross and Harvard.

The team's final two performances and its overall record of 58-16-1 are just two indications of the team's consistent performance throughout the season. Coach Rick Pohle saw the solid performances of Lapey and Frechette as very "encouraging down the road and next season."

Coach Pohle also said that the seniors performed as expected and that he is in the enviable position of having many capable players. He expressed the hope that the situation "will continue as such." While some teams have only three or four players and are thereby limited in deciding who to play, Pohle can pick from among several strong players. The team is now looking forward to the spring trip and season when the Eph linksters hope they can continue the winning ways they established this fall.

— Chuck Samuelson

Water polo

Over fall break, the water polo team traveled to Amherst to compete in a tournament with Dartmouth, RPI, and archrival Amherst. The Ephs finished second behind Amherst, setting their overall record at 4-5.

The Ephs' first played RPI and emerged from the water with a 12-6 win. Dave Cantor '89 showed his versatility by scoring three goals from all areas of the pool. Goalie Jean Sohn '88 repeatedly frustrated the Engineers by lunging sideways and deflecting strong RPI shots.

After a disappointing loss to Amherst — the Ephs' third match of the year with the Jeffs — Williams took out its frustrations on Dartmouth with a 19-12 win. Both teams displayed an explosive offense, but the Ephs, led by freshman Andy Kaplinsky's seven goals, played enough defense to drown the Big Green. John Cooke rifled in several strong goals, while Dane Dudley '89 displayed his powerful arm while scoring on three blistering shots.

Meanwhile, the B-team continued its outstanding play, defeating Hotchkiss 10-8 for its third straight win. Freshman Dan Snyder again played well, scoring three goals, but it was hole man Jeff Reardon '89 who stunned the Hotchkiss goalie with a rocketing skip shot late in the game to put the Ephs ahead.

Next Friday, the Ephs play their final home game against Amherst at 7:30.

— Jim Jordan

Cycling

The cycling team traveled to New Haven before break to participate in its first Eastern Collegiate Cycling Federation race. Over 200 riders from 13 colleges were entered in the race.

Molly Bourne '87 finished as the high Eph finisher, taking fifth in the women's race. In the men's B race, Dirk Bergstrom '89 sprinted into 17th place, passing his RPI opponent at the line. Junior Paul Danielson crashed in one of the descending hairpins while on a break with the six leaders, while Ted Lohr '87 tumbled into the woods on a similar curve.

Senior Tom Fitzgibbon grinded his way to sixth place in his 17-mile race, while Jason Boro '90 and David Greenberg '88 turned in respectable 10th and 11th place finishes.

Team manager Robert Mecarini was pleased with the performance of the Eph cyclists: "The team has considerable depth, and our performance at Yale really boosted morale."

Women runners

Gearing up for the Little Three meet this weekend at Wesleyan, the women's cross-country team took fourth in a twelve-team Smith Invitational. Senior Becky Conklin again led the Eph charge by finishing in 13th place.

"This was our best meet of the year so far," said coach Bud Fisher. "We beat both Trinity and Amherst, and they had each beaten us at the NESCAC meet."

Following Conklin in the Eph scoring were junior Sarah Pierce in 15th, junior Anne Knott in 21st, senior Kate Pugh in 27th, and sophomore Sara Hams in 29th. For the meet, Smith finished victorious on their home course, taking first with 74 points. Bryant College followed with 93 points, followed by Wheaton with 99. The Ephs were only six points behind with 105 points.

"We'll give them a run for their money," said Fisher, speaking of the Little Three meet this weekend. "We'll at least make it close."

WUFO

The Williams Ultimate Frisbee Organization knocked off all challengers Saturday to claim the title in a tournament hosted by SUNY-Purchase. Led by president Chris Jones '88, the Ephs defeated Bard College, SUNY-Binghamton, Wesleyan, and Columbia.

In their first game against Bard, WUFO experienced some difficulty adjusting to the wind but pulled out a 13-7 victory. The second game against SUNY proved to be more of a challenge, as SUNY made a strong charge before falling 13-10.

The third game was against Wesleyan. WUFO started out quickly, jumping to a 4-0 lead on the way to a 7-1 halftime edge. In the second half, great defensive play by Hal Hermanson '89 and excellent handling by Prof. Dave Levine, Jamie Garnish, Mike Costantino '85, and Jones made the difference. When the smoke cleared, the Ephs had won 13-6 and were Little Three champions.

The next game against Columbia was for the tournament championship. At the half, WUFO was up by only 7-5, and that margin eventually narrowed to 8-7. Columbia then put on a rush, which was stopped cold by several players, including Joe Esherick '88, Brian Cameron '89, Don Ousterhout '88, and Jim Hartnett '88. WUFO scored to make it 9-7, then went on a tear to win by 13-7. "Our defense was hot," said Jones, "and we were confident we would score."

— Johnnie Bellwoar

Le Jardin
Restaurant and Inn
"Charming Rooms And A Unique Dining Experience"
Excellent Cuisine - Superb Service
Charming Setting
— DINNER DAILY —
5 PM to 10 PM
Fabulous Sunday Brunch
10:30 AM to 1:30 PM
Closed Tuesdays
Major Credit Cards - Reservations Accepted
413-458-8032
413-458-3132
TWO MILES SOUTH OF WILLIAMSTOWN PROPER
ON RTES. 2 and 7

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717

Cassettes on Sale
Bob Dylan "Infidels" $3.99
Los Lobos "How Will the Wolf Survive $3.99
Cat Stevens "Greatest Hits II" $3.99
Music & Rhythm (with Gabriel) $3.99
Eric Clapton "Behind the Sun" $3.99
King Sunny Ade "Aura" $3.99
Rolling Stones "Aftermath," "Out of Our Heads" and others at $4.99 lots of good miles and monk at $2.99
(limited quantities on some)
Toonerville Trolley Records
131 Water St. 458-5229
Toonerville wants you to buy Dillan

Ephwomen fall to Tufts in overtime

by Stewart Verdery

After holding a high-powered Tufts attack scoreless for two full halves of play, the women's soccer squad finally yielded two Jumbo scores in the first overtime period Saturday, falling 2-0 in Medford. The game dropped the Ephs season record to 7-3-1.

On Saturday, Williams and Tufts matched missed scoring chances throughout the regulation time. The two teams fired a total of 31 shots on goal, but the scoreboard remained blank into the overtime periods. Eph goalkeeper Joyce Rogers '88 made 13 saves in the contest but allowed a pair of unstoppable goals in overtime to account for the final margin. Tufts' Laura Reichers scored nine minutes into the first extra period off a pass from Karen Humphreys. The Jumbos added an insurance goal four minutes later, and the Ephs could not rebound in the second overtime.

The game was described by forward Chris Boddicker '88 as "a hard game," in which the Ephs may have worn themselves out by the overtime periods. In an evenly matched game, the outcome seemed to ride solely on which squad was "more tired".

'We'll take the win'

Last Tuesday, the Ephwomen picked up their seventh victory of the season with a 2-1 edging of homestanding Connecticut College. Playing possibly their least inspired half of the year, the Ephs went into intermission trailing 1-0. However, senior co-captain Gigi Madore carried Williams back into the lead, scoring two goals early in the second half, the first off of a deflected shot and the second on a pass from Boddicker. The rest of the squad picked up the intensity, unloading 18 shots on goal in the second half. The Ephs escaped with a 2-1 victory.

In the traditional meeting with Amherst last Saturday, the Ephs and Jeffs battled through two overtimes before settling to a 1-1 tie. Once again, the Williams attack was not dead, launching 26 shots, but tallying only a single goal by Lori Schaen '89, her fifth of the year. The score came thirteen minutes into the second overtime and seemed to assure the Ephs of their third straight win.

Perhaps still caught up in the emotion of Schaen's goal, the Eph defense relaxed, yielding a game-tying shot to Amherst's

Continued on Page 13

Freshman Kelly Collins operates with the ball in a pack of Wesleyan opponents. (LeBauer)

Ruggers take tourney on Saturday at UMass

by Sean Brennan

Stalking onto the UMass campus at Amherst this weekend, the WRFC victoriously capped off a colorful weekend for the Maroon and Gold. The event was the New England Small College Tourney for the A-side and a match against UMass for the B-side.

The A's faced Bridgewater St. in their first game of the tourney, and Gene Mazzaro '87 started the scoring with a breakaway 50-yard run, leaving would-be tacklers behind and touching it down to make the score 4-0. Following a penalty kick by Bridgewater, Mark Tompkins '87 had a patented run into the try zone to make it 8-3.

David Koota '87 scored next as he picked off a line drive and zipped in to up the Eph lead to 14-3. Another try by Tompkins and a conversion by Tom Connally '87 gave the WRFC a victory at 20-3.

Williams faced North Adams State in the final game of the tournmament and romped to victory behind the spectacular play of Mike Goldstein '88, who demonstrated the talent of the Williams scrum as he scored three tries and dominated the pitch throughout the match.

Besides Goldstein's hat trick, Gary Sheff '87 and Tompkins both went in for tries, and Mazzaro finished what he had started by touching down a try walked in by the White Dogs' scrum. Williams took the tourney with a convincing 26-4 win over the Mohawks of North Adams.

The B-side meanwhile routed a strong and over-confident UMass team 26-0 in an excellent display of rugby. Starting off the scoring, Pierre Stewart '90 came from nowhere and exploded with a dazzling run the full length of the pitch for a try.

What followed was an incredible display of the Killer B's talent on the line as Andrew Anselmi '87, Andrew Harris, '88 Dennis E. Newcomer Jr., '87 and Mike Sullivan '87 all went in for tries. Also key in the unrelenting line play was Brian Baird '89 who played as one with Sullivan for the whole match. With crafty hooking by Chaz Benedict '89 and hard scrum play from Tom Higgins '88 and Chris Palmedo '89, the F's came out with the eye-opening win.

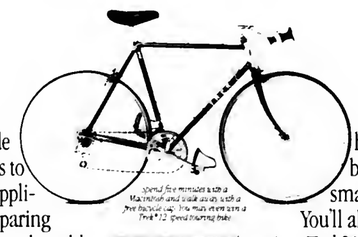
Elsewhere, the C- and D-sides had traveled to New Hampshire to play Dartmouth in two very close matches. The C-side match was neck and neck throughout with Charlie Hufford '89 getting Williams' only score by making a penalty kick to put the score at 3-0. With only five minutes left to play, however, Dartmouth converted on a try to win the match 6-3.

The D-side game started out with Williams being overpowered in the first half by the Green. The do-or-die D's came out fighting in the second, however, with Steve Feilx '90 and Tom Burke '89 finding the try zone to make it a game at 10-8, but time was called as the last try went down and another thrilling match went to Dartmouth.

Field hockey falls 2-1 to Jumbos

Failing to capitalize on a huge advantage in scoring opportunities, the field hockey team lost a crucial game to Tufts Saturday 2-1. The loss may keep the Ephs from qualifying for the NIAC post-season tournament.

Williams pounded 17 shots at the Jumbos, but could only tally a single goal. Kirsten Neuse '89 received a pass from Maureen Flaherty '90 and registered the Eph score. However, the Jumbos managed to push two of their three shots past Williams goalkeeper Win Holt '89. The squad consistently kept the ball in front of the Tufts goal, but could not find the tying score and fell 2-1. Obviously, "It was a game we should have won," according to Coach Chris Larson-Mason.



Earlier in the week, the squad had trounced Westfield St. 2-0 on Cole Field. Lisa Tenerowicz '88 continued her hot play with a goal and an assist. Her goal opened up the scoring, and later she fed Flaherty for the second and final goal of the contest. Keeper Holt had little activity, making a save on Westfield's only shot of the game.

Ten days ago, the Jeffs from Amherst fell before an inspired performance from the Ephwomen. In a "good performance," the Ephs outshot their opponents 12-2 in recording a 2-0 win. Freshman Amy Kershaw was the recipient of a pass from Neuse that resulted in the first Eph goal. Tenerowicz scored once again on an assist from Sue Scarborough '87 to round out the Eph offensive attack. The win secured the Little Three title for the second consecutive year, as the Ephs had earlier defeated Wesleyan.

Two weeks ago, Union upset the visiting Ephs 4-3 in overtime. Flaherty tallied two goals in the first half and Scarborough had a solo goal as Williams took a 3-2 lead at halftime. Union evened the score in the second half to send the meeting to extra time. In the ten minute period, Lin Tyree knocked in the winning goal. Again, the Ephs outshot their opponents 13-8, but it mattered little to victorious Union.

The squad finishes up the regular season tomorrow at Russell Sage. However, there is a slight chance the team may join Trinity, Middlebury, and Bowdoin in the NIAC tourney beginning next weekend. The bids were released yesterday and are issued with no regard to the team's outcome against Russell Sage.

Graduate Study in Public Policy
The LBJ School of Public Affairs at The University of Texas at Austin emphasizes public policy analysis, interdisciplinary research and summer internships in government agencies in its graduate programs:
— Master's Degree in Public Affairs
— Joint Degrees Program with the UT Law School
— Joint Degrees Program with the UT College of Engineering
— Joint Degrees Program with the UT Graduate School of Business
Financial aid and fellowships are available based on merit or need.
MEET WITH A REPRESENTATIVE AT
Williams College
Office of Career Counseling
October 27, 1986
9:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Two ways to leave the pack behind.

From grade point averages to grad school applications to preparing for the (gasp) real world, there's one thing that stands out about higher education.
The higher the education, the stiffer the competition.
But don't despair. Apple* has two ways to make sure the competition eats your dust.
Just take part in a five minute demonstration of the Macintosh™ personal computer.
You'll see how Macintosh can help you work better, faster and smarter.
You'll also qualify to win a Trek* 12-speed touring bike. Just by showing up.
What's more, you'll walk away with a free bicycle cap.
And the knowledge that you can dramatically change the course of History. Biology. And whatever else you may be studying.
Macintosh and a Trek bike.
Both will do more than help you get ahead. Both will take you anywhere you want to go.

Offer restrictions and details are available at your nearest participating dealer. Bicycle caps available while supply lasts. Trek® is a trademark of Trek Bicycle Corp. © 1986 Apple Computer Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. Macintosh is a trademark of Mcintosh Laboratory, Inc. and is being used with its express permission.

Football blasted 33-3 at Tufts; record at 3-2

by Al Mottur

Having jumped to fifth in the New England Division III rankings after an impressive win over Bowdoin, the football team traveled to Tufts this past Saturday with a 3-1 record and a large measure of confidence, only to fall by a 33-3 count.

As the game between Tufts and Williams got under way, it became readily apparent that things were not going to go the Ephs' way. After the Ephs grabbed a quick 3-0 lead on a short field goal from John Birgbauer '90, Tufts took control of the contest, scoring the remaining 33 points to turn the game into a blowout.

The lone score for the Ephs came on the game's first series as sophomore QB Scott Kennedy led his team downfield off the opening kickoff. The key play of the drive was its first: a 29 yard completion to senior split-end John Shaw which moved the ball across midfield, setting the stage for the Birgbauer kick. After the score, it was all Tufts, as the Jumbos raced to a commanding 23-3 halftime lead, amassing over 300 yards in offense, almost threetimes as many as Williams.

In the second half, little changed as Tufts continued the offensive barrage, which eventually totalled more than 450 yards. What makes this total all the more impressive is that Williams picked off four Jumbo passes as the Eph secondary continued to prey on the miscues of opposing quarterbacks.

28-7 over Bowdoin

Despite the loss, the team still stands at 3-2 with some impressive wins under its belt, one of which came a week and a half ago over Bowdoin, 28-7. In that game, the Ephmen dominated defensively, holding the Bears to -27 yards rushing, intercepting quarterback Ryan Stafford twice and recovering three fumbles. Fittingly, it was the defense which accounted for the Ephs' first score as cornerback Dave Clawson '89 snatched a Stafford pass and sprinted untouched for 33 yards and the opening touchdown.

On the Bears' next posession, the defense came up big again; this time as Scott Powers '88 entered the spotlight, picking off another Bowdoin pass and giving Williams the ball at midfield. Eleven plays later, freshman tailback Todd Streiter plunged into the end zone from the one, for a 14-0 lead.

After intermission, Eph coach Bob Odell took advantage of his team's lead by taking a look at some of his previously untested players. One of the main benefactors of this strategy was sophomore tailback Mike McLaughlin, who saw his first varsity action and responded by gaining 79 yards on 21 carries in little over a quarter of play, thereby earning himself the starting job against Tufts.

Explosive passing attack

Aside from the stellar play put in by the running game and the defense, the Eph passing attack had its best day of the year, as Kennedy completed 12 of 17 passes for 245 yards and two touchdowns. Both of the touchdowns came in the second half and served to put the game on ice, accounting for the final 28-7 margin.

The Ephs will return home this weekend for the first of two consecutive home games. This Saturday's contest will match Williams against Union, a team that is ranked ninth in the nation for Div. III schools with a 6-0 record.

In action earlier this year, Eph quarterback Scott Kennedy '89 runs the option with running backs Neal Chesley '90 (45) and Rob Miller '87 (20) right at his side. (LeBauer)

Senior co-captain Denny Wright challenges the Bates goalie as teammate Eric Von Estorff '87 looks for the pass. (LeBauer)

Tallies hat trick

Masters sparks Ephs over Tufts

by Greg Leeds

Mike Masters '89 scored three goals to lead the men's soccer team to a 5-0 victory on Saturday against Tufts. The win brings the Ephs' record to 4-3-2 following a victory over Bates and losses to Bowdoin and Dartmouth in the past two weeks.

Freshman Doug Brooks scored first for Williams, putting in a ball from six yards out halfway into the first period. Nikolai Nachamkin '88 had the assist. Masters and Scott Walker '87 then combined on two more goals as the Ephs pounded the Tufts defense with a deluge of three tallies in about two minutes. Walker assisted on both as Masters beat the Tufts goalkeeper one-on-one for both goals.

The fourth goal was scored by John Austin '87, following a header by Kurt Schroeder '88 which was initially saved but then dropped by the Jumbo goalie. Austin was there to put in his first of the season uncontested.

Masters gets hat trick

Approximately five minutes into the second half, Masters further agonized the helpless Tufts defense with the third strike in his offensive assault, capitalizing on a corner kick from Danny Calichman '90.

Rob Blanck '89 had the shutout in goal for the Ephs. His long punts were an advantage on Tufts' small field in setting up quick offensive plays. The victory apparently proved effective a new lineup set forth by coach Mike Russo. In order to provide more scoring punch and midfield defensive strength, Brooks and Masters were moved up to the front line while Nachamkin was moved back to center midfield.

Rout of Bates

Last Tuesday the team thoroughly outplayed Bates in a 3-0 win. Freshman Ambi Stern scored 2:30 into the game as the Eph offense assumed complete control of the game. Eric Von Estorff '87 scored with just 40 seconds left in the half on a shot which hit the far post and bounced in, much to his own surprise. "I thought I had missed it and started walking away, but then I heard the crowd and looked up, and it had actually gone in," he said.

Senior captains Denny Wright and Jon Deveaux combined for the last goal, with Deveaux putting the ball over the Bates defense and four-year teammate Wright scoring with 26:55 left. Wright, Stern, and Rob Swann '90 played particularly well in the rather one-sided match. The Ephmen outshot Bates 33-12 in what four-year veteran sideline runner Paul Rardin '87 termed "a thoroughly entertaining win."

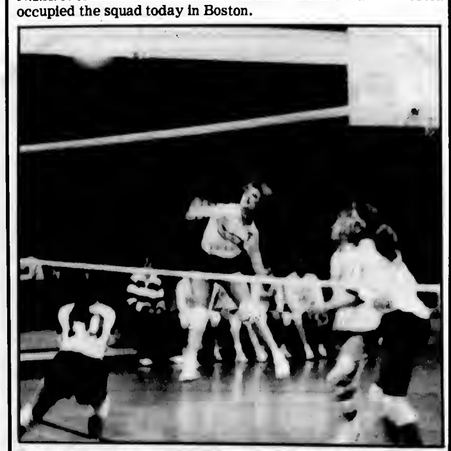
The win followed a 0-1 overtime loss to Bowdoin and a 1-3 fall to Dartmouth the previous week. Wright scored the single goal in front of his hometown crowd in Hanover, New Hampshire against Dartmouth.

Of the Bates win, Russo said, "We played extremely well both on attack and defense, and it was a good win. We had lost confidence after Bowdoin, but we created some good opportunities. Also, the lineup changes proved to be more effective."

Williams played Babson today on Cole Field.

Volleyball wins four of five but loses in semis at Vassar

by Marc McDermott



The volleyball team won its first four matches before losing in the semi-finals to take third in last Saturday's Vassar tournament. The Lady Ephs needed three come-from-behind victories to reach the medal round, losing the first game of their matches to Marist, Dowling, and Hamilton before striking back to win each match two games to one.

Williams then secured itself a trophy in the sixteen team tournament by beating Clarkson in two tightly played quarterfinal games. Although they missed their chance for first place by losing to eventual champion South Hampton College in the semi-finals by scores of 15-9, and 15-11, the Ephs were satisfied with their third place finish.

In earlier action last week, the squad overpowered both Union and Skidmore in straight games, never allowing more than seven points against in any one game. They were nearly as impressive the weekend before when capturing the Little Three crown at Wesleyan. There, the Ephs first pounded the Cardinals 15-3, 15-4 before disposing of a tough Amherst squad 15-12, 15-8.

Senior Captain Caroline Teer was very positive about the team's recent play, despite the loss to South Hampton. "We played real well in the tournament, and the wins should help our N.I.A.C. standings, especially since we have only one conference loss," said Teer.

The team's record is now stands at a sparkling 23-6 (9-1 in N.I.A.C.), which should secure the Ephs a spot in next Saturday's N.I.A.C. tournament. A match with Harvard and Yale in Boston occupied the squad today in Boston.

The volleyball team went all the way to the semifinals of a Vassar tournament this weekend. Here Jenny Ause '88 spikes for the Lady Ephs in previous action in Lasell Gym. (LeBauer)

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 6 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE OCTOBER 28, 1986

Professor Kurt Tauber, chairman of the Gaudino Committee, which spearheaded the creation of the Freshman Residential Seminars. (Ward)

Freshman Seminars meet with approval

by Debbie Snyder

The Freshman Residential Seminar (FRS) appears to have gotten off to a smooth start as the first two months of the two-year experiment draw to a close. Initially proposed by the Gaudino Committee, in an attempt to integrate social and academic life, the FRS consists of two freshman entries whose residents all take one interdivisional, interdisciplinary course each semester.

When it proposed the experiment, the Gaudino Committee maintained that students who lived together and took the same course would discuss seminar topics outside of class more often than students usually do.

Last Spring, incoming freshmen received a brochure describing the seminars. The brochure emphasized that the program is not an honors program and that its members would be chosen randomly if the number of applicants exceeded the number of available spaces. Thirty-five men applied for 23 available spaces, and 32 women applied for 22 available spaces. Kirsten Froburg '90, a member of the FRS, said the reasons people chose to participate varied widely. "Some people said, 'Oh, I needed another course.'"

The entries selected for the progam were Williams C and D. According to Dean of Freshmen Robert Kavanaugh, they allow

Continued on Page 11

Support for blacks judged strong

by Jocelyn Shadforth and Harwell Wells

Black students and the support systems for them deserve credit for keeping black dropout rates low and graduation rates high at Williams College, according to members of the college community. Several black students, however, said they feel that more can be done to improve black life at Williams.

The dropout rate for black students at Williams College is low when compared with many other northeastern colleges, and the graduation rate — now over 90 percent of those who enroll— is high, according to statistics the Record obtained.

"First credit must go to the students themselves, to the support students give one another," said Lecturer in Economics Roberto Ifill, former assistant dean and one of Williams' black faculty members. Ifill said there are several reasons why Williams may have fewer difficulties than other schools, citing its history and the work of the Black Student Union (BSU).

"Other schools' histories have been more turbulent, and the BSU has had a less volatile history than some."

Ifill praised the college administration's support of black students. "The senior administration does care about attracting and keeping minority students ... their hearts are in the right places."

Student life

The area where blacks experience more problems is in their student life, Ifill said. "There's got to be a reason why black students are allowed to be

Rice House, the headquarters of the Williams Black Student Union, the primary support organization for blacks. (Glick)

(segregated) ... Williams students are taught by their parents that everyone is equal but different in background.

"Well, the common ground isn't as great as they think. White students at the black table think they are moving directly into a hostile environment ... and Williams isn't a place that likes confrontation and irritation."

Ifill believes this is one reason for the existence of the BSU. "The last thing your white roommate wants to hear about is all your troubles."

One part of the BSU's role is helping black students adjust to Williams, according to Martin White '87, a member of the union. "Just the fact of the existence of the BSU, with its institutional strength, has made this college committed and shown that black people are welcome." White spoke of his visits to other colleges to which he applied and said those schools "didn't seem to care what my impressions would be as a black person."

Community

"The BSU tries to create that sense of community and obligation to the black community," he added.

According to White, one of the ways that black students cope with Williams is to take a year off. "It gives a lot of people a chance to get their heads together."

Most students return to Williams, however, and finish their degrees. "Williams has a mystique," said White, explaining why students return.

"You've always been told Williams is the best," continued

Continued on Page 9

Mismanagement cited for Parallax woes

by Paul Kwon

The College apparently lost a publication this fall when Parallax, a student opinion newspaper, was denied funding by the College Council. At the council's budget meeting October 16, Treasurer Alec Dawson '87 described Parallax as having "no organization whatsoever."

parallax
The Williams College Journal of ideas

Last year's Parallax banner.

Former staff members disagreed about the factors responsible for the paper's not being funded. Parallax was a paper designed to present both sides of a political issue or problem, often in the same issue, some said.

Ken April '88, a staff member last year, said student apathy was to blame for the paper's troubles. April acknowledged that Parallax will probably fold its operation.

"It's unfortunate that Parallax should suddenly have died. At the beginning of the year ('85-'86), there was a lot of interest and optimism for the future. Then, in the last issue, there were problems getting it together."

Apathy and confusion

April, assessing who was to blame, pointed to general "student apathy" and the public's confusion of Parallax with Germinal.

"Some people saw Parallax as a paper written by a bunch of geeks just writing about their opinions, so they never bothered to read the paper," said April.

Thomas Roche '89, a former staff member who left the staff in the middle of last year, focused blame on the paper's management.

"I decided to quit because I did not personally agree with the political views of the paper," he said. "It was supposed to be a general paper, but it ended up very liberal. Certain people in controlling positions were making the issues quite one-sided."

Roche was also critical of Ed Stein '87, editor-in-chief of Parallax for one and a half years until he stepped down midway through last year. "Stein was getting mad because the incoming articles weren't to his liking." Because of this, Roche claimed, Stein blocked out certain articles that expressed views contrary to his own.

"I deny that completely," said Stein of Roche's charge. He said that not enough people were submitting articles "due to the decline of intellectual life on campus and the lack of a political stance on the part of Parallax."

"TV generation"

"The public didn't buy the open forum concept ... we're in a TV generation that wants short shots of news today. There's a decrease in interest in political issues, especially long-term ones."

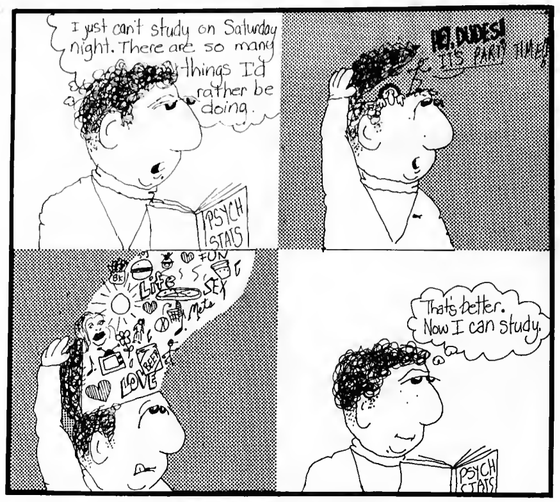
He said that politics played no role in the selection of articles. "We did not turn down articles because of viewpoint, but did turn them down because of intelligibility and grammar ...we really did go for extremes and print both sides of the issue."

Continued on Page 8

Baxter Lawn remained a symbolic burial ground Monday, the twelfth day since the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC) placed the crosses there. WAAC members said the crosses protested deaths of those who struggled against apartheid in South Africa during the time Williams seniors have been in college. College Security Director Ransom Jenks said last week that his department would provide a continuous watch over the crosses during the evening and early morning hours of Freshman Parents' Weekend. Jenks said, "So long as they're there, we'll be watching them." A sign placed south of the crosses Saturday said they did not represent the feelings of a majority of the student body. The message was signed by Martin Ilner '87. WAAC scheduled a question and answer session for 7:30 p.m. Monday, after the Record went to press. Next week's issue will have details. (Camp)

October 28, 1986

Whither discourse?



Parallax, the student-run newspaper which provided a forum for a wide range of opinions, has not been funded this year and will not be published. The College Council found the paper too disorganized to merit funding. However, the demise of Parallax points to broader problems that reflect on the entire student body.

Intellectual and political debate has virtually ceased to exist in the publications of this college. The open-forum paper devoted to student opinion is gone, following in the wake of the politically conservative Williams Republican which faded out two years ago; and the op-ed pages of the Record are stale with the same voices speaking on the same issues. The only other periodical, Germinal, publishes pieces from a single political perspective.

Students disagree at Williams. They disagree on the shanties, on the white crosses on Baxter lawn, on contra aid, on abortion, on sexism, and, on racism. Yet, readers would not know it from reading the Record op-ed pages because only one side dares to speak out. What is the Garfield Republican Club's position on the crosses? We don't know. All we know is that it denies placing a sign critical of the crosses on the lawn. That protest, like too many others here, was registered anonymously.

It is mostly the conservative side that has remained silent. Yet, we all know it exists. Is there really no one at Williams who supports the contras or constructive engagement, who thinks abortion immoral, or denies racism or sexism are prevalent at Williams? Obviously not.

More likely students are afraid to voice opinions that they feel will draw criticism. This cowardice is self-defeating. Dissenters, by default, are allowing the political activists free reign.

Is there an intellectual tyranny at Williams so that opposing voices, with a few exceptions, are self-censored? If so, that must be changed. After all, we should learn as much from interchange with fellow students as we do from lectures in the classroom.

There is a large group of students whose views are not being articulated. The first person to dare write a piece for campus-wide publication protesting the crosses will surely stir the wrath of the small but vocal Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition but may very well find him- or herself voicing the opinions of many who walk by Baxter lawn muttering their contempt for the symbolic protest.

One of the factors that killed Parallax is the idea prevalent among students that it is better to remain silent than to disagree. The fact that student opinion may be effectively silenced by a few who dominate the issues must be changed. It stands in the way of everything we are here for: intellectual discourse, diverse experiences and exposure to new ideas.

Letters

Sign

To the Editor:

Despite Sarah Lawton's informed statement (in last week's Record), the Garfield Republican Club did not put up a sign on Baxter Lawn during Convocation. I don't know who put up the sign.

As for "matters of style," the form of a political statement can be evaluated and found wanting without precluding discusslon on substantive issues.

David Rakonitz '88
Secretary of the
Garfield Republican Club

Sociology

To the Editor:

In regards to Madam Bubriskl's proposal to the Town-College Liason Committee that would require students who live off campus to take a sociology course on the region: I think it is a great idea. But let's go one step further and include "special" residents of the area also.

I would be willing to help form a scholarship committee to raise funds for this program, and I believe my nomination for the first recipient could be no one else except Ms. Bubriski. There are some really excellent sociology courses in the Saskatchewan region of Canada.

Sherman Willmott '88

Crosses

To the Editor:

Long rows of crosses on the Baxter lawn remind us that Apartheid kills.

Many people have asked me if I think the use of the cross to make this point constitutes sacrilege. I do not.

Sacrilegious is the historic identification of South African Reformed theology with the ideology of Apartheid. In A Farewell to Innocence, Allan Boesak, a distinguished black South African theologian, cites this example, written by a Dutch Reformed clergyman who was also the first National Party Prime Minister of South Africa:

"The difference in colour is merely the physical manifestation of two irreconcilable ways of life; between barbarism and civilization, , between heathenism and Christianity ... Apartheid is based on what the Afrikaner believes to be his divine privilege and calling — to convert the heathen to Christianity without obliterating his national identity."

That is sacrilege.

Carol Pepper
Chaplain of the College

Abortion

To the Editor:

We would like to draw the attention of the community to Question One on the upcoming Massachusetts ballot. Question One is a proposed amendment to the state constitution which runs as follows:

"No provision of the Constitution shall prevent the General Court from regulating or prohibiting abortion unless prohibited by the United States Constitution, nor shall any provision of the Constitution require public or private funding of abortion, or the provision of services or facilities therefore, beyond that required by the United States Constitution.

"The provisions of this article shall not apply to abortions required to prevent the death of the mother."

The funding changes allowed by this amendment essentially create one law for the rich and another for the poor, by making abortions practically unavailable to poorer women. In the event that the Supreme Court overturns previous rulings and returns control of abortion rights to the states, there will likewise be no constitutional barriers to banning abortion all together. The abortion amendment also fails to take into account the needs of rape and incest victims as well as those of women whose mental and physical health is gravely threatened.

Since this is a mid-term election with no major political races, voter turnout is expected to be light. This means that a relatively small number of people can influence the outcome one way or another, regardless of the opinion of the majority. It is thus vitally important that all Massachusetts residents make their views known at the polls. If you believe that decisions about abortion should be a matter of individual choice, vote NO to Question One on November 4.

Rebecca Barr '87
Jennifer Mach '88
Sarah Taub '88

Quotation of the Week

"It would be easy for us to put a man down (at the tailgate area of Weston field during football games) in plainclothes and have him ask for ID's. It's coming!"
—Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zoito

Correction

Last week's page one story on the College Council budget inaccurately stated the budget increase that WCFM received this year. The amount granted to WCFM for '85-'86 was $13,250, not $10,200 as published in the CC budget. Several categories which were listed as receiving no grant for '85-'86 had in fact received funds.

The actual increase in funds amounted to $6,000, not $9,050, as WCFM was granted $19,250 in the '86-'87 budget.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OPED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
ASSISTANT OPED ..... John Canty
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Stephanie Brown, Eda Suh
GRAPHICS ..... Jeff Weinstein
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Me., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postege paid at Williamstown, Me. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Do Williams students choose marketability over learning?

by Cecilia Malm '88

Most of us arrive at Williams College with some sense of the intrinsic worth of knowledge and a desire for intellectual edification. What is alarming, however, is how quickly we are apt to lose the peace of pure reflection and confidence in our personal moral codes when faced with the pressure of making ourselves "marketable." At some point we stop seeing choices and start seeing requirements.

Education becomes a means to an end rather than an end in itself, and we forget about the values that drove us to pursue learning in the first place: the belief that knowledge deserves sacrifice, that wisdom exalts humanity, that understanding breeds empathy.

It is not this view of education as simply the path to a posh bank position that is the most disturbing, however, for a prestigious Williams B.A. is, after all, part of what we came here for and a degree should be more than just an expensive piece of paper. But if one defines a college education exclusively in this sense, as mere means, not offering us anything of lasting value, the situation is sadder.

As we move down the road and up the tax brackets, who will remember stumbling through Shelley and being baffled by Kant? It is essential to realizethat an education should not only get us somewhere, but also tell us what to do once we get there. Roles are just empty words — doctor, lawyer, professor, financier. Without some sense of ethical identity, the people who fill these roles are in danger of becoming hollow and robotic.

It is not the purpose of an educational institution, many would argue, to involve itself in questions of value and morality; this is the task of the family or the church, and any moral instruction from professors and college administrators is pure indoctrination.

Moral dictates, however, are not to be confused with moral choices. We do not need to be taught "rights" and "wrongs." Rather, we need to be exposed in our studies to a variety of methods and alternatives for dealing with moral questions. We must be aware that we have the power to make autonomous decisions and that it is in making such decisions that we become unique persons. We spend so much time at Williams chasing common goals — good grades, good parties, good resumes — that individuality gets lost in the proverbial pile of empty beer cups and graduation gowns.

The larger questions of life — truth, beauty, goodness — should not be discarded as the concern of eccentrics, artists, and philosophers. It is a travesty to call ourselves "educated" when we have not acknowledged the enormous power and responsibility we all take on in acquiring knowledge. Is it not the ultimate concern of any college that it may be graduating superb financial analysts who will end up in jail five years from now for insider training?

In the words of Norman Lamm, the president of Yeshiva University, spoken during a recent convocation address: "... permitting a generation of students to grow up as ethical illiterates and moral idlots, unprepared to cope with ordinary life experiences, is a declaration of education bankruptcy."

If you're looking for a new experience, look at Mystic

by John Norwood '87

So you're looking for a change. You've been at Williams for one or is it two years now, and things are looking just a little bit too familiar. Europe beckons you, but it's just a little too far away, or perhaps you can't find a bullet proof vest in your size. How about doing something different for a semester, just three and a half hours from Billsville in Mystic, Conn., home of the Williams College-Mystic Seaport program in American Maritime Studies.

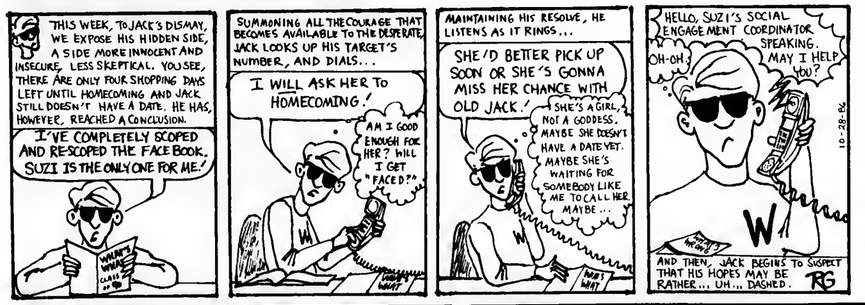
Each semester 21 students students from various New England colleges, plus a few from outside the region congregate at this small, historic nineteenth century shipbuilding seaport to live and learn about the sea. Students take four courses: American Maritime History, Maritime Literature, Marine Policy, and one lab science course, either Oceanography or Marine Ecology.

The highlight of the semester is a ten-day research trip aboard the 125-foot schooner Westward. Travelling through the Gulf of Maine in the fall and the Gulf of Mexico in the spring, students experience some of the difficulties and rewards of living on a boat for an extended period of time. During the voyage, one can't help but learn more about himself as well as others.

Most mornings in Mystic were devoted to classes which were located in a beautifully furnished conference room in the museum library complete with padded, leather arm chairs arranged around a very long and heavy, rectangular-shaped, wooden table. This setting provided for a comfortable atmosphere and enabled better interaction between students and professor than in a more traditional classroom setup.

For two afternoons each week, students ventured throughout the seaport and pursued various interests working with the museum staff, in areas such as boatbuilding and restoration, sailing, sail making, demonstration squad, and celestial navigation. This was an excellent opportunity to meet people outside the program and to learn a skill while taking a break from academics.

Fridays were always fun because of the "various and sundry" fieldtrips we took for our Marine Policy course. Our indefatigable and fearless leader Dr. Ben Labaree, director of the program, led us up and down the southern New England coastline to places like: New Bedford, Massachusetts, to look at the local fishing industry; Newport, Rhode Island, to visit the Naval War College and to tour a Liquid Natural Gas tanker; and Kings Point, New York, to visit the Merchant Marine Academy.



Housing at the seaport was first-rate: each student lived in one of four houses located around the periphery of the museum. the lifestyle was very similar to the co-op experience offered here at Williams; you do all your own cooking, shopping, and cleaning (hopefully). Unlike Hoxsey Street, however, parties are no problem. There is no need to file a party plan with Ransom Jenks; Dr. Labaree and his staff refrain from interfering in the students' lives as much as possible.

The most important aspect of the program is the family atmosphere, as corny as it may sound. From the opening dinner throughout the semester, one can see that Dr. Labaree is not only a teacher, but a friend. Known affectionately among the students as "Uncle Ben," he is a man who truly cares for all of his pupils and one who works extremely hard to see that things go as smoothly as possible. His small staff works equally hard.

Because there are only 21 students in the program, and in all of Mystic for that matter, you get to know these people very well. By the end of the semester, you will have made many friends and established new bases for later "road-tripping". On a more mundane matter, there is a good amount of work to be done, but everyone is in the same boat (no pun intended). All people have tests and papers due at the same time, thereby making it easier to study when it's time to study and to have fun when it's time to have fun. And there was plenty of that, too: from midnight cruising in the Jim and Debby (the program's 16-foot powerboat), up and down the glassy Mystic River, to numerous Albion House parties.

If you're interested in the Williams College-Mystic Seaport program, Dr. Labaree will be meeting with students in the Gibson Room of Dodd for lunch on October 29. For more information regarding the program, please contact Dean Spear, John Norwood '87, Chris Finch '87, or David Freilach '87.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM — by Rich Gardella

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"
Special discounts on liquor and set-ups for homecoming weekend parties.
For more information, call Ron at 458-3704
Champagne by the Case
Specials on Beer:
Ballantine 16 oz. $7.99/case
Moosehead 12 oz. $13.99/case
Stroh's 12 oz. $11.99/30-pack
Lowenbrau 12 oz. $11.99/case
(Beer prices do not include deposit.)
ALSO OFFERING $1 off per case on all beer with student I.D., except on the above specials
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS | SPORTING GOODS
SALE
the Co-op
LEVI'S
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

It's coming, Zoito says

Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zoito warned students that they should heed laws regarding underage drinking and liabilities for serving alcohol to people under 21.

"It would be easy for us to put a man down (at the tailgate area of Weston field during football games) in plainclothes and have him ask for ID's," warned Zoito in a telephone interview. "It's coming!"

Zoito emphasized the responsibility assumed by anyone supplying or serving alcohol to underage students, stating, "If you sign that check, or you're giving beer away from your room, you're the third party in the lawsuit."

Referring to private parties, Zoito said, "If we see a violation, or hear of one, we can execute the law. We're not going to go in your dormitory and look for a party unless you're selling the alcohol. You can't do it--you can't sell it."

On a lighter note, Zoito said that a seasonal parking ordinance goes into effect November 1. The ordinance requires that all vehicles be off town streets between 1:00 AM and 6:00 AM, or they may be ticketed or towed.

— Alexandra Glover

230 Ephs give blood

The bloodmobile's visit to Williamstown last week yielded 259 units of blood for the Red Cross, whose stocks have been depleted recently. A total of 294 people, including 230 Williams students, gave blood.

Morgan Hall won the Vampire Sweepstakes, a competition among dormitories based on the percentage of residents who particlpate. Some 24.35 percent of Morganites gave blood.

A-Gar-Wood and Pratt houses ran a close second and third, respectively. Rounding out the top ten were Perry-Bascom, Bryant, Armstrong, Williams, East, Spencer—Brooks-West, Thompson, and Carter.

Five students received one-gallon pins: seniors Cheryl Salem, Catherine Suessbrick and Colleen Ryan, junior Wendy Roy and sophomore Matt Daley.

The bloodmobile will return February 10 and 11.

CC on food, fund drive

The College Council's meatless meals were so successful that Dodd and Mission Park dining halls ran out of food, Council President Amy Jeffress '87 said at last Thursday's meeting.

The money saved, she said, will help fund a Winter Study community aid project. Jeffress said that neighboring communities will be targeted, in addition to Williamstown, because "Williamstown is fairly wealthy."

Also at the meeting, seniors Britt Hutchins and Fred Hopkins, members of the Committee explained particulars of the development office's work on the bicentennial fund drive. According to Hutchins, "The administration wants to know everything students want, to keep Williams College number one." Any recommendations for new facilities should be submitted in writing to Hutchins or to Hopkins by November 8.

Regarding the issue of minority faculty hiring, Jeffress said she had talked with Nancy McIntire, assistant to the president for affirmative action, who agreed to speak at a future council meeting.

Martin White '87 said that the real hiring power in the college lies with the departments. He said the psychology and sociology departments have poor records in hiring minorities.

— Rob Wilmers

SAC wealthy despite debt

Hans Humes '87, president of the Student Activities Council (SAC), predicted that the sounder financial status of his group this year will support a much broader range of entertainment. SAC received $34,000 from the College Council for its budget for the next two semesters.

The group came under criticism for fiscal mismanagement during the 1984-85 school year under the leadership of Steve Shapiro '85. After sponsoring concerts by REM and Ray Charles and suffering substantial losses from those and other events, the SAC amassed a $16,000 debt, $12,000 of which had already been spent, Humes said.

Last year College Council voted to deduct $4,000 from SAC's budget over three years to eliminate the debt. With the debt allowance removed, Humes said, SAC has $30,000 to spend for the upcoming year.

Humes maintained that the past financial problems were caused by a "lack of communication" between both the group's officers that year and the Student Accounts Office.

"Now everybody has to go through the (SAC) treasurer for cash — and that's the way it's going to stay. It's much more centralized (than in previous years)."

Citing the upcoming Crazy-8's concert and this week's comedy night, Humes said he envisions "three or four" comedy shows and several different concerts sponsored by SAC during the upcoming year.

Humes said he also plans "a lot (of events) during Winter Study," adding that performers might include a major folk star. "I want Arlo Guthrie to play in January," Humes added.

— Tracey Blankenship

Rep. Guernsey talks of campaign, politics

Represenatative Sherwood Guernsey (D-Williamstown), the incunbent in the November 4 race for state represetative, was interviewed last Friday by Record reporter James Spallone.

Guernsey, elected to the legislature in 1982, represents Williamstown, Lanesborough, Dalton, New Ashford, Hancock, and part of Pittsfield. In this year's campaign he has the endorsements of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association, the Williamstown Nuclear Freeze Office, the Sierra Club and others.

Sherwood Guernsey

The Republican candidate in the race is Kathryn C. Manuel, also of Williamstown, a principal in a real estate firm, KCM Associates, and member of the Republican state committee. Her campaign literature stresses a concern with lowering taxes and curtailing state spending. She was unavailable for comment.

Guernsey graduated cum laude from Dartmouth College in 1968, and the Antioch School of Law in 1975. He handled labor-law related cases from 1975-77, representing Hispanic mushroom workers. Since moving to Berkshire County in 1977, he has been active in many civic organizations.

The Record: Why are you running for re-election?

Guernsey: I'm running because essentially I love the job, I love the work, I love the challenge, and I'm proud of the record that I've had for the last two terms. It's a record of responsible tax reduction, a record that includes a great deal of effort and achievement in the fields of education, health care, environmental protection, and job development. And those are the areas that represent the most important issues that we face both here in the Berkshires and state-wide and are the challenges that I want to continue to deal with as the issues of the 1980's.

The Record: Your opponent has claimed that if elected she would vote to cut taxes and stop "out of control state spending," a claim which puts you on the defensive in a way, painting a picture of you as a "tax and spend" advocate. How would you respond to her campaign pledge?

Guernsey: Well, first of all, I'm not going to be on the defensive because my record is very clear. As I indicated before I have a good, strong record of responsible tax reduction. Ever since June of 1985, not an election year, I have been a strong supporter of the repeal of the surtax. Now that's a $331 million savings to the taxpayer. I started voting for the repeal starting in June of '85 because for the first time we realized, we were sure, that we would be able to afford the reduction. We realized we were definetly going to have a surplus last year, that if this year there were a continued surplus, a larger

Continued on Page 10

Weiner visits campus, claims Conte graft

by F. Craig Gangi

In a speech given at Williams last Wednesday, first district Congresslonal candidate Robert Weiner blasted his opponent, incumbent Silvio Conte, linking the 14-term House member to organized crime.

In an earlier response, a Conte press release termed the accusations "the act of a desparate candidate who ... now turns to malicious and deliberate falsehoods."

Before his talk, Weiner ate at the meatless meal at Dodd House with members of the College Young Democrats and accused Conte of not being open and honest in refusing to acknowledge Weiner's candidacy.

"For (Conte) to deny people the right to see (the candidates debate) face to face, not by way of his press releases and speeches, I think is an affront and shows he is over the (electoral) process."

Weiner also discussed his much-publicized allegations about Conte's supposed connections to organized crime. In a press release dated October 17, Weiner stated, "I have written to the U.S. House Committee on Standards of Offical Conduct and to the Massachussetts State Office of Investigation asking for a prompt investigation."

Witness "beaten"

Weiner claimed in the same press release that he and his wife were awaken during the night of October 12 by "a phone call from a witness to some of the alleged corruption who said he was just beaten by two men in ski masks saying 'Don't talk to Weiner anymore'." The witness had allegedly seen Conte dining with organized crime figures several years ago.

Weiner used the man's later denial of the beating incident and the phone call as proof that he was intimidated by the men who supposedly beat him up. At the dinner, Weiner claimed "that's what organized crime does. It's real, it's real in our society."

Robert Weiner, the Democratic candidate for Congress in the 1st district. (King)

Weiner has come under criticism from members of his own party due to his statements. As reported in the Berkshire Eagle, Weiner was criticized by both Remo Del Gallo, chairman of the Pittsfield Democratic Committee, and Angelo Stracuzzi, president of the Pittsfield City Council, for using what Stracuzzi considered, "unsubstantiated, lrresponsible statements concerning Silvio Conte (in) the lowest form of mudslinging."

While Weiner was to speak before students in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, the number of students present — seven — led the speech to be moved to a smaller classroom in Bernhard Music Center.

After an introduction by political science professor Tim Cook, Weiner discussed his platform for reform.

End of PAC's?

He called for a "Nine-point Election Reform Plan," which he believes would "take big money out of politics." The plan involves abolishing political action committees and calls for the public financing of elections. Weiner also called for the easing of voter registration, either by registration by mail or registration at the polls on election day.

Weiner attacked Conte's voting record. "He does not represent this district, he is out of sync with Massachussetts and that's why, after 28 years, I'm saying it's time for a change."

Conte's alleged refusal to debate Weiner also upset the Democrat, who termed this "typical incumbent strategy."

"It is an affront to the voters to think that you can just stand aloof and not discuss the issues like that," he said.

Conte's office declined comment on any of Weiner's charges. In a prepared statement, the Congressman termed Weiner's accusations "a totally groundless attack upon me, my reputation, my record, and my Italian heritage. It is mudslinging of the most despicable kind."

ACSR told of divestment expense

by Karen Costenabader

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibilities (ACSR) met last week to consider a report on the financial costs of divestment in companies doing business in South Africa. The committee also interviewed the report's author, Loren W. Loomis-Hubbell, a second-year student at Harvard Business School.

She was hired this summer by the Treasurer's Office to prepare a detailed report of the economic feasibility of divestment for Williams.

According to Sharon Burke '88, a member of the ACSR, this report was commissioned in response to student demand for a study of the costs of divestment at Williams. She claimed that Loomis-Hubbell's 1000-page report was extremely detailed and factual, and she suggested that its length and detail might have been intended in order to discourage student debate of its findings.

Professor James Wood, chairman fo the ACSR, explained that Loomis-Hubbell's work consisted of three stages. After collecting all existing studies on investment and college endowments, "she went through them with a fine-toothed comb," deciding which of these were studies relevant to the College. Wood explained that Loomis-Hubbell, in the final report to the ACSR, "took the information Will Reed gave her and ran an estimate of what kinds of costs were involved in divestment."

Wood noted that Loomis-Hubbell's report will be one of many sources of information the committee will consider in compiling its own advisory report to the Trustees' Finance Commitee this year.

Active management

Wood explained that the Williams Trust Fund, the value of which is now approaching $250 million, is managed by a group of investment banks following a policy known as active management. The banks invest in only a small group of companies whose fiscal behavior they monitor closely. Their decisions to buy and sell shares of stock are based on intensive research into the companies' histories, financial strengths and assets.

According to Loomis-Hubbell's report, divestment would have a greater economic impact on an actively managed portfolio than on a passively managed portfolio. In enlarging the number of companies the banks cannot invest in, she explained, costs would be incurred in forcing investment managers to perform much more extensive research in finding new companies in which to invest.

"I wouldn't give a doomsday picture," said Loomis-Hubbell when asked to speculate on the financial effects of divestment. "I have been impressed with the efficiency of and have confidence in our current active management. Even with restrictions, this group would do very well."

Wood asked Loomis-Hubbell, "What are the potential financial benefits of divestment and when is it economic for us not to invest?"

"As a committee this is not our role in investment," replied Loomis-Hubbell, "and we must leave this decision to the investment managements' discretion. They have the information about their flexibility and alternative strategies. Broadbrush, however, you can say that if a company receives one percent of its net earnings from South Africa, it's not going to completely throw to the wolves that company if it withdraws."

Another issue discussed pertained to corporate and alumni donations. Loomis-Hubbell reported that, although the Investment Responsibility Research Center had reported no changes in the sizes and amounts of contributions to colleges and universities across the country as a result of the issue of divestment, she felt their method was sloppy.

She said that many colleges had made no attempt at measuring these fluctuations, and a better, longer-term study would reveal trends and changes in donor behavior. She suggested that it would be a good idea to consult the Alumni Office about this question, saying, "They are sensitive to what people are saying and thinking."

The committee also considered the college's responsibility to consider the sources of corporate contributions. Provost Neil Grabois said, "accepting a gift is not an ownership-related activity; we don't wish to become owners. If gifts to the college were to be put in the at-risk category, we would have to examine the portfolio of every company and then possibly be obligated to refuse the gift."

Trustees defend making policy outside of ACSR

Members of the Board of Trustees were surprised by the conservative reaction of some members of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) to the trustees' new policy of disinvestment advocacy, College Treasurer William Reed said.

"The fact that some members of the ACSR were to the right of the trustees surprised some members" of the board, said Reed, who serves as secretary to the trustees. The trustees' comments came at their fall meeting, held on campus on October 11, Reed said.

"The trustees expressed a broad range of views," Reed said. "It was a frank discussion." But he said the trustees generally dismissed the ACSR's complaint that the decision-making process should have more directly involved the committee.

"As far as procedural questions, the board did not discuss that," Reed continued. "The board did not spend time talking about whether the finance committee should have planted the idea with the advisory committee rather than taking its own iniative," he said.

"The Board takes a longer-range view than whether the finance committee decision was a procedurally correct one, or whether the appropriate thing to happen did."

But Reed stressed that some members of the of the board had not been informed about the ACSR's September 29 meeting at the time of their gathering. "A fair amount of the Board had not yet read the (October 7) Record," said Reed.

Reed said that a letter from the ACSR to the trustees critical of the way the decision was made was sent the week after the trustees met. Reed sent the letter in his capacity as an ACSR member, he said.

In other business, the trustees discussed the college's insurance coverage, Reed said. He said the college's total insurance costs have risen to roughly one-half million, from $75,000 three years ago. He said the increase is due to steep hikes by the insurance industry, which has claimed that growing court awards have undermined their ability to meet settlements.

"It is a litigious society and we have to be covered by insurance," Reed said. The trustees "feel satisfied we've done about everything we can do."

In addition, trustees discussed a study which said Williams ranked 25th among 29 colleges and universities in terms of overall cost to students, Reed said. The study, conducted by the Consoritium on Financing Higher Education, included the factors of tuition, housing, meals and fees, he said. The sample included Ivy League and small liberal arts institutions.

Reed also said that preliminary plans for the renovation of Hopkins Hall would be presented to the board in January.

— John McDermott

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

Serving Complimentary Hot Cider &
Hors d'oeuvres All Day Saturday

76 SPRING STREET · WILLIAMSTOWN

MONDAY-SATURDAY 9 am · pm

SUNDAY 10-5

Telephone (413)458-5007

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
Est. 1960 Berry Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

Welcome Back Alumni!

Join us for a cup of coffee and our latest best-sellers.

Come see our fine selection of books, including:
classic to modern literature for every taste

Come visit us soon.

Open from 8:30 a.m. - 9 p.m.
Sunday 10-5

Located next to THE LOG

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, antique looking jewelry.

TheLibrary

70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

Refreshing revue: new talent highlights show

by Chuck Goforth

The Freshman Revue is a show for parents and their weekend visit. The spectre of "don't offend anyone" haunts the production staff every year, and has, in the past, whisked through the show itself, leaving everything nice and safe and "O.K. for dad."

In all fairness, there has been a recent trend among the producers and directors of the Freshman Revue to battle the ghost and keep a show honest. This year's Revue follows suit; it is innovative, and, at the risk of scratching a few sensibilities, provides a worthy view of "The Other Side" of life. The book, the music, and the lyrics are all original, and an energetic and promising ,if not polished, freshmen cast handled the material in a way that was, at worst, a little off, and, at best, really good.

David Latham'86, the director, has in the past directed Heiner Muller effectively, and as a director, usually aims his theatrical acumen toward less conventional targets. Here he is somewhat out of his element, as he's doing not only very conven-

Continued on Page 8

Berkshire Symphony opens season

by Alex Oh

The Berkshire Symphony, under the direction of Julius Hegyi, opened its 1986 season with a concert in Chapin Hall on Friday, October 24, at 8:00 p.m. The program consisted of Hindemith's Concerto for Orchestra, Op. 38, Dvorak's Suite for Orchestra in A Major, Op. 98B, and Grieg's Piano Concerto in A Minor, with Jaime Bolipata as the soloist.

The Grieg was clearly the showcase of the evening. Bolipata, a native of the Philippines and a graduate of Juilliard, presented an impressive interpretation of the famous concerto. From the opening chord to the last, Bolipata remained strictly in control of his musical ideas, piecing the passages together coherently, and overwhelming the audience with his awesome technique.

The opening movement, Allegro molto moderato, with all its grace and magnificence, was perhaps the least stable of all three, as Bolipata and orchestra both experienced difficulty in adjusting to each other. The entrances to and from Tutti were often out of rhythm, as the soloist rushed ahead and Hegyl hastened to follow. However, on the whole, the movement was full of beautiful interchanging melodies, the piano trying to outdo the orchestra, and vice versa.

The cadenza provided the opportunity for Bolipata to showcase his technicality; he proved, however, to be less than impressive as more than once, pedalling was substituted for clarity. As the cadenza grew progressively more difficult, the rippling, wavelike effect of the bass was lost and Bolipata muddled through the passages.

The Adagio was beautifully played, with the orchestra taking the lead and the piano humming lightly along. The volume tended to be loud throughout the

Continued on Page 9

Ephman: the return of a superhero

by John Felkner

Who is Ephman?

You may have noticed advertisements in The Daily Advisor, as well as various posters and radio carts, extolling the virtues of this unknown person and asking you to tune in to "episode X." Ephman is, in fact, a fictional WCFM superhero who is the main character of a series being broadcast over our campus airwaves this fall.

The pet project of Rob Greenfield '87, Erol Onel '88, and Rich Gardella '88, the current Ephman radio shows describe the adventures of Jim Lunch, Jr., son of the original Ephman, Jim Lunch, Sr., who had his own radio show on WCFM exactly 20 years ago, during the 1966-67 academic year.

Last spring, down in the dusty production studio of WCFM, Onel came across a box of small reel-to-reel tapes labeled "Ephman." Almost simultaneously, self-appointed WCFM archivist Greenfield discovered several carbon copy scripts of "Ephman" episodes. After listening to the tapes with Gardella, an idea emerged: recreate this forgotten scion of Williams. With the aid of Philip Prodger '88 and Michelle Clark '88, several scripts were drafted and four episodes have already aired, with episode five — a special homecoming episode — scheduled for Tuesday, October 28 at 10:45 pm.

According to Greenfield, the original Ephman show was created and hosted by Williams students in 1966, back when Star Trek was in its infancy and the Vietnam war was in its adolescence. The original series starred Jim Lunch, a wimpy freshman living in Lehman Hall, accompanied by his best friend Studley Goodnight. Jim is given the purple Ephman suit, which transforms him into Ephman, by the mysterious physics professor Sparks.

The suit equips Jim with both an "Eph-phone" hidden in his shoe, which allows him to contact Comissioner Obee's office, and the deadly Purple Hail which comes out of the palm of his costumed hand and allows him to instantly freeze everything in his path. Throughout the original episodes, Jim was locked in a deadly battle with the evil organization called DRAFT (Directors of the Rural Alliance of Freedom Thwarters), led by a person known as "1-A" and headquartered in the steam tunnels.

The new Ephman is Jim Lunch, Jr., son of the original character, also a wimpy freshman, who had no knowledge of his Dad's former career until he happened to come across a picture of "Ephman" in a 1966 Record issue he found in the WCFM production studio. Jim's JA is none other than Studley Goodnight, Jr., son of his father's best friend.

Jim approaches the now aged but sharp Professor Sparks, who gives him the original suit. After a phone call to Dad to check up on things, he decides to don the suit and return as Ephman. He is now engaged in fighting the descendant organization

Continued on Page 10

'Rents on the Quad

interviews by Mike Erard; photographs by Heather King

The Record recently asked visiting freshmen parents, "How has your son or daughter changed since coming to Williams?"

"He's more relaxed." — Camille Hodgson (Pat Hodgson)

"Her love of broccoli and mushrooms has decreased." — Lee Beach (Melissa Beach)

"She is much more outgoing than she ever was." — Gay Scarhorough (Kristen Klaus)

"He's still super." — Gerald Gendell (Brad Gendell)

"She's learned how to survive on a lot less sleep." — Milan McNall (Karlyn McNall)

"He needs a haircut." — Charlie Barbot (Bill Barbot)

Dartmouth

"Womben to overthrow dartmyth" is not a typing error, but the name of a women's group at Dartmouth College protesting the school's alma mater. The group made its first appearance at the Dartmouth Night ceremonies last Friday evening following the singing of "Men of Dartmouth." During a speech by Dartmouth's president, twelve female students dumped plastic bags containing simulated bloody tampons in front of the president in order "to graphically illustrate the presence of womyn at dartmyth." The group stated, "We are distributing bloodied tampons in protest of both the alma mater 'men of dartmouth' and the governing structures of dartmyth college."

Wellesley

Wellesley College students boycotted classes on Friday, October 24, in support of 49 classmates who were arrested while protesting the trustees' 17 to 14 vote not to divest $41 million worth of stock in companies doing business in South Africa. According to student organizers, about 1,100 of the college's 2,230 students did not attend classes. (New York Times)

Middlebury

The ideal solution may have been found to the problem of hungry students and ignorant teachers. In a new Middlebury College proposal, students share their knowledge of computers with faculty members in exchange for homecooked meals and cookies during final exams. The program, entitled "Cookies for Scholars," was initiated to improve both student-faculty relations and the diets of many starving students. The need for the program was first seen by members of the academic computing department who noticed that non-science faculty members were falling behind the latest computer technology. Although this program seems to be the ideal solution to the problem, students must still negotiate with faculty as to the number of computer lessons per meal.

More Middlebury

Everyone has, at one time or another, been told to go stand out in traffic. But at Middlebury College last week, a member of the Unification Church took such a request seriously. Moonies were soliciting signatures for a petition on the college campus under the name of a different organization. When told by the College Chaplin that such solicitation was against college policy, one Moonie insisted that he had a right to stand on the sidewalk. When told that the sidewalk was college property, the Moonie replied, "I'll stand in the road then." The Middlebury chaplin retorted, "I'm sure that Vermont probably has some law against that."

Bryn Mawr

One of the most illustrious graduates from Bryn Mawr College in recent years is a three inch tall G.I. Joe action figure code named Lady Jaye, AKA Alison R. Hart-Burnet. This new Hasbro product is listed as being an Intelligence expert with "Airborne and Ranger" qualifications and a graduate of Bryn Mawr College. According to an article in the College News, the doll comes equipped with a "power javelin" and wears "a camo-green skinsuit which ... is molded tightly against her enormous breasts." According to a campus columnist, Alison, one of two women in the G.I. Joe action figure collection, reflects an unfounded "stereotype of Bryn Mawr women as brutish macho militant girls who really wish they were men."

Haverford

This week at Haverford College, the open Plenary, a forum where students gather to vote on college issues, passed a resolution calling for a referendum on a school mascot. The sponsor of the resolution announced the results of a poll for potential mascots. Popular candidates included the "Mister Happys," the "Black Squirrels," the "Ice Weasels," the "Red Ripple," the "Red Wave," the "Quakers," the "Fords," the "Koala Bobs," and the "Earth Quakers." Unfortunately, the administration has final veto power over any student decision and will not accept any name that "is not serious or dignified."

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Jim Hartnett and Caroline Koeppel from material printed in various campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

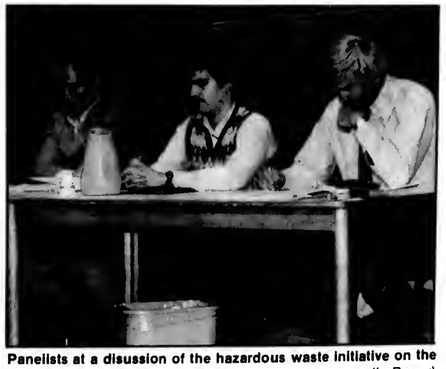
Williams College Museum of Art

Photos by Katie Albright

On October 19, the Williams College Museum of Art reopened to the general public after a long period of extensive renovation and expansion. Planning for the project began in 1976 and construction was spread over two phases. The first phase, completed in 1983, included new galleries and various museum and art department offices and storage space.

The 1986 phase included two new galleries, one for the Prendergast Collection and another for the museum's permanent collection of contemporary art, as well as some renovation of the existing building.

Designed by noted architect Charles Moore in collaboration with Robert Harper (both of Centerbrook Architects and Planners), the new museum provides some stunning views for the visitor, some of them captured by Record photographer Katie Albright.



Panel on waste initiative

by Peter Balaban

Last Tuesday, four experts on the environment participated in a panel discussion entitled "Hazardous Waste, the Berkshires and Beyond." The discussion, primarily sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Masspirg), centered on toxic waste disposal and cleanup, and was designed to focus attention on the hazardous waste cleanup initiative.

The initiative, which Masspirg supports, requires the state to investigate potential waste sites and clean them up within four years of their investigation. The initiative will appear as "Question 4" on the Massachusetts ballot on election day.

Thomas Jorling, director of the Center for Environmental Studies and a Williamstown Selectman, spoke about Federal Legislation dealing with Hazardous Waste and how it applies to Western Massachusetts.

Panelists at a disussion of the hazardous waste initiative on the ballot next week in Massachusetts. (LeBauer)

Jorling asserted that the state must provide help in cleaning up hazardous waste and regulating its handling. Citing a statute that stipulates "You can't dispose of toxic material in a landfill," Jorling pointed out that toxic material is not defined anywhere in the statute.

Prevention

Professor of geology David Dethier spoke of three steps involved in solving the problem of hazardous waste. They involve the cleanup of already identified sites, the identifying of others, and the prevention of contamination in the future.

The third panel member, Anita Flanagan, community relations coordinator for Clean Harbors Incorporated, spoke about household hazardous waste. By some estimates, as much as 25% of toxic waste is generated from household chemicals, which range from asbestos and arsenic to battery

Continued on Page 9

Parallax

Continued from Page 1

Stein turned over his editorial responsibilities to Eric Adelstein '87 and Mike Weber '87. "After two years as editor, it was time to step down and give the job to someone else," he told the Record.

Weber declined to comment. Adelstein stated that there are no problems with Parallax, saying the paper "was never told (by the Council) to be present at the board meeting." He went on to say that there's plenty of interest in a paper like Parallax, adding that as soon as the "slight mix-up" is remedied, Parallax will present its case to the Council. He said he was confident that the paper will receive budgeting.

Dawson acknowledged the availability of funds, but commented that the Council "tried to contact (Parallax) for three and a half weeks. Their lack of organization is a black mark against them."

Revue

Continued from Page 6

tional theatre, but a musical as well. Latham is aware of his limits in this area. He has, and other directors should take note, chosen to stay within them and keep this show simple. He sacrificed a little of the spectacle for a little of the necessary. This show stayed clean and humble, and, in view of not only Latham's limitations, but his cast's as well, this turned out to be a wise choice.

Family crisis

Latham's original book is anything but trite. The story told is that of a small family which is suddenly threatened with financial and spiritual ruin at the hands of the town villian. O.K., maybe it's trite so far. But the daughter, Caroline, played ably by Rebecca Mattson, decides she can help the situation by becoming a prostitute, and the son, Richard, played by Ernie Pascucci, leaves home in search of money only to end up in a world of deceit, murder, and desparate people.

Latham has strived for a realism in these characters that is sometimes defeated by the cast, but often comes through as well. The direction is safe, but the book is a little dangerous, and this is often a thought provoking musical.

Randall Kromm '86, who wrote all of the music and lyrics, shares with Latham an affinity for a non-glossy, cynical realism. In his own private battle against all the camp and emptiness of the typical American musical, Kromm hasn't played it so safe. Unfortunately, his rich and effective music has been stomped on by the lyrics. Even if these young singers were capable of enunciating so many words in a measure of music, they still might not be understood. The songs are simply overburdened with words, many of them trying to express abstract ideas or symbolic metaphors.

Capable vocalists

The voices of the cast were relatively capable. When the thicket of words thinned ocassionally, some of the performers shined. In the first act, Rebecca Mattson's song to her "brother" was a pleasure to hear by any standard, and a moving part of the show. Liz Martin, the barroom singer, also has a bright and accurate voice. Generally, a few notes were missed, and a lot of words were garbled. But the problem wasn't major, and some of the music came together nicely.

The acting in the show was, if not entirely convincing, filled with energy. Much of the cast had a flair for comedy which, along with Latham's punchlines, provided good laughs throughout.

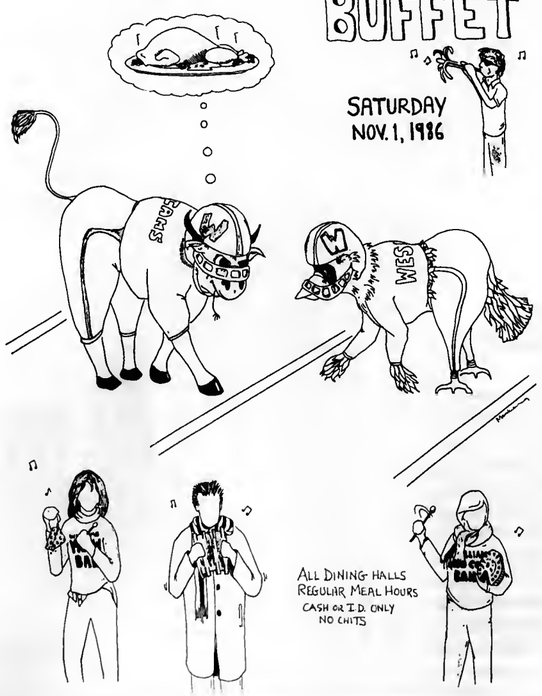
Overall, this show was worth seeing. In addition to offering a few worthy ideas to the parents, it should serve to remind much of the student body, infamous for its lack of enthusiasm toward the admittedly inconsistent Freshman Revue, that it might not have to be entirely an act of charity to come out and support this new talent. Those who saw it this year actually enjoyed themselves.

Capers

Have you tried our new menu?

Watch the World Series on our new color T.V.

402 Main St. 458-9180



Shop the
WILLIAMSTOWN MARKETPLACE
Open 7 Days, Fri. til 8

PAT'S COUNTRY SHOPPE
895 Cold Spring Rd.
458-9834
— gifts and clothing —
college discount with I.D.

STAINED GLASS windows lamps mirrors and sillies!
Kaleidoscope Glass
CUSTOM DESIGN and REPAIRS
FREE GIFT WRAPPING!
458-3688 895 Cold Spring Rd.

HOLIDAYS
COUNTRY STORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
Thanskgiving, Christmas Items and Gifts
Great opportunity to do some Christmas shopping!
Many other stores and eatery.

Williams College Food Service presents:
HOMECOMING BUFFET
SATURDAY NOV. 1, 1986

Black support

Continued from Page 1

Devonya Havis '87, also a BSU member. "I don't think that attrition rates are an issue. Most black students graduate with their class or come back with another class."

Yet there remain pressures black students must face. "Many of the black students are on financial aid," added Philip Smith, director of admissions. "There is some correlation of graduation rates with financial status. The kids are just fighting more battles."

"Everyone contemplates leaving," said Rita Brown '88. "Usually it's too late, it doesn't make any sense to leave."

Freshman pressure

Brown also spoke of the difficulties freshmen encounter. "There is a lot of peer pressure and pressures from Junior Advisors (JA's) to conform. They tell (black students) they don't want to join the BSU because they stay separate from white members."

This year the BSU began a "little brother-little sister" program, according to White. "It's always been that the freshmen were adopted by upperclassmen to a certain degree," said White, "this is just a better way of doing it."

"It's very hard for (whites) trying to address black students in light of cultural ignorance," Havis told the Record. "How do you define what's normal for a black person if you don't know?"

Havis sees the entry system as creating difficulties for black freshmen. "I see the entry system as forcing out black students. You won't see black students participating in entrymates' activities as much as white students." She also said that within entries "black students feel a need to explain what it is to be black to people who can't understand it."

Havis described a dynamic that she feit occurred in entries where one black student is perceived by the white students as being more assimilated than another. She said that this results in the two students being played against one another.

Kenny Jones '87 was one of three black Junior Advisors last year and believes qualified black JA's are vital to life at Williams. He told the Record of complaints issued by the three JA's about the low number of black students involved in the JA process. "We all complained because, out of three black JA's, we all applied for the JA selection committee and none of us made it."

"If you consider the domestic background of the black students, most are from or live near a large city and a predominantly black neighborhood. This area has no black community. Homesickness can occur, and problems with a mainstream society," Jones said.

"Last year, I was approached by another JA about the problems two blacks were having in his entry ... JA's certainly came and talked with us." Jones, who was a JA with White, gave his freshmen a chance to work with the BSU.

"We both presented the good and bad parts of the BSU." When asked what most black students do to deal with pressures, Jones said, "They would probably go out with other black freshmen or go to the BSU."

"Despite the thing that someone says, 'I know exactly what you mean to be black,' no you don't."

Initiative

Continued from Page 8

acids and lye, she said.

Steve Leblanc, a researcher for the Massachusetts Campaign to Clean Up Hazardous Waste, explained how the hazardous waste cleanup initiative will deal with the contamination of drinking water and the environment in Massachusetts.

Leblanc feels that if the initiative passes, it will "send a mandate that this (hazardous waste) is one of the highest priorities of the citizens." In response to a question by a member of the audience about why the League of Women Voters opposes the initiative, Leblanc said, "The League does not feel that voters can make decisions about issues as important as hazardous waste, but we believe that voters are intelligent enough to make a decision about an issue like this that effects their lives."

"Off its duff"

In his speech, Jorling said that because the Massachusetts legislature has shown such an unwillingness to pass laws on the topic, he is in favor of the initiative, and although it "may not be the perfect solution to the problem, it will get the government off its duff."

When asked to comment on the initiative, Flanagan said that it might be "confusing the solution with the problem", because the cleanup effort will introduce new waste into the waste stream, without creating facilities to process that waste.

Matt McQueen '89, who organized the event, said he was not disappointed with the turnout of about 50, which filled a fraction of Brooks-Rogers Hall. "It was what I expected," said McQueen. "(Hazardous waste) is not a controversial issue."

In addition to Masspirg, sponsors included the Berkshire County Regional Planning Commission, the Center for Environmental Studies, and the geology, biology, chemistry and political science departments.

Symphony

Continued from Page 6

movement and at times, Bolipata's idea of pesante seemed to constitute banging rather harshly on the keyboard.

The Allegro moderato molto e marcato was a triumphant and energetic finish to the concert. The orchestra and the piano functioned as a single, indivisible unit, and the exchange of musical ideas through various solos was precise and coherent.

The Grieg was preceded by Hindemith's Concerto for Orchestra and Dvorak's Suite in A Major.

The Hindemith's cacophonic style and sense of uncertainty was well conducted by Hegyi, as each section provided just the right amount of unruliness to make the piece really work, i.e., the brass section was a bit unstable, as were the woodwinds, but together, they provided just the right touch of hysteria for the piece to sound coherent.

The humorous opening line of bass and horn in the second movement was also well done in a very Hindemith-like fashion, and overall, the piece was strange enough to provoke a warm audience response.

Any doubts the audience may have had about the concert were quickly washed over by the beautiful wave of harmony in the opening movement of the Dvorak. The orchestra fully demonstrated its finesse and grace in this piece. Especially outstanding were the violins, as they stayed a unit throughout the performance and showed great ability in sounding as one voice. This type of independent unity in the section was inherent throughout all parts of the orchestra, and at times, Julius Hegyi seemed to experience difficulty in controlling these independent sections. Hegyi seemed to be overpowered by the orchestra at times, as it moved rhythmically through the movements as an entity even without the articulate conducting of Hegyi.

All minor complaints aside, Hegyi conducted an exquisite and highly professional orchestra through a very impressive performance.

More Goodies Cafe
Hamburger Special
$1.25 reg. $2.00
Present this coupon
Mon.-Thurs. 4-7 p.m.
51 Spring Street, Williamstown
Store Hours: Sun. - Thurs. 8 a.m. - 8 p.m.
Fri. - Sat. 8 a.m. - 9 p.m.
breakfast — lunch — dinner
ice cream — desserts — ice cream cakes

Colonial Pizza
"The best in the area"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown Spring Street 458-9009 458-8014
No. Adams Eagle St. 664-4134 664-6889
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

NOW-WE'LL PAY YOU TO ATTEND MEDICAL SCHOOL

In fact, we'll even pay you more than $600 a month while you attend. That's in addition to paying for your tuition, required books and fees.
It's all part of the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. And here is how it works!
If you're selected for a Physician's Scholarship—from the Army, Navy, or Air Force—you're commissioned as an officer in the Reserves.
While you're in school, you'll serve 45 days a year on active duty, gaining valuable medical experience. After graduation, you will serve three or more years, the length depending on the requirements of the Service selected and years of scholarship assistance received.
As an Armed Forces physician you'll receive officer's pay and benefits, and enjoy the advantages of working regular hours. You'll also see a diversity of patients and have opportunities to use sophisticated medical technology.
But most important, while you're in medical school we'll help pay the bills. For more information, send in this coupon. There is no obligation.

YES! Tell me how the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program can help pay my medical school expenses. I understand there is no obligation.
Mail this coupon to: Armed Forces Scholarships, PO. Box 2865 Huntington Station, NY 11746-2102 9009
Check up to three: ☐ ARMY ☐ NAVY ☐ AIR FORCE
Please print all information clearly and completely.
Name (First, Middle Initial, Last) ☐ Male ☐ Female
Address Apt #
City State Zip
Phone (Area Code, Number) Soc Sec No.
College Birth Date (Mo, Day, Year)
Field of Study Graduation Date (Mo, Year)
The information you voluntarily provide will be used for recruiting purposes only. The more complete it is the better we can respond to your request (Authority 10 USC 503 and EO 9397)

Ephman—

Continued from Page 6

of DRAFT, called HAMWURST, also lurking in the steam tunnels, headed by Amherst sophomore Hamilton Rawley Coddingtom III, who turns out to be the illegitimate son of "1-A."

Historical twists

"We're trying to be as historically accurate as possible with the characters, trying to tie up every loose end," said Greenfield. He pointed out that earlier Ephman scripts reveal ironic twists about the position of Williams students in the sixties, such as the fact that Ephman's nemesis organization is called DRAFT, headed by 1-A.

"Also, the position of female characters in the original Ephman scripts is depressing," observed Greenfield, "There really are no women except for Studley Goodnight's weekend date who is referred to simply as 'date.'" The new adventures include Jim's friend Virginia Chaste, who helps him "uphold everything glorious for Williams."

Incidentally, episode four, aired last Tuesday and Saturday, included a rare cameo appearance by President Frank Oakley. In the story, Ephman II has been captured and locked in the unopened Chandelier Gymnasium. When he tries to use his Eph-phone, he is put through to the answering machine of "President Oaktree," complete with the voice of President Oakley. "Oakley agreed to do a cameo only on the condition that he was not going to be the butt of one of our jokes, which I assured him he would not be," related Greenfield.

Although Greenfield doesn't necesarily see Ephman as symbolic of the cosmic fight between good and evil, or as a physical expression of the Williams student body's intellectual might, he said that he does see it as a way to get into the Williams experience. "I see Ephman as an expression of the ideal Williams attitude and outlook that transcends time periods, and I hope people are inspired by that."

Greenfield, Gardella, and Onel hope to broadcast all the episodes to date one after another sometime during homecoming weekend.

Guernsey

Continued from Page 4

surplus, I continued to support the effort for the repeal. Not only the two-year phase out, as initially planned, but the immediate repeal effective January 1, 1987, so that the surtax will be dead, gone, buried. And we've done that. So that issue really, from the surtax standpoint, is no longer an issue...

Record: How do you view Williams as a constituent body? Do you think Williams students could be more involved in politics on the state and local level?

Guernsey: The political involvement at the College, at least as I see it and know it, is pretty much directed to the national and international issues, obviously the South African situation. But I do think there could and I would hope should be more involvement on state issues. I am a member of the Democratic Town Committee, and there have always been a couple of students, particularly from Jim Burns' class, that have participated on the Committee, and that's excellent. When I was in college I never realized that the statewide issues were so critical and were something that were very much related to the national issue.

Parents leave Chapin Hall after attending the Freshman Parents' Weekend Program on Saturday. Other events scheduled for visiting parents included a buffet luncheon in Towne Field House and the Freshman Revue. (Bowers)

Let me give you a couple of examples where students could be involved. First, I am vice-chairman of the Health Care Committee, and chairman of a special commission on elderly health care. We have no state and no national policy on health care. Medicare in 1965 was the last statement on that really, and we have to make changes to allow people who are getting older to finance health care and have that care coordinated so that we have good care. So on the health care front there's a tremendous relationship between the state and national policy.

Secondly, environmental issues, something that's important to the whole Berkshire area and Williams College. I would point out that I was a sponsor of the acid rain cap bill which we passed ... Those are just a couple of areas where I am deeply involved in a state policy setting that will also and do also have a tremendous impact even on the national scale. There is an area where college students can become involved and have a tremendous impact.

The Record: What role do you feel state governments should play in providing loans and scholarships for college students?

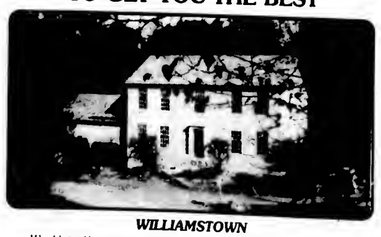
Guernsey: There is nobody that is a stronger supporter of education, and public education, and the need to make sure that we have a good choice in our higher education system for both the public and the private (colleges and universities). Scholarship money is something I have been in the lead in supporting. Most recently I supported a $75 million increase in the state dollars going into scholarship funds for students going on to higher education...

The Record: During the campaign you have expressed concern for environmental issues. What do you see as your most important upcoming legislative battle in this area, especially with respect to Williamstown?

Guernsey: First of all I'd like to mention that I have recently received the backing of the Sierra Club, which I am very pleased to say. Secondly, in answer to your question, I think that the key issue for the 80's is the issue of waste. From liquid waste to solid waste to hazardous waste to high level and low level nuclear there are two basic problems: one, they all lead to contamination of the water supply, and two, nobody wants them. So we have a tremendous citing problem. Tied up into both those major issues is of course the overall concern about finding the waste sites, many of them are not even located, and then assessing them, finding out the best ways to close them, and making sure that they don't contaminate a water supply, and then going on to clean them up. So we have those issues which I believe is probably the major focus for finding funding. I've just gotten out of the House Ways and Means Committee a $300 million-plus bill to give towns and cities aid to help them clean up their land-fill.

The Record: Do you see any political aspirations in the near future on or beyond Beacon Hill for Sherwood Guernsey?

Guernsey: I learned something in law school, you take things one thing at a time and never speculate. So, I've got an election coming up on November 4, and that's the important thing to me.



Dox
Rt. 2, Williamstown
413-458-4420
Amiga • Epson
COMPUTERS
IBM & APPLE SOFTWARE

Napolitano's
Italian Restaurant and Pizzaria
Oasis Plaza
North Adams, Mass 01247
662-2425
Serving fine Italian Food and Pizza
Tuesday and Wednesday only with this advertisement
Free Pitcher of Pepsi with any Lg. or Xlg Pizza in our dining room

PIZZA HOUSE
"we make our own dough fresh daily"
Hot Oven Grinders
Spaghetti - Greek Salad
664-6279 or 663-3770
14 varieties of pizza
We deliver four or more pizza orders to Williams College - Just call ahead
117 Main St. (Corner Eagle)
North Adams

tech systems
audio & video
Offering Quality Component Systems Since 1974
170 North Street Bennington, Vermont 05201
Mon - Sat. 10-6
(802) 447-0350

TRUST THE LARGEST TO GET YOU THE BEST

WILLIAMSTOWN
Would you like a stream view from your private bedroom deck? We have it. Brand-new three-bedroom Colonial reproduction within walking distance to theater. Handsplit shake roof, two corner fireplaces and many extras. Call for information.
C-314 $208,000.
America's largest full service real estate company.
Six Berkshire County Offices:
• Williamstown, 610 Main St., 456-8307
• North Adams, Oasis Plaza, 664-4366
• Adams, 7 Park St., 743-5645
• Pittsfield, 402 East St., 443-4416
• Lee, 10 Park St., 243-1052
• Gt. Barrington, 390 Main St., 528-2040
Licensed in:
Massachusetts
New York
Vermont
Connecticut

An Independently Owned and Operated Member of Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Students of All Majors and Fields Are Invited to hear about our M.B.A., Ph.D., and combined-degree programs. We will hold several group information sessions on your campus to answer questions about the curriculum, admission, financial aid, and career opportunities in management.
Tuesday, November 4, 1986
Contact Office of Career Counseling
Special study options include the International Business Exchange Program, and joint-degree programs as follows: M.B.A./A.M. in Far Eastern studies, Latin American studies, Middle Eastern studies, library science, and social service administration; M.B.A./J.D. with the Law School; and M.B.A./M.D. with the Pritzker School of Medicine.

Lady Ephs top NASC to set record at 8-4-1

by Stewart Verdery

Raising its record to 8-4-1, the women's soccer squad ended a string of unimpressive performances Saturday with a dominating 2-0 win over North Adams. In the team's first home game in three weeks, the Ephwomen controlled the entire field, outshooting their opponents 24-2.

Most of the first half was a study in frustration for Williams, as shot after shot was turned away by a quick Mohawk goalkeeper. On at least four different occasions, Eph penetrations led to close-range shots, but as the end of the half neared, the game remained scoreless. Meanwhile, the Mohawks were rarely even pushing the ball across midfield, failing to take any shots in the half.

Finally at the 11-minute mark, the Ephs broke through for a score. Gigi Madore '87 beat her defender on the left side of the goal box and released a shot into the goalmouth. Standing just feet from the goal, Christine Boddicker '88 deflected the shot with her foot past the keeper to put the Ephs on the board.

With the way the Williams defense and midfield were playing, one goal seemed to assure the Ephs of a win, but all doubts about the outcome of the game vanished early in the second half when Boddicker smashed in a shot off a pass from Lori Schaen '89. Eph goalie Joyce Rogers '88 was called on to make only two saves, one of which was a exceptional diving stop of a shot from a corner kick.

Loss at Mt. Holyoke

A week ago, Mt. Holyoke squeaked out a 1-0 victory over Williams in Springfield. Goalie Rogers held up well under a barrage of 28 shots by the homestanders, allowing only a single first half tally. Springfield halfback Stephanie Catting scored midway through the half off an assist from defender Kara McCartney. The Ephwomen could not convert any of their 12 shots into goals, falling 1-0.

The squad finished out the regular season today at Union.

Seminar—

Continued from Page 1

the students to easily have contact with other freshmen, and they are connected, allowing for interaction among the FRS participants as well.

Each entry has two Junior Advisers who were invited to apply for the FRS spots after they were accepted as JA's. Lisa Mandl, a JA in Williams C, said she applied, because "I thought it would be interesting to be in a new, experimental entry."

Nils Christoffersen, a JA in Williams D, said he wanted to be a JA in the FRS, because he was curious about the experiment. He said the freshmen in his entry differ from other freshmen only in that, "They're all as a group pretty outgoing, maybe a little more outgoing."

The JAs are part of a 19-member staff involved in running the FRS. Also included are FRS coordinator and Gaudino scholar Professor Kurt Tauber, the three professors teaching FRS 101 and FRS 102, four teaching assistants, five freshmen advisers, Kavanaugh, and Dean of the College Stephen Fix. According to Tauber, this size staff is necessary to insure that the experiment does not fail because of a lack of supervision.

This group has met twice so far to discuss the FRS. Tauber said that discussion has focused largely on the first-semester course, "The Uses of Evidence", which he called "the most looked-over course that anybody ever gave."

"The Uses of Evidence" is team-taught by Professor of physics David Park and Assistant Professor of English Stephen Tifft. The course covers such varied topics as black holes and a Shakespeare play in examining what can be considered evidence. Although the students found each isolated topic interesting, Tifft said, "They're anxious to be able to synthesize and put one thing in connection with another."

Park and Tifft both noticed a greater amount of class participation and discussion among the students in their course compared to students in other classes. Park said, "The students, especially the women, talk a great deal more and participate much more. There's a great tendency (in other classes) for women to sit back and let the men talk."

Entry discussion

FRS students do discuss material from class when they are not in class, according to program participants. Mandl said, "In this entry, they will bring something home and talk about it, but it's not like an intellectual entry."

Christoffersen told of discussion in his entry about the class, stating, "They definitely talk about the class they take together, but that happens in all entries. It just happens here on a bigger scale."

Associate Professor of Philosophy Rosemarie Tong will teach FRS 102, "Public and Private Morality". This course was originally to be team-taught by Tong and the late Professor Richard Krouse. Tong said she is teaching the course, because, "I kind of like intense teaching experiences."

She said her contact with the program so far has been through her freshmen advisees and at the two meeting of the faculty involved with the FRS. She termed the second meeting, "One of the best discussions of teaching strategy that I've heard at Williams in a long time. I felt proud to be associated with a group of people who cared so much about something."

The FRS will be evaluated by a committee to be appointed by President Oakley, with Fix chairing the committee. According to Fix, the committee will present an evaluation of the program at the end of the two years allotted for the experiment, and it may present periodic evaluations as well.

"Seeing is Believing"
Many new and exciting items
Now in stock
Pick up your NEW CATALOG
WILLIAMS SHOP
Spring Street

A NEW WAY TO CHANGE OLD PATTERNS.
THICK-ENDS™
No matter how creative the cut or dramatic the design, your hair can't look its best unless it's in optimum condition. And that's especially true for the ends.
That's why Sebastian formulated Thick-Ends — to help those brittle ends behave. This leave-on conditioner contains substantive protein that helps hair gain thickness, pliability and shine. Special humectants help replace the natural moisture-retaining properties lost by dry, damaged hair.
Thick-Ends responds very effectively to those portions of the hair that have been chemically processed (permed, bleached, etc.), exposed to harsh environmental changes and pollutants, or subjected to UV light from the sun.

49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585
122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576
125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
802-447-2648
CLIP SHOP
We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary!
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER.
©1985 SEBASTIAN INTERNATIONAL INC Woodland Hills, CA
Artistic Center is a trademark of Sebastian International

Empty suits need not attend.
Advertising Presentation by J. Walter Thompson
Wednesday, October 29, 1986
7:00 p.m., Audio Visual Department/Stetson Hall.

WCFM 91.9

FALL PROGRAMMING SCHEDULE 1986

S	M	T	W	Th	F	S
	7:00 CORINNA LAMB	7:00 DOUG HUNT	7:00 GWEN GARCELON	7:00 ROB WARD	7:00 RICH GARDELLA
10:00 DJ CLASSES	9:30 DAVE FUTTERMAN	9:30 SEAN WALTER	9:30 CHRIS PAGE	9:30 JON HECK	9:30 KATIE HOGAN	9:30 JAN BLACKA
12:00 TOM CASE	12:00 SARA TAUB	12:00 BRANDT JOHNSON	12:00 DAN RICHMOND	12:00 DAVE GOLDBERG	12:00 JOHN KELSH	12:00 MIKE BARRATTA
2:30 COMMUNITY AFFAIRS	2:30 PAUL McGREAL	2:30 CHRIS JOHANSON	2:30 KURT BILLICK	2:30 KATHI ROSENBAUM	2:30 TOM BURKE	2:00 WILLIAMS FOOTBALL
3:15 CLASSICAL MUSIC	5:00 NEWSVIEW 92 5:00					4:00 TRACEY BLANKENSHIP
6:00 LET THE MUSIC SPEAK	5:30 DIRCK FULLER	5:30 JAZZ with ROB GREENFIELD	5:30 JAZZ with SUE SILVERMAN	5:30 JAZZ with BOB DEMOTT	5:30 MARTIN WHITE	6:00 DAN PRYOR
8:00 ERIK MIGDAIL	8:00 JOSH LEBOWITZ	8:00 - 10:00 JACK PHILLIPS	8:00 EROL ONEL	8:00 - 9:30 JOHN BOOTH	8:00 MARJORIE SWEENEY	8:00 SHIRLEY KAGAN
		10:00 PREMIERE ALBUM		This is POP
10:30 JIM REICHELD & BARTON GEORGE	10:30 SHERMAN WILLMOTT	11:00 MIKE BEST	10:30 SPEED KING	10:30 SPACE GROSSMAN	10:30 JOHN BANK	10:30 BILL TULLOCH
1:00 SHANNON BRENNAN	1:00 JOHN BELLWOAR	1:00 ANDY GARROW	1:00 GREG BESTER & M. COPELAND	1:00 PETE DAHLING	1:00 WCFM REQUESTLINE 597-2197	1:00
3:00	3:00	3:00	3:00	3:00	3:00	3:00

WCFM 1986-87 Board of Directors

Josh Lebowitz
General Manager
SU 1813 x2766

Andy Harris
Program Director
SU 1209 x6227

Rich Gardella
News Director
SU 1176 x6892

Marjorie Sweeney
Community Affairs Director
SU 1976 458-4318

John Booth
External Music Director
SU 1586 458-5522

Dave Grossman
Production Director
SU 1731 458-2271

Corinna Lamb
Public Affairs Director
SU 1273 x6509

Mike Best
Internal Music Director
SU 1578 x6369

Paul McGreal
Personnel Director
SU 2920 x6478

Erol Onel
Technical Director
SU 1377 x2839

Rob Greenfield
Treasurer
SU 1729 x2840

Jack Phillips
Sports Director
SU 1390 x2916

Paul Willey
Chief Engineer
Home: 663-3419
Office: 663-6567

Soccer falls 3-2 to Conn. to go 5-4-2

by Greg Leeds

The men's soccer team lost 3-2 to Connecticut College on Saturday. Playing without starters Jon Deveaux '87, Scott Walker '87, and Ambi Stern '90, the Ephmen were still able to hold off their opponents through most of the first half.

Nikolai Nachamkin '88 opened the scoring for Williams at 24:35 by putting in a ball which had been deflected by goalkeeper Kevin Wolf from a shot by Doug Brooks '90. The Ephs then held Conn. College scoreless until Jeff Geddes put one in 31 minutes into the half.

Mike Masters '89 had some good chances for the Ephs, including a one-on-one where Wolf pushed Masters down yet no foul was called. Just two minutes into the second half Conn. College put themselves up 2-1 with a header just out of Eph senior goalkeeper Brad Bryan's reach.

Halfway into the period Conn. College widened the gap when Ken Langevin netted one following a deflection by teammate Randy Cline. The Ephmen pulled within one when freshman Dan Calichman pounded in another deflected shot with 4:42 left.

Coach Mike Russo, while disappointed with the result, was impressed by the performances of Masters and Mike Roach '88 in particular. The injuries forced some shifts in position: Roach played stopper while Calichman moved up to midfield. Helge Weiner '87 replaced Deveaux at sweeper and the Ephs played with three defensive backs instead of four.

Senior Helge Weiner is all alone with the ball with room to operate in earlier action against Bates. (LeBauer)

Masters shines

In a dramatic overtime victory earlier in the week, Masters scored twice for Williams as Babson fell 2-1. Despite thoroughly outplaying Babson offensively during the first half, and outshooting them 12-2, Williams was unable to score, and Babson's first shot on net was a goal — a perfectly-placed drive to the upper corner of the net just beyond the hands of the diving Bryan.

Masters scored his first goal at 19:11 into the second half from a point-blank shot in front of the net, with Kurt Schroeder '88 assisting. Neither team was able to score again, so the game went into the usual two ten-minute overtime periods. Just :58 into the second OT, Masters found a hole in the wall of Babson defenders and netted the final and deciding goal.

Russo was extremely pleased with the persistence of the team and its ability to maintain composure in light of some bad luck in scoring opportunities. "I thought we dominated the first half," he said, "and coming back after being down 0-1 and staying tough through the overtimes was testimony to the mental attributes of these players. Masters had a fine game, as did Deveaux, who played solidly despite being injured."

The Ephs tangle with Springfield on Wednesday at Cole Field before battling for the Little Three title, starting with Wesleyan on Saturday. Williams is essentially eliminated from post-season playoffs, so the primary goal is to retain the Little Three title they so decisively won last year.

14-0 romp

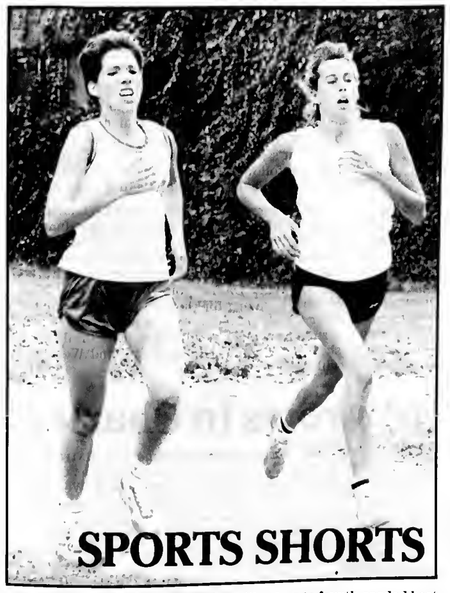
Rugby beats Holyoke

by Steph Jacon

Some fierce rugby has been played during the last three weeks by the women's rugby team; fall reading period found the Williams 15 in Boston for the Beantown tournament. The squad then travelled to Hanover N.H. to take on the green tide from Dartmouth. Finally the ruggers faced Mt. Holyoke this past Saturday.

Saturday's action at Mt. Holyoke proved profitable to the WWRFC, as the A-side crushed them by a score of 14-0. Sophomore scrumhalf Kerry Kilander opened the scoring by pushing the ball down from a maul with the help of Katie Gerber '88. Kilander also scored on a 10-meter run. Sonja Lengnick and Mary Petersen each converted on tries to make the final score 14-0.

Rugby action in Boston over reading period was characterized by outstanding endurance and determination. The Boston women's B-side was the first test for the weary Williams squad. The Lady Ephs dominated play but the Boston women scored on a breakaway try to lead at the end of the first half 4-0. That turned out to be the game's only score as a ball touched down in the try zone by Mary Petersen '87 wasn't ruled a score by the ref.



The team played two outstanding games on Sunday, first steamrolling MIT 22-0 and then succombing to the Valley team 4-0 in quadruple overtime. Against MIT, fine line-work and accurate passing provided an advantage as versatile Kerry Kilander '89 opened the scoring by scampering past the confused MIT'ers from 10 meters out. The squad never stopped pouring it on, converting try after try in racking up an impressive 22-0 victory.

In their final game against Valley, the team played through two scoreless halves. Three overtime periods then followed and still there was no score. Valley finally scored in the last thirty seconds of the fourth overtime to win 4-0.

Loss to Dartmouth

The following weekend all three sides had an opportunity to play at Dartmouth. The A-side suffered a disappointing 18-0 loss in a game characterized by sloppy ball-handling. Langnick exhibited unyielding strength throughout the frustrating contest as she continually broke through on lineouts and provided power in the mauls. Annie Cordova '88 displayed great kicking prowess with her punts that landed deep in Dartmouth territory.

Both B- and C-sides tasted victory with identical 8-0 romps over the Green Wave. Shannon Brennan '89 touched the ball down for one score, while classmate Laura Whitman opened the scoring in the C-side game.

SPORTS SHORTS

Volleyball

The volleyball team encountered a sudden slump this weekend, as the Ephs entered the NIAC tournament seeded first and boasting a 24-6 record but couldn't seem to get untracked, losing three straight matches to Bates, Amherst, and Tufts.

Williams opened the tourney with a loss to fourth-seeded host Bates in two games. The Ephwomen then took on Amherst, a team they had defeated three times already this year. After coming back to knot the match at a game a piece, the Ephs lost the deciding third game in heartbreaking fashion, 16-14.

In its final match, Williams lost to eventual champion Tufts in straight games.

The losses left the Ephs fourth in New England with a 10-4 conference record. The disappointing finish marks the second year in a row the Ephwomen entered the NAIC tourney seeded first but failed to be crowned champions. The team nevertheless enjoyed a great season and looks toward continuing success next year as the team's talented freshman corps shall return next year.

— Marc McDermott

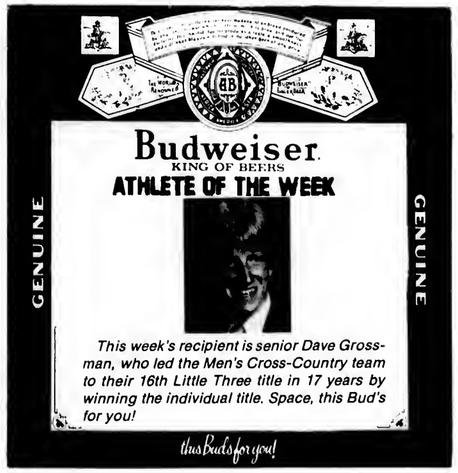
Women runners

The women's cross-country team ran strongly this Saturday at Wesleyan in the Little Three meet. After 2.5 miles of a 3.1 mile course, Williams was within one point of the defending champs, but Wesleyan's top runner went on to win, ending the Ephs' hopes.

The Ephwomen were led by junior Anne Knott, who raced to a fifth place finish behind three Wesleyan women and Berit Ashia of Amherst. Following her in the Williams scoring was captain Becky Conklin '87, Kate Pugh '87, Sarah Pierce '88, and Anne Thompson '89 in places seven through 10 respectively.

The score ended at 29 to 36 for Wesleyan and Amherst was never in the race as its second runner managed only 12th and the rest of the team fell further back. Despite the loss, the Williams team looks forward to the Division III New Englands in three weeks, with only the alumnae meet in between.

— Cathy Cocks



Field hockey

Taking out their aggressions on their opponents for not making the NIAC tournament when bids were announced Monday, the field hockey team blasted out to a 4-1 halftime lead before crushing Russell Sage 8-1 on Wednesday, setting their final season record at 8-4.

"We got to play everybody, including our substitute goaltender (freshman Stacy Minyard) the whole game," said coach Chris Larson-Mason. "We came up with lots of good combinations and things flowed real well in the second half."

Junior Lisa Tenerowicz opened the scoring for the Ephs, followed by the first of freshman Maureen Flaherty's two goals. Senior co-captain Sue Scarborough also tallied two goals, while sophomore Kirsten Neuse and freshman Judy Fleishman each scored one.

"We have a young team, so it looks pretty good for next year," continued Larson-Mason. Seven freshman played on this year's squad, with four starting regularly. Five seniors will leave the squad: Scarborough, co-captain Lee Briggs, Mary Vandersteur, Kirsten Rooks, and Sybil Frankenburg.

Football falls 29-26

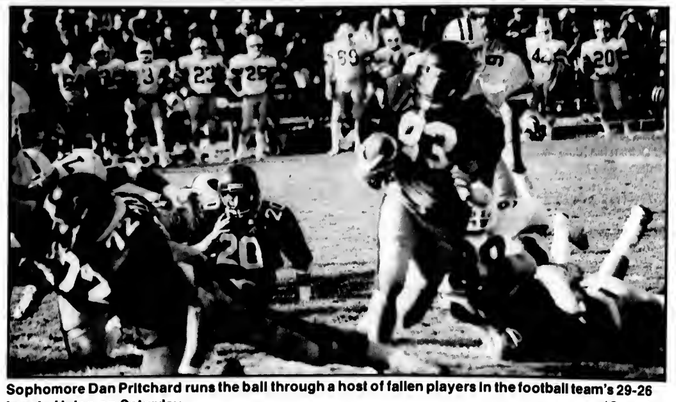
by Al Mottur

For sixty minutes this past Saturday, the football team fought toe-to-toe with the powerful Dutchmen of Union, the ninth-ranked team in the country. And it was not until the final play, a hail-mary attempt from sophomore QB Scott Kennedy that fell incomplete, that the game's outcome was decided, a 29-26 Union victory.

Usually when a team that is ranked ninth in the nation, is undefeated, and harbors expectations of a possible national championship, plays a 3-2 squad ranked ninth in New England coming off a 33-3 loss, one doesn't expect the game to be too close. However, on Saturday the Ephs sent a huge scare into Union's hopes of an undefeated season, and nearly pulled off one of the biggest upsets in Division III this year.

The contest started off like other games have this year for Williams: Union fumbled the opening kickoff and Kennedy quickly connected on a TD strike to John Shaw '87, propelling the Ephs to a 7-0 lead. Shaw, who caught six passes for 100 yards and his sixth touchdown grab of the season, is rapidly putting together an excellent season, setting himself up for potential all-New England honors by the end of the fall.

At this point, things started to go Union's way and when the Dutchmen stormed to a 19-10 lead with a minute left in the second quarter, it seemed as if the national power was ready to dictate the rest of the action. But the Ephs struck back with a 26 yard field goal from John Birgbauer '90 with eight seconds left to pull within six, supplying them with the momentum heading into halftime.



As the third quarter started, Union again appeared ready to turn the game into an easy victory, playing inspired defense, holding Williams to -1 yards on its first two plays from scrimmage. But then on third and eleven, Kennedy handed off to fullback Rob Miller '87 on a draw play which completely fooled the Dutchmen. Miller scampered 75 yards untouched for a touchdown and a 20-19 Eph lead.

The Dutchmen once again staked out what seemed to be a safe lead, this time jumping ahead 29-20 on a 22 yard field goal and a quick TD after a fumbled punt by Williams. After several exchanges of posession, the Ephmen got back on the board with slightly over two minutes left in the game to pull within three on one of the most dramatic plays of the year.

The Ephs went for it on fourth and six from the Union fifteen instead of attempting a 30 yard field goal that would have brought them within six. On the play Kennedy lofted a soft pass to freshman wide-out Kevin Brown who bobbled the ball before hauling it in for the TD.

Coach Bob Odell next opted to kick off deep, hoping his defense could hold off the Union attack, giving Kennedy and the rest of the offense a chance to pull off one more score. The defense did its job, stopping the Dutchmen and forcing a punt with under a minute to play. An intentional grounding penalty on Kennedy, however, left the Ephs on their own 35 with 30 seconds left, forcing the Ephs to throw deep. Kennedy's two desparation passes fell incomplete and Union took the victory.

The performance was one of the Ephs' best of the season, one that should instill confidence and momentum heading into this week's home game against Wesleyan and next week's contest on the road against Amherst.

Sophomore Dan Pritchard runs the ball through a host of fallen players in the football team's 29-26 loss to Union on Saturday. (Camp)

Another Little 3 title came the Ephs' way on Saturday, and senior Dave Grossman led the way by winning the individual title. (LeBauer)

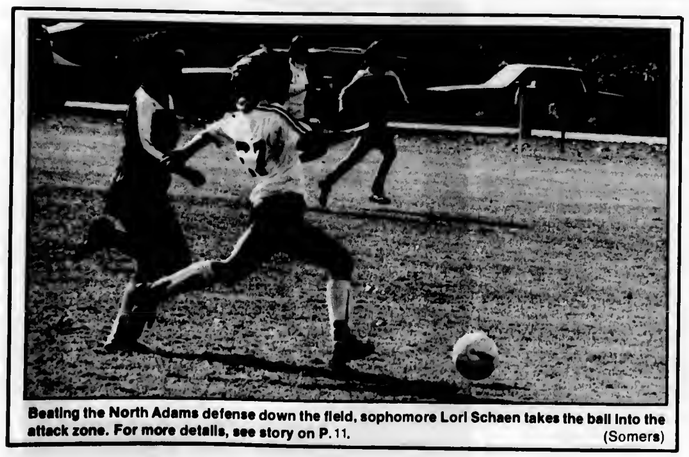
Grossman paces Ephs to Little 3 title

by Steve Brody

As the Williams cross-country team approached the starting line before Saturday's Little Three Championships at Wesleyan, the Ephmen were heavy underdogs to Amherst, and only a superior effort would give them any chance for victory.

The Ephmen displayed such an effort and pulled off an upset to take the Little Three once again. The final tally was Williams 32, Amherst 37, Wesleyan 54. The Ephs have now been crowned as champions in sixteen out of the last seventeen years. In addition, senior Dave Grossman won the individual race with an excellent time of 24:57.

The race started quickly in the first two miles, with almost the entire field under ten minutes. Grossman moved out ahead of the lead pack to take control of the race. The pack behind him consisted of seven runners, including the top three from Amherst and Williams seniors Mike Coyne and Mark Gilrain.



Twenty yards behind this pack, Jon Fisher '87 and Dave Prockop '87 strained to keep with the fourth and fifth runners from Amherst, knowing that the team's fortunes depended on them.

Grossman continued to open up his lead in the next two miles, cruising along with a perfect stride. Coyne and Gilrain continued running hard through mile three, staying in the middle of the pack of six. However, on a hill in the fourth mile, Coyne began to lag behind the pack. Behind Coyne, Amherst appeared to be taking command. Both their fourth and fifth runners moved ahead of Fisher and Prockop, opening up a 25-yard gap. As the runners crossed the four-mile point, Williams was losing its edge.

It was here, however, that the Ephmen reached down and pulled out a last surge. While Grossman showed his talent by coasting to the victory, the rest of the team dug in for the final stretch. Coyne flew through the last mile, again reaching the pack that he had fallen behind. With an incredible finishing kick, he moved past both Wesleyan runners and almost caught Amherst's Tom Evans for third. Gilrain also came through with an excellent kick to beat the second Wesleyan runner and finish sixth.

Fisher's incredible last mile surge took him past the Lord Jeffs' fifth and fourth runners and brought him to within a stride of catching Amherst's Karaganis, as he took ninth overall. Prockop followed Fisher and was able to finish in 12th place, ahead of Amherst's fifth man.

Also deserving applause was the Williams JV team, which won once again by sheer domination, taking five of the top six places in the meet, behind the first place finish of Marco Curnen '87, and the strong freshman contingent of John Tuxill, Dwayne Davis, and Sam Coffin. Matt McQueen, racing for the first time in 14 months after a knee injury, turned in an incredible performance to place sixth. The score in the JV race showed Williams with 15 points and Wesleyan with 48.

Beating the North Adams defense down the field, sophomore Lori Schaen takes the ball into the attack zone. For more details, see story on P. 11. (Somers)

Crew rows in Charles

A week and a half ago two men's and two women's boats traveled to Boston to compete in New England's most prestigious boating event, The Head of The Charles. Men's crew coach Peter Wells was "reasonably pleased with the team's performance, although I thought they could've done just a bit better." The two men's boats, both entered in the varsity lightweight division — distinguished by the requirement that the average weight of each boater must be 160 pounds — finished 28th and 21st respectively.

The top Williams boat finished in front of traditional rivals Trinity and Conn. College and behind Coast Guard and Mercyhearst with a time of 16:09. Their time was a little more than a minute off the first-place U.S. squad and the second-place Canadian National team and a few seconds worse than Wells had desired: "We did well, but our goal was to finish in 18th or better. And we were only about four or five seconds away from accomplishing that."

Women excel in Championship 4

Unlike the men's boats, the women entered two different races, the club eight and the Championship 4. In the club eight races, the lady rowers finished 12th out of eighteen. And in the Championship 4, a race in which each boat only has four rowers and a coxswain, the boat of Sandy Wanstall '87, Penny Beach '87, Erin Block '88, and Thayer Tolles '87 finished 10th out of 28 boats, beating almost every boat in the NESCAC's that Williams would row against during the year.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 7 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE NOVEMBER 4, 1986

Police investigate Bacchus party; charges may be filed

by Karen Costenbader

Williamstown police are investigating complaints of assault and battery and underage drinking taking place at a party on Saturday, October 25 in Dodd House. Twenty kegs of beer were served at the party held by Club Bacchus, a student organization.

According to Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zolto, the police were called to the scene of a fight which was in progress at about midnight on Saturday night. Involved in the fight were two Williams students, a Williamstown resident who attends Union College, and his girlfriend.

Zolto said that the officers, who were summoned by Williams Security, found two of the men involved with signs of injury including bleeding, a black eye and a loose tooth. The woman also claimed she had been punched.

"I have no doubt in my mind that criminal charges will be filed," said Zolto. He refused to comment on the specifics of the case, saying "when I have got something under investigation, I usually don't talk about it."

According to Bacchus members and other witnesses, the dispute started with an exchange of comments about the Williams-Union football game that had been played that afternoon. A window pane in the front door of Dodd was broken at some point during the fight, some students claiming it was smashed, and others saying it was hit accidentally. One Bacchus member who did not want to be named commented, "It was just a case of someone getting riled up at a party, and the police really blew it out of proportion."

Zolto, however, expressed concern over the circumstances of the party, as well as the fight. "There were 20 kegs of beer at that party, and quite a few underage people. We know there was money changing hands as well."

"You have a problem at that school," he continued, "A lot of drinking is going on. The law says you have to be 21. We've got to have some cooperation from you people. If you don't break the law in your home states, why should you come here and do it?"

Zolto stressed that, by law, a license is required to dispense beer. He underlined the responsibility of the person from whom an underaged drinker obtains alcohol. "What if you (an underage drinker) got hurt at a party? The guy who gave you the alcohol is responsible. There's been so many lawsuits around that you've got to be careful. The third party can be sued — it's been proven in Massachusetts and large amounts have been awarded."

Police investigation

Zolto emphasized that the police were in the process of investigating underage drinking on the Williams campus. He said, "The drinking age is 21. That cuts three classes right out of the ballgame. Learning how to drink isn't part of your college curriculum."

About the Bacchus party at Dodd, Zolto said, "20 kegs of beer, divided by 400 students, that's 15 cups of beer — everyone's drunk, right?" He continued, "We know that you paid and got a stamp, and we know that it was advertised. If I'm under 21, and someone furnishes me with alcohol, giving or selling it, that's violating the law." He mentioned that the police were aware of an incident earlier this year in which two fourteen-year-old girls had been served beer at a Williams party.

Dean of the College Stephen Fix met with Zolto last Friday morning in Zolto's office.

Continued on Page 9

"You have a problem at that school," says Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zolto. That problem, according to Zolto, is underage drinking of beer and liquor like this.

Paying for college: new laws bring change

by Alexandra Glover

Legislation passed by Congress this year will have varying effects on the way students and their families pay for a Williams education and the alumni support the college, according to the financial aid and development offices at Williams.

The re-authorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 will affect some Williams students receiving Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs), according to Phillip Wick, director of financial aid at Williams. In addition, the new tax reform bill may reshape the way in which people pay for their children's education, Wick said.

Changes in the tax legislation affecting deductions for donations and gifts are not expected to substantially alter alumni giving, according to Michael Oman, director of development at Williams.

"Everyone put a lot of effort into the (new tax legislation), and as a result lost some ground in the re-authorization of the Higher Education Act," Wick said.

The change in GSL eligibility requirements affects many students who might not qualify for financial aid from Williams, Wick said. As opposed to previous years, when it was not based entirely on need, this year "the Guaranteed Student Loan program has been put on a complete need basis," stressed Wick. "Everyone applying for a GSL has to file a financial aid form, and that's probably going to knock out 20 percent of Williams' students.

"Basically, it has already started — it took place as of the (law's) date of enactment when the president signed it."

The re-authorization involved several changes in the original 1965 bill, according to Wick, including definitions of independence from one's parents.

Tighter restrictions

"You have to be over 23 ... to be independent for the stand-

Continued on Page 7

There was plenty for the crowd to be excited about on Saturday as the Ephs trounced Wesleyan by 42-28. Freshman Jon Horton, number 31 above, gained valuable yards for the Ephs and loyal Ephs fans loudly voiced their support the entire afternoon. (Somers and Camp)

College competition for faculty is intense

by James Spallone

Increased competition for faculty from the private sector, large universities and the government is a matter of concern for Williams' administration and department heads.

Although Williams can rely to some extent on its reputation as an outstanding liberal arts college to attract potential faculty, the competition, especially for faculty members with Ph.D.'s demanded in business, is still strong, according to faculty and department chairmen at the college.

"The competition with graduate business schools is, in fact, very real," said Gordon Winston, professor of economics and former department head. He said that this competition is due to the high caliber of the Ph.D. holders that the department seeks. "We could just sit back and let the big universities have their pick and then take what's left, but we go nose to nose with the major schools for the same people."

Winston conceded that during the hiring process some good professors are lost to the larger research universities, but said that, once a professor is here, he or she is unlikely to "bid out" in favor of the private sector or another school.

Not for the money

"Someone may start at 40 to 43 thousand (dollars) a year starting out teaching at a top

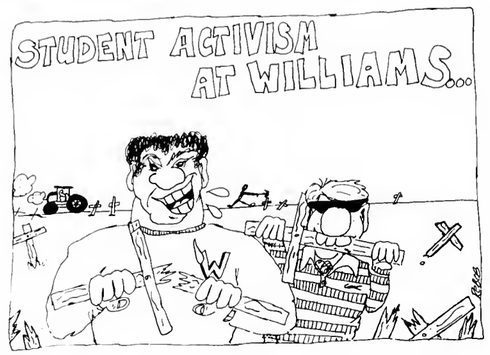
Continued on Page 9

November 4, 1986

Where's the support?

It is time that either the crosses come down or the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition shows a commitment to its protest.

With its right to free expression affirmed and its point made in forcing the campus to confront the issue of South Africa, WAAC should now act responsibly and take down the crosses if its members are not willing to invest their time in maintaining the protest. Many of the crosses have fallen down at some point, and WAAC members are rarely at the scene at Baxter lawn, yet security officers still have to invest their time watching the crosses, and all students are subjected to the protest.



WAAC acted far more responsibly last spring when it erected shanties. Protesters camped out with their protest; WAAC members were on hand day and night; and speakers addressed the issues to anyone willing to listen. Now, however, WAAC has erected crosses and left the scene. What are the conditions for the end of the protest? What do crosses mean as a protest, does WAAC want students to mourn the dead or help the living? And how so?

The goals of the protest have not been clearly stated and as a result many community members are confused about WAAC's motives. Certainly, support for WAAC and its cause is not near as prevalent as it was last spring.

It is entirely possible that WAAC has left up the crosses and abadoned them in the hopes of receiving sympathy if someone does vandalize the protest. Or perhaps WAAC is in a quandary, having embarked on an open-ended protest with no way out. But the threat of vandalism does exist and that is why security has put in so many hours at Baxter lawn. Why hasn't WAAC?

If WAAC is unwilling to treat its protest seriously, why should security and why should we?

Outer Limits REBOB

Quote of the Week

20 kegs of beer, divided by 400 students, that's 15 cups of beer - everyone's drunk, right?

Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zoito in reference to a Club Bacchus party

Letters

Cemetery

To the Editor:

The mock cemetery on the lawn in front of Baxter Hall should be removed. It is not that I am opposed to the idea behind the crosses; in fact, I find the system of apartheid to be a completely repellant (sic) institution; an institution without a shred of moral foundation or justification. But apartheid is not the issue here.

The issue at hand is the fact that a group of people have been inflicting their opinions on me for over two weeks. This is absurd. I will not deny that the crosses served a purpose. Apartheid is something that should be brought to the attention of the Williams student body, and this objective the cemetery fulfilled. But it had fulfilled this objective over a week ago.

Every time I walk to Baxter Hall I do not want to be thrown into a mental state that requires philosophical speculation about the inherent equality of men; but every time I look at the mock cemetery this happens, and it absolutely is not fair. Is it too much to ask to be able to walk to Baxter and have my mind remain at peace? When are the students of this college going to be able to sit on Baxter lawn and reflect about nothing but a beautiful Indian summer day?

The crosses have served their purpose well, but their usefulness has passed. They should be taken down because they are impinging upon my right, and the right of every other Williams student, to be care-free; and sometimes this is a moral, and even necessary, state of mind to have.

Michael Swartz '90

Ornaments

To the Editor:

Although disagreeing with the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition's position on divestment, the Garfield Republican Club shares WAAC's concern for the deteriorating situation in South Africa and respects WAAC's right to express its opinions. However, symbolic statements eventually lose their impact as people become used to them. The crosses on Baxter lawn are steadily losing their political content and becoming merely macabre garden ornaments.

The Garfield Republican Club will not remove the crosses, but WAAC should. The right to a public forum does not include being able to infringe in perpetuity the rights of the rest of the college community. The lawn is not the sole preserve of WAAC. Parent's Weekend and Homecoming are now over. We ask WAAC to show some consideration for the rest of the campus and takedown the crosses.

David Rakonitz '88
on behalf of Garfield Republican Club

Parallax

To the Editor:

I thought of remaining silent on the gross misinformation communicated in the article on Parallax a week ago. My conscience got the best of me. Before clarifying the numerous misconceptions, first the truths should be addressed. It is true that the Finance Committee denied funding to Parallax. I do not fault the Record when I say that all the reasons given in the article are false. Further, it is a bit premature to mourn the loss.

Neither student apathy, confusion with Germinal, the editors' personal political agenda, nor the emerging television generation caused the denial of funds. In May, when the last issue was published, Parallax had a working staff of seven with contributing articles from another five students. Further, in every issue published last year, great strides were taken to encourage perspectives from all sides. Issues as diverse as contras and abortion were presented in pro-con style accompanied by student polls. In addition, there were commitments from seven students to work the paper this year.

If this is all true, then what did cause the denial of funds? Was it, as the article quoted, because the paper had "no organization whatsoever?" Hardly. The Finance Committee is as much to blame as the paper itself.

Like every other student organization request in College Council funding, Parallax submitted a budget request last spring. At that time and later no indication was given that attendance at Finance Committee meetings or correspondence with Committee members was mandatory to facilitate the approval of funding. While it is true that a Committee member sought to contact members of the staff, he gave no indication that funding hinged on discussions with him. But these mix-ups are in the end irrelevant. What is important is the status of the paper.

Like the editors of the Record we believe that "there is a large group of students whose views are not being articulated." That is why we seek funding for the spring semester so that Parallax can continue. It is unacceptable that political debate remains stifled and certain viewpoints remain silenced. For this reason I have contacted the appropriate members of the Finance Committee and thus still believe that funding will be forthcoming. If not, then we are left clutching the depressing reality of the Record's question: "Whither discourse?" Hopefully, Parallax, with the assistance of the Finance Committee, can help answer that question.

Eric Adelstein '87
Parallax Editor-in-chief

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Stephanie Brown, Mary Iliff
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

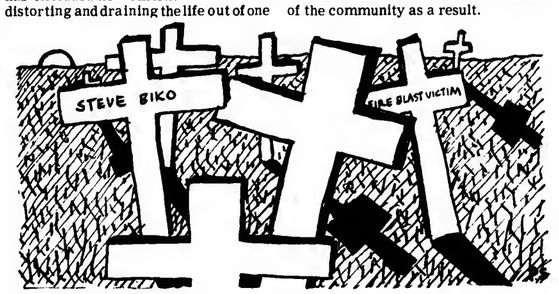
Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Crosses should not be used to make political statements

by Clark West '90

In last week's Record, Carol Pepper rightly told us that apartheid is wrong. In the debate, however, about the crosses placed on Baxter lawn, this is not the issue. Regardless of what Sarah Lawton (Letter to the Editor, Oct. 21) would have us believe, the mode of political expression used is as much an issue as the political sentiment behind it. The students at Dartmouth who chose to tear down the shanties to express their views on divestment surely must be criticized for the style of protest they used. I am certainly not comparing the crosses to a violent irrational display by particular students at Dartmouth; I would like to suggest that one's means of expression can be justly criticized without condemning that group's political ideology.

In this particular case, the use of the cross, the strongest religious symbol in the Western world, to support one's political cause is being questioned.



For the Christian, the cross holds many equally powerful and valid meanings. Jesus Christ's death as God's ultimate gift of love to man, the reconciliation of man to God, a symbol of forgiveness of sin, all of these meanings are contained in the symbol of the cross for the Christian believer. The cross holds no meaning on its own; its power is given to it by the Christian who believes that Christ in fact died on the cross. The cross contains little meaning for the atheist who does not believe in the "myth" of Christ.

The crosses on Baxter lawn, in this sense, lose much of their true meaning and power. They are not there for the Christian qua Christian but are there to commemorate "the people who died in South Africa in the last three years in the struggle to end apartheid." (Record, Oct. 21) Surely there is nothing wrong with commemorating the loss of lives in a struggle for freedom but is the cross the best way to do this? I would like to suggest that it creates more problems than are necessary in this type of protest and that another form of expression might be more effective.

In the placing of crosses for those who died in South Africa in the last three and a half years, are we to assume that all those who died are Christians? What about the non-Christians, including atheists or agnostics, who gave up their lives fighting the evils of apartheid? Is the cross an appropriate symbol for them? For the Christians in the Williams community as well, the cross does not hold as much meaning as a non-Christian or non-religious symbol might. In fact, the cross, as it is seen as a symbol of Christianity, might even cause them to feel apathetic or antagonistic to a protest that uses one religious symbol in preference to another equally valid one.

Again, the true meaning of a religious symbol is intricately bound up in the beliefs of the follower of that religion. By placing crosses on the lawn, the WAAC has excluded non-Christians as well as distorting and draining the life out of one of religion's most powerful symbols by using it for political ends rather than the religious ends it was meant for.

In conclusion, I do not wish merely to criticize without offering a viable alternative. Had a little more thought gone into their effort, perhaps the WAAC could have come up with an alternative mode of protest that would not have infringed on people's religious beliefs. Setting up tombstones for the dead in South Africa, is one example that comes to mind without too much thought. I have no doubt that if the members of the WAAC put their heads together, some truly original modes of protest could result without the alienation of members of the community as a result.

Divestment advocates out of touch with student body

by Martin Illner '87

On the night of October 25, when I realized that the crosses dotting Baxter Lawn would stand not only through convocation but also through Freshman Parent's Weekend, I placed a sign south of the crosses which reiterated certain points that I had made last spring in a fifteen page letter during Upper Class Parent's Weekend, when a similar protest was made.

The sign criticized the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition for its opportunistic tactics and the inconsistency of their "activism." It reaffirmed that the Advisory Committee on Shareholders Responsibility had passed, through marked dissent, a proposal for disinvestment advocacy. It asked why we were seeking to remove any benign influence we could bring to bear through our companies in South Africa and added that, in any case, this did not seem to satisfy the WAAC and that it seemed Baxter might be due for biannual abuse unless Botha's South Africa fell in a revolution.

The letter went on to warn parents that Williams was a far cry from "the seething hotbed of activism" they might believe us to be, and that this was a very small group who worked only in the wee hours of the morning and whose methods of seeking an end to apartheid are probably not supported by a majority of students. The letter concluded by advising interested parents to hang around Baxter dining hall for a possible replay of last year's exciting guerilla theater.

This sign was torn down Saturday night by a non-thinking cross supporter who did not believe in the equal exercise of First Amendment rights and was replaced by a facsimile that evening.

Last Tuesday I checked out the Record with little surpise but quite a large measure of concern. Little suprise at seeing yet another mention of the scourge of Baxter Lawn, and much concern primarily for the manner in which my sign was summarized.

If I may be so bold, I'd like to tender several suggestions. First, I think it should be every newspaper's accepted goal to strive for accuracy in its reporting. Paraphrasing is obviously a valid method of condensing information to fit a size or time constraint, but I think that the person who does the paraphrasing should be especially careful to paint an accurate picture of the abridged material. In the Record, the caption read: "A sign placed south of the crosses Saturday said that they did not represent the feelings of a majority of the student body." Hmm. What I actually said was the following: "... we've all got good hearts and all, but I'm willing to bet that if you polled each student individually they might come out quite strongly against this form of protest."

The careful reader will note several palliatives, specifically "willing to bet," "might", and "quite." This is simple semantics, but, unfortunately, I'm not nearly as sure of myself as some of these hardcore divestment advocates seem to be. There is no way I said flat out that the crosses do not represent the feelings of the majority of the student body.

I think a second big problem is the emotional over-involvement of the participants with this issue. Like I said last year, emotionalism can only lead to non-rational and weak answers. It is only through enlightened discourse, or some such five syllable expression, that a working solution will be reached. I think that, in any debate, removing yourself as far as possible from a heated issue is the only workable way to arrive at an answer.

I found a working example of this in an article written by an opposition/moderate member of the South African parliament in the New York Times Magazine in late August. To me, this woman represented the antithesis of a paranoid Afrikaaner, but, on the other hand, was not victim to the strong enmotions that are sweeping black South Africa like brush fire. In case the reader is curious, she condemned pulling investments out of South Africa as a means of ending apartheid. Lack of her kind of thought process, I think, is the problem with those who put up both shanties and crosses.

Oh, and another thing. I was talking with Political Science Professor Fred Greene and I implied that I thought divestment supporters sought divestment simply through lack of information. He replied that "they aren't dummies," and that they are looking for a confrontation [i.e., in South Africa—Ed.]

Now I'm going to be a moral crusader: How can one want revolution? How can one want an inevitable massive loss of human life? I might be hopelessly naive, but there are other solutions and as far as I can guess the oppressed blacks would rather endure apartheid a little longer than die right now for a rapid panacea. Any country in Western Europe in the late 1940's or present day Saudi Arabia is proof that revolution is never "imminent." But they want divestment; Bishop Desmond Tutu calls for it! Yes, except the blacks who work at the General Motors factory are now preparing to strike because they're losing so much as a result of the pullout. Makes you wonder.

So shanties and crosses promote awareness. Okay. But what I think they do more than anything else is to provoke an emotionalism that not only is counterproductive, but also has no place at an institution of higher learning. The protests had shock value too, you say. Alright, but doesn't that shock value diminish significantly after the first few days? I think it does. In essence (and in a cliche): stop beating a, well, dying horse.

I mean, come on guys, you're at Williams, so-called number one liberal arts college in the country, you must be able to come up with something better or more effective than the past two efforts. In the meantime, I think that you're losing credibility as people start getting bored with the crosses.

Talking about credibility, as a friend said to me yesterday, some of you might do well to dissociate yourselves from all except your most favorite cause. I think Jane Fonda or Brigitte Bardot are examples of what happens to those who become professional activists; people start taking them less and less seriously.

One other thing before I close, and I'd like to address it to whomever tore down sign number one. Please take this as constructive criticism. Boy, did you make a big boo-boo. For one thing, I was very happy that you tore down my sign because you provided me with a chance to use the second sign that I had prepared. For another, it also showed me how emotional and/or non-rational one of the cross-supporters is. You pulled a mini-Dartmouth, except in reverse. In case you are not informed, let me tell you what happened to those members of The Dartmouth Review who pulled that stupid stunt. They were all censured in extremis and the leaders were suspended. Why? Read up on Skokie, Illinois, for example. What you did only exposed you to severe criticism and added fuel to my fire. You've got to think before you act. If you think you've got a corner on morality because you're a protester, you've go another thing coming.

Well, I think by now the parade might be fairly wet so let me conclude by tempering my criticisms. I was unable to attend the explanation of the crosses at Brooks-Rogers due to conflicting obligations and therefore everything I've written stands a modest chance of being irrelevant in the face of information provided there. I'd welcome any response to the views expressed here or in my previous letter.

I would also like to applaud the efficient thinking of the WAAC as far as the timing of the crosses was concerned. One parent thought that they were a memorial to the dead Marines in Lebanon. She also thought that the people who put them up were clever to anticipate the thirtieth anniversary of the Russian suppression of the Hungarian uprising. This is a redeeming touch to an otherwise questionable protest.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Town passes smoking rule

Half of Williamstown's restaurant space will be officially designated "non-smoking" this spring, when a new town ordinance goes into effect, the Williamstown Advocate reported last week.

The rule, which will become effective on March 1, 1987, will require all restaurants with a capacity of more than 50 customers to reserve half of their space for non-smokers. The measure passed the Williamstown selectmen one week ago Monday by a vote of 4-1.

Frosh get warnings

Freshman warnings came out last month, with little change in the number of new students told that their grades are in need of improvement.

The number of warnings distributed this semester remained similar to last year's figures. 115 Freshmen, or 22.6 percent of the Class of 1990, received Freshmen warnings, compared to the 22.5 percent of the Class of 1989 who received warnings last year, according to the registrar's office.

Once again, more warnings were issued in Division III than in Divisions I and II combined. Some 103 of the total 144 warnings issued went out to students enrolled in Division III courses, with 30 percent of the freshmen enrolled in biology courses receiving warnings. Mathematical sciences came in second with 18 percent of the students registered receiving warnings.

Division I courses gave out 21 warnings, an increase over last year's total of eight. Division II professors issued 20 warnings, ten of which were in psychology and another eight in economics.

Division I leads the other two divisions with 721 freshmen enrollments. Division II has 638 enrollments, followed by Division III with 589. The two departments with the highest freshmen enrollments are English with 370 and mathematical sciences with 252.

Eighty-eight freshmen received one warning this year, while 25 students received two warnings and only two students received three warnings. No student received more than three warnings. Official notice is sent to the parents or guardians of students who receive two or more warnings.

— Jocelyn Shadforth

Libes alarm operating

Sawyer Library's new security system, installed last January, has not yet been determined effective in deterring people from stealing books.

The system, built by 3-M, is activated whenever a book with the library's magnetic strip is taken through the detectors without having first been checked out at the front desk.

The alarm is set off several times a day, according to Kay Flynn, Circulation Assistant at the Library.

"Most of the times, the students accidentally forget to check the book out," she said, calling it "a matter of laziness." If the alarm goes off, the student's possessions are checked for library materials. Furthermore, if the act is judged to be more than an oversight, the student's name is recorded.

Flynn downplayed this aspect of the system, saying it was "not punitive. Students always get the benefit of the doubt."

Several problems have arisen with the implementation of the new system. One is the possible alteration of computer discs brought through the sensing device, although a sign warns of this at the checkout area.

Another problem is the system's being set off by newly purchased textbooks, apparently coded at some point of their binding. Williams Bookstore staff said they had not heard of any problems with the books before.

— Paul Kwon

WAAC talks strategy at panels

by Debbie Snyder

Members of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC), the organization that installed the crosses on Baxter lawn, discussed the symbolism of the crosses and their affects on people at panel discussions on Monday, October 27 and Sunday, November 2.

The panelists also discussed the problem of maintaining the crosses, saying people have knocked down and broken the crosses within an hour of their repair. Martin White '87 announced at Sunday's panel that WAAC has not yet decided how long they would like the crosses to remain on the lawn.

"The amount of damage being done to the crosses is escalating," said Randy Capps '87. "We're not doing enough to maintain them."

White said WAAC members cannot be expected to continually maintain the crosses, stating, "I can't carry a hammer with me every time I leave Tyler house. I spend a half hour every day putting them up, and in a very short time some of them are kicked down or broken."

White disagreed with the claim that the abuse of the crosses means the protest has lost its effectiveness, saying, "The kicking and the breaking of the crosses is what we're trying to get at." He said the crosses are a dramatic way to make people think about apartheid. "It (the protest) asks people who confront it: 'Why aren't you a part of our struggle?' " he said.

Capps said that although the crosses were for him "a symbol of death and struggle," he believed other people did not see the protest the same way. "I would think for most people on this campus it probably doesn't mean a whole heck of a lot," he said. He added that people appeared to

Continued on Page 9

Lawrence W. Beals, retired philosophy professor, dies

Services for Lawrence Wilson Beals, 79, emeritus professor of philosophy at Williams, were held at 2 p.m. last Wednesday in the Thompson Memorial Chapel.

Beals died last Sunday, October 26, at his home following a heart attack.

Beals was a graduate of Williams, class of 1929, and taught at the school between 1933 and his retirement in 1972. He was honorary archivist of the College.

Lawrence W. Beals

He was born in Mount Vernon, New York, in 1907. At Williams, Beals was captain of the track team and a member of the Gargoyle Society. Following his graduation Phi Beta Kappa, he entered Harvard, where he earned a master's degree in 1931 and his Ph.D. in 1933.

He joined the Williams faculty as an instructor in 1933, reaching the rank of full professor in 1951. During World War II he taught meteorology and physics for the US Navy V5 pre-flight program at Williams.

Beals held visiting professorships at Emory University and the University of South Florida, and taught at the Harvard and Columbia summer schools. He also published several scholarly articles.

Beals is survived by his wife, the former Elizabeth Ohl; a brother, Frederick Homer Beals, of Mamaroneck, New York; two stepchildren, George Ohl Withers, of Greenbelt, Maryland, and Sara Withers Koster, of Reston, Virginia; and four grandchildren.

The family requests that, in lieu of flowers, those who wish to make donations in Prof. Beals' memory make them to the Village Ambulance Service through the Hopkins Funeral Home.

Corea: men, women and reproduction

by F. Craig Gangi

Gena Corea, noted feminist author and activist, called today's society "a woman-hating culture" in its use of what she terms new reproductive techniques (NRTs). Corea spoke at a well-attended lecture Thursday which she titled "The Mother Machine."

Corea claimed that the procedures being developed for couples suffering from male or female infertility will be expanded and used on the larger female population.

"While the new technologies are presented to the public as therapy and as a benevolent means of expanding people's options, in fact they offer powerful means of social control," said Corea.

"They (NRTs) will be used to control which kinds of human beings are produced by determining which sperm comes into contact with an egg, which embryos are discarded, which doubled, which altered," she said.

Corea spoke of "men's plans to redirect human evolution." She cited the idea of eugenics, which involves "improving the human race by increasing the propagation of 'the fit' and decreasing that of the unfit."

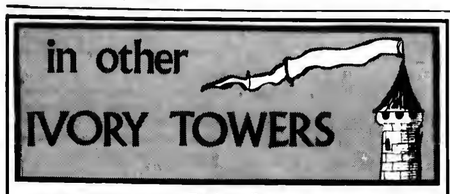
She said that with the definition of "birth defect" continually being enlarged, geneticists will attempt to improve intelligence and behavior, by eliminating all slightly undesirable traits. As she put it, "males, white males, will be in charge of constructing reality and telling all of us what a defect is."

Infertile couples

Corea criticized infertile couples who she described as wanting to turn their problem into an advantage by choosing to have, artifically, "as well-endowed children as possible."

According to Corea, NRT is also linked with sterilization. Women, she said, are now inclined to become sterilized to avoid the risks of contraceptives such as the pill, and will later use in vitro fertilization ("test-tube babies") or other technologies to bear children.

Often, Corea said, women become sterile as a result of toxic workplaces, and she accused some doctors of using NRTs to assist these women in



Continued on Page 7

413-458-5861
St. Pierre's Barber Shop
Regular Cuts and Hairstyling
Roger Verne Dick
48 Spring Street — Williamstown, Mass. 01267
ROFFLER

Wanted on consignment — sports equipment and clothing for all sports
Annual Ski-Skate Sale at Pine Cobble School, Williamstown, MA
November 21st and 22nd
Bring articles to school between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. beginning November 10th 60% to the seller
40% to benefit The Scholarship Fund

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
SALE
The Co-op
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Dartmouth

When is a fraternity not a fraternity? When its members can't drink themselves silly. At Dartmouth, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity may be soon be faced with such restrictions due to the "risk management program" mandated by its national organization. The fraternity will lose its insurance coverage at the end of the year and has thus been forced to institute alcohol control policies in the hopes of finding a new insurer. The new regulations "forbid the house from serving grain alcohol, from having drinking or chugging contests and from sponsoring open parties." In addition, all new pledges must undergo alcohol awareness training as soon as they enter the fraternity. Any chapter that fails to comply with these regulations can be cut from the national organization. Dartmouth SAE members, however, have not given up on their social life. According to the fraternity's president, "the national and our chapter have different definitions of what an open party is."

More Dartmouth

In response to the protest last week by the "Womben to overthrow dartmyth" regarding the school's alma mater, a male Dartmouth senior reported an incident of reverse discrimination in a letter to the editor of the Dartmouth, the university's daily newspaper. The senior claimed that while on the way back from a parking lot, he saw a security officer giving two women a ride. He asked the officer "to wait a minute so that (he) could be escorted safely back to campus." The officer replied, "males don't get escorts." The student protested that he "could be assaulted, perhaps mauled," while walking back to campus. Nevertheless, he was still refused a ride.

Trinity

The next time you fail to flume your tray in Baxter, you'd better think twice. Students at Trinity College have discovered the harsh penalties associated with "not bussing their trays." The director of Trinity's food service has announced that, "when students are caught leaving their trays behind they will be automatically assigned 10 hours of work in the dining hall." This policy has actually been in effect for the past three years, but this year the "policy will be more strictly enforced," and "students will be monitored more closely."

North Adams State

Students at North Adams State College felt the effects of "World Series fever" last week, regardless of whether they were Mets or Sox fans. Curtis Silwa, founder of the Guardian Angels, cancelled his speaking engagement on October 21 because he "felt as though ... game three of the World Series ... would prevent many students from attending." Silwa, who was to speak about "drug and alcohol abuse and its effects, as well as alternatives to substance abuse," agreed to reschedule his talk for this week.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Jim Hartnett and Ellen Salzman from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Profile: Professor John Eusden

by Marilyn Germano

What image forms in your mind when you think of a member of a Zen Buddhist temple? Would you picture, say, a professor at Williams College? If not, then you obviously have not met John Eusden, professor of religion and a member of the Williams College community for more than 20 years. Although a large part of his religious training has been in Western ideas, over the years his orientation and thinking gradually changed, and he became captivated by Eastern religions, wherein lies much of his current thought and study.

Eusden did not always have the profound interest in religion that he has now. He received his undergraduate degree from Harvard in history and government; he even began law school there several years later. Law school, however, was not where he wanted to be.

But all was not lost, he said; he discovered a love of academics. "Something about the academic life really reached out and grabbed me," stated Eusden, "the idea of teaching, the crisp challenge of academic life appealed to me." Also around this time, Eusden said he began to ask questions about his own religious perspectives, as well as about the place of the church in the world. From there, it was on to the Yale Divinity School and the Yale Graduate School, Department of Religion, from which he received his Ph. D.

Abandoned law

Even though he abandoned the idea of a career in law, Eusden does not feel that his year at Harvard Law School was in vain. Rather, he sees it as an important learning expe-

Continued on Page 6

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Charles Samuelson photographs by
Lynn Glick

The Features Department recently asked students, "What's your least favorite section of the Record?"

"Sports, 'cause I'm never in it anymore." — Carter Zinn '88

"The letters section because it allows women to put words in men's mouths and degrade them." — Walt Hoffman '89

"They're all great." — Anne Shulman '88

"Letters from stupid fascist people." — Marjorie Sweeney '87

"Man on the Quad." — Jimmy McNulty '89

Buxton: A prep school in a college town

by Beth Broadrup

Yes, believe it or not, there is another private school in Williamstown. The Buxton School is a short bike ride away, just past the Clark Art Institute on South Street. Buxton keeps an even lower profile than Williams, and many Williams students have never even heard its name.

Buxton's educational philosophy is one of the factors that contributes to its relative seclusion from the community. The four-year school is itself a small community of 90 students and their teachers. C. William Bennett, director of the school and a 1969 graduate of Williams, describes Buxton as an inwardly oriented place.

According to Bennett, the school's origin lies in the progressive movement, and he described its theory, in simplified terms, as "education from within instead of education from without." While this philosophy is less traditional than that of most schools, Bennett pointed out that Buxton students receive a rigorous education from courses in both traditional areas like English, history, mathematics, science and language, and less conventional ones like art, drama, dance and music.

Buxton's goal in educating its students, Bennet said, follows from its strong sense of community. Learning how to live in a community with people of various ages is emphasized equally with classroom education. Bennett explained that Buxton seeks to educate its students to be better citizens with the ability to change the country when it needs to be changed. While more traditional schools concentrate on teaching skills to help students "move up in a static world," Buxton, as Bennett noted, "prepares them for a constantly changing world."

Buxton is not a prep school in the traditional sense of simply preparing students for college. Rather, it also seeks to prepare them for life after college, out of the academic world. As Bennett wryly noted, Buxton graduates are "interesting — not necessarily investment bankers." That is not to say that none of the school's students go on to such a profession; in fact, Bennett noted, many of them enter the fields of medicine, law, teach-

Continued on Page 8

The Buxton School, founded on the principles of the progressive movement, lies at the end of South Street, just past the Clark Art Institute. (Somers)

Review

Spring Street eateries: part I

by Bill O'Brien

Six restaurants have come to rest on our beloved Spring Street: Bette's Life & Times, Colonial Pizza, the Erasmus Cafe, More Goodies Cafe, Papa Charlie's Deli, and the Purple Pub. In my endless quest for a better America, I have spent hours of research, and occasionally put my life and palate on the line, in order that you, the no-nonsense diner, could select the locale that fits your needs.

The real challenge in reviewing anything on Spring Street is finding new and exciting ways to say something is pretty good. Decent, acceptable, adequate, all right, respectable and unobjectionable are words that apply to every restaurant on the row. These adjectives are surpassed in some areas, in some places, but none escape them fully. The restaurants will be rated in three areas: food, atmosphere, and service.

The Erasmus Cafe is the clear winner with regard to food preparation and quality. Its limited size allows for impressive attention to detail, absent in most of the other entries. The menu is a tad classier than I am accustomed to, but I adapted readily. The sandwiches combine somewhat unusual items and for the most part are very successful. Black forest ham and cheddar, turkey breast avocado, and cheddar and hot turkey with mushroom gravy are three fine coices. The portions aren't the largest, but good things can and do come in small sandwiches.

Rich and dense

The Erasmus, in addition to sandwiches and homemade soup, also offers an impressive list of desserts. Of those I've tried, the white chocolate mousse and the Grand Marnier truffle cake are the tops. Both are rich and dense, and more of both. There are also plenty of beverages, including, of course, cappuccino, expresso and herbal teas. Everything is prepared with care. Prices are a bit steep, especially for desserts, which run up to $3.75. They are now offering specials, which are reasonable. A slice of carrot cake and coffee is only $2.00 on the specials list. Come here with your par-

Continued on Page 7

Frosh Parents' Weekend: dinner and a show

by Sunita Duggal

Some freshmen excitedly prepared for it; others viewed its approach with more varied emotions, but apparently most people thoroughly enjoyed Freshman Parents' Weekend October 24-26. "My parents always said, 'When you're under our roof, you'll follow our rules,' " said Karen Hufnagel, "Parents' weekend was their turn to live under my roof, and follow my rules, perverse as they might be."

A total of 291 families were represented by the 688 people who showed up for the weekend. Parents came from 31 states, Canada, France and Switzerland. Matt Esposito described his parents' arrival: "Well, I came up and they were standing at the corner of Park Street and Main Street, and they looked very out of place. It reminded me of when I came up here for an interview. I was excited about seeing them, but I realized I wasn't homesick anymore. It felt like they were coming to visit my home."

The main events planned for the parents were an informal reception at The Log Friday evening, a Parents' Weekend program in Chapin Hall and a buffet luncheon on Saturday, and a Continental breakfast Sunday morning. Parents also chose from a variety of other events, including performances of "The Freshman Revue" and "Macbett," and the football game against Union on Saturday. Some students visited the Williams College Museum of Art and the Clark Art Institute, but a majority of those students interviewed felt that the highlight of Parents' Weekend was being taken out to dinner.

Heather Adams found the weekend to be "a lot more structured" than her average weekend. "You're also a lot more aware of the campus because you're trying to figure out what your parents are thinking of it. You're a lot more conscious of your friends and the impression they make," she said. Many freshmen revealed that parents were impressed by the other students. Other things that had a positive impact on parents were the JA system and freshman housing. Don Scott's mother enjoyed "the 25-cent tour of Spring Street, which took almost three minutes."

Some parents came bearing gifts, including pumpkins, poptarts, and a crochet kit from Hong Kong, but students whose parents could not make it did not fare too badly. According to Susan Pitcher, "It was great. I simply did not have to cope. No hotel reservations, no dinner reservations, and I got to the parties before eleven o'clock."

Tong receives award, speaks on porn

by Martita Weil

WASHINGTON — "Pornography is to women as segregation is to blacks," said philosophy professor Rosemary Tong at her "Women, Pornography and the Law" lecture here last Monday. The lecture, part of the awards ceremony naming Tong National Professor of the Year, was preceded by the reading of a citation and the awarding of a $5000 check.

"In hands like yours the future of higher education in this country is indeed a bright one," read the citation given to Tong.

The lecture and award were sponsored jointly by the Carnegie Foundation and the Committee for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE), both located in Washington, D.C. "It is that magical ingredient called ethics and compassion that brought this candidate to the top," said Ernest Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation of Tong's selection as Professor of the Year. "It is a special capacity to care that distinguishes these individuals," said Dr. Gary Quail, president of CASE, of the award recipients.

To an audience that included former President John Chandler and professors John Reichert and J. Hodge Markgraf, as well as other Williams faculty and alumni, Tong spoke on feminist responses to pornography, using Catherine McKinnon and Andrea Dworkin's writings.

"To feminist anti-pornographers, pornography was not so much about sex as about male power over women," she said in describing the distinction between erotic (loving) and thanotic (violent) literature.

She went on to discuss restrictions on pornography and the tensions between protecting women from screening porn films and preserving the first amendment rights of pornographers. "The real weapon for fighting pornography is education, not coercion," Tong said. "It is in the classroom, not in the courtroom, where the battle should be fought."

Profile

Continued from Page 5

rience. "It was necessary for me to try something that had a claim on me, to throw myself into it and to find out it wasn't for me —that's trial and error," he explained.

Eusden came to Williams College in 1960, as an associate professor of religion as well as chaplain of the college. Doing both, he said, was his attempt "to combine the idea of the church and ministry with the idea of the university and teaching." He remained chaplain until 1978, when he began full-time teaching. Why did he give up his post as chaplain? "There were some courses that I had always wanted to teach but couldn't while I was chaplain," he explained simply.

Zen in publication

Aside from his affiliation with the College, Eusden has numerous publications to his credit; they range from articles such as "The Elusive Zen in Skiing," written with his wife, Joanne, to books like "Zen and Christian: The Journey Between," to various book reviews. (For those of you who may be wondering, Zen, according to Webster's, is a Buddhist sect which "differs from other Buddhist sects in seeking enlightenment through introspection and intuition rather than in Pali scripture." Pali is the religious language of Buddhism.) Indeed, much of Eusden's scholarly work is indicative of the profound influence Eastern and thought have had on his life in the past couple of decades.

Apart from the academics, Eusden enjoys living in a small place. "I thrive on the setting of Williamstown," he stated. Over the years he has developed an interest in cycling, and he feels that this area is fantastic for it. The setting is also a positive one for skiing and outdoor activities. And naturally, he finds that he likes the advantages inherent in small-town living, like "being able to talk to your selectmen."

Hills and leaves

He does admit, however, that there are times "when you feel like the hills are closing in on you, especially during the mud season, April and May." But that isn't too difficult to overcome, he said, because the College's policy on leaves and sabbaticals is very lenient. "It's easy," he said, "to get out of here. And when you live in a really crowded city like Canton, China, for a while, you learn to appreciate Williamstown."

Eusden is very enthusiastic about the environment here, and believes others would agree: "It's rare," he stated, "for a senior faculty member to leave to go somewhere else." And so it seems that John Eusden has found his place to thrive; in terms of permanent living, Williamstown, Massachusetts, is far enough East.

Learn to live with someone who's living with cancer. Call us.
AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

after 7:00 p.m. Coffee Club
Coffee by the cup - 25¢
Coffee House soon to come!

76 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN
NOW OPEN TIL 10
MONDAY-SATURDAY 9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
SUNDAY 10-5
Telephone (413)458-5007

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848 Betsy Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

"Wild Things" are here

from Maurice Sendak's Where the Wild Things Are
lurking in our new colorful children's section.
The gift for the Party animal with everything
AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT — ORDER EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS
Literature for every taste
Now Open Til 10:00 p.m.
Come visit us soon.
Open from 8:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Sunday 10-5
Located next to THE LOG

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects
Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, antique looking jewelry.
& "Prince Freddy the Fox"
TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

Spring St.

ents; they'll think you've made great strides in class and culture.

Indeed, after the Erasmus, the food looks fairly similar, although Goodies should be applauded for taking some risks which the others do not. Their sandwiches are perked up a bit to provide some adventure on an otherwise mundane menu. A little peach chutney, for example, combined with the sliced turkey and cheddar does wonders. Their real claim to uniqueness, however, is on the right side of the menu: the Mexican dishes, or as they call them, 'Especialidades de la Hacienda.' Enchilada Williamstown, Mount Greylock Nachos ... sappy but tasty. The former is a tortilla layered with refried beans, chicken, red sauce, topped with lettuce, diced tomatoes, monterey jack cheese and sour cream. It's a bit heavy for my taste, but if you're into this sort of thing you will be pleased.

The prices at Goodies are reasonable. The aforementioned enchilada goes for $4.25, the sandwiches run from $2 to $4. They also have a wide range of beverages along side the best ice cream on the street.

The remainder of the food offerings can be desribed with blazing speed. Papa Charlie's offers a multitude of sandwiches, from the new Mary Tyler Moore (avocado, bacon, lettuce and tomato) to fresh beef tongue. The Williams consensus, if you don't know by now, is that this is the classic eating experience. Alumni, parents, students, local residents, Professor Stiglitz and stray dogs flock to Papa C's. For my taste, nothing can beat the Gilda Radner (roast beef, cheddar, tomatoes, onions and cole slaw).

For the Pub's sake, see next week's continuation ...

Corea

Continued from Page 4

having children rather than dealing with the problems of poisoned workplaces.

In response to medical ethicist Joseph Fletcher, who said the "right (for couples) to reproduce" is null and void if a child will definitely be born suffering from lifelong pain, Corea said "it is difficult to imagine women victimizing male supremist society. And how would we supposedly victimize the patriarchy? By the act of bearing our own children."

"No force will be required to prohibit us from reproducing ourselves. Control of consciousness will do quite well," she said.

In her concluding remarks Corea declared, "We need urgently to act now in defense of the lives of the women who will be born — or decanted — after us."

WCFM Top Ten

1. R.E.M.
2. General Public
3. Pete Townshend
4. Housmartins
5. Timbuk 3
6. Icicleworks 12"
7. Smiths 12"
8. O.M.D.
9. B.A.D.
10. Don Dixon

New laws

Continued from Page 1

ards of the federal government," Wick said, adding that exceptions are made for orphans, wards of the state, or by special judgement. "The burden of proof really falls heavily on the student," he added.

Since many of the students who will lose their GSLs under the tighter eligibility standards this year do not receive financial aid from the college, Wick said, the College will not attempt to compensate these students.

Parents of students who become ineligible for the GSL program may opt for a PLUS loan, according to Wick. This is a variable-interest loan made to parents that provides up to $4,000 a year for each child to attend college.

The re-authorization also includes provisions for college juniors and seniors who still qualify for the GSL, and who may now borrow up to $4,000 for their educations. In the future, as well, colleges in the program will be required to prove they posess some sort of anti-drug program. "That's an intrusion," Wick said.

The tax reform bill will also make "a big difference in how people pay for the education of their children. Parents are only beginning to find out they can take out an equity loan," said Wick. An equity loan allows money to be borrowed against the value of a house that has been paid off. The interest from such a loan is considered tax-deductable.

"The whole concept of paying for education over a period of time longer than four years is beginning to take hold. We're seeing an evolutionary process in how people pay for education," he continued.

"There will be a lot of scrambling next year as people determine what is posible under the new law," Wick concluded.

Alumni giving

The tax reform bill's effects on alumni giving doesn't worry the development office, according to Oman. "Most of us around here think it won't have an affect on the college," he said.

"You never do better by giving your money away than by holding it," continued Oman. "The consequence (of the reform) is going to be that people are so confused about how tax law affects them, they may delay giving."

However, he continued, "we don't expect the tax law to have a major — or even a minor — affect on giving." He added that "charities that depend most on mass contributions of small amounts, like churches," may be affected.

"We're all a bit uncertain —or maybe more than a little bit uncertain — about the outcome. This is a major reworking of the tax laws, so its best to be prudently concerned. However, we don't think it will have an affect on the Williams alumnus' giving."

EXTRA EXTRA
ELECTION DAY!
GET OUT AND VOTE!!!

the Mountain Goat
ISOTHERM CONTAINER
— Superinsulated —
For hot or cold drinks.
1 liter $9.95
½ liter $8.95
130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m.
Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.
Unique Clothing, Bicycles & Cross Country Skis

the VIDEO STOP
Rte. 7
Pownal, VT 05261
Phone (802) 823-5076
Member rates for college students. Monday thru Thursday— overnight rentals only (must have current student ID)

BAIN & COMPANY, INC.

Management Consultants
Cordially invites

The Williams College Class of 1987

To A Presentation
On

Associate Consultant Career Opportunities

in

Corporate Strategy Consulting

Thursday, November 13, 1986
7:00 - 8:00 PM

The Office of Career Counseling

Buxton

Continued from Page 5

ing, social work and related areas.

Although Buxton's notable programs in drama and art have contributed to its label as an "artsy" school, Bennett maintains that calculus and chemistry are actually two of the best-taught courses.

Tuesdays and Saturdays

Bennett admitted that Buxton's strong emphasis on an internal community and its remoteness from the center of Williamstown breeds a certain amount of antagonism and suspicion about the school. Buxton school activities are usually not open to the public (although theater productions are), and students are allowed to journey into town only on Tuesday afternoons and on Saturdays.

Many of Buxton's students come from large cities and, Bennett noted, tend to "dress rather rebelliously." This style of dress attracts attention here in the mecca of sweaters and turtlenecks and contributes to the town's misunderstanding of Buxton. Bennett said that people see bizarre-looking kids and assume they are Buxton students. Most Buxton kids have little inclination to wear Buxton-emblazoned sweatshirts; when asked why the Williams Co-op advertises no Buxton paraphernalia, owner Burt Marcus replied, "Buxton kids just don't wear that kind of stuff."

Buxton offers extracurricular activities along a fairly traditional line. The drama, music, art, and creative writing programs are popular and well respected. Buxton students are also, said Bennett, "very politically interested and aware." Soccer is currently the most popular competitive sport, and skiing provides recreation for students in winter. Their favorite Williamstown haunts are Images Cinema, Toonerville Trolley, and any place offering food — not unlike Williams students.

Buxton is an untraditional school thriving amidst New England's many traditional schools. The school has faith in the philosophy that it has taught since 1927. Williams R. Cole, a 1986 Buxton graduate, wrote in his yearbook about his experience there: "I have been privileged to cleary think, without being taught that a striving for power and wealth is what life is all about and that to conform into society should be my objective for a safe and happy life."

the Mountain Goat
GAITERS
Keep snow and mud out of your boots.
Standard $16.95
Mountain $23.95
130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m., Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.
Unique Clothing, Bicycles & Cross Country Skis

Party policy, co-ops occupy CUL

by Peter Balaban

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) met last Friday and continued its discussion of Williams party policy. Also considered at the meeting were plans for implementing a survey of the Co-op housing system and a proposal to introduce student-faculty lunches and coffee hours at the Log.

The primary focus of the meeting was college party policy. The committee discussed the suggestion to extend the closing time for parties during winter study from midnight to 1 a.m.

Committee Chairman William Wagner, responding to the proposal, told committee members that they "would be undermining their credibility by proposing to extend hours" and that an extension of the hours would "send the wrong signal out about winter study." Wagner went on to say that, as it stands now, "the proposal doesn't stand a chance in the Dean's Office."

Mary Petersen '87, pointing out that security won't close a party before twelve unless someone in the house complains, said that while now may be a good time for the CUL to recommend changes in party policy, they should not necessarily be "ones that expand our powers to party."

Security guidelines

In effort to determine exactly when security is assigned to a party, CUL member Mark Tompkins '87 talked to Ransom Jenks, director of security at Williams. According to Tompkins, Jenks said that he will definitely assign security to a party with 3 kegs. Whether he assigns security to a party with two kegs depends on the number of people and amount of space, he added.

CUL members (from left to right) William Wagner, Amy Jeffress, James Briggs and Mary Petersen discuss the issues of the day. (Ward)

Student members of the CUL said that they felt that people were hesitant to file party plans because they didn't know if security would be assigned or not. Members of the committee said they would make an effort to discuss the new information with house presidents and committees, who file party plans.

It was decided that a meeting should be arranged between Dean Fix and members of the CUL to find out how the college feels about party policy. The committee also suggested setting up a meeting with Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zolto.

The CUL agreed that no action should be taken until homecoming weekend was over and they were sure where Chief Zolto stood. Coach James Briggs said that "we should let the dust settle and see how this weekend shakes itself out" before reaching a conclusion on the issue.

Co-op housing

Also discussed at the meeting was a survey to research the Co-op housing system. The survey, which has already been submitted in draft to the committee, will be filled out by juniors and seniors.

Continued on Page 10

DID YOU KNOW

There is a way to obtain a commission as a Marine Officer other than through ROTC called the Platoon Leaders Class (PLC).

The PLC program does not interrupt your academic career.

The PLC program is open to all qualified underclassmen.

The PLC program requires no special classes, uniforms or drills on campus.

The PLC program is totally voluntary with no commitment to full-time active duty unless you want it.

If qualified you can be guaranteed flight training as a Marine Officer.

Your starting salary as a Marine officer could be between $18,000 and $23,000 depending on when you enter the program.

If you would like more information about the PLC program, please contact the Marine Corps Officer Selection Office.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION SEE 1STLT CHAPLA IN THE MAILBOX AREA, BAXTER HALL TODAY FROM 10am-2pm OR CALL 1-800-255-USMC.

Marines

We're looking for a few good men.

John F. Reichert (King)

Bacchus

Continued from Page 1

cussed the availability of alcohol on campus, especially at large parties such as the one at Dodd. Fix said, "I would definitely say that our meeting was a constructive one. He (Zolto) shared clearly his views about ways in which policy should unfold. He raised the general question of the college's liability and pointed out that under current law there is some uncertainty about how to assess this liability."

'Legitimate' concern

Fix termed Zolto's concern about violation of the state law "understandable and legitimate." He said, "Club Bacchus is a student organization and we expect all student organizations to live within the law."

Referring to a crackdown by local police on the availability of alcohol on the Williams campus, Director of Security Ransom Jenks commented, "The college and the student body will have nothing to do but to comply if that is the wishes of the local police. Otherwise, they could start arresting a lot of folks and start cases against minors consuming alcohol."

"Change is inevitable," he added. "It may take some time, but it's certainly going to happen. Let's hope it happens without a whole group of Williams students facing criminal charges."

Jenks added, "I don't think they want to go that route, but I don't think they want to be publicly embarrassed by an incident which occurs on campus and demonstrates to everyone that we're not following the law."

Faculty

Continued from Page 1

business school, but even in that case, it's unlikely that someone would spend four or five years working on a Ph.D. if he were in it for the money," he said. "People with a B.A. can make more than that in banking."

Ph.D.'s may also find lucrative employment outside of Williamstown in the sciences, according to C. Ballard Pierce, chairman of the department of physics and astronomy. Pierce said the college has found itself in direct competition with industry for scholars.

He cited former professor of physics James Eisenstein, who recently left Williams for the Bell Labs in Murray Hill, New Jersey. "He took a job with Bell for his assistant professorship leave and was given the opportunity to remain there," said Pierce. He also said that professors may choose to leave the college if they do not expect tenure.

The "fast track"

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said the stiffest competition that colleges like Williams face is "more global in nature and not restricted as to field. Bright students majoring in English, French, history or anything are often attracted toward the 'fast track.'"

Reichert, Pierce and Winston agreed that a certain amount of "self-selection" exists among applicants for Williams faculty positions. "People who would apply at a place like Williams have usually made the decision that they want to teach," said Reichert.

"We offer the kind of job that really appeals to some very good people," remarked Winston. He noted that, at Williams, faculty economic research is highly encouraged and required, but so is a devotion to teaching and the student.

"At Harvard, Stanford, M.I.T. or Yale you must publish some real good stuff, but you're not supposed to have fun with teaching — those schools discourage it." Winston said the economics department offers a compromise between intense, research-first oriented work and a job that is all teaching "at a sleepy liberal arts college where you can soon find yourself twenty years out of date."

Pierce said that the physics department tries to attract prospective faculty by stressing that Williams provides a favorable balance between teaching and research. Both Pierce and Winston emphasized that applicants are also highly attracted by the idea of teaching what Winston called "bright and responsive students."

Competion for talented Ph.D.'s will probably become more intense in the future, according to Reichert. He noted that while the trend has been toward a decrease in the number of students enrolling in Ph.D. programs, many positions will open up at Williams and elsewhere in the next 10 to 15 years due to retirements.

W. Rugby

Continued from Page 11

The B-side played heroically but their efforts were frustrated by the Boston visitors by a 3-0 score. The first half was dominated by the defenses; the Eph back line was led by the selfless efforts of senior scrummie Nancy Clopp and sophomore outside Shannon Brennan, who both stopped Boston breakaways with crushing tackles.

Williams came within breathing distance of the try zone several times in the first half with outstanding runs by Gemma Burgos and Ali Jones '89. Boston scored midway through the half on a penalty kick from the try zone.

In the second half, Monica Crossman '87 unleashed her aggression on Boston, tirelessly wrenching the ball away from her opponents. Junior Sharon Burke played an outstanding game, highlighted by continually kicking the ball deep into Boston territory. However, it wasn't enough as Boston came through with the victory.

before getting the ball back to Jacon, who got it to Petersen, who scored her second try to make the score 13-0.

Williams' final try came from alert scrummie Carol Smallwood '87, as she broke free from a ruck and romped into the try zone to set the final score at 17-0.

WAAC

Continued from Page 4

object to the protest instead of concerning themselves with the issues the protest is intended to raise.

Other panelists agreed with Capps that the protest itself, instead of the issues it is intended to represent, seemed to be the issue for many people. Tom Williams '87 said, "They (the Williams community) don't really care what we're talking about — it's that we're talking at all."

Some members of the panel maintained that people avoid the issues raised by the crosses because those issues are so relevant to Williams. "The issue's not so far from home," contended Devonya Havis '87. "When we talk about South Africa we're talking about racism. We're talking about an issue right here on campus."

the Mountain Goat
MINI STOVE
— Fits in your pocket —
$36.95
For quick "brew ups" or gourmet meals.
130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m., Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.
Unique Clothing, Bicycles & Cross Country Skis

tech systems audio & video
Offering Quality Component Systems Since 1974
170 North Street Bennington, Vermont 05201
Mon - Sat. 10-6 (802) 447-0350

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"
Low prices for beer, wine, and soda
$1 off on all cases of beer
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.

A.M. Hitchcock
NOSTALGIA AND CRAFTS
Small Furniture —
Early Costume Jewelry
Paper Collectibles —
Handknit Sweaters
TUESDAY - SATURDAY 10-5
SUNDAY 11-3 CLOSED MONDAY
115 WATER ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
TEL. 458-2433

McClelland's
STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS
458-4920
36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267
Thanskgiving Greeting Cards
by Hallmark
Remember Family and Friends

A NEW WAY TO CHANGE OLD PATTERNS.
Sheen is an instant conditioner and sun reflector in one. Its unique formulation helps to physically reconstruct hair by filling in the spaces of damaged hair and making the surface consistently smooth.
Sheen neutralizes ultraviolet rays to help protect hair from the harmful effects of the sun. By coating each strand, Sheen reflects sunlight so that hair looks brilliantly alive and vibrant.

WHEN YOU WANT TO CATCH THE SUNLIGHT AND PUT IT IN YOUR HAIR.
SHEEN
FROM SEBASTIAN
49 Spring St. Williamstown, MA 413-458-9167 413-458-8585
122 North St. Pittsfield, MA 413-442-6903 413-447-9576
125 North St. Bennington, VT 802-442-9823 802-447-2648
CLIP SHOP
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary!
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER. 1985 SEBASTIAN INTERNATIONAL, INC. Woodland Hills, CA
Artistic Center is a trademark of Sebastian International

W. Soccer

Continued from Page 11

Christine Boddicker '88 and placed the ball inside the far post. However, Union picked the go-ahead goal midway through the half. Despite throughly outplaying the homestanders in the remaining 60 minutes, the Ephs could not cross the goal line in the rough game.

The 1986 season brought great results, especially early in the fall. The Ephs broke a school record for goals in a game and margin of victory in the 11-0 rout of Vassar. They defeated defending NIAC champions Smith 3-2. The goalkeeping core of Joyce Rogers '88, Raquell Holmes '90 and Beth Edwards '89 established a new school standard with six shutouts. The Ephwomen tied Amherst for the Little Three title, as both beat Wesleyan and the Eph-Lord Jeff contest resulted in a 1-1 tie.

Individually, Boddicker surpassed the school record for goals in a career, matching her total of 12 goals of 1985 again this season. Her point total of 29 set a personal best by three. Gigi Madore tied a school record with three assists in a half against Trinity and moved into the record books as the all-time leader in career assists.

Co-captain Anne Gilbert '87 centered her explanation for the improvement on "the jelling of the team in the coach's second year." She said that a continuation of success should be "not much of a problem," despite the loss of seniors Michele Barry, Amy Barstad, Lisanne Dorlon, Yoshiko Fujita, Katie Hogan, Madore and herself. Fullback Amy Duncombe '89 commented that "it was really a good season", and said that the late-season slump was probably due to a failure to forget about a couple of tough losses. All in all, 1986 was a success, and 1987 promises to be even better.

CUL

Continued from Page 8

Mathematics professor David Levine, who chairs the CUL subcommittee on the Co-op housing system, said that the subcommittee was attempting to determine what role the Co-ops should play in the housing system and whether they should work on a cooperative basis or serve as an alternative housing setup. According to Levine, the survey will offer "numerical substantiation" of how students feel about these issues and should indicate whether they feel that the selection process should be changed and if the number of co-ops should be maintained or reduced.

Levine told the CUL that all that remains to be finalized are the opening lines of the survey. Methods for distributing the survey were considered at the meeting, and the date for the survey was tentatively set at a week from next Wednesday.

In other business, the CUL approved a proposal for coffee and cookie hours and lunches at the Log that would promote more informal contact between students and faculty. The proposal was sent to Steve Fix, Dean of the College, for consideration, along with cost estimates by Karl Kowitz, assistant director of food service.

Volleyball

Continued from Page 11

A.I.C. just three days before the Little Three, the lady Ephs travelled to Wesleyan confident of victory. They indeed proved to be the best team, as they regained the title with two convincing victories.

With big hitters Hedeman, Jen Ause '88, and freshman Shelly Whelpton leading the way, the lady Ephs took third in the 16-team Vassar tournament, losing to Division I South Hampton in the semi-finals.

Although the season concluded on a disapointing note with three losses in the NIAC championships, the seniors were satisfied with a successful year. Stressing the contributions of Hedeman, Whelpton, Ause, and server Laura Wefing '88, co-captain Teer said, "we had a really great season, but I guess we just didn't want it (NIAC's) enough."

Bright future ahead

Next year the squad should at least match this year's 24-10 mark. "They have the potential to be amazing," said Teer, "with all the players returning, and they really don't have any weak spots." If Teer is correct in her assertion, the NIAC championship which has eluded the Ephs for two years could find its home in Williamstown.

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!

Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

No. Adams
Eagle St.
664-4134
664-6889

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

the Mountain Goat

SIERRA CUPS
— The original —

Stainless Steel

Standard $3.25 Large $3.95

130 Water St.,
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m.,
Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.
Unique Clothing, Bicycles & Cross-Country Skis

PIZZA HOUSE
"we make our own dough fresh daily"
Hot Oven Grinders
Spaghetti - Greek Salad
664-6279 or 663-3770
14 varieties of pizza
We deliver four or more pizza orders to Williams College - Just call ahead
117 Main St. (Corner Eagle) North Adams

This holiday season, get the "Write Stuff" at the right price.

Now you can get the competitive edge when classes begin in January. With a Macintosh™ personal computer, and all the write extras.

We call it the Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle. You'll call it a great deal! Because when you buy a Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle before January 9, 1987, you'll receive a bundle of extras—and save $250.

Not only will you get your choice of a Macintosh 512K Enhanced or a Macintosh Plus, you'll also get an Image Writer™ II printer, the perfect solution for producing near letter-quality term papers or reports, complete with graphs, charts, and illustrations.

Plus, you'll get MacLightning, the premier spelling checker containing an 80,000 word dictionary with options for thesaurus, medical or legal dictionaries. Together with your favorite Macintosh word processing software, you can transform your notes into the clearest, most letter perfect papers you ever turned out. And turned in on time.

What's more, there's a Macintosh Support Kit filled with valuable accessories and computer care products from 3M.* Complete with all the things you need to keep your Macintosh running long after you've graduated.

Let us show you how to get through college better, faster, and smarter. Stop in and see us for more information

*Offer Good While Supplies Last. © 1986 Apple Computer Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. Macintosh and ImageWriter are trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. MacLightning is a trademark of Target Software Inc.

Dox Rt. 2, Williamstown 413-458-4420
$1.50 A Night • No Club Fees
MOVIE RENTALS
COMPUTERS & SOFTWARE

WILLIAMS SHOP
CHAMPION
Reverse Weave Sweatshirts are in Hooded, Crew. All Sizes.
Goff's Sports, inc.
THE PROFESSIONAL SHOP
15 Spring St. 458-3605

Union rivalry

"In the game with Union on Weston Field last Saturday, Williams presented rather a crippled team, but not withstanding, Union could do absolutely nothing against our rush line ... Score 94-0." This quote is taken from the November 12, 1887 Williams Weekly (the precursor to the Williams Record). However, fearing an imbalance in the 100-year rivalry, the Williams athletic braintrust's decision to stop playing Union will take effect after 1987.

Athletic Director Dr. Bob Peck said the decision was made four or five years ago in response to a shift in Union's athletic philosophy. Seven or eight years ago, Union dropped out of NESCAC. While still limited by NCAA rules, Union now has an edge in football, as it keeps coaches on the road scouting, goes to recruits' homes, and begins practices earlier."

Dr. Peck also said that there are schools such as Bowdoin, Colby and Bates that have "joined our conference, obey all the rules, and want to play Williams College. Why should we be playing a school with a different philosophy, going a different way? Union dropped us. We haven't dropped them. We don't care if they get good. Hamilton and Amherst got good, but we're not going to drop them." In 1988, Williams will begin playing only conference schools, with a rotating schedule that will insure we play everyone in the conference.

Union Coach Al Bagnoll was quoted in the October 26 Albany Times Union as saying, "It's crazy. What he says doesn't make any sense. You don't drop a team because they're good, and that's what they're doing. Don't tell me we're going in different directions. He cries the blues, and I get tired of it. Ten years ago, it was convenient for them to play us, because it was a nice easy game for them. Then, we had to come down here and lose."

Dr. Peck and Coach Odell expressed identical sentiments over the ending of what will be a hundred year tradition. They are sorry it can't go on, because in the past, it has been a good game with a relatively nearby school.

— Dan O'Connor

W. Polo

The water polo team traveled to Brown University over the weekend to battle for the Division III New England championship. Williams turned in an impressive performance, finishing as the runner-up to the Lord Jeffs of Amherst.

A hungry Eph team arrived at Brown on Saturday. However, in the semifinal game against the number one seed from the East, URI, the Ephs had to come from behind as Rhode Island scored three unanswered goals to open the game. The Ephs called a timeout to regroup, and then Chris Giglio '89 put them on the board with a goal off a quick drive.

From then on, the Eph defense, led by brilliant goalie Jean Sohn '88, tightened up and forced Rhode Island to turn over the ball several times. At the half, Williams had fought back to a 4-4 tie.

In the second half, after a quick goal by URI, Eph star Will Dudley '89 fired a strong shot in to retie the game. When sophomore Dave Cantor picked up a loose ball and flipped it past the URI goalie, the Ephs had gone ahead to stay. The final margin of victory was 10-8, with Dudley scoring four goals, Giglio two, and Cantor, John Cooke '88, Adam Ifshin '87, and Dane Dudley '89 one each.

The next day, the Ephs returned to the water to play a tough Amherst squad for the championship. The game began as a defensive struggle, with neither team able to build a big lead. At the quarter, despite having missed several shots from close range, the Ephs trailed by only 4-2. From then on, Amherst began to dominate, and pulled away to win the championsip.

Although selections had not been made at press time, Dudley, Ifshin, Cooke, Dean Pomerleau '87, and goalie Sohn were all expected to make All-New England. The Ephs' second place finish also qualified them for the Eastern championships to be held in Annapolis, MD this weekend.

— Jim Jordan

Cross-Country

The men's cross-country team sent 14 runners to the NCAA Division I New England Championships Saturday at Franklin Park in Boston. The Ephmen came away with a disappointing 28th place finish.

However, running well for the Ephmen was senior Dave Grossman, the team's top runner since the start of the season. Grossman ran a time of 26:30 on the course to take 69th place, a good finish considering the high caliber of the Division I field. Grossman's good showing bodes well for his chances in the New England Division III meet on November 15, when he will try to earn a spot in the Division III national championships.

The Ephmen will also send seven runners to the East Coast Athletic Conference Championships this Saturday in Long Island.

— Steve Brody

M. Rugby

It was a true Homecoming for the WRFC on Saturday as the ruggers took a large step toward winning the Little Three title by throttling Wesleyan 32-4.

The A-side came out against a strong Cardinal team seeking revenge and redemption after a resounding loss to Army the week before. The first score came when Gary Sheff '87 touched one down after a brilliant line overload. Senior Steve Patterson ran in a try after a beautiful pass from the ever present Mark Tompkins '87. The end of the first half saw the White Dogs leading 10-0.

The second half was a picture-perfect display of good rugby as the Cardinals watched the WRFC put in five more tries. Tom Connally '87 ran in two and turned in an impressive day at fullback. Captain Jeff Hellman '87 also went in for his first try of the season, followed by Gene Mazzaro '87 and Patterson. Wesleyan had no chance as the Ephs coasted to the 32-4 final.

The B-side came out confidently and proceeded to thrash the second squad from Wesleyan. Pierre Swart '90 and put in two trys for the Ephs, while senior Andrew Anselmi also touched one down. Senior Charlie Lazor went in for a pair, and Mike Sullivan '88 went in to make the final score 22-20 Williams, with Tom Higgins '88 kicking the conversions. The B's made a clean sweep of Wesleyan with consistently hard playing. With the day at a close, the Cardinals went home as the Ephs came in for traditional postgame festivities.

— Sean Brennan

Lady Ephs improve to 8-win year

by Stewart Verdery

Despite the outcome of their final contest of the year, a 2-1 loss to Union, the women's soccer program made giant strides in the 1986 campaign, doubling last season's win total and just missing the NIAC post-season playoffs. Losing just two seniors to graduation, the squad had been expected to show improvement over the 1985 mark of 4-7-2, and did not let coaches Lisa Melandy and Richard Bennett down, compiling an 8-5-1 record.

The 2-1 fall at Union continued a slight drop in the level of the team's play over the season, marking the fourth loss in five games. After Union broke out to a quick 1-0 lead, Lorl Schaen '89 tied things up with her sixth goal of the year. The sophomore took a lofted pass from teammate

Continued on Page 10

Freshman Lynne Brenner handles the ball as teammate Chris Boddicker looks on in earlier action for the women's soccer team. (Somers)

Lady ruggers maul BC 17-0

by Steph Jacon

Holding their opponents scoreless for the second straight week, the women's rugby team used a tremendous team effort to steamroll Boston College on Saturday, the A-side winning by 17-0.

Consistent line support and tireless scrum pushing won the game for Williams. Powerhouse Mary Petersen '87 was the key player throughout the game, as she tallied two tries, a conversion, and a penalty kick. The first try was set up by sophomore Britty Shaw's 20-meter run down the side. The scrum tipped the ball to Petersen after defenders enveloped Shaw, and Petersen darted amongst the confused Boston ruggers to open the scoring. She converted to make the score 6-0.

After a Petersen penalty kick made the score 9-0, senior scrumhalf Steph Jacon plucked the ball from a ruck and went up the weak side for 15 meters before passing off to the ever-present Kerry Kilander '89. Kilander gained some yards

Continued on Page 9

Volleyball champions at 24-10

by Marc McDermott

Performing well under first year coach Nancy Roberts, the volleyball team won 24 games as it enjoyed its most successful season of this decade.

Co-captains Caroline Teer '87 and Becky Moehring '87, along with fellow senior Sumin Eng, led the team to such honors as the Little Three title, three top-four tournament finishes, and a victory over nationally-ranked Albany.

The defeat of SUNY-Albany gave the first indication that Williams was a force to be reckoned with. The squad entered the late September match coming off a radically different showing in the previous Saturday's prestigious Great Dane Tournament. Albany hosted and won the tourney, and was rewarded with a number five national ranking. Williams, however, was hardly noticed at the tournament, as it lost three of its four contests.

The Ephwomen were nevertheless confident coming into the match. "Albany was so cocky; they thought we were nothing," recalled Moehring. "But we knew we had a lot of talent. Everyone started out playing perfectly, especially Nancy (Hedeman '89), who was just amazing, and we scared them so much they just couldn't come back."

The victory marked the first of a 13-game winning streak, during which the Ephs took first place in the Connecticut College Tourney. Williams dominated five teams on the road to the title, eight times holding their opponents to five points or less in a game.

Although Williams had their win streak broken by Division II

Continued on Page 10

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

GENUINE GENUINE

This week's recipient is freshman Amy Davidson, who won the individual title to lead the tennis team to third place in the New England Championships. Amy, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

42-28 romp

Footballers trounce Wesleyan

by Al Mottur

Entering Saturday's homecoming contest against Wesleyan, the football team's seniors had a point to prove, having not beaten a Little Three opponent in their careers at Williams. That soon changed, however, as the Ephs produced a convincing 42-28 victory over the Cardinals, upping their record to 4-3 and setting up a pivotal season finale with archrival Amherst — a game that will decide the 1986 Little Three Champion.

In defeating Wesleyan, now 2-5 on the season, the Ephs scored six touchdowns and racked up 428 yards of total offense, 238 on the ground. Yet despite this offensive output, by far the team's best in years, Williams constantly felt pressure from a relentless Wesleyan attack that five times faced two-touchdown deficits and four times pulled within seven.

The game started out as if the Ephs were going to run away with it, as they marched for a quick TD on their first possession. Several minutes later, with the Eph defense consistently holding Wesleyan in check, the Cardinals lined up to punt for the third consecutive time. On the play, sophomore defensive end Mark Duff broke through the Cardinal line and blocked the punt, which defensive back Jerry Rizzo '87 recovered on the one. From there, sophomore tailback Mike McLaughlin dove over the line and into the end zone for the TD and a 14-0 lead.

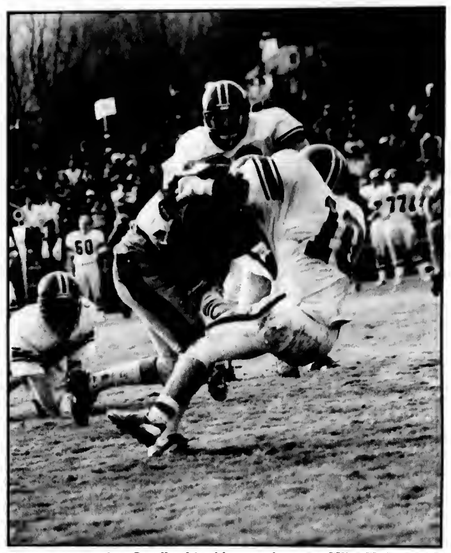
After McLaughlin's score, the Wesleyan offense finally got untracked, led by the quarterbacking of sophomore Jim Lukowski who completed eight passes in a row. Without Lukowski's throws, the Cardinals probably would have been out of the game by halftime. And as it was they still trailed by two TD's at 28-14.

Trading touchdowns

At the start of the third quarter, the two teams twice traded posessions before Lukowski marched his corps downfield for another TD, pulling the Cardinals within 28-21, a score that stood until the opening minutes of the final quarter. As the final stanza got under way, QB Scott Kennedy '89 found senior tight end Jim Poulsen on a simple crossing pattern. On what looked to be no more than a first down play, Poulsen caught the ball, turned upfield past his defender, and raced untouched for a 57 yard touchdown run.

Cardinals rally

However, the Ephs could not put the stubborn Cardinals away, as Wesleyan pulled within seven for the fourth straight time 35-28 and then recovered the ensuing onsides kick with eight minutes to go. However, Lukowski threw long on the first play and was intercepted by free safety Scott Powers '88, blowing Wesleyan's best opportunity to tie the game.



Taking over on the eleven, the Eph offense embarked on a time consuming, game-clinching touchdown drive that ate up over five minutes of the clock and ended the scoring at 42-28. The offensive line cleared the way for the rushing of McLaughlin and freshman tailback Jon Horton and the ball-control passing of Kennedy. The sophomore QB looked sharp on the day, passing for 190 yards with three touchdowns and two interceptions. He also added two rushing TD's to his performance.

Most symbolic of the Williams offensive effort on the day, was the running of McLaughlin, who delivered a workhorse effort, pounding the Cardinal defense for 109 yards on thirty carries. Mclaughlin's performance established team season highs for carries and yards.

Injuries threaten

Entering the game this week against Amherst, the team may be without the services of senior defensive tackle Brian Nixon, who injured his knee in the waning moments of the game. Nixon, the team captain, has been an inspirational leader all year long, supplying superb defensive pressure. Without his presence, which right now is in doubt, the Eph defense will be sorely tested by the potent Lord Jeff offense.

A Williams victory in the upcoming Little Three battle against Amherst would provide the school with a winning record for the first time in years and with the ever-sought Little Three Title. Also at stake is a potentially high-ranking in the final N.E. Division III polls, another recognition the Ephs have not received in years.

Bulling through a Cardinal tackler, sophomore Mike McLaughlin gains some of his 109 yards on Saturday in the Ephs' 42-28 win over the Cardinals. (Camp)

Freshman Geoff Igharo scores the winning goal as the men's soccer team eeked out a win over Wesleyan on Saturday. (Gannon)

7-4-2 soccer nips Cardinals 2-1 as Wright, Igharo score

by Greg Leeds

Edging its way towards another Little Three title, the men's soccer team defeated Wesleyan 2-1 on Saturday in a dramatic match, leaving only Amherst in the way as the 7-4-2 Ephmen attempt to retain last year's crown.

Co-captain Denny Wright '87 and freshman Geoff Igharo scored for Williams as the Ephs thoroughly whipped the Cardinals both offensively and defensively. Wright scored first at 22:23 of the first period off a restart after a Cardinal defender fouled junior Kurt Schroeder deep in the Wesleyan zone. Helge Weiner '87 got the assist, putting the ball in front of the goal, where several players scrambled for possession before Wright pounded it in.

Wesleyan countered with some offensive pressure, but solid play from the defense, especially senior co-captain Jon Deveaux and freshman Dan Callchman, held them off until the offense could score an insurance goal.

That goal came at 15:09 of the first half, when speedy forward Igharo took a ball on the right of the goal from Mike Masters '89 and blew through the Cardinal defense, unleashing a 20-yard drive which sailed into the upper left corner of the net to make it 2-0. The tally proved to be the clincher as Wesleyan's Chris Barkidjija retaliated just 1:15 later, capitalizing on a loose ball in front of the net following a corner kick.

Defensive battle

During the second half the match became more of a defensive battle. The last ten minutes in particular were tense as the Cardinals put continuous pressure on the Eph defense. That defense held firm as Deveaux, Callchman, and senior goalie Brad Bryan helped to turn away many good scoring opportunities.

Williams ended up outshooting the 7-5-1 Cardinals 23-9, showing their offensive domination. Said coach Mike Russo: "It was a typical Little Three match — very intense. We played a smart game defensively and gave them no real scoring opportunities. This gives us momentum going into the Amherst game on Saturday."

Ephs top Springfield

On Wednesday the Ephs defeated Division II Springfield 3-1 as Masters scored a pair of goals and Schroeder connected also. Callchman assisted on both Masters goals as Williams ripped apart the Springfield defense and allowed no real offensive threat to materialize.

Schroeder got his long-awaited goal with just 46 seconds left in the first half to give the Ephs a solid 3-0 halftime lead. John Austin '87 assisted as Schroeder squeezed the ball between the goalkeeper and the right post.

Russo was impressed by the performance of senior Helge Weiner filling in for the injured Deveaux at sweeper, and also by Mike Roach '88, Grae Davis '89, Masters and Nikolai Nachamkin '88. Sophomore Rob Blanck had five saves in net for Williams.

The Ephs will end their season by going for the Little Three title at Amherst on Saturday.

Davidson tops field as Ephs third in N.E.

by Megan McNeill

Last weekend the tennis team capped off it's season with an impressive third place showing at the Division III New Englands. The team was represented with three semifinals finishers, two quarterfinallsts, two finallsts, and one champion. Freshman Amy Davidson, seeded second in her group, became the first Williams player to win since 1978.

Davidson rolled to easy victories in the first, second, and third rounds. Not until the finals did Davidson encounter any opposition as Amherst's Helen Shepard, seeded fourth overall, pushed Davidson to a tough first set before succombing 7-5, 6-1.

Davidson returned to competition in the doubles draw where she and sophomore Missy Crouchley '89 played in the number one spot. The duo reached the semis where they battled for three tough sets before falling to the team from Middlebury 4-6, 7-6, 6-3. Crouchley also played in the number four singles spot reaching the semis before falling to Brandeis' Joch Jaffe 6-1, 6-3.

Senior Liz Kellison also had a great tournament, as she reached the semis in her number six spot and the finals in the number three doubles spot, teaming with captain Katie Kerr '87. Reaching the quarters in singles, Kellison handed Lisa Melhadow her walking papers with a 6-1, 6-4 victory. In her next match, a semifinal showdown against Middlebury's Sonia Vanderra, Kellison fell 6-1, 6-3. In doubles, Kerr and Kellison romped to the finals where they fell in tough match to Brandeis 3-6, 6-1, 6-4.

At number five singles, Anne Shulman '88 advanced to the quarters before losing 6-2, 6-3 as did the doubles team of sophomores Cathy Paper and Annabel Sheinberg who fell to Amherst 7-6, 6-1.

Both Mary Montgomery '88 playing at number one singles, and Kerr, playing at number three, lost in the first round, but traveled all the way to the semifinals of the consolation draw.

Coach Sean Sloane was very pleased with the team's performance at the tournament: "Finishing so well was great and an excellent way to end the season. I'm delighted they played so well." The team finished third in the tournament, tied with Amherst, behind Tufts and Brandeis. For the season, the Lady Ephs finished 5-6 with wins over Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Wesleyan, North Adams State, and Union.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 8 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE NOVEMBER 11, 1986

Police charge Bacchus student

All-campus parties cancelled

by Alexandra Glover and Joe Ehlers

A junior at Williams College was issued a summons on Thursday to appear in Northern Berkshire District Court on charges related to the Club Bacchus-sponsored party at Dodd House on Saturday, October 25, according to Dennis D'Arcangelo, clerk of the court.

As a result of concerns related to this case, and after being called to the Deans' Office, the president of Spencer House and the vice-presidents of Prospect House cancelled parties that were scheduled for last weekend, according to Dean of the College Stephen Fix.

"It won't be very long before some clarity is achieved (in Williams party policy)," Fix told the Record later. "Or, should I say, what clarity we can achieve."

According to Fix, party policy at Williams has been in a state of review since the raising of the Massachusetts drinking age in 1985.

"It is not just recent events" which prompted this review, Fix said. "Even as the months pass, the meaning of the host laws and alcohol liability laws become fuller.

"Schools will feel differently about this," he said. "A relatively isolated college like Williams will treat it differently than a school like B.U. (Boston University), where the social life is not confined strictly to the campus."

Fix refused to comment on the cancellation of the parties over the weekend.

Security called police

Williams security called the Williamstown police to the Bacchus party when a fight began, according to Ransom Jenks, director of security at Williams. Police then launched an investigation into complaints of assault and battery, as well as underage drinking, as reported in last week's Record.

Three charges were filed against Club Bacchus president Donald Aselton '88 by the Williamstown Police department, D'Arcangelo said: selling alcohol without a license, furnishing alcoholic beverages to persons under 21, and procuring by false representation the sale or delivery of alcohol to minors.

Aselton refused to comment on the charges.

The penalty for the conviction on the first charge is, according to D'Arcangelo, a fine of not less than $10 and not more than $300. The second charge carries with it the penalty of a fine of not more than $200, or imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both, and the third charge carries a fine of not less than $100, not more than $1000, or imprisonment of not less than a year, or both.

The arraignment is scheduled for November 19, and will take place at the Northern Berkshire District Court in North Adams.

"It may not be perfect or fair, but it's real," said Gerry Downing, the assistant district attorney for the court, commenting about the fact that one person may be charged with an offense when there are many who have committed the same offense at other parties.

He explained that, even if there were two parties with identical circumstances, if there was trouble related to one but not the other, it would be the host of the troubled party who would be liable.

"There are lots of other variables to consider — a person's record, the circumstances," he added.

Aselton and another Williams student received continuances from the Northern Berkshire District Court on charges related to a fight with a pizza delivery man, a Williams security officer and a police officer in late May, 1985, according to the

Continued on Page 10

This sign, posted outside Driscoll Hall Friday night, while not entirely correct, expressed new concerns over party policy at Williams in light of charges filed against the president of Bacchus. (Camp)

Fix: seniors to advise sophomores

by Paul Kwon and Peter Balaban

A new "Peer Advising" program will be started next semester to allow seniors to advise sophomores on educational goals, the Deans' office announced Monday. Under the program, interested seniors will be assigned several sophomores following a training program for the upperclassmen.

"We view this as a supplement to faculty advising, and as an opportunity for students to help each other select majors and courses," said Dean of the College Stephen Fix in an interview with the Record. Fix said that plans for such a program were discussed last year by the Dean's office in conjunction with the College Council, the Committee for Undergraduate Life (CUL), and the Gargoyle Society.

In a presentation Friday to the CUL, Fix said that the new advising program was being formed in response to a general sentiment "that our advising system needs improvement on every level." Fix made it clear that peer advising should not "undermine the important academic advising done by faculty members, faculty advisors, and Junior Advisors," or become a "grapevine" for upperclassmen to tell sophomores which professors they should take.

The program will be instituted experimentally for the current sophomore and senior classes, and if it is successful, current freshman will be able to register for it in April. According to a letter sent to students on Monday, seniors will be asked to volunteer to serve as advisors later this week. In January, the peer advisors will participate in a winter study training session to "familiarize them more fully with the curriculum and to explore both the possibilities and the limits of their roles."

Strictly voluntary

Participation in Peer Advis-

Continued on Page 9

Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition member Martin White '87 paints one of the white crosses erected by WAAC in front of Chapin Hall Friday. According to White, the crosses, which have been up since October 16, were painted red to remember five people shot and killed in Soweto, a South African township, last week and to remind Williams students that, even as the crosses are up, "people are dying." By press time, many crosses had been removed from the quad. (Albright)

Council, WAAC reps debate cross protest

by Scott Blasdell

Responding to debate over the crosses erected on Baxter lawn by the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC) last month, council president Amy Jeffress '87 invited WAAC members to Thursday's college council meeting to "discuss the crosses and the issues." The council also discussed the role it could take in disinvestment.

The discussion began with council member David Kane '88 asking whether there were any limits to student protest, and whether WAAC would insist on protesting "if a majority of students feel that the protest should end."

Martin White '87, speaking as a member of WAAC, responded that he believed the protest was a reasonable one, and that the crosses were meant to stir up a response on an apathetic campus. Tom Williams '87, another member of WAAC, pointed out that it was WAAC's "first amendment right to keep the crosses up."

Protest "confused"

Suzanne Blemiller, council vice-president, said the WAAC protest was becoming confused. She said that students are upset that it is not the issue of divestment but the issue of crosses that has become the center of debate.

Citing last spring's shanties as a successful protest which combined activities and education with structures on Baxter lawn, many non-WAAC students at the meeting expressed the feeling WAAC had abandoned its responsibility by not having follow-up demonstrations after the crosses were erected.

Jeffress added that "a lot of people see apathy" in WAAC itself. "A better way to go about it," she said, "is not to have a small group against the whole campus."

WAAC members, however, denied that they had neglected any educational responsibility and said education was the primary intent of the crosses in the first place. Members of WAAC pointed out that WAAC had held two panel discussions on the crosses and that there had been enough education in the past that they believed more at the moment was unnecessary.

WAAC member Farhan Haq '89 said the crosses were more important in that they forced people to shake off apathy. "That's why there's protest. People don't want to shake off apathy.".

White then said that when someone kicks over a cross, that represents a healthy "frustration" at the issue

Kane questioned WAAC's approach. "What right do you have to make people think about what they don't want to?" he asked.

Nick Levis '87 of WAAC said he found this an ironic comment from a student at a liberal arts college.

Radical?

According to Hart Murphy '88, "the idea that WAAC is a radical organization is just a surface impression." Murphy then noted that, in his six years

Continued on Page 10

November 11, 1986

Is the party over?

The police assault on underage drinking and the cancellation of two all-campus parties by house officers on the Deans' advice last weekend makes it clear that the college's social life is about to change. It seems the time for addressing the implications of the 21-year old drinking age has arrived. The administration now has the unenviable task of reformulating party policy.

This is no easy task.

If last weekend is an indication, the days of the all-campus party are over. With the issuance of a summons to the Club Bacchus president, a precedent has been set and no house president will be willing to throw a party knowing he or she is legally accountable for any underage drinking. It is unfair to make the fifteen house presidents, worried about their own liability, responsible for the end of all-campus parties. The college would surely not be better off without parties.

The solution, it seems, is to take the onus of responsibility off of the house presidents and to make the underage drinkers directly answerable for their actions. By regulating parties from within the college community we could avoid the necessity of involving the police, thus making it less potentially hazardous for house presidents to host a party.

A Williams security-supervised system of monitoring underage drinking at parties would allow the college to take disciplinary action against those abusing the law. Officers and student employees, or designated bartenders, could check ID cards randomly at the keg or around the party and also take the names of those under 21 obviously intoxicated. Houses which become sites of flagrant drinking-age violations would have their right to hold parties suspended. The Deans would then have the initial responsibility for punishing violators.

This would be a radical change in the function of security, but some authority, not house presidents, should bear the responsibility of enforcing state laws and college policies. Otherwise, that responsibility is left solely to the police who could raid parties and, though there might be one underage drinker in a hundred partiers, arrest the house president. As long as that threat is perceived, no house president will dare throw a party.

Outer Limits — REBOB

Letters

Protest

To the Editor:

I am perplexed by last week's editorial, which declared, "It is time that either the crosses come down or the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition shows a commitment to its protest." Fortunately, The Record has no legitimate grounds to call for the removal of the crosses, as I have a First Amendment right to express my opinion. I could on better grounds call for the Record to cease publication.

It is neither my nor WAAC's responsibility to defend a First Amendment right. Rather, it is our responsibility to use that right to effectively express our opinions. In my opinion, the crosses express the death and suffering of South Africans in the current crisis.

All I need to make this expression effective is a willingness to discuss the issue, a hammer, and enough wood. I have already shown my willingness to talk openly at two panels and in numerous private discussions. I have hammered crosses back into place many times in the past few weeks. And I have plenty of wood to build more crosses.

Now, the Record can tell me: what do I need to "maintain" my protest? Support from a majority of the student body? The First Amendment defends my right to free speech against the majority, and defends that right indefinitely. Thus I am within my rights to leave the crosses up indefinitely. And I would like to leave them up ... at least until this college divests from companies doing business in South Africa.

Randy Capps '87

Misguided

To the Editor:

The hypocrisy inherent in Mr. Illner's Op-Ed of last week would be laughable if the issue of divestment were less serious. Deploring what he perceives to be "emotionalism" while "morally crusading" against the idea of revolution in South Africa, Mr. Illner successfully destroys his own misguided argument in his final paragraph.

That a parent mistook the crosses on Baxter Lawn as standing as "a memorial to the dead Marines in Lebanon" while simultaneously assuming that the protest stood for those killed in the Hungarian uprising of 1956 seems a trifle strange. Either this occurence is the precious fabrication of the author, or Williams parents are easily confused and suffer from severe learning deficiencies (for instance, being unable to read the prominent "IF THIS WERE SOUTH AFRICA THIS FACILITY WOULD BE FOR BLACKS ONLY" sign posted at both ends of the mock cemetary).

In either case, Mr. Illner characterizes these rather pathetic musings as "redeeming." Obviously, Mr. Illner would not care to "morally crusade" against those attempting to revolt against Soviet rule and would see no "emotionalism" in a protest commemorating the illegal U.S. invasion of Lebanon.

Finally, Mr. Illner does the members of WAAC a disservice by quoting Professor Greene's backhanded and patronizing comment that "they aren't dummies." Unfortunately I cannot see my way clear to return the compliment.

Tom Williams '87

Pool

To the Editor:

Who are these kids using our pool tables? Are they from the town? Are they children of professors? They certainly aren't students, but they are a constant nuisance.

On numerous occasions, we have gone down to the basement of Baxter Hall to play pool, only to find the tables occupied by unfamiliar youngsters. We feel that we, as students paying approximately fifteen thousand dollars per year in tuition, have the right to use the facilities that were placed here presumably for our own use.

These children are not students, and therefore do not have the same rights that we do. We do not believe that professor's children should be banned from the pool room, but that they should relinquish the tables to students when necessary. If they are indeed townspeople, get them the hell out!

The reason we raise the issue is that there are only three pool tables in Baxter. They cannot accomodate the huge demand for play. It is difficult enough to find an empty table when merely sharing the facilities with the rest of the student body, much less with a veritable onslaught of outsiders.

As long as there are only three pool tables, the dilemma will persist. Ideally, we would like to see more pool tables installed, but if this is not possible, a more restrictive policy concerning table use should be instituted.

Charlie Moylan '90
Ed Vander Ploeg '90

Crosses

To the Editor:

In the past few weeks, many voices have come out in criticism of the Anti-Apartheid's Coalition's placement of crosses on Baxter Lawn. This is a good sign. The nature of the criticism, however, is disappointing.

One argument against the crosses has been that the majority of Williams students are not in favor of them. It seems to me that if the majority of Williams students agreed with the protest, the need for this type of protest would be greatly diminished. This is the nature of dissent.

There have been also charges that the Anti-Apartheid Coalition uses opportunist tactics and wields inappropriate forms of protest. The only response I have for this allegation is a question. Hasn't this opportunistic, inappropriate form of protest provided an opportunity for the expression of "appropriate" forms? Another question: if this form of protest has lost its effectiveness, why are people still complaining?

The most disturbing criticisms of the protest were the claims that the Anti-Apartheid Coalition indulges in "emotionalism" and that there is no room for emotion in an intellectual atmosphere. The logical extension and application of this credo is frightening. I wonder if those who oppose the crosses would favor a sterile community of robots where reason and logic held complete sway. If this were the case, many more areas of the life they take for granted would be deemed inappropriate than the imposition of wooden crosses on a lawn in the center of their universe. There is emotion in every argument, no matter how carefully hidden that emotion may be.

The quality of the education that we are receiving at Williams is a privilege.

Continued on Page 3

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT OPED ..... John Canty
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, Stewart Verdery
LAYOUT ASSISTANT ..... Mary Iliff
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to Hal Wells, Williamstown, Ma 01267.

Peer Advising System will become a helpful resource

by Rob Chase '88

As a "small liberal arts institution", Williams College can provide us with an intimate academic atmosphere. Many campus organizations are questioning whether Williams fulfills its potential to give us personal attention, particularly when it comes to academic advising. The CEP, CUL, Gargoyle Society, Faculty and Administration are addressing the issue and are working to bring about positive, broad-reaching changes.

Fundamental changes are necessary, but even before broad solutions are found, we can improve specific aspects of academic advising. By implementing a Peer Advising program, the Dean's Office is taking a first step towards better advising at Williams. This system effectively addresses a serious problem without constraining students or organizations with other solutions. It is worthy of our support.

The Peer Advising System aims to fill a gaping hole in Williams' academic advising. While freshman have freshman advisors and juniors and seniors can get advice from faculty members within their majors, Williams leaves sophomores without formal resources for academic advice. Currently, sophomores must make particularly important academic decisions — the choice of a major seems pretty crucial — without the opportunity to speak with advisors.

By providing sophomores with the resource of experienced seniors to give them helpful information about the majors, the Peer Advising System will be an effective addition to advising at Williams. Each senior in the system will advise a group of five or six sophomores who have expressed interest in majoring in that senior's division. These seniors can use their knowledge and experience to answer a broad range of questions. For example, in what ways does taking a semester or year away from Williams affect my choice of a major? What options does each major provide for seminars or theses? What possibilities exist for certain double-major combinations? And so on.

To make seniors aware of their advising responsibilities, they must attend a half-day training session during Winter Study. Among other things, the training session would stress the importance of refraining from subjective professor and course judgements, the advisor's role as a liason to bring sophomores together with appropriate professors and students, and the responsibility of the advisor to make initial contact with advisees.

Although seniors must initially make contact with sophomores, this program in no way binds sophomores to their advisors. The Peer Advising Program provides a valuable resource that sophomores can use if they need it; it does not require sophomores to hunt for yet another signature.

This year's Peer Advising is part of a two-year pilot program. The Dean's Office will use the information that it gathers this year to gauge student enthusiasm and identify possibilities for the system's improvement. Using this information, the Dean's Office can make next year's program, involving current freshman and juniors, a full-year resource. The recently announced Peer Advising program will meet the pressing need for sophomores advising without impeding groups working on the fundamental problems with Williams' advising. The Williams community's enthusiastic support will make it a successful addition to our college.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

With both privilege and education comes an offer of responsibility, stating that one facet of responsibility can be seen in the use of investment. Furthermore, such protest expresses the opinion that investment in a system which allows the racist oppression of the majority of South Africans by a violently repressive minority regime is irresponsible. The high visibility of this form of protest reflects the opinion that the issue is one that should not be ignored. The majority of the students at Williams are free to disagree with these minority opinions.

I am hoping that criticism of the crosses will continue. It would be nice, however, if this criticism would come in the form of a definitive statement of an opposing position rather than a criticism of the surface of the Anti-Apartheid Coalition's form of protest. Judging from the past, there is little chance of this, but I could be wrong.

By the way, the workers at the plant in South Africa formerly owned by General Motors are not protesting the fact that General Motors is pulling out of South Africa. They are striking to insure the continuation of the working conditions that General Motors upheld.

I am waiting for a reply. And I probably used a few five-syllable words. Big deal.

Chris Bail '88

Carefree?

To the Editor:

I would like to reply to Michael Swartz's letter in the November 4 issue of the Record. First, I want to say that I respect him for taking the risk of publicly expressing his views. I think risk taking is a necessary part of learning.

Secondly, I want to disagree with his statement that the crosses should be removed because they infringe upon our right to be carefree. To say this is tantamount to demanding that South African people be silent because of our right not to confront the reality they live. Conceivably, we have the right to be carefree. But if we choose to be carefree, we must be willing to do so in the face of the crosses on Baxter lawn, in the face of South African suffering and injustice. What we most assuredly do not have is the right to demand of either the crosses or the South African people that they go away in order to make being carefree easier for us.

Marty Gensemer '87

Crime?

To the Editor:

On Sunday, November 2 at about 9:15 p.m., I was walking back from the Mission Park Parking Lot towards the entrance to Dennet House when a car pulled up alongside of me. A man in his early twenties got out of the car and asked me directions to Pittsfield. I proceeded to explain how to get back to route two, and in doing so, looked toward Main Street, away from the man. The next thing I know I'm lying on the ground with a sore jaw and a mouthful of blood. I did not recognize the man, but I could safely say that he is not a student at this college. My assumption is that he landed one good shot to my face with his fist or some other implement, hopped in his car, and left.

But forget all about that. What really burns me up is all this underage drinking here at Williams. It disgusts me to hear of underclassmen who are free to attend parties where alcohol is served. Believe you me, this stuff never went on in my previous two years here. And I always suspected that Club Bacchus was up to some dubious activities; tricking underage students into going to an alcoholic party when all the young cherubs expected was a pleasant social gathering. I am glad that someone like Chief Zoito has finally got his priorities straight by cracking down on these lawless hoodlums.

I guess it was my own fault for not carrying a baseball bat with me to park my car. Yup.

Raymond George '88

Co-ops

To the Editor:

The Committee on Undergraduate Life is conducting a survey about co-op housing/living this Wednesday, November 12. It will be distributed to seniors not in co-ops and all juniors during dinner in all the dining halls. Those students in co-ops and off-campus will be surveyed later in the week.

We are hoping to measure the popularity of the co-op system among students and the reasons students support or do not support such a system. The committee can interpret the results in order to determine overall student opinions and attempt to reconcile the functioning of the system with these ideas. This possibly could include proposals to change the system, for example in the selection process.

We are asking that as many students as possible respond to the questionnaires this week. If the number of responses is high enough the administration will have greater faith in the results and be more likely to take any proposals seriously.

At present there are six co-op houses, with 60 residents. There were 144 applicants last year for those 60 spaces. The present selection process assigns a random number to each group application regardless of size and then fills co-op houses by maximizing first choices, the same way as residential inclusion.

We ask students to take the time to answer the survey honestly because smoothly functioning co-op housing/living is an important part of our residential housing system.

Tom FitzGibbon '87
Suzanne Biemiller '87
CUL Co-op Subcommittee

Support

To the Editor:

Your recent article, "Support for Blacks judged strong" failed in a number of ways to point out many of the serious problems that Black students face here at Williams and throughout the country. The basic scope of the article was almed at painting a pretty picture of Williams. If the Record or anyone else is going to do this, then let's at least try to present a fair replica of the situation.

There are questions of support here that go beyond the WBSU. The question I have for the community and the College is this: how long will we continue to base our truths on the lies and shortcomings of our history? It seems that real support and spirit for equality are promoted when this school decides to take the lead in this half-hearted morality game.

The best statement Williams could make, here and throughout the country, to help mend past injustices and promote racial equality, is to make an all-out commitment to its minority students.

Continued on Page 8

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM — by Rich Gardella

CUL looks at Log dining

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) met last week to hear a presentation by Dean Fix on the new Peer Advising Program and his reply to the Log lunch proposal.

Fix spoke about the implementation of the new advising program, in which seniors will advise sophomores on academic questions and choosing majors. See related story on page one.

Fix called the CUL's proposal to introduce lunches at the Log with the aim of reinvigorating it and increasing faculty-student interaction an "interesting and promising proposal," but termed the required $20,000 estimated annual cost "pricey".

Hart Murphy, a member of the CUL, felt that by introducing Log lunches, the current program that allows students to invite their professors to meals at other dining halls might be hurt. Fix said that if the Log just becomes an extension of Baxter for students to eat at, the program would be a waste, and concluded his presentation by saying "I don't want to firmly commit yet — I'll have my answer to you in a week."

Also discussed at the meeting was a proposal by Murphy to introduce department dinners, where faculty members of different departments would eat at residential houses on campus. According to Murphy, the program would increase student contact with a broader part of the faculty.

William Wagner, the chairman of the CUL, mentioned that a proposed meeting with Chief Zoito would have to be postponed because Dean Fix was currently conducting talks with him over the college's party policy. Wagner said that although the meeting was a good idea, now was not the time for it.

— Peter Balaban

Students assaulted

Williams College Security reported to the Williamstown police on Sunday, November 2, two incidents in which Williams students were assaulted.

The police are investigating possible connections between the assault of Stephen Brody '90 on Saturday, November 3, and Raymond George '88 on Sunday.

According to Director of Security Ransom Jenks, Brody was walking by the Haystack Monument when a car drove by with an open door and almost hit Brody, who yelled at the driver. The driver then got out of the car and punched Brody.

On Sunday night, Jenks said, four people in a car stopped George by Mission Park and asked him for directions to Pittsfield. As George was giving directions, one person got out of the car and punched him. Jenks said that although George saw baseball bats in the car, rumors that he was hit with a bat are unsubstantiated.

The identity of the assailants is unknown, but Jenks said, "You can be reasonably sure that these were not Williimas students who assaulted those people."

Jenks said he thinks the incidents are lsolated, and they are not related to each other or to the assault of some Williams freshmen in September. He also said the number of incidents is not unusual, commenting, "I don't think anything more is happening this year than in the past."

— Debbie Snyder

Pressure to divest increases

Companies answer ACSR query

by Peter Balaban

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) met last week to discuss replies to the letter it sent to companies informing them of the college's newly adopted disinvestment advocacy policy

As of the meeting, two-thirds of the companies written to by the ACSR had replied. According to Professor of History James Wood, chairman of the committee, the replies fell into three categories.

The first group included companies that have decided to withdraw their operations from South Africa. Most of these enclosed press releases with their replies to the letter, and the college will send responses to these companies thanking them for their position.

The second category of replies had a "soft tone" that said they were "monitoring the situation." Wood cited Eastman Kodak's letter and said it was obvious from the content that "they're waiting for a press release (announcing disinvestment)."

A very few of the letters said that the company's position was fixed and they were going to retain their holdings in South Africa. According to Wood, the ACSR will respond to such companies with letters that say "we're sorry you feel this way and we will be voting for appropriate shareholder resolutions as the season comes up."

Recent divestments

Wood said that he "would like to claim that IBM pulled out because Williams College asked them to," but that decisions to withdraw were made because many companies' operations in South Africa were doing poorly and "many of them view the situation there as it deteriorates wlth increasing alarm."

Wood said that since the July listing, about 25 percent of the market value of the companies that the College owns with hold-

Continued on Page 10

Burke resigns from ACSR

Sharon Burke, one of the two student members of the ACSR, announced her resignation at last week's College Council meeting. Although Burke gave her acceptance to an internship program in Kenya for next semester as the reason for her resignation, she was critical of the ACSR at the council meeting, calling it "a buffer zone between students and trustees." Burke went on to call disinvestment advocacy "a drop in the bucket ... it's nothing. It does nothing. It is no good."

Burke told the Record that she "doesn't believe that there is a moral commitment to shareholder responsibility at this school." She said that the ACSR was willing "to make decisions without cultivating advice from the commlttee", as in the decision to adopt the disinvestment advocacy, where several ACSR members were not consulted.

James Wood, the chairman of the ACSR, said that he was aware that Burke was going to resign because of her acceptance into the Kenya program, but he would not comment on her remarks until he talked with her. Wood would also not comment on the fact that Burke is not the first student member of the ACSR to resign. He said that "both of our student representatives this year have been independent minded people, and I have enjoyed Sharon's participation on the committee. She has been very helpful."

— Peter Balaban

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

after 7:00 p.m. Coffee Club
Coffee by the cup - 25¢
Coffee House soon to come!

76 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN
NOW OPEN TIL 10
MONDAY-SATURDAY 9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
SUNDAY 10-5

Telephone (413)458-5007

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
Est. 1949 Betsy Barbieri
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

"Wild Things" are here

from Maurice Sendak's Where the Wild Things Are
lurking in our new colorful children's section.
The gift for the Party animal with everything

AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT — ORDER EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS

Literature for every taste
Now Open Til 10:00 p.m.
Come visit us soon.

Open from 8:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Sunday 10-5
Located next to THE LOG

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, and faux-antique jewelry.

TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

Profile: E. J. Johnson

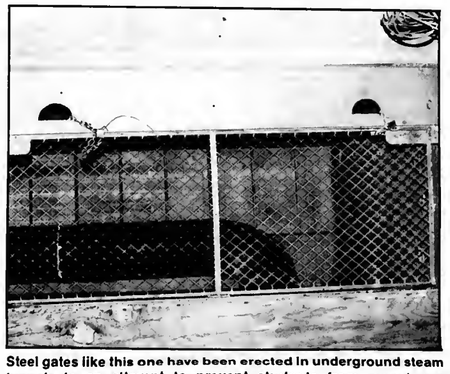
by Charles Samuelson

Professor of Art E. J. Johnson '59 traces the origins of his career back to a Williams course that he now teaches, Art 101-102. Johnson said that he "came to Williams and didn't know anything about art at all." In fact, he said, he initially thought he wanted to be an architect. His interest in both art and architecture developed under the watchful eye of Whitney Stoddard (now Johnson's colleague and the Amos Lawrence professor of art emeritus). He said that when he arrived here, he just "took Art 102 and ended up doing what I'm doing now."

Art professor E. J. Johnson (Guck)

After graduating from Williams, he went on to receive his MA and Ph.D at New York University and then received a Fulbright Scholarship to study in Italy. Sometime along the way, he decided he wanted to teach. It was something that he simply

Continued on Page 11



The tunnels: Hot, steamy, but off-limits

by Michael Erard

Underneath the Williams College campus lies a dark, mysterious network of tunneis through which run steam pipes, high voltage wires, telephone and computer lines. The steam tunnels have existed since the college built its central heating plant in 1909.

However, the tunnels have been used for much more.

One student, now attending Mt. Holyoke College, related her tunneling experience at Williams last year. She and her companion entered the tunnels through a heating tank in an unspecified building. While crawling through the tunnel, they discovered just how well-traveled the steam tunnels actually were. "We ran into three people going the other way," she said.

Steel gates like this one have been erected in underground steam tunnels in an attempt to prevent students from pursuing a potentially dangerous Williams tradition. (Somers)

Traffic control

They found their way to Morgan using directions written on the walls by previous tunnelers and then proceeded to the gym, where they went swimming. Wet and muddy, they broke out of the gym and ran to Colonial Pizza.

She said that she believes her tunneling experience is fairly

Continued on Page 9

in other IVORY TOWERS

Dartmouth

Dartmouth College sophomore Douglas Bowman has been formally charged with raping a 17-year-old female visitor to the college. According to the Dartmouth, Bowman was arraigned on charges of "felonious sexual assault" in Hanover District Court on October 28, and could be sentenced with to up to 15 years in prison, or a $2000 fine, or both, if convicted of the Class A feiony. The alleged assault occurred in Massachusetts Hall, a Dartmouth College dorm, sometime between 2 a.m. and 3 a.m. on October 26. According to testimony presented before the court, the victim "had been sleeping and awoke to find Bowman on top of her." Bowman, a resident of West Chester, Pa., has withdrawn from the college and has been released on $1000 cash bail and a $1000 personal recognizance bond with the added stipulation that "he have no further contact with the alleged victim."

Middlebury

Middlebury College devotees of NBC's prime time doctor-drama St. Elsewhere were shocked last week when one of the series' main characters, Dr. David Auschlander, made a wisecrack about another character's Middlebury t-shirt. Said the good doctor, "Middlebury, huh? Had to settle for imitation Ivy League. Majoring in Music Appreciation?" The students could not complain too loudly about this aspersion, however, as the script was written by an alumnus of Middlebury, class of 1981. The scriptwriter-alumnus took full responsibility for the quote, and claimed that, "it wasn't meant to be derogatory." Ironically, the scriptwriter had little to complain about during his undergraduate years, "especially since (he) met (his) wife at Middlebury."

North Adams State

Last week, the Beta Chi Gamma fraternity brothers at North Adams State College sold themselves into slavery for a day. In a sale which started early on Saturday morning, "virtually all of the Beta brothers were auctioned off as slaves for students to do with them as they pleased," according to the NASC Beacon. Prices started at five dollars and were bid up as high as twenty-three dollars in one instance. Once you purchased a brother, you were free to do anything that you wished with him — until 5:30 that evening. According to the Beacon, "Most slave activities included cleaning and heavy alcohol consumption." Some people might wonder why a frat brother would put himself up for sale. But as one frat brother put it, "Whatever people make you do is never as bad as pledging." Some fraternity members spent the day dressed as women, but at least one brother expressed disappointment that no one had made him "do something good, like sexual favors." The Beacon reported that money raised from this event went to "the repair of the aging Beta house."

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporter Jim Hartnett from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Friday's lunch at the Log: homemade bread and talk

by Lisa West

Discussion of the Log usually focuses on the decline of its popularity, on how it has changed, on how Williams can make it more appealing, or expand its functions. The Friday Lunch at the Log sponsored by the Center for Environmental Studies, however, provides an example of "success" at the Log; it is not new, just more popular than ever. Forty-five people have made semester reservations, and another sixty to one hundred students, faculty, and townspeople call in reservations weekly.

"Lunch" consists of homemade bread, meatless soup, and salad. For some students, the food is in itself reason enough to attend. "It's a really good break from the dining halls," said Leslie Jeffs '89, "The bread is just amazing!" Although Food Service has taken over the Log, students do the actual cooking. Some are work-study students, but most are volunteers. In fact, this aspect of the program is so popular that CES has to turn down "cooks."

CES has a budget for the weekly speakers, but the lunch itself is not subsidized, which explains the $1.75 fee. Some of the food comes from the local food Co-op, Wild Oats, some from Food Service, and some from Smith's Caretaker Farm, where produce is organically grown. Kristen Andrews '87 arranges the purchases. Assistant Director of CES Nan Jenks-Jay commented that the lunch is surprisingly self-sufficient in terms of costs: "It is amazing to pull it off without losing money, but we do."

Varied speakers

Besides food, the other main feature of the program is the lecture, which can vary from a student's informal slide show to an internationally known speaker's premise on the future of environmental issues in politics. Local authorities, Williams alumni, and students are especially well represented. Jenks-Jay emphasizes that CES keeps an open definition of "environment" to encourage diversity of topics. Lectures in the past year included the Hoosic River, Greenpeace, recycling, coastal land policy, the Alaskan Native Claims Act, environmental law, and environmental issues in banking.

Mary Keller '87 stressed the importance of these lectures in showing students career options or possibilities for grants. Lis-

Continued on Page 6

Where to eat on Spring Street: Part Two

by Bill O'Brien

(This review is continued from last week's Record.)

Bette's is plain. Can you hear me? Plain. Peanut butter and jelly, egg and olive, turkey, turkey club, pepper steak. Plain. Good. Bette's is good. Cheap. Bette's is cheap. The chalk board does list some creative choices. I was thoroughly disappointed with the one I tried (pizza pot pie). The others may have been good. I'll stick with plain. Cheap. Good.

And finally the Pub. If you thought Bette's was plain ...

The Pub serves the basic sandwiches: roast beef, pastrami, ham, liverwurst, etc., all of which are only acceptable when other factors are considered.

For the Pub's sake, I move to atmosphere ...

Here it all depends on what you're looking for. Last year's opening of the Erasmus brought a legitimate yuppie haven to Williamstown ... the plants, the books, the glass-top tables, etc. "Normal" people will feel comfortable here too, but yuppies will drool.

Papa Charlie's succeeds in creating a land of nostalgia. Opie Taylor would revel in dropping a quarter in that Coke machine. Bette's strives for that same feeling but the name (Bette's Life and Times) disqualifies it.

Goodie's and Colonial are both unsettling in their own special ways. The former is simply too busy, with the candy store, the ice cream counter and the neon all demanding attention. The latter ... ah, what can be said about the atmosphere at

Continued on Page 6

Papa Charlie's nostalgic interior. (Losito)

Performance preview

Upcoming musical events

The Williams College community will have the opportunity to attend two major musical events next weekend. The musical ensemble "Flor de Cana" will perform a program of Central and South American music at Williams College on Saturday, Nov. 15. The concert begins at 8:00 P.M. in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall and will be followed by a reception and discussion at the Log.

Since its formation in 1984 at a cultural exchange program in Nicaragua, "Flor de Cana" has been playing for audiences at various places in both Nicaragua and the United States. "Flor de Cana" specializes in a synthesis of original music and Latin American "Nueva Cancion," or "New Song," which is a movement that uses Latin American musical traditions to treat contemporary social issues.

Synthesis

The concert is open to the public at no charge and is funded in part by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, and the National Endowment for the Arts, through the New England Foundations for the Arts. It is sponsored by a number of Williams College groups, including the Lecture Committee, the departments of anthropology and sociology, Spanish and political science, and the Chaplain's Office.

The Williams College Choral Society, conducted by Kenneth Roberts, opens the Christmas season with a performance of Hector Berlioz's magical retelling of the Christmas story, "L'Enfance du Christ," on Sunday, November 16, at 8:00 P.M. in Chapin Hall.

Solists

The seventy-voice mixed chorus will be joined by renowned soloists, full symphonic orchestra, and select members of the chorus of the Emma Willard School in this twentieth-anniversary concert of the Choral Society. One of the soloists will be Michael Costantino '85, a frequent soloist with the Choral Society.

Members of the Choral Society will also provide Christmas music for the traditional Service of Lessons and Carols in Thompson Memorial Chapel on Sunday, December 7th.

General admission to this concert is $3.50 at the door, or free with Williams I.D. Tickets are also available at Harts' Pharmacy in Williamstown.

Log lunch

Continued from Page 5

tening to Williams alumni speak about how they used environmental interest in a job helps emphasize what a broad field environmentalism is. "You get inspired about what you can do," Keller explained.

The Log Lunch also functions to promote interest and awareness outside of the Environmental Studies Program. Keller commented that CES is a politically active organization on campus, and the announcements before the lecture bring in students who might not otherwise actively participate in such activities as lobbying or recycling. Hearing announcements has much better results than just using the Daily Advisor or Weekly Calendar. "It is an amazing forum for CES," Keller concluded, feeling that both CES and students not in the program benefit from the contact.

Several townspeople attend the lunches. Jenks-Jay commented that the Log is a particularly suitable site not only because of its informal character but also because of its "neutral" location on Spring Street. The problems permeating other town-gown interactions seem absent because students and residents are on an equal basis and share a common interest, whether it be environmental issues or good, homemade food.

The atmosphere of the Log clearly sets the lecture apart from other Williams seminars. If the same speaker and topic were presented at 4:00 in a classroom, probably only ten to twenty students would attend, Jenks-Jay surmised. Afternoons interfere with sports, labs, socializing, and plain lack of motivation. Having an established program over lunch brings in many more students, faculty, and local residents. The main room in the Log also provides an informal setting not found in the larger lecture halls. This casual attitude can be seen by the number of people who stay afterwards to talk to the speaker or ask for more information.

Spring St.

Continued from Page 5

Colonial? There is always an interesting collection of customers, outdone by an even more interesting collection of employees. Whatever, it's always fun ... uh, interesting.

A man's pub

For those like me, who often don't want to hear discussions of acadamia in the background, the Pub is the only safe choice. A Pub lunch is a Man's lunch in a Man's atmosphere. The talk is of sport, construction and politics. Local workers gather here a little after noon; not one attempts to apply Kant in his discussion of why the Mets won the series. Sure the food isn't great, but the beer is cold and the change from the typical college hangout scene is blissful.

And now we lazily move on to service, and speaking of lazily moving along, let's start with Goodie's. Compare it with Pappa Charlie's. Both usually have three people working during lunch. Pappa Charlie's does not have table service, Goodies does. So two of these three at Goodies saunter to the tables and then mosey back into the kitchen to cut a sandwich in half. It doesn't work. No one seems happy to be working there. If they are, they do a swell job of keeping it from the customers. And how often have I waited for a check? Professors return papers faster. It's simply unfair. Sorry Goodie.

Last year, I reported a similar problem at the Erasmus. It has been corrected. Congratulations. Bette's needs some work; there are too many people who don't seem to know exactly what they're supposed to do. Bette should tell them.

Counter service

The service at the Pub isn't perfect either, but that's all right. It's still a man's lunch in a man's atmosphere, etc.

Counter service prevails at Pappa Charlie's and Colonial. It works well in both places. The employees are generally friendly and efficient, which is all that is necessary.

Remember, nothing on Spring Street is 'bad', and nothing is fantastic. The differences among the restaurants are slight in most cases. All are acceptable, decent, adequate, tolerable, etc. Pappa Charlie's, for its variety, quality, and general 'Williamsiness,' would have to be the overall winner.

BAIN & COMPANY, INC.

Management Consultants
Cordially invites

The Williams College Class of 1987

To A

Presentation

On

Associate Consultant Career Opportunities

in

Corporate Strategy Consulting

Thursday, November 13, 1986
7:00 - 8:00 PM

The Office of
Career Counseling

Conte, Guernsey local winners in state races

by F. Craig Gangi

Riding a tide of support from southern and farm-belt states, the Democratic party regained control of the Senate and strengthened their lead in the House in last week's national elections. California Senator Alan Cranston, a liberal Democrat, said the election "laid the groundwork for taking back the White House."

On the local level, Massachusetts 1st Congressional District Representative Silvio Conte, the 28-year Republican incumbent, retained his title by defeating Democratic challenger Robert Weiner. Weiner received 25 percent of the vote. Conte will remain the state's lone Republican congressman.

In the only contested Massachusetts Congressional race in which the incumbent was not running, Democrat Joseph Kennedy defeated Republican Clark Abt to succeed retiring U.S. House speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill. In the state's nine other congressional districts, four Democratic incumbents won reelection and five other Democrats ran unopposed.

Massachusetts voters also opted for another four years of state-level Democratic rule, returning the Democratic governor, Michael Dukakis, to a third term with approximately 70 percent of the vote. Lieutenant Governor-elect Evelyn Murphy will be the first woman to hold a statewide office.

Guernsey wins

On the state congressional level, returning incumbents to the Massachusetts State House included Williamstown Democrat Sherwood Guernsey, Ware Democrat William Moriarty and Springfield Republican Robert Howarth. In the state Senate, the Democrats will hold their four to one edge and maintain their large majority in the House. All 37 state Senators who sought reelection were sucessful.

There were eight public questions on the November 4 ballot. Of the two that received the most publicity on the Williams campus, one passed and the other was rejected. Question One, which would have prohibited public funding of abortions from taxes, was defeated by 58% of the vote. Question Four, the hazardous waste cleanup initiative, passed by 73% of the vote. In other questions, Massachusetts voters rejected textbook aid to non-public schools and repealed the state's mandatory seat belt law.

Meanwhile, in Iowa, the politically peremptory purser Fred Grandy, who played "Gopher" on the now-lamented TV series "Love Boat," won his bid for a seat in the House for the 6th district of Iowa. The race was possibly the closest of the election, with Grandy , a Republican, receiving 50.9 percent of the vote. In Georgia, however, "Cooter," actor Ben Jones from the "Dukes of Hazzard," lost the House race in the 4th district.

This article includes information from the Associated Press.

CDs stocked for audio visual center

by John Felkner

In anticipation of a centralized Audio Visual Center for Williams, Sawyer library has stocked over 200 compact disc (CD) sound recordings in its reserve collection, according to Professor of Music Kenneth Roberts.

The audio visual (AV) center will incorporate into one single area listening facilities for music, language laboratory equipment (now located in the basement of Weston) and facilities for visual and video operations (currently located in the basement of Stetson), Roberts said. He added that English professor Peter Berek is purchasing audio and video recordings of books and plays specifically for the AV center.

"No one is exactly sure what form this new center will take — whether it will be a separate building or located somewhere in Sawyer," said Roberts. "Everyone is still feeling things out, trying to size up the specific needs, at this point.

"In this interim period," Roberts added, "everyone has their shopping list, and that is why I'm buying the CDs — to prepare for the center."

"Informal" committee

Provost of the College Neil Grabois, who, according to Roberts, heads a committee to establish financial priorities for the college's bicentennial, said that he had not seen any plans for a AV center. He acknowledged, however, that there was an "informal" audio-visual committee. "Nothing related to this proposal has crossed my desk," Grabois added.

Part of the growing collection of classical compact disc titles in the reserve room of Sawyer library. They will eventually be moved to a new audio visual center. (Somers)

Roberts pointed out that other institutions, such as Radcliffe and Boston College, have "fantastic audio-visual centers, where everything is combined in one."

Roberts told the Record that while there is currently no CD player with which to listen to the library's collection, one player has arrived and will be mounted on an anchor pad in the listening area of Stetson by the end of this month. Individuals who have portable CD players can now check the discs out, according to reserve librarian Judy Jones, but they cannot leave the reserve listening area. She said that a majority of the Stetson music collection can be circulated, however.

Roberts suggested that the Sawyer librarians are unwilling to circulate the CDs because "they haven't figured out a way

Continued on Page 8

The CHEFS Taconic RESTAURANT

Monday-Saturday 5-10 pm
Junction of Routes 2 & 7
Williamstown, Massachusetts

Sunday 12-9
413-458-3090
413-458-5683

MONITOR COMPANY

A Strategy Consulting Firm

Invites all Williams Seniors to a Discussion of Research Associate Opportunities

Wednesday, November 12, 1986
Office of Career Counseling
7:00 p.m.

Monitor Company
Cambridge • London • Toronto

Letters

Continued from Page 3

This includes the recruitment and tenure of black faculty on a massive scale. This would clearly give black students at Williams a greater stake in this College and its direction. I believe then you will see a greater dispersion of majors among black students as a result. Moreover, it seems that department interactions which promote differences in opinions will lead to a more challenging and fulfilling educational experience for all students.

More than this, why is it that articles like yours, which profess truth, always manage to gloss over the problems that necessitate segregation and foster hostility? This is hostility not just from black people eating together but from the contempt felt by many white students at witnessing this togetherness.

The problem of racism is, of course, race. Then, underneath this question, are racial differences (social, political, economic, whatever). Now racism always wants to ignore these differences. No matter how black, beautiful, or intelligent you may be, blacks still are only as valuable as the latest affirmative action report.

Race has always been one of the major dividing lines in the serving of justice. This points out the sickness of racism, as well as why your article is such a farce. In your article, you somehow manage to ignore all of the black people here at Williams who have dedicated a great deal of their time and talents to addressing the very issue you raise.

Schools have throughout our history represented the mechanisms of change in our society. They have stood as some of the strongest symbols and sources that generate their ideas and goals that have cleared the way for equality. The 1960s, of course, stand as the most ready example of this force. Lately, this energy has been beaten down by the conservatives who are determined to keep blacks and all others who are oppressed by and opposed to the "existing state of affairs" in their place. I believe that if Williams really wants to stand as a symbol of the number one liberal arts college in the nation, the college must accept the heavy burden presented in this challenge. This burden, first and foremost, includes a representative number of students and faculty in the community.

In short, when Williams is willing to accept twenty-five percent of its community to be made up of black people, we will also answer the boggling question of what's next on the agenda of peace in the United States. The philosophies, ideologies, and theories that will lead to peace in the US and around the world center on this issue.

Gregory Bester '88

Parallax

To the Editor:

I regret having to answer Eric Adelstein's letter on the financing aspects of Parallax, but his letter seems peppered with many of the misconceptions he faulted in his argument.

I was the Finance Committee member in charge of the Parallax request. My contact with a Parallax member (the person who signed the request), requesting a meeting to discuss the application, was not honored, neither by that person nor any other representative. Admittedly, the first note contained no indication that funding depended on the meeting. I am forced to wonder why several other major organizations honored the request and Parallax did not. They did last year.

That leads to the quotation "no organization whatsoever", advanced as a reason for the funding denial. "Organization" does not mean simply having a corporate structure, with nice titles such as "Editor-in-Chief". It implies that intangible continuity and cohesiveness that would allow messages to flow within the group and enable action to be taken. Irrespective of its present situation, at the time of funding Parallax failed that test, for reasons unknown to the Finance Committee.

I took that to indicate the money would be better spent elsewhere. Finance Committee is not an investigative body, and simply cannot be responsible to insure that a traditional group has funds if that group does not take active steps to obtain them. Beyond that original request, Parallax showed no interest. Perhaps I contacted the wrong person, but that came from the information given to FinComm.

Paul Mahoney '87

CDs

Continued from Page 7

to work them into the new electronic security system, like they have books and records, and the replacement unit cost for them is so high." He added that it would be ideal if the CD collection could be made to circulate. "What I suggest is forcing students to leave a deposit, or their ID, for example, when they check the CD out."

Roberts said that he started purchasing classical CDs for the library collection and the music department about three years ago. Compact discs have a tremendous advantage over record or tape recordings because they don't wear out, he added. The information encoded on the disc is read by a laser, so the disc is never touched during playback.

"Indestructible"

"That's why I like CDs — they're indestructible!" Roberts said. "You can spread jam on them and wipe it off and play them again." Roberts claimed to have first alerted the music department about compact disc technology because his son kept pestering him to buy a CD player.

"We're really building for the future with CDs," Roberts said. "Not only do they not wear out, but there doesn't seem to be any readical technology on the horizon for a long time to replace them.

"Also, I'm heartened by the growth in the number of CD pressing plants, and the trend among recording labels to repress great old recordings from the 40's and 50's onto CD," Roberts said.

PIZZA HOUSE

"we make our own dough fresh daily"

Hot Oven Grinders
Spaghetti - Greek Salad
664-6279 or 663-3770

14 varieties of Pizza

We deliver four or more pizza orders to Williams College - Just call ahead

117 Main St. (Corner Eagle) North Adams

McKinsey & Company, Inc.

• Management Consultants •

PRESENTATION & DISCUSSION

For all 1987 graduating seniors interested in our two-year BUSINESS ANALYST PROGRAM

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1986
7 P.M.
AT CAREER COUNSELING

tech systems
audio & video

Offering Quality Component Systems Since 1974

170 North Street Bennington, Vermont 05201

Mon - Sat. 10-6 (802) 447-0350

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!

Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Tunnels

Continued from Page 5

common and that she considers tunnelling to be a Williams tradition. "You'll probably do it at least once when you're here, I guarantee it," she said.

"Unfortunately, tunneling is glorified as the thing to do at Williams College," said Ransom Jenks, director of security, "I don't know what the solution is."

Chains and padlocks

Don Clark, mechanical trade supervisor at Buildings and Grounds, said that steel gates, which are chained and padlocked shut, were erected a long time ago to block entry to the tunnels. They have to be repaired every year, he said, because the chains are cut and some gates are pulled out of the wall. "Where there's a will, there's a way," Clark noted.

Both men reiterated the dangers of tunneling. Clark mentioned the possibility of a tunneler coming into contact with an exposed high voltage wire. Jenks is concerned that a tunneler might break a steam line and be burned to death. Both men fear that an inebriated tunneler could drown in the pool.

However, neither Clark nor Jenks could recall any such accident in tunneling's history, which is itself unclear.

"They (tunnelers) don't write term papers about it," said College Marshall Frederick Rudolph. "I wouldn't be surprised if it's been fun for 75 years," Jenks surmised.

Disciplinary warnings

Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta explained that students caught tunneling would be warned verbally for a first offense. A second offense usually warrants disciplinary probation for a semester or two, she said.

"Until there is a massive accident," she said, "things like this will keep going on as usual." She hopes that an alternative tradition is found, one just as exciting and adventurous as tunneling.

"We would also prefer that it not involve alcohol," she said.

Tequila and fear

"We tended to go only when we had had a bit of tequila," said a 1982 Williams graduate who prefers to remain anonymous. "We also tended to go in costume, dressed in black, and we'd blacken our faces."

He and other members of his class were introduced to tunneling by their J.A. during their freshman year. They went frequently, and soon they were able to bring only three or four matches for an entire trip. "That added an element of fear," he explained.

He said that they never broke anything to gain access to the tunnels or wrote on the walls. "Some barriers are just shoddy. We'd slip between the wall and the barrier. Sometimes it was just a matter of unlatching the door. They may be more secure now."

Low risk

"It's a low-risk situation. The steam pipes are so heavily insulated you'd have to go just short of blowing them up to break them. But, of course, the college isn't going to call tunneling low-risk. They really discourage it but realize that it is just one of those pranks."

He called tunneling a tradition, passed down from seniors to freshmen. "But it's not for everyone," he commented, "especially if you're claustrophobic."

He also recommended that this reporter do some tunneling, before writing this article, perhaps to add a personal experience angle to it.

"Give it a go," he said.

Advising

Continued from Page 1

ling will be on a strictly voluntary basis for both sophomores and seniors. At the CUL meeting, Fix said he could easily see a sophomore saying "I don't want a member of the senior class coming into my room saying 'why do you want to major in history?'" if the program were made mandatory.

"I hope most sophomores will participate in the program," said Fix. He estimated that each senior volunteering will be assigned five sophomores. According to Monday's release, "as much as possible, students will be paired according to the department or division of their majors or intended majors."

According to Fix, this program was instituted because "the sophomore year is when students need a lot of advice. They weren't a lot of ways to get (advice) before this ... this should be viewed as a first step."

"(The peer advisors) will stress that their advice must be viewed as a supplement to, not a substitute for, the advice students must seek from their faculty members," read Monday's announcement. Indeed, Fix said, "a very important role of the senior advisors will be to facilitate contact between faculty and sophomores." Fix continued that the senior advisors will be better able to refer the sophomores to faculty members for advice due to the seniors' experience.

In concluding, Fix said, "there are a lot of things we're trying to do at the college implying each student plays an important role in the education of fellow students ... this new venture deserves the support and encouragement of the college community."

London School of Economics and Political Science

A chance to study and live in London

Junior-year programs, Postgraduate Diplomas, One-Year Master's Degrees and Research Opportunities in the Social Sciences.

The wide range of subjects includes:-
Accounting and Finance • Actuarial Science • Business Studies • Economics • Econometrics • Economic History • European Studies • Geography • Government • Health Planning • Housing • Industrial Relations • International History • International Relations • Law • Management Science • Operational Research • Philosophy, Logic & Scientific Method • Population Studies • Politics • Regional and Urban Planning • Sea-Use Policy • Social Administration • Social Anthropology • Social Planning in Developing Countries • Social Work • Sociology • Social Psychology • Statistical and Mathematical Sciences • Systems Analysis •

Application forms from:
Admissions Registrar, Room 10, L.S.E.,
Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AE, England, stating whether undergraduate or postgraduate.

LSE

ANNUAL SKI AND SKATE SALE
Pine Cobble School
Williamstown, MA
Friday, November 21st, 3 p.m. - 9 p.m.
Saturday, November 22nd, 10 a.m. - 12 noon

ON SALE - New and used equipment and clothing for ALL sports — articles accepted by donation and on consignment Displays and informational from local sports shops — ski areas, etc.

Refreshments - free admission

To benefit The Scholarship Fund

Consignment article accepted at school from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday thru Friday, beginning November 10th.

SKI SALE
NOV. 10th-15th
SAVE 20% to 50%
SKIS, BOOTS, BINDINGS, POLES
PARKAS, WARM-UPS

Goff's Sports, inc.
Store with Top Brands — Competitive Prices
15 Spring St. — (4) Certified Technicians

INT'L OUTLET
savings to 70%
The best selection of gifts, housewares, and VALUES in the Berkshires.
Your one stop Xmas gift center.
Exciting gifts for family and friends.
Always something new and unusual.

PRE-CHRISTMAS SALE:
20% OFF EVERYTHING

Crystal • China • Cookware
Kitchen gadgets • textiles • brass wood • wicker • toys • candles . . .
192 State Street
Route 8 North Adams
664-4580
Mon.-Sat. 10:00 - 5:30
Sun. 12:00 - 5:00

WILLIAMSTOWN - Make your offer on this 4 apartment house in excellent condition. Each unit has garage and storage area. C-299
Asking $175,000 Call 458-8307

Coldwell Banker Isgood
610 Main St., Williamstown

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

Low prices for beer, wine, and soda
$1 off on all cases of beer
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Shop the WILLIAMSTOWN MARKETPLACE
Open 7 Days, Fri. til 8

PAT'S COUNTRY SHOPPE
895 Cold Spring Rd.
458-9834
— gifts and clothing —
college discount with I.D.

STAINED GLASS windows lamps mirrors and sillies!
Kaleidoscope GLASS!
CUSTOM DESIGN and REPAIRS
FREE GIFT WRAPPING!
458-3688 895 Cold Spring Rd.

HOLIDAYS
COUNTRY STORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
Thanksgiving, Christmas Items and Gifts
Great opportunity to do some Christmas shopping!
Many other stores and eatery.

Crosses—

Continued from Page 1

as president, Ronald Reagan has had his veto overriden only once by Congress, that being just recently over the matter of U.S. sanctions on South Africa.

"By not divesting, Williams is farther right, or at least as far right, as Ronald Reagan. If people are feeling impatient about the crosses, their impatience should be directed at the people who are not divesting," and not WAAC, said Murphy. Addressing Kane's question, he said, "nobody's forced you to be educated, obviously since you still don't have the right opinion."

The proceedings concluded with a discussion of the council's possible role in the divestment effort. Proposals such as setting a deadline ultimatum for divestment and distributing the names and addresses of the trustees for letter-writing campaigns were suggested, but the council put off any decisions until its November 20 meeting, after representatives have a chance to consult with their houses.

Bacchus—

Continued from Page 1

North Adams Transcript.

North Adams charges

This year, similar charges to those currently faced by Aselton have been brought against several students at North Adams State College, according to Commissioner Arthur Kelly of the North Adams police. In North Adams, Kelly said, "We're looking for cutting down wild keg parties — cutting them down to smaller house parties."

"We're looking for compliance," Kelly stressed.

The commissioner used an example of ticketing speeders. "We'll tell everyone on radio talk shows where we'll have radar (a patrol car to catch speeders)." Kelly said that people would complain to him that " 'you won't catch anybody if you do that.' "

"We won't catch anybody," he explained, "because nobody is doing it."

When contacted earlier in the week, Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zoito would not comment on the police investigation. He was unavailable for comment after charges were made. Fix also refused to comment on any questions related to Aselton's summons.

ACSR—

Continued from Page 4

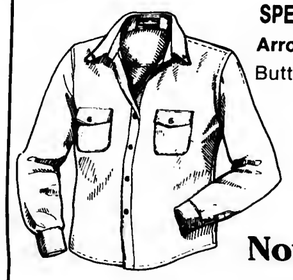
for withdrawal to 70 or 80 companies that Williams holds stock in that have holdings in South Africa. The remainder of companies Williams holds stock in have proxies filed by the New York State Retirement Fund, and Wood said he "would be surprised if any (of the companies) were not covered."

Although Wood feels that most of the proxies won't pass, "anything above five or ten percent gets their attention."

At the meeting there was discussion of Emerson Electric Company, a non-signatory of the Sullivan Principles which Williams holds stock in. It has been a matter of policy for Williams not to have holdings in non-signatory companies. When questioned later in the week, John Canty '88, a member of the ACSR, told the Record that College Treasurer William Reed said that Emerson's share of 25 percent in its company in South Africa will be sold shortly.

Low ratings

There was also some discussion as to whether Williams should still retain companies that have a rating of three on the Sullivan Principles. A three signifies that the company is passing minimum standards as an employer and as a force for reform within the government. At the meeting, Canty said that he "sees a responsibility for us to show that we mean business about companies with the three rating."



At the end of the open meeting, the ACSR went into executive session to work on the first chapter of a report to President Oakley on the potential impact of divestment on the endowment.

218 Ashland St.
North Adams, MA
413-663-3830

1410 East St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-447-9592

TEDS Hot Dogs Etc.

SPECIAL PURCHASE
Arrow Paddock Club
Button Down Flannel

Now $11.95
regularly $17.95

the Mountain Goat
Unique Clothing, Bicycles & Cross-Country Skis
130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m., Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.

A magical work will be recreated in Chapin Hall this coming Sunday, Nov. 16th at 8:00 p.m.

You can not see it at your leaisure as in a museum;
you can not hear/see it in repertoire as in theatre.

You must be there in person when it happens, to experience it, and to share in the unfolding . . .

That is the musical experience. We invite you. Come.

Berlioz . . .
The Williams Choral Society with soloists and orchestra

Free admission to Williams ID holders.

LOOK COOL & STAY WARM
Lycra Running & Cycling Tights
all colors and styles
from $19.00

THE SPOKE
408 Main St. 458-3456

This holiday season, get the "Write Stuff" at the right price.

Now you can get the competitive edge when classes begin in January. With a Macintosh™ personal computer, and all the write extras.

We call it the Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle. You'll call it a great deal! Because when you buy a Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle before January 9, 1987, you'll receive a bundle of extras—and save $250.

Not only will you get your choice of a Macintosh 512K Enhanced or a Macintosh Plus, you'll also get an Image Writer™ II printer, the perfect solution for producing near letter-quality term papers or reports, complete with graphs, charts, and illustrations.

Plus, you'll get MacLightning, the premier spelling checker containing an 80,000 word dictionary with options for thesaurus, medical or legal dictionaries. Together with your favorite Macintosh word processing software, you can transform your notes into the clearest, most letter perfect papers you ever turned out. And turned in on time.

What's more, there's a Macintosh Support Kit filled with valuable accessories and computer care products from 3M.* Complete with all the things you need to keep your Macintosh running long after you've graduated.

Let us show you how to get through college better, faster, and smarter. Stop in and see us for more information.

*Offer Good While Supplies Last. © 1984 Apple Computer Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademark of Apple Computer Inc. Macintosh and ImageWriter are trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. MacLightning is a trademark of Target Software Inc.

Ephs lose shirts in Amherst battle

by Sean Brennan

It was a chilly, rainy day Saturday as the White Dogs of the WRFC travelled to the pastures of Connecticut valley seeking a Little Three Championship and a victory over Amherst. Unfortunately the squad found it to be a sad day in Mudville as the Lord Jeff A-side ruggers triumphed with a 15-7 victory.

As the rain steadily came down the first half the Jeffs twice found the try zone to take an early 8-0 lead. The White dogs struggled back, however, on a kick by senior Gene Mazzaro. Chris Swindell '88 touched down the Ephs' only try later to make the game close, setting the halftime score at 11-7.

The second half produced more monotonous mud mauling and more hard fighting by the Dogs, who despite their hard play failed to score for the rest of the contest. When the final whistle blew, the White Dogs were stripped of their shirts in the traditional Little Three bet.

The rain stopped for the Killer B's who pummeled the purple and black by a humiliating 46-0 score. The first half saw the Jeffs pay their dues as five different Eph ruggers had at least one try. Pierre Swart '90 and Andrew Harris '88 scored the first two, while junior Mike Sullivan and seniors Charlie Lazor and Denis Newcomer also touched down tries. Along with a conversion by Tom Higgins '88 the halftime score stood at 30-0, evidence that the B-side was having their kind of day.

The second half produced more of the same as wing forward Jon Stanley '87 blocked a kick which was picked up by Andrew Anselmi '87 who followed it in for yet another try. Then came the fierce brutality of the Killer B's who twice walked the ball in by the scrum from the 22-meter line, sophomore Chris Palmedo putting it in for the try on both occasions. With the final score of 46-0, the stripping of the Purple and Black of their shirts was ever so sweet revenge for the A-side loss.

Lady ruggers take Little Three by 4-0

by Steph Jacon

Both sides of the women's rugby team crushed the Lady Jeffs at soggy Amherst on Saturday afternoon. The A-side triumphed 4-0 in sudden death overtime and the B-side completely dominated the Amherst 15 with the final score 12-0.

Mud and rain proved to be a great equalizer in the A-side game as the white line's usual speed and dexterity were often denied by the poor field conditions. During the first half equal time was spent in each team's half of the field. The reliable Mary Petersen '87 continually launched power boots deep into Amherst territory, while inside Annie Cordova '88 played an outstanding game as she continually shut down the Lady Jeff line with her wrap tackles.

Lady Jeffs threaten

The opening minutes of the second half found Williams having to play tough defense as Amherst launched an initial threat which was stopped by the Eph 15. Playing their most inspired rugby of the year, the squad penetrated the Amherst 22-meter line as the result of accurate passes from Haley Clifford '87 to crafty wings Britty Shaw '89 and Suzanne Biemiller '87. Despite constant Williams pressure, the game went into a five minute overtime.

The first and final score came as Steph Jacon '87 set the ball off the side of a maul for Katie Gerber '88, who barrelled past the weary Lady Jeffs and placed the ball down to clinch the victory.

On the B-side the Williams women were dominant as the Amherst ruggers did not once penetrate past their own 50 meter line. One minute into the game the Lady Eph line produced a picture perfect try as Shannon Brennan '90 fed wing Gemma Burgos '89, who scampered untouched into the Amherst try zone. Minutes later, sophomore scrumhalf Kerry Kilander plucked the ball from a ruck and powered 10 meters for the second Williams score. The final score was 12-0, not even an indication of the overall superiority of the lady ruggers.

Profile

Continued from Page 5

"discovered he could do well."

His first teaching job was at the University of Tennessee. The situation in Knoxville was very different from what he had encountered at Williams. He complained about getting calls from a coach to "help football players get through." He noted that this situation does not come up at Williams.

Overzealous modesty

Shortly after arriving at Tennessee he was offered a chance to teach at Williams. He jumped at the opportunity and has been here since 1965. Even though he has not had any run-ins with overzealous coaches at Williams, Johnson does have a complaint about Williams students. In a way, it is the opposite problem of what he encountered in Knoxville. Instead of having students who have trouble learning, he complains that Williams students do not always project an image that accurately reflects their intelligence.

"The one thing that disturbs me sometimes is the Williams ethos that to be cool you should appear not to know very much," he said. "The situation has gotten worse recently," he added, "I don't think it's cool to appear dumb."

Despite this perceived flaw in the Williams persona, Johnson respects the accomplishments of Williams students and practically boasts about successful art history students who have gone on to run galleries and museums and become architects. Art 101 and 102 launched many of these budding careers — indeed it launched his own — and he thinks that the students who take the introductory course learn a great deal of important things.

Learning by repetition

Many freshmen wonder how he can stand giving the same Art 101 lecture twice a day for a whole semester. Instead of being bored by the process, he says that he actually learns something from the 9:00 a.m. lecture and gives an improved version at eleven o'clock.

Although he acknowledged that many facts are forgotten after the first midterm, he said that he believes the course develops an analytical ability that cannot be found in other disciplines. In an age of television, he said that he finds it increasingly important to develop students' visual intelligence so that they can recognize the ways that images influence their beliefs.

Johnson said that he sees the newly expanded Williams College Museum of Art as a great opportunity for students in art courses and for others in the community to study many different images. He cites the Charles Moore exhibit, which he spent the past two years organizing, as the first in his memory that actually allowed Art 101 students to see the works of someone they were studying. He also said that the WCMA's new facilities allow the museum to put many shows on display that they were previously denied because of inadequate space or virtually non-existent fire and security systems.

SPORTS INC. SKI PACKAGES

ADULT PACKAGES

*ROSSIGNOL E550	$195
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$179.95 SAVE $145
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$325
*DYNASTAR VISA	$215
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$179.95 SAVE $165.05
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$345
*DYNASTAR CX	$250
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$259.95 SAVE $120
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$380
*ROSSIGNOL 750	$250
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$259.95 SAVE $120
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$380
*DYNASTAR SUPRA	$265
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$259.95 SAVE $135
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$395
*DYNASTAR SL	$275
SALOMON 347 or
TYROLIA 177	$90	$279.95 SAVE $125
SCOTT POLES	$24
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$405

JR. PACKAGES

*ROSSIGNOL TEAM U.S.A.	$85
SALOMON 137	$65	$119.95 SAVE $67 WITH BOOT $169.95
SCOTT JR. POLES	$16
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$182
*DYNASTAR BORA	$90
SALOMON 137	$65	$119.95 SAVE $62 WITH BOOT $169.95
SCOTT JR. POLES	$16
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$187
*ROSSIGNOL STS JR.	$120
SALOMON 137	$65	$139.95 SAVE $77 WITH BOOT $189.95
SCOTT JR. POLES	$16
MOUNT	$16
RETAIL	$217

ADULT CROSS-COUNTRY PACKAGE $89.95

JR. CROSS-COUNTRY PACKAGE $69.95

Lay-A-Way Now!!!

Don't Forget! All our Skis • Boots • Bindings • Poles are on sale individually too.

Always Free Parking at the Door

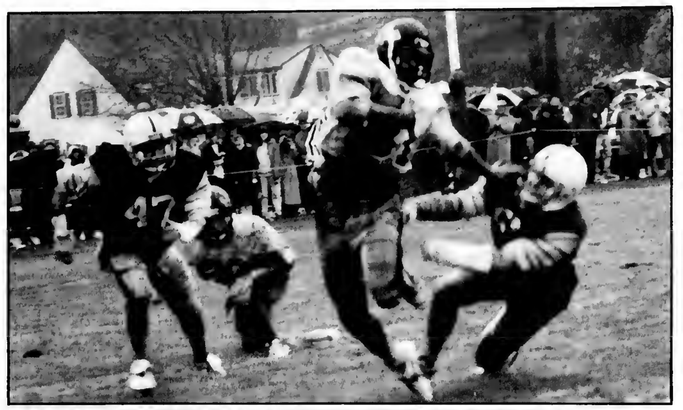
Sports INC.

VISA MasterCard

Allendale Shopping Center
Pittsfield, Mass.
Mon.-Fri. 10-9, Sat. 10-6
413-442-1824

107 Main St.
North Adams, Mass.
Mon.-Sat. 9:30-5:30, Thurs. 'til 9:00
413-664-1000

Ephs fall short at goal line in 10-7 thriller at Amherst



by Al Mottur

On Saturday the football team squared off against Amherst for the 101st time in the oldest small college football rivalry in the nation and the third oldest overall. The drama which transpired on Pratt Field decided the Little Three Title, a prize Amherst has become increasingly familiar with over the past six years.

The Ephs had a first down on the Lord Jeff three with just over a minute to play and trailing by three. It seemed practically inevitable that they would score and win the game. Indeed, freshman tailback John Horton had been running roughshod over the tiring Amherst defense, gaining 133 yards on just 23 carries, including a beautiful 48 yard run. Yet on first down and goal on the three, the Jeff defensive corps found a second wind and stymied Horton first for no gain and then for a loss of three.

Facing third down on the six, sophomore QB Scott Kennedy lofted a touch pass to senior split-end John Shaw in the corner of the end zone. It was a play which had worked so many times this season, yet it was also a very difficult play to execute given the weather conditions. This time it fell incomplete.

On fourth and goal, coach Bob Odell made the gutsy call by eschewing a game-tying chip-shot field goal and went for the win. Lining up in a Power I, Kennedy faked to a runner and dropped back to pass. He could not find a reciever open and a pass intended for senior tight end Jim Poulsen in the clogged middle of the end zone was knocked down. All Amherst had to do from this point on was run out the clock to win the game and the Little Three.

Shaking an Amherst tackler, freshman John Horton gains yardage despite the rainy weather in Amherst on Saturday. The Ephs fell by 10-7. (Camp)

The game started as Williams drove downfield after an excellent opening kickoff return from freshman fullback Lars Hem. However, the Lord Jeff defense held strong and freshman John Birgbauer's 27 yard field goal attempt sailed wide.

On the ensuing drive, Amherst moved the ball well until facing a fourth down on the Eph 16. They too opted to go for three. The Jeff kicker converted the field goal for a 3-0 Amherst lead.

This score stood deep into the second quarter as the two squads dominated defensively, never allowing the other to mount much of a scoring threat. Perhaps realizing this, coach Jim Ostendarp ordered a fake punt on fourth and long from the Amherst 35. On the play, Amherst's Dan Tate, the upback in punt formation, scurried around the right end, eluded a diving attempt at a tackle by Williams' Scott Powers '87, and picked up the first down, giving the potent Jeff offense a second chance.

Amherst quickly scored on a seven-yard strike from senior QB Paul Foye to senior wide receiver John Tucci, taking a 10-0 lead with less than ten seconds left in the first half. The fake punt would haunt the Ephs all day long, as it gave Foye and Tucci, one of the nation's most potent passing combinations, the opportunity to strut their stuff.

Entering the second half Williams looked to turn the momentum of the late Jeff score. The Eph defense held the Lord Jeff offense scoreless for the quarter, and forced a fumble deep in Amherst territory just past the halfway point in the third quarter. Off the turnover, Williams scored quickly on an impressive 15 yard sweep right by Horton and with the conversion pulled within three at 10-7.

Neither team would threaten again until the game's end when the Ephs got the ball on Amherst's 15 with two minutes to play. The squad took over after stopping a questionable fourth-and-one plunge by Tate, a play which gave the Ephs a gift-wrapped chance for victory. On the resulting series, Horton ran for 12 yards to the Amherst three for a first down, thereby setting up the conclusion.

Keeping your footing can be difficult in the rain. Enough Amherst Lord Jeffs kept theirs to lead their team to a win over the Ephs on Saturday. (Camp)

Soccer tops Jeffs for Little 3

by Greg Leeds

Senior Eric Von Estorff scored two goals to lead the men's soccer team to a 4-2 Little Three victory over the Lord Jeffs of Amherst on Saturday. The win, combined with an earlier 2-1 victory over Wesleyan, gave the Ephs their second straight Little Three title and brought their record to 8-4-2 at the end of the season.

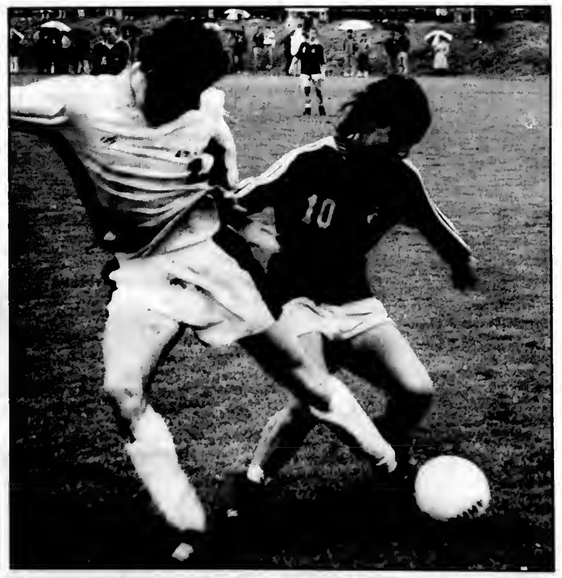
The game was played under terrible conditions as rain soaked the field, and the Jeffs threatened at the start the game, scoring a goal only three minutes into play. However, that score was nullified due to an offsides penalty. Only one minute later, at 4:28, Von Estorff scored on a beautiful long drive which sailed over the goalkeeper's hands, hit the crossbar, and bounced straight into the goal. Scott Walker '87 assisted on the play.

Throughout the game the Jeffs, who were 8-2-2 coming into the match, would come back to threaten the Ephs. They started that trend at 10:07 into the first half when Chris Madus scored with a header from the box after a cross eluded the Williams defense. But at 15:18, Ephman freshman stopper Dan Calichman scored unassisted on what coach Michael Russo called "a bullet," a low hard shot from quarter-field which sizzled past the goalie into the left corner of the net.

"At that point, we thought it would be a 10-9 game, the way people were scoring," said Russo. But both defenses soon settled down and the half ended with the Ephs leading by that 2-1 margin. "We just couldn't convert some close shots," he continued.

Ephs take charge

The Ephs started off the second half playing aggressively, and Von Estorff again supplied the firepower. Only two and a half minutes into the period, he fired in an unassisted goal that put the Ephs up by two for the first time.



The next five minutes saw the Jeffs put continuous offensive pressure on the Williams defense, which held on due to the fine play of Calichman, senior co-captain Jon Deveaux, freshman Rob Swann and senior Helge Weiner.

22 minutes into the second half, Amherst's Ed Regaud capitalized on a loose ball in the Williams box to pull the Jeffs within one and put even more pressure on the Ephs. Given the field conditions either team could score at any time with only a minor defensive error. However, the tough Eph defense allowed Amherst nothing further, and the offense responded with another nail to the Lord Jeff coffin.

Nailing it down

Junior Nikolai Nachamkin and freshman Doug Brooks provided that goal, which came with 14:02 left. Nachamkin got the ball to Brooks just as the Amherst sweeper slipped. Brooks had a one-on-one with the Jeff goalie, and converted to give the Ephs their 4-2 final margin.

The win was especially satisfying to the Ephs considering that Amherst came into the game 8-2-2. This year's seniors never lost to the Jeffs, winning three games and tying one. Russo was extremely proud of the team's all-out effort and noted in particular the play of senior captains Deveaux and Denny Wright, Weiner, Walker, and Von Estorff.

Freshman Doug Brooks contributed one goal to the Williams cause on Saturday, and here he fights a Lord Jeff for the ball. (Camp)

Russo also mentioned the fine performance of senior Brad Bryan in goal, where he made five saves, turning away some tough Amherst shots amidst swamp conditions.

Russo noted, "It was just a great way to finish the season. Winning the Little Three is always our biggest goal, and this victory is a tribute to the seniors who have been so instrumental in leading the team and establishing a good mental attitude. Amherst is a good team, and the conditions were awful, but we played very well, and I'm very pleased."

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 9 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE NOVEMBER 18, 1986

Deans ban charging for parties

by John McDermott

Houses cannot charge for admission to their parties, either at the door or by requesting donations, under an interim regulation instituted last week, Dean of the College Stephen Fix said.

In a second temporary regulation, off-campus advertising for parties is prohibited, though administrators acknowledge that such advertising is already rare.

Fix said both regulations were "effective immediately for the rest of the semester," and added he expects a more formal process of clarifying party policy to continue through mid-January.

"(The rules) may or may not be permanent," Fix said, "But they are certainly prudent changes under the circumstances."

Fix declied to comment on how party policy may change after the charges filed against Donald Aselton '88 included selling alcohol without a license. But he said that recent events have "added some new questions and complications to the process."

Williams I.D. checked

In a related story, the Housing Committee, meeting last week, agreed that houses should check for Williams identification cards at the entrances to any advertised party. Tom Fitzgibbon '87, president of the committee, said the I.D.'s would be checked for Williams affiliation, not for legal age.

The Housing Committee's move has not been formally incorporated as a regulation by the Dean's Office, Fix said. "I'm pleased they decided to do it for now," he said. "It's certainly on of the things we'll be looking at" in revising the policy in the next two months.

Kenyatta, who acts as liaison to the Housing Committee, said the college had received reports from Williamstown police that non-students had been admitted to parties.

Fix added that the intent of the no-advertising rule was also to keep non-students out of parties unless they were guests of students.

Kenyatta said the rule is related to the fact that a fight at the October 25 Club Bacchus party involved a Union College student. "It is related to that," she said. "It's also related to cutting down the possibilities of something like that happening again."

Prevent selling charge

Kenyatta said the rule forbidding charges was aimed at reducing the likelihood that events such as the October 25 Club Bacchus-sponsored party, which resulted in charges against club president Aselton, would be repeated. She said the rule would prevent students from being charged with selling alcohol without a license.

(Aselton will be arraigned tomorrow in Northern Berkshire District Court in North Adams, according to clerk of the court Dennis D'Arcangelo.)

Fix said he met Friday with Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zoito Jr. to inform him of the changes.

Fix said that campus-wide parties might be more difficult to fund, but he said the ban on admission charges will not necessarily discourage houses from holding parties. "There are plenty of parties that go on on campus without charging," he said.

The new regulations were a follow-up to November 8 request by the deans that Prospect and Spencer houses cancel their parties. The parties, which had been planned for November 8 and 9, respectively, were both major ones.

On Saturday, Prospect and Fitch-Currier houses sponsored a large party under the new rules at Driscoll dining hall. House presidents Jeff Dalzell '87 and Tim Travelstead '87 said and

Continued on Page 11

Professor Tom Jorling, chairman of the CEP, shares a humorous moment with Dean Stephen Fix (right) at the committee's meeting on the minor. College President Francis Oakley (left) appears unamused. (Somers)

CEP rejects minors, seeks faculty's views

by Paul Kwon

The Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) last week rejected a proposal to allow students to pursue minors, formal concentrations with fewer requirements than majors.

CEP will, however, submit to the faculty a report summarizing arguments both for and against the idea, CEP chairman Thomas Jorling said. The report will be distributed this week but will probably not be discussed at tommorrow's monthly faculty meeting, he said.

In a straw poll last Wednesday, CEP voted 11 to 4 against the proposal. The vote followed a 20-minute discussion, during which some committee members said there was little in the proposal that would benefit students, while others said there was strong student support.

"The general feeling of the committee was that there was no educational argument for the minor policy in the proposal made by the affirmative side," said economics professor Richard Sabot, who opposed the measure.

Opponents said that the existence of minors would discourage double majors, which they said help to counteract the uneven distribution of majors. They noted that last year more than 60 percent of majors were in five departments — English, economics, political science, history, and psychology.

Physics professor Ballard Pierce said he supported the proposal despite some questions on its effects. "I voted for it, because it's a good idea, and there is strong student support for it," he said. "Still, it's hard to say how it would affect the distribution of majors."

Such concern was premature, Tom Perkins '87 told a reporter after the meeting. "The reasoning consists only of speculative arguments," he said. "We cannot say for sure if (the minor) will have a positive or negative effect on the distribution."

"Even before the meeting, I felt that the committee would sandbag it," Perkins added. "The minor should have been instituted as an option. Lots of students want it."

History professor Thomas Kohut countered that the measure lacked strong support. "The people in favor of the minor are not passionately in favor of it," he said.

After the vote, the committee agreed to present both the majority decision and the dis-

Continued on Page 10

WAAC repaints, repairs crosses

by Debbie Snyder and John McDermott

A month after the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC) erected a field of white crosses on Baxter Lawn, the crosses last Thursday were restocked and painted black, with one painted gold and one painted green.

Five of the crosses had been painted red on November 7 to honor five black people killed in the township of Soweto in South Africa.

WAAC said in a letter to Williams students on Friday that the crosses were repainted and missing ones were replaced, because, "Irresponsible, racist hooligans have taken it upon themselves to destroy or steal over one hundred crosses in the past two weeks."

The letter said that WAAC members spend part of the night watching the crosses because of repeated acts of vandalism against them. According to Chris Ball '88, who said he has taken part in watching the crosses, "If somebody weren't out there, the crosses would soon not be there."

Martin White '87, who has also been watching the crosses, said, "It's our responsibility to maintain them." He said the crosses were painted black, because, "They're more specific as black than as white."

White said the green and gold crosses demonstrate solidarity with Nelson Mandela and the African National Congress, whose colors are black, green and gold. The WAAC letter and Ball and White all emphasized that apartheid, and not the crosses themselves, is the issue to which the protest is directed and to which people should respond. "The point is that people are dying and we are at least tacitly involved. Whether one likes the method chosen to dramatize this reality is irrelevant to the real issue," the letter said.

The letter criticized the administration for not divesting. The administation has not responded to the protest since Dean of the College Stephen Fix issued a letter to students on

Continued on Page 10

The blanket of snow that fell last Tuesday is an omen of long months ahead. Temperatures dipped to the teens overnight and students dragged winter garb out of mothballs. (Gannon)

CC plans student vote on college divestment

by Peter Balaban

The College Council will conduct a campus-wide referendum on divestment during the final week of classes, it decided last week. The council chose not to poll its own members on the issue as it had earlier planned.

The council opted for the student vote despite objections from member Tom Perkins '87, who said he felt uninformed students might decide to vote against divestment "because of the crosses." Council president Amy Jeffress '87 said the referendum, which will ask whether or not students favor divestment by the College, will probably also include an "undecided" option.

In an effort to inform students about divestment, the council will hold a panel discussion Thursday featuring student and faculty members of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility, members of the political science department, and Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition members.

Council member Hart Murphy '88 said the panel discussion and other devices will help the college community become informed on such important questions as "what continent South Africa is on."

November 18, 1986

The minor, a major issue

The Committee on Educational Policy will be submitting a report to the faculty containing its rationale for rejecting the inclusion of a minor in the curriculum and the countering arguments. CEP members commented that those who presented arguments supporting the program seemed only lukewarm about it. There are many in the community, however, who are convinced that the minor would be a constructive addition to our curriculum. The faculty should seek their comments and reconsider the proposal.

The CEP seems to have decided that since no compelling arguments were made for the proposal at their meeting, it should be scrapped. An alternate approach would be to open up the matter for discussion with other parts of the community before rejecting the idea. Dean of the College Stephen Fix said that this may be the only time this year that the CEP deals with a controversial issue. Well, such an issue should certainly not be decided by default.

It seems that the CEP was stymied by the question of how the balance of majors would be shifted. Would, for example, all German/economics double majors opt only to minor in German, or might many of them minor in econ. and major in German? Would many of those who took a few German classes complete a minor if they were given that option?

We should avoid these questions because they do not pertain to the educational value of a minor, rather they are related to interdepartmental politics and prestige and budget squabbles. If the minor is educationally valuable, such disputes must be worked out by changing other policies, including faculty budgeting, as necessary.

This issue merits serious debate, but let's stick to the most important consideration: the value of a minor in a liberal arts curriculum.

The minor would enable students who have a secondary field of interest to approach the study through a structured program less concentrated than the major. Rather than taking random courses, students could be directed to a fuller appreciation of a subject. The minor is a significant proposition and should be dealt with as such.

Outer Limits — REBOB

Letters

Anger

To the Editor:

Regarding both the rebuttal by Tom Williams of Martin Illner's article condemning the erection of the crosses and the all-campus letter sent out by WAAC, I am left with reactions of anger and sympathy for the views of WAAC.

In the Illner article, he touches on a number of important, relevant, yet debatable issues: one, the double-standard of the First Amendment, two, a belief that a majority of students might not want the continued presence of the crosses, three, the emotionalism of WAAC, four, the unwanted consequences of divestment and/or disinvestment, and, five, the lack of creativity of WAAC. Obviously, all of these points should touch raw nerves among WAAC members, including Williams, as Illner seems to imply that WAAC is an emotional fringe group with questionable goals and boring protests.

Why, then, does Williams dwell on the closing paragraph, where Illner states that a parent thought the crosses were to memorialize either the Marines killed in Lebanon, or the Hungarians crushed by the Soviets, in 1956? Williams' statement that the Marines were part of an "illegal US invasion" conveniently ignores the fact that the Marines were a segment of a multinational force hoping to quell the internal chaos of Beirut. Worse, he desecrates the spirit of the recent Veterans' Day holiday by even suggesting that American soldiers killed are not worthy of a memorial along the lines of crosses marking some dead people, black or white, halfway around the globe.

My sympathy for WAAC springs from the change of their attitude I have seen in my year and a half at Williams. The group stands on solid ground when it calls for divestment, although I personally think it is counterproductive to helping South African blacks. But WAAC's credibility drops every day as it resorts to statements such as those found in the all-campus mailing.

First, it claims that those who disagree with the crosses and/or divestment, including the administration, are "racist," "radical," and "reactionary." Second, it resorts to ridiculous measures like painting the crosses different colors every day, turning their already-questionable protest into a gameshow atmosphere (For a trip to Jamaica, name the color of cross No. 23!!) Lastly, it refuses to admit that opposing viewpoints have credibility, simply saying non-divestment advocates are "wrong."

Yes, Williams, all deaths, especially those in civil conflicts, are painful, but please from now on spend your weekly space in the Record debating the pros and cons of your cause, not justifying unliked protests, not slandering people who disagree with your aims, and not suggesting that South Africans are more worthy of memorial than those who give their lives defending our country.

C. Stewart Verdery '89

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Deborah Snyder, Al Wells
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Hal Mottur, Stewart Verdery
LAYOUT ASSISTANT ..... Mary Iliff
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid by Rico at Williamstown, Ma 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma 01267

Disillusioned

To the Editor:

Back in mid-October when the crosses first went up, I was duly impressed. I recognized them as very powerful symbols for a cause I favor, namely, divestment. Ultimately, I was glad they remained in place for Convocation and Freshman Parents' Weekend. Perhaps some influential people saw them and were moved to act. I hope so.

That was October. It is now a month later, and instead of having the intended motivational effect, the crosses have created hostility across the campus. I've yet to have been near a group of people near Baxter lawn without hearing them mutter epithets about the crosses. What has occurred is that the students now resent the crosses, not for their purpose, but for their appearance. Furthermore, the resentment is being applied to WAAC, the organization responsible for the existence of the crosses. The counter-productivity of the crosses at this point is appalling.

Thus the student body seems to have lost sight of the purpose of WAAC. It pains me to think it, but it appears that WAAC has lost sight of its purpose as well. Consider the letter we received from the organization regarding why crosses had been painted black. "Black because irresponsible, racist hooligans have taken it upon themselves to steal or destroy over one hundred crosses ... Black because students have driven their cars over the crosses, kicked them down ... So finally, black because of the murder of innocents in South Africa." (Portions omitted).

Finally? FINALLY?! Should not this "final" purpose be the primary one for a group with the noble intentions of WAAC? Does the group seriously believe that they will gain support by punishing the entire student body? It is a majority that is sick of the crosses, but only a minority that infringes on the freedom of opinion exercised by WAAC.

I found the letter disillusioning and upsetting. I had thought WAAC would be above such foolish revenge tactics. They have angered the vast majority of students (and possibly faculty) at Williams. A new demonstration for divestment is long overdue. I can merely hope that through its abuse of a powerful symbol, WAAC has not made the crosses symbolic of more than the murders of South Africa. They may now represent the death of a real chance to gain enough support to force divestment. It may or may not be too late to resurrect this chance, but if the crosses remain up, it will be decayed and gone by the time WAAC realizes its mistake.

Tony Davidson '90

Motivation

To the Editor:

I suppose your misquoting me in your article on the College Council meeting on WAAC, the crosses, and divestment is no big deal. Although I know I did not make the statement you attribute to me, I agree with the sentiment, so I'll let it stand. What is far more irksome is your identifying me as "Nick Levis of WAAC." I was not at the time a member of WAAC, nor had I ever participated in any WAAC activities, though they had my sympathy and support.

I suppose it helps your brand of sloppy yellow journalism to pigeonhole people into convenient categories. That way anyone who supports the crosses can be dismissed as a mere WAAC member, and we've already been told by you what a bunch of "radical" activists they are! Well, thanks for getting me motivated; it's about time I hammered in some crosses myself.

Nick Levis '87

Ed. note: Levis, who spoke at a College Council meeting dealing with the crosses and divestment, was misidentified as a member of WAAC in last week's Record. We regret the error.

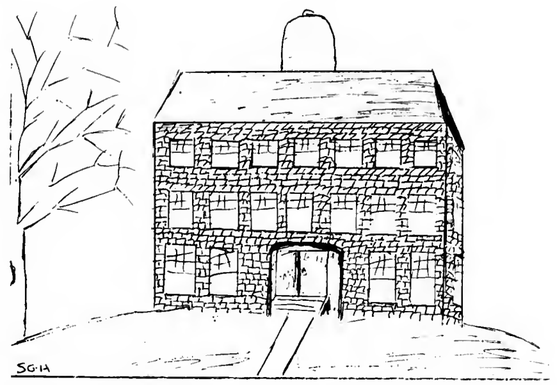
Mailroom

To the Editor:

I'd like to alert the student body to the most recently discovered form of entertainment in Williamstown.

Continued on Page 3

Williams should reconsider the rationale of its offerings



by Ted Underwood '89

This year, Williams College reviews its educational program. This review seems likely to become a fine-tuning which will leave our curriculum mostly unchanged. A few requirements may be adjusted, a few progams added. But I think this is not enough.

Williams needs to do a lot more. To begin with, we need to ask ourselves: "What are we doing and why? What is this 'liberal education', and do we have it here?" The surprising truth is that Williams has nowhere said, in clear, direct words, what its educational goals are. Insofar as they are stated, they are mostly nineteenth century cliches weakly warmed over, with all the spark and flare of moldy mashed potatoes (I mean, of course, those little phrases we read in admissions brochures — "critical thinking," "intellectual excellence," "teaching how to think.") So I suggest that we need a campus-wide discussion, to decide what we should learn and whether we're learning it. If we decide that what we want to do is not getting done, we should pack up and go home. That would be a real "review."

I think there are three kinds of questions we need to ask. First of all, we need to ask ourselves what Williams students are learning now. Are they learning to use argument and thesis, proof and conclusion? That is, I suppose, what "critical thinking" means. Are Williams students learning the spirit of curiosity, growing out of everyday life, that set the Greeks on the path toward experimental science? Or are they learning a certain, currently orthodox, description of the behavior of matter, that will be useful if they become doctors? Finally, are Williams students being made to want to think — in the shower, for example — about their own lives, and to wonder how to make sense of them? Or are their classes beading up, and running off them like red wine poured over wax?

We also need to ask questions of method. Why, for example, is the Williams curriculum a kind of buffet, or smorgasbord? Currently Williams students can — and no doubt do — graduate without having read any of the books that have long been considered the essential core of a free mind's education — Homer, Plato, the Bible, Augustine, Newton, and so on. Is it possible that we should build our curriculum around a framework of required courses on these books? Why, also, are most of our humanities classes based on discussion rather than lecture? Do students seem to discuss the subject with enthusiasm, or are they mostly sleepy and hesitant? Why, finally, are our science courses based on glossy textbooks, rather than on the original works of discovery?

But most importantly, we need to ask questions of purpose. What should Williams be doing? Should this institution try to make people wonder about their own lives, or just provide them with a "cultivated" knowledge of what's out there to be read, or try to make them better people, and kinder to their fellow men and women?

I, unfortunately, don't know the answers to any of these questions. I have done all I can just by asking them; now the questions are up to you. Please think about them, and respond. One thing I'm almost sure of is that the silence on this campus is not a good sign.

WAAC must understand that the crosses are self-defeating by Kenneth Hodges '90

and Ed Vander Ploeg '90

The conflict over the crosses in Baxter lawn has been growing more and more bitter as the weeks go by. Unfortunately, no one has recognized that the interests of both sides will be best served by taking the crosses down. The case against the crosses has been clearly stated before; what hasn't been discussed is the rationale for WAAC's wanting to take the crosses down.

At the beginning the crosses were a very mild form of protest. They conveyed no information about the current state of affairs in South Africa; they of themselves proposed no solution; they gave no support or argument for WAAC's proposed solutions. At best the crosses would merely remind people of the views they held on South Africa without doing anything to change them; at worst they would become familiar and be ignored as totally as the names on Stetson Hall.

Of course, some may argue that it is better to be reminded of apartheid, but practically there is no effect. Those concerned enough to act are acting already, either for or against divestment; those not acting can hardly be spurred to activity by pieces of painted wood nailed together. Simply stated, WAAC does not lose much by taking down the crosses.

On the other hand, WAAC loses a lot by keeping them up. The crosses are symbols, and they are meant to represent South Africa. They no longer do. They represent the conflict that is being fought over Baxter lawn. WAAC has tacitly admitted this by painting the crosses black and explaining in their campus wide letter that this was a protest to the student's reaction to the crosses, rather than any facet of the South African question.

Worse, the crosses are fomenting a rather bitter feud between WAAC and the rest of the college. People are rapidly coming to see WAAC as inflexible and insensitive, imposing their protest when people have clearly had enough. Appealing to a group which is clearly unenthusiastic and unresponsive is at best quixotic and at worst political suicide.

In this case it will probably be political suicide. WAAC must remember that its goal is to convince the college that divestment is the best weapon against Apartheid. Everyone would agree that it is a lot easier to convince friends than enemies. WAAC, if it is to receive results, must work with the students to achieve their ends; not antagonize and alienate the very people whom it is trying to reach will draw attention to itself rather than to its cause, and any present or future actions will be viewed with skepticism, to say the least. The longer this feud continues, the weaker WAAC's persuasive appeal becomes.

WAAC, for reasons unbeknownst, refuses to see it this way. They are publically pushing the fight and reviling all those who stand against them. Ignoring repeated (and relatively moderate) requests to take the crosses down, they insist on their right to keep the crosses up regardless of the fact that it is extremely unwise to exercise their right. Dealing with a legitimate complaint of vandalism, they deliberately insult the great mass of students by terming them "reactionary elements" and insinuating that those not supporting WAAC's protest are are not sympathetic to the suffering in South Africa. There are many who support divestment but not the crosses, and many more who believe different solu*tions are more effective*, and they should be justly angered by this rhetoric. Insulting them is unwise and virtually destroys any potential support for WAAC.

WAAC will lose nothing by taking the crosses down, crosses which never made any significant difference, crosses which will never again stand for South Africa but rather the conflict here. WAAC loses its honor, its credibility, and its chance to persuade and to educate by keeping them up. The fight over the crosses should not have occurred; as soon as a large segment of the college expressed discontent WAAC's symbolic protest should have been concluded. WAAC should certainly cut its losses now before it cuts its own throat.

Letters

Drinking

To the Editor:

We here at Williams recognize the responsibility of the police to uphold the law. The law states that persons who consume alcoholic beverages must be at least 21 years of age.

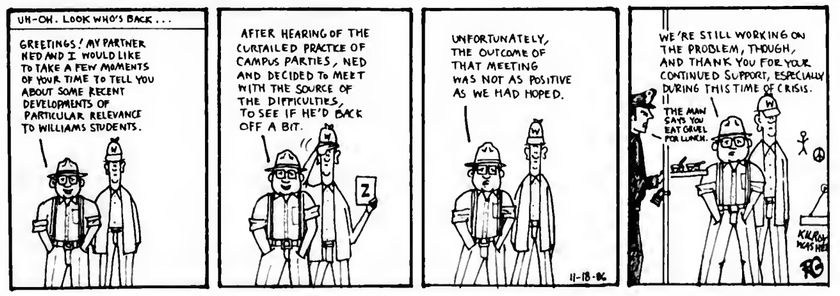
But what is the true purpose of a law? It is to maintain the social order. Strict enforcement of a law should be done only when the social order is threatened. Is it a breakdown of social order that has caused the sudden clampdown on drinking? I think not. The social order has always been maintained here at Williams. If there is no reason to enforce a law (as there is not for this one), then enforcing it is merely a waste of time, manpower and the community's goodwill.

The drinking age is meant to keep irresponsible young people from drinking alcohol. One could hardly call the student population here at Williams irresponsible. In fact, I would venture to say that our freshmen are more responsible than the majority of adults in this country. Therefore, if we have shown that we can drink responsibly (as we have), then the campus should be left to regulate itself in terms of alcohol consumption.

The drinking age is also meant to curb drunk driving. Because Williams is a relatively small, self-contained campus, drunk driving is just about nonexistent. However, if Chief Zoito continues to crack down on drinking, then many students will go to the Vermont bars to drink. Because the students will eventually have to drive back from Vermont, this will raise the amount of drunk driving. So what we have is a law which, if enforced, will accomplish the exact opposite of what it is intended to do. Is this right? Of course not. Therefore, Chief Zoito has an obligation not to

by Rich Gardella

Continued on Page 9



Watch the mail room workers read your mail!

If you stand halfway up the steps going up to the north side of Baxter dining hall after about ten o'clock in the morning, you can get a good view of the mail room workers putting away your mail. On the particular morning of this entertainment's discovery, three workers (at least one, a fellow student) were noted going about their business: one reading someone's junk mail, another reading someone's postcard, and all of them having a good time.

An informant tells me that they don't care about our privacy and just read the mail anyway, so they surely won't mind if we watch them do it. So the next morning you pass by the north steps of Baxter, take a peep into the mail room, and get a load of the mail room workers going about their (?) business.

Jennifer Krouse '89

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM

Weiner's claims are dismissed

Massachussetts officials have informed Robert Weiner, Democratic candidate for the First Congressional seat in Masachussetts, that his charges of ethics violations by incumbent Congressman Silvio Conte are without foundation.

According to the Berkshire Eagle, Weiner was informed by Peter Agnes, assistant secretary for public safety affairs, that an investigation determined there is "no basis for any further action by the department." Weiner had given the investigators' office documents he claimed showed Conte consorting with organized crime figures and accepting bribes to fix suspended drivers' licences.

Conte was quoted as saying he was glad "state police had moved quickly on the slanderous attacks."

Weiner, who discussed the documents when he spoke at Williams October 22, lost by a margin of roughly three-to-one in the election. He was unavailable for comment Saturday.

Johnson wins grant

Markes Johnson, associate professor of geology at Williams, has been awarded a two-year grant by the National Science Foundation to support his project, "US-China cooperative research: Paleobathymetry and Correlation of the Upper Ordovician (North America and China)."

He will use the $5,850 grant to work with Rong Jia-yu of the Nanjing Institute of Geology and Paleontology, in the People's Republic of China, studying strata of the late Ordovician age (438 - 448 million years ago) in Indiana, Iowa, and Ontario, Canada. Rong will bring with him data on the ordovician of South China for comparison.

Johnson spent the summer of 1983 working with Rong in the Hubei and Guizhou Provinces of South-Central China. They share similar interests in the work of Amadeus William Grabau, an American geologist who worked more than quarter-century in China. Johnson's work on sea-level patterns is on offshoot of Grabau's work.

Johnson is a graduate of the University of Iowa, and received his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1977. He has taught at Williams since then.

4 try for Watsons

Williams has nominated four seniors for Watson fellowships, which provide the students with a year of independent study and travel abroad. The four are Suzanne Burg, Michael Copeland, Martha Hoopes, and Kari Pribram. They were chosen by a faculty committee on the basis of their proposals, as well as their leadership potential and "potential for creative achivement."

Burg is interested in how people hold on to their pasts in order to keep their cultural identities in a modern world. She is proposing to visit archaeological sites in celtic Wales and iron age East Africa, concentrating on the links between folklore, oral tradition and archaeology, and to see how the modern inhabitants of the countries think about their past.

Copeland, a musician, wants to study the art of instrument-making in central South America and in Africa. He hopes to learn how to make instruments, especially drums, with the Yoruba and Berom craftsmen of Nigeria and with the residents of the Zulla and Trujillo states in Venezuela.

Hoopes will attempt to study solid waste management and resource recovery of garbage in Japan and India. She will study the disparity of waste management programs in these two countries in order to understand attitudes towards recycling.

Pribram proposes to focus on art-making as a process for developing discourse, in the setting of Berlin. He would study both sides of the divided city in an attempt to see if there is common ground from which artists might choose to create. He is interested in seeing the effects of ideology on art-making, and hopes to write an opera based on some facet of a Berlin existence that will draw on the multiplicity of artistic languages and encompass a multiplicity of political realities.

WCMA is praised

The 1983 addition to the Williams College Museum of Art won one of five awards announced last Wednesday in the first Governor's Design Awards program.

The museum addition, designed by Charles Moore with Centerbrook Architects of Essex, Conn., received the award for "its lively sequence of gallery spaces, the use of natural light, the participation of the staff in its planning, and its sensitivity to its purpose — the display of art," according to the Berkshire Eagle.

Barbara Bashevkin, the Williamstown town planner, chaired a panel of jurors for the contest. She said that special emphasis was placed on finding designs which incorporated the ideas of the people who use them, such as the museum staff.

The five winning designs were chosen from among 23 nominations from three western Massachusetts counties. The competition included buildings which had opened to the public within the last ten years.

The program, which is sponsored by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities and administered by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Laboratory of Architecture and Planning, was established to honor excellence in publicity and privately sponsored design in architecture, landscape, urban design and public improvements.

Efforts in recruiting minorities described

by Peter Balaban

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert and Assistant to the President Nancy McIntire went before the College Council last week to discuss the college's recruitment of minority faculty and affirmative action hiring program.

Reichert said the college is attempting to bring black professors into the senior, tenured levels because of the declining number of new black Ph. D.'s coming out of graduate school, making competition for them between colleges all the more fierce.

In an effort to reach a greater range of minority candidates for faculty positions, the college has, in recent years, advertised openings in such publications as the Black Scholar, the Chronicle of Higher Education, and the Affirmative Action Register, he said.

Williams is "locating excellent black educators and scholars even fifteen years out of graduate school," said Reichert, although the school's traditional approach has been to recruit promising graduate students from research universities such as Harvard and Yale and bring them up through the tenure track.

Reichert said that the Committee on Appointments and Promotions (CAP), which oversees the entire hiring process, "has always been and is now a white male committee — as women and blacks move up through the ranks, I hope that will change." Reichert, himself a member of the committee, said "It is embarassing to be in that kind of homogeneous group, interviewing job candidates."

Reichert said that it would be very difficult to create a minority position on the CAP, which consists of the President, the Provost, the Dean of Faculty, and a full professor from each of the three divisions, because there is only one black full professor and three women who are full professors at the college.

McIntire, who is assistant to the president for affirmative action and governmental affairs, said that minority recruitment is more of a concern for the administration than is recruitment of women because the "pool is almost there for women, but not in terms of minorities." She said that 22 percent of the voting members of the faculty are women, and that 12 percent of tenured faculty are women.

Although the numbers have remained fairly stable over the past five years, McIntire said, the reason for the low number of female senior faculty stems from the initial decision to "try and increase the number of women as lower level professors and not making a lot of senior appointments" when Williams first went co-educational.

McIntire noted that the percentage of appointments to tenured positions are the same for women and minorities as for white males. In addition, said McIntire, the rate of attrition for female faculty on the tenure

Continued on Page 11

Chaplains discuss their activism

by Jocelyn Shadforth

Increased religious activity on college campuses, as well as the possible presidential candidacy of Rev. Pat Robertson, has raised questions concerning the relationship between religious roles and political activity. College Chaplain Reverend Carol Pepper and Father Augustine Graap, an assistant chaplain, have been known for their willingness to participate in and support political events, both within the college and outside of it.

Pepper has been visible, speaking publicly about the political and social conditions in Nicaragua, and participating in events sponsored by the Williams Gay and Lesbian Union (GLU) and the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC).

Pepper described her involvement as part of a need to be both religious and political. "The relationship between religion and politics has been debated for centuries," she said. "I am political precisely because I am religious. I don't see the two as being in conflict. It is impossible for me to be religious without also concerning myself with the concrete realities of the world. For me that is what being political is."

For Pepper there is an historical precedent for this involvement. "Intense engagement in the world of politics and history, intense engagement in world events, that's what Incarnation is all about." She said the Christian doctrine of God becoming human shows that "Christ was vigorously involved in the political structure."

Pepper said she wants to clarify the issues for anyone who sees a conflict between her roles as college chaplain and private citizen. "Anyone who wants to know what my actions mean should see me," she said. "I'm not sure if the role and person are separable."

Pepper cited the pro-divestment movement and Nicaragua as two places where public and private roles diverge. "I'm for divestment, but in my public role I have been much more anti-apartheid. This is mainly because I am not completely convinced about divestment."

She hold stronger beliefs about the U.S. and Nicaragua. "There is no conflict between the role and the person. I am in favor of withdrawal, both as reverend and as private citizen," she said.

Pepper said her political involvement is necessary "not because of my job description but because of my calling, and I have to follow my calling .... I have to discern what God wants me to do, and, hopefully, that won't be different from my responsibility as perceived by the College." Pepper emphasized she does not speak for the College, and compared that to a belief she is speaking for God.

"Some people would say that it (my work) is a scandal," said Pepper, "but no minister can speak for, or because of identification with, an institution. It is the duty of a minister to be a witness. Wouldn't it be a scandal if I shut up about it? Wouldn't it be a scandal if I didn't try to tell people about injustice?"

Father Augustine (Gus) Graap, assistant chaplain of the college for eleven years, is a

Continued on Page 5

College Chaplain Carol Pepper says political activism is a natural extension of her religious belief. (Losito)

SOAR combats campus racism

by John Felkner

The Society Organized Against Racism (SOAR) held an open forum last Thursday to continue its campaign, begun last year, against racism on campus.

"Its main purpose," said Carolyn O'Brien '88, "is to educate college students about racism, to help individual campuses define racism within their community and to find ways to work against it." The group has chapters at campuses across the country.

Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta generated the initial student interest in the organization in the spring of 1985, when she organized a trip to Boston for one of SOAR's bi-annual meetings. The meeting focused on answering the question of what can be done to combat racism at colleges. O'Brien and others attended "although we really didn't know anything about it when we went," she said.

O'Brien, Rita Brown '88, Devonya Havis '87 and other students started holding weekly meetings at Williams in the fall of 1985. "Last year we got a lot of freshmen interested, which has really helped for this year, and we also got (economics professor) Bert Ifill interested," O'Brien said.

SOAR member Sue Levine '88 recently attended a conference on racism sponsored by SOAR at Trinity College. Also, the organization is planning to view a video presentation on diversity at Tufts University, created by the Tufts SOAR chapter. "We hope to show this video to the Williams community," said O'Brien.

"Eventually, hopefully during second semester, we're planning to create our own video of diversity on the Williams campus, where we will try to show the whole range and gamut of diversity as we have it," she said. O'Brien also related plans to hold a panel discussion on racism either during Winter Study or the second semester.

O'Brien said that SOAR at Williams is not officially affiliated with the Williams Black Student Union (BSU) or the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC), although "we would really like to become involved with the BSU, WAAC, the GLU (Gay and Lesbian Union), the Asian Link and the Feminist Alliance, so that we can examine racism from their points of view."

O'Brien said SOAR does support WAAC in its call for divestment and in the erection of crosses on Baxter Lawn.

"We're not an outgrowth of WAAC," she added, "Rather, we see ourselves as spanning those groups. We're broader, in a sense."

"Our main purpose is to educate students. It is possible to go to Williams and think, 'There's no racism here!' " she said. "But racism is a worldwide phenomenon, which involves everyone."

Chaplains

Continued from Page 4

Carmelite priest who works with the campus Newman Association.

Commenting on his part in political action on campus, Graap said, "I think it's more one of support of things that are going than leadership. We can't muster a crowd. We go with the flow and try to keep things going."

Graap said that he sees the Chaplain's Office as being "particularly free" from specific obligations to the college administration. He cited his support for during a 1983 pro-divestment hunger strike, and said administrators asked why he supported the students involved, but did not ask him to limit his actions.

"If students want me as a moral presence I will assert my position," said Graap.

A student's concern

Some of Graap's ideas are shared by Newman Association member Ann Marie O'Keeffe '88. O'Keeffe is attempting to start workshops and discussions this year on social and political issues relevant to non-Catholics as well as Catholics.

O'Keeffe said she wants to explore "a range of ideas ... I think it's worthwhile to explore liberation theology and issues (such as) the Church and apartheid, the Church and abortion." Currently, she is interested in addressing the topic of women, religion and the Church.

O'Keeffe said that religious views should carry over into other aspects of life. She also said that campus Catholics should be more involved in "a serious contemplation of moral issues ... in the context of Catholic upbringing and education."

Soviet scholars speak of adapting to US life

by Meredith Miller

Students, faculty, and town residents got a chance to meet with students from the Soviet Union, at an informal discussion Saturday at the Weston Language Center.

The students all attend Moscow's Institute of Modern Languages and are spending the semester studying English at the State University of New York (SUNY) at Albany. They were accompanied by an instructor from the Institute.

The students introduced themselves by their first names and talked briefly of their interests, which included collecting books and match-box cars. They also responded to questions from the audience about life in the U.S.S.R. and their impressions of the United States.

Karen Ryan-Hayes, an assistant professor of Russian, asked the students how the American educational system compared with that of the Soviet Union. A student, introducing himself as Sergei, commented that American teachers tended to be much less exacting than their Soviet counterparts. He said he found it difficult to learn a language without such rigorous teaching standards.

When asked about the American media's portrayal of their country, the students said they had expected American newspapers to give a critical slant to stories about the Soviet Union, and they were not surprised.

A student introduced as Sasha said he was surprised when a local newspaper reporter chose a comment he had made about baseball as the keynote for an article, headlining it "Red Sox lose World Cup (sic), gain Russian fan."

Sasha noted that the American press is highly critical of its own country and said that after reading so many stories about crime in U.S. cities, he was surprised to be able to walk along Broadway and First Avenue in New York without being mugged.

Asked what was the most important thing they wanted people to learn about the Soviet Union, the students voiced the hope that Americans would realize the Soviet people sincerely want peace.

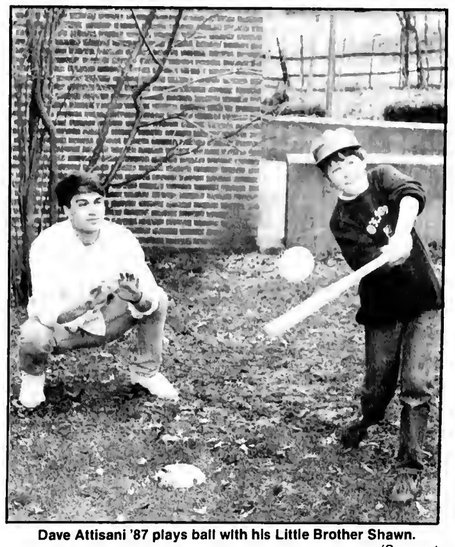
A young woman named Natasha said she had asked an American how many casualties he believed the U.S.S.R. has suffered during the Great Patriotic War (World War II) and was shocked that he estimated losses at two and one-half million people. She said that, if more people realized the casualties numbered 20 million, they would realize the Soviet people could not possibly want another war.

The students all expressed homesickness and said they were looking forward to their return to Moscow next month. "It has been interesting and sort of educational, probably," said Sergei.

The Corporate Finance Department of

Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.
Incorporated

invites interested members of



The Class of 1987

to discuss investment banking and our Financial Analyst Program

Tonight
Office of Career Counseling
7:00 p.m.

BERKSHIRE BOOK SHOP
AMERICAN LEGION DRIVE
NORTH ADAMS, MA 01247
Tel. (413) 664-4986

XC SKI SALE
Save on racing, touring, and Telemark skis, boots, bindings and more.
Introductory Package
reg. $126.95
Karhu Classic No Wax 99.00
Alpina Lahti Boot 49.00
Rottefella Binding 11.95
Swift Start Pole 14.00
SAVE OVER $59.00 $173.95
Special Price $115.00
Save up to 20% on all skis, boots poles, bindings, etc.
Sale ends December 1 so don't miss out!
the Mountain Goat
130 Water St.,
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445
10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Sun. noon-4 p.m., Thurs. 'til 8 p.m.

Dave Attisani '87 plays ball with his Little Brother Shawn. (Somers)

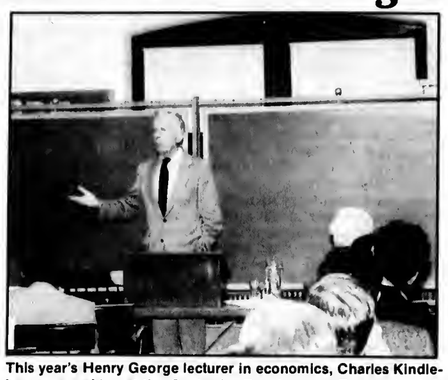
Brother and sisters, both large and small

by Beth Broadrup

It may seem as though freshmen are looking younger every year, but relax — those short, sometimes bewildered kids carrying trays around behind students in Baxter are not freshmen, or even prospectives; they are the companions of students involved in the Big Brother/Big Sister program.

This year the program has had its most successful start ever; volunteer Big Brothers and Sisters, mostly freshmen and sophomores, have made 41 matches with youngsters so far, a record number in the program's fifteen year history. Underclassmen are given preference in matches in hopes that they will stay involved with their brother or sister for their remaining college years. Inter-

Continued on Page 8



Profile: Charles Kindleberger

by Mark Trumbull, Charles Samuelson and Michael Erard

Trade protectionism. Capital flight. To most of us, these words relate to current economic dilemmas. But Charles Kindleberger, this year's Henry George lecturer in economics, visited Williams last week to lecture on these issues from a historical angle. He gave a lecture entitled "Protection or Free Trade" in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall last Monday, and the next evening he spoke on "Capital Flight — A Historical Perspective" at the Center for Development Economics. He also lectured several economics classes during his stay in Williamstown. Kindleberger, a professor emeritus in economics at M.I.T., is an authority on economic theory and history and served as the president of the American Economic Association in 1985.

Kindleberger used the Monday night lecture to assess Henry George's study, "Protection or Free Trade," published in 1886. Kindleberger concluded that George's basically anti-protectionist position is still sound: "After a hundred years," he noted, "(George's) message still stands up: Don't dig in. Keep adjusting."

The second lecture, "Capital Flight: a Historical Perspective," looked at some case studies of capital flight (the movement of money out of a country) drawn from French history. Kindleberger spoke of the "Mississippi Bubble" in 1750, and the reign of terror in 1793, both cases in which large amounts of gold left France. Capital flight often occurs when people find it more profitable to invest their money abroad than at home.

This year's Henry George lecturer in economics, Charles Kindleberger, speaking at the Center for Development Economics last week. (Albright)

Kindleberger said that he finds that most students who major in economics have moved into it after finding that upper-level math and science courses in college are too tough. "I have a theorem that everyone who becomes an economist started out to major in something else," he explained. Kindleberger himself was majoring in Greek and Latin when he discovered economics.

Hula-hoops

"As far as graduate schools are concerned now, there is much more mathematics, much more econometrics, much less history; language requirements have been dropped." He laments the emphasis that modern economists place on mathematics and theory. "It (math) is like any fad," he said, "It's like hula-hoops. Math is the hula-hoop of economics departments today."

Not only is math gaining importance over history, Kindleberger explained, but the math being taught is "pretty fancy stuff." "Some of these guys are using cannons to shoot sparrows," said Kindleberger, quoting economist Robert Samuelson on mathematicians.

Meanwhile, the debate rages over the role of history in the study of economics. Kindleberger said that theorists agree that there must be more history in economics, but in practice, economics departments are hiring more theorists than historians. "They've got theorists coming out of their ears," he

Continued on Page 7

Epel's 'Merchant' sells the Bard's Shylock

by Chuck Goforth

Shylock is probably not one of Shakespeare's ten most famous characters, but he would surely fall in the next ten, and though some argue that he has been aggrandized to a degree the text cannot support, he is, nevertheless, the crux of most contemporary productions of "The Merchant of Venice."

The intrigue that has elevated the character — maybe beyond the Bard's intentions — centers on a basic but pertinent question: is he a villain or is he a victim? It is a question that takes a familiar, if not so lofty, form in modern courtrooms. "Is Johnny a murderer, your honor, or is he the inculpable victim of seven hundred hours of 'Quincy' and 'Baretta'? "

Though the misshaping influence that Shylock cites in the play, Christianity and its followers, is a much different matter than television, Shylock's plea is identical. And probably more important than the mere "example" set by the Christians, is the persecution and bigotry that Shylock, the rich Jew, must face daily in Venice.

The debate over Shakespeare's intent, and how far he meant to justify or sympathize with Shylock goes on and on, and that's good. The question about any particular production is not whether its decision on this issue is right or wrong, but how well it communicates that decision, and how artfully.

Second production

"The Merchant of Venice" opened last Thursday as Williamstheatre's second production of the 1986-87 season, and the show's press release acknowledges director David Epel's emphasis on Shylock and where he stands on the villain/victim question. "It has been labeled an anti-semitic play, and actors in recent decades, according to Epel, have played Shylock ... as sympathetic and dignified." And though the other characters in the play "are guilty, Epel says, 'That does not erase the fact that Shy-

Continued on Page 12

The Williamstheatre production of Shakespeare's 'Merchant of Venice' opened in the DownStage theatre last week. The performances will continue tomorrow through Saturday. (Somers)

Counsel and contraception: Peer Health provides more

by Rob Wilmers

Peer Health is having a fertile year. According to co-coordinator Giselle Ondetti '87, "We have a lot of really gung-ho people. We're very happy with our group."

Peer Health does more than most students realize. "We yearly try to do away with our image of being solely based around sexually related matters," said member Colleen Ryan '87. Besides selling contraceptives and giving entry talks to freshmen at the beginning of the year, Peer Health members are trained to provide counseling for eating disorders, for stress related problems and for alcohol and drug dependencies. The organization holds Call-in/Walk-in hours on Mondays and Thursdays from 8:00pm to 10:00pm in the basement of Baxter Hall and runs a contraceptive clinic at Monday Call-in/Walk-in hours and at the Health Center on Fridays from 3:00 to 5:00 p.m. All Peer Health Services are strictly confidential.

Ondetti said that she disagrees with the idea that Peer Health encourages sex. "Maybe we're encouraging more safe sex," she explained. She expressed a belief that people at Williams have a problem with addressing the issue. "It's scary that people ... have a sort of irresponsible behavior towards sex," she said. "People at Williams can accept some things on an intellectual level, but on a practical basis, things break down."

Entry talks

Ondetti said that she believes one obstacle facing Peer Health is that people seem to think that the group doesn't do anything, or that they don't reach enough people. "I feel that we do reach people, beginning with entry talks and continuing with such practical issues as the contraceptive clinic."

Jennifer Fox '89, another Peer Health member, said that she thinks the fact that more people are coming to Call-in/Walk-in hours is encouraging. Ondetti also pointed out that Peer Health counselors can provide help in less formal ways. She said that most of her counselling has been with people who know her personally and that these people often call her directly for advice and information, rather than using the Peer Health Call-in/Walk-in hours.

Peer Health recently began selling contraceptives at the Monday Walk-in hours but does not sell them on Thursdays. "We didn't want to cut down on counseling," Ondetti explained, "we kept one day free in case people would be put off (that contraceptives were being sold)."

Fox said that one of the reasons that the group decided to sell contraceptives during evening hours was that people

Continued on Page 7

Chapin Library

Small collection, big reputation

by Lisa West

If you've ever passed through the first floor of Stetson — perhaps before turning in a last-minute paper or raiding the faculty tea — then you might have noticed a small balcony railing to the right, one story above you. If you are like most Williams students, however, you probably have not climbed the staircase and discovered that the railing is across from the Chapin Library, a rare books collection that may be more internationally reknowned than Williams College itself.

Chapin Library consists mainly of a large room lined with bookcases and featuring a central exhibition. There is also an office and small side rooms for books and work relating to their maintenance and cataloguing. A card catalogue is to the right of the entrance, as is a bust of Keats and a quote from Blake. To the left are a guest book and a plaque honoring the past librarians which reads, "They sought the best/nothing vulgar."

Numerically, the collection is small, approximately thirty to thirty-five thousand volumes. Custodian of the library Bob Voiz, however, stresses the coverage and quality. Works date from the ninth to the twentieth century, dealing with art, personal letters, poetical sketches, chess, drafts of political documents, botany, mathematics, and more. Voiz claims that the variety keeps him from becoming specialized even in a general field. He has to find material for all three academic divisions as well as for students' avocational interests. He likens the process to auditing all the courses on campus. "You have no idea what you are going to field next.

Continued on Page 10

The Chapin Library's collection of rare books and documents, housed in Stetson Hall, includes copies of the four founding documents of the United States (the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights) and copies of all four Shakespeare folios. (Somers)

Profile

Continued from Page 6

said, "The marginal product of the last theorist (hired) is very low."

Flourishes

"They know how to write an equation," he commented, "But I can write a sentence." Kindleberger said he believes that these verbal skills are "terribly neglected" by modern economists.

On the other hand, he said that he thinks writing is overdone by others. "(John Kenneth) Galbraith, he writes too well," he said. To other economists he said, "Let's add a little content along with the flourish(es)."

Kindleberger said that while a protectionist policy may protect U.S. firms from Oriental business practices in the short-run, adjustment is what will help businesses in the long run. "You need to shift out of dying industries and move into the growing industries," he said.

According to Kindleberger, it is also to the best interest of American companies to improve their quality control. He said he knows of companies in the South which are competing directly with Japan and Hong Kong. "They (owners of Southern companies) say that the big problem is quality control, not price. Price is easy."

Chinese pajamas

He said that in the 1920's the Japanese were known for their cheap goods. Kindleberger said that that has been reversed now, and that quality control is where the U.S. is "slipping badly." "If we lose it, then we deserve to lose it," he said.

Kindleberger is not only a free trade economist, but also a free trade consumer. "We ought to wear Chinese pajamas. I wear Chinese pajamas. They're okay."

Peer Health

Continued from Page 6

involved in sports might not have the opportunity to go to the Friday afternoon clinic. According to Ondetti and Fox, a lot of people come in on Mondays for contraceptives. They said that some couples come in together, while some people come in either alone or with friends. Fox said that she was especially impressed by the fact that men sometimes come in for their girlfriends.

Mostly negative

Female members of the group provide pregnancy testing and counseling. According to Ondetti, the pregnancy testing is done by a nurse at the Health Center, but it does not go on the patient's record, and the nurse never actually sees the patient. "The only person who knows is the counselor," she explained. She said that the test takes about ten minutes and the results are available immediately. She and Fox both said Peer Health does a lot of pregnancy testing but that most of the tests come out negative.

Peer Health is currently trying to revise the Williams Guide to Health and Sex, which was last revised in 1982 and was handed out to freshmen until 1983. Ondetti is concerned that Peer Health might have trouble getting College Council funding for the project but said, "Hopefully we will have it for next year's freshman class."

Also in the works is an attempt to get the Health Center to sell the birth control pill. "We've been trying for two years now to get approval, and have talked to Dean Fix and Dr. Corkins (director of Health Services), who are both sympathetic," explained Ondetti. "There are a bunch of others schools that dispense the pill, so it should happen this year." If the plan goes through, the Health Center will sell the pill at cost, for about $3, compared to the over-the-counter price of about $12.

— WINTER TUNE UP —
Weather-Proof Your Bike
Off-Season Special Price
Adjust gears & brakes True wheels
Thoroughly lubricate chain and ball bearings
SPECIAL PRICES ON NEW TIRES AND REPLACEMENT PARTS — $15.00
THE SPOKE
408 Main St. 458-3456

in other IVORY TOWERS

Amherst

Two male freshmen at Amherst College were attacked by an unknown man wielding a pick-axe last week. The two students were on their way back to campus at around 2 a.m. when the assailant drove up and, "started yelling things at (them) out the window," according to the Amherst Student. Soon afterwards, he sprang from his car, took an axe from the trunk, and started hacking away at the students. "He hit me in the chest about as hard as he could with the handle," said one of the victims, "then ... hit me between the eyes with the butt end ... and then hit (the other student) with the blade on the eyebrow."

A nearby security guard discovered the victims and rushed them to the University of Massachusetts hospital, "where they were treated for facial lacerations and released," the Student reported. Other witnesses were able to give an exact description of the assailant, and his car, including the license plate number.

The next day, the attacker was apprehended and identified as a nineteen-year-old auto mechanic, with prior convictions for assault and rape. He was charged with two counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. For unknown reasons, the axe-swinger's bail, originally set at $10,000, was reduced to $500, and the assailant was released until the pre-trial hearing. One of the victims, surprised at the small bail, described his attacker as, "a seven-layer fruit cake hell bent on violence."

The Citadel

Wearing sheets, pillowcases and towels, five cadets at The Citadel were admonished for more than their misuse of the linen service. The students were caught "breaking into a black student's room, burning a cross and making racial slurs," according to college officials. The black community and other members of the college were "appalled" at the mild punishment which the students received. Though many apparently felt that the students should "at least have been suspended," they were merely reduced in rank, confined to campus for six months, and forced to "walk punishment tours." Despite this incident, Major General James Grimsley Jr., president of the college, insists that he is, "proud of what we have accomplished in the area of race relations at the Citadel."

Kevin Nesmith, the 17-year-old freshman who was the victim of this harassment, has left the Citadel. "I feel that I have been made the villian when the villians remain at the Citadel," he said in a statement released through his family last week. (The Atlanta Journal Weekend and The Berkshire Eagle)

Dartmouth

Dartmouth senior Stephen Crystal was elected as a Democratic representative to the New Hampshire State Legislature in last week's election. Crystal defeated a Dartmouth alumnus by more than 200 votes to win the seat; three other Democrats will join Crystal in representing the interests of Hanover. Despite the stress of senior year, Crystal is certain that he will be able to handle the rigorous life of a politician. "I'll devote my energies to this (the legislature) while balancing my studies," explained Crystal.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Jim Hartnett and Caroline Koeppel from material printed in other campus newspapers.

Shop the
WILLIAMSTOWN MARKETPLACE
Open 7 Days, Fri. til 8

PAT'S COUNTRY SHOPPE
895 Cold Spring Rd.
458-9834
— gifts and clothing —
college discount with I.D.

STAINED GLASS windows lamps mirrors and stillies!
Kaleidoscope GLASS
CUSTOM DESIGN and REPAIRS
FREE GIFT WRAPPING!
458-3688 895 Cold Spring Rd.

HOLIDAYS
COUNTRY STORE
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA.
Thanksgiving, Christmas Items and Gifts
Great opportunity to do some Christmas shopping!
Many other stores and eatery.

Big Brothers

Continued from Page 6

ested students are matched with a child between elementary-school age and 13 years old on the basis of mutual interests, such as sports or music. They agree to spend weekly time with the child for at least one year.

The kids in the program do not fit any stereotypes, as Alan Gigliotti, director of the program at the Williamstown Elementary School, noted: "Not all the kids are what people imagine Little Brothers and Sisters to be." Tom Hudgins '88, a student coordinator at Williams, explained that "some of the children come from broken homes, and many of them need a stabilizing factor in their lives."

Equal enthusiasm

Many of the children, however, have no such problems; their parents just "like the idea of giving the children a good role model and exposing them to the college's resources," as Gigliotti said. He sees the program as "a good learning experience, one that the parents cannot necessarily give," and he stated that the "positive self-image building program" benefits everyone involved.

Participating Williams students are equally enthusiastic about the program. Big Brothers and Sisters cited varied reasons for their involvement. Hudgins called it "a good way to get in touch with the community of Williamstown." He noted that it acts as an outlet from college life; it is refreshing "to see real kids," not just 18- to 22-year olds. Big Brother Tom Robertson '89 agrees that helping someone in the community is very worthwhile and that as Williams students "we have a lot to offer someone." He does not see the program as a burden in any way: "It's fun just doing something together that we both enjoy; it doesn't matter what."

The program benefits the Big Brothers and Sisters, too. Big Sister Anne Thompson '89 said that she "wanted to do an outside activity, away from campus." Spending time with her Little Sister takes her usual "focus off work and tests." Little Brothers and Sisters also help students who miss younger siblings at home.

Unplanned and unstructured

Freshman Cara McCandless, who left a younger sister back home, just became a Big Sister. She thought "the kids might need a role model" and expected to act as sister to a "lonely only child." Her sister turned out to be a "perky little 12-year old" with younger siblings of her own. McCandless has enjoyed the program so far; she explained that "it makes you feel good to talk to somebody who doesn't have any real idea about going to college yet — she isn't even a prospective!"

Big Brothers and Sisters spend their time with their younger "siblings" in unplanned, unstructured activites. Robertson and his little brother often play pool or go bowling. Thompson bakes cookies with her sister and plans to stage an indoor picnic, "since it's too cold to go outside." McCandless showed her sister all around campus, trying to remedy the fact that "she lives in a college town and doesn't have much of a clue about the college." McCandless hopes to give her a tour of the Clark Art Institute and the music center and introduce her to the joys of grilled honey buns.

Big Brothers and Sisters see their time with the kids as invaluable, even if they spend it just talking about the children's school, their friends, or Halloween celebrations. The program's positive impact on both Big and Little Brothers and Sisters explains its long history and promises an equally successful future.

Dox
Rt. 2, Williamstown
413-458-4420
MOVIE RENTALS — $1.50 per night
AKAI CD PLAYER $169.00
COMPUTERS & SOFTWARE

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"
Low prices for beer, wine, and soda
$1 off on all cases of beer
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.

SKI SALE continues
SKI BOOTS
'86 & '87 Models
SAVE 15%
SX91E
Goff's Sports, inc.
15 Spring St.

Saving babies is our goal!
March of Dimes
Preventing Birth Defects

Williamstown—New Townhouse Condominiums, 3 bedrooms, 3 baths, 2091 sq. ft. living area. Fully applianced. Stone fireplaces, $200,000 - 2 bedrooms, $175,000. C-352
Coldwell Banker Isgood
610 Main St., Williamstown

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects
Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, and faux-antique jewelry.
TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
after 7:00 p.m. Coffee Club
Coffee by the cup - 25¢
Coffee House soon to come!
76 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN
NOW OPEN TIL 10
MONDAY-SATURDAY 9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
SUNDAY 10-5
Telephone (413)458-5007

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
Visit our new Humor Section featuring the unauthorized "New Yorker" parody Snooze
Pick out a book at Spring Street's #1 rated eatery (by The Record)
AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT — ORDER EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS
Literature for every taste
Now Open Til 10:00 p.m.
Come visit us soon.
Open from 8:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Sunday 10-5
Located next to THE LOG

Letters

Continued from Page 3

enforce this law, since the bad consequences far outweigh the good.

The question Chief Zoito and the police must answer is this: why not let sleeping dogs lie? The town and the college have always had a good, if not excellent, relationship up to now. Why spoil it? If they force Williams students to do their drinking in hiding, then pressure will build up. This pressure will be in the form of antagonism against the town and the police. Anyone on campus can already feel the antagonism building against the police. Is this the kind of college-town relationship they are trying to foster? If so, they are off to a good start. If you kick a sleeping dog, Chief Zoito, it just might bite back.

I do not really believe, however, that the police are trying to create this destructive environment. What is it that they are trying to do? Why don't they just tell us of their intentions? For example, if they want to stop public drinking on the town streets, they should just make it known to us that they want to do that. We are capable of regulating ourselves. The Williamstown police force does not have the manpower to stop all drinking on the campus. Furthermore, to selectively enforce the law just is not fair. I believe that we can come to a constructive agreement on this subject that will preserve town-college relations, if the police treat the situation correctly.

John Bellwoar '89

Criticism

To the Editor:

I should emphasize that I believe apartheid to be one of the most morally reprehensible problems facing the world today. But, believe it or not, I am also "anti-cross." Recently, the college council representatives were asked to inquire as to the positions and their peers on these issues; everyone was against apartheid, but it was a mixed bag with regard to divestment, and almost everyone thought the crosses should come down.

If WAAC would take the crosses down, this would reflect very well on the internal dynamics of their organization, though I have heard that it is very difficult to voice an idea that is "different" at WAAC meetings without getting "shouted down." In A Passion for Excellence the authors suggest that any organization interested in effective functioning should encourage differing opinions.

Chris Bail, who wrote a letter last week, brought up a number of points. What is of primary importance, however, is something he did, rather than something he said, something Tom Williams did not do in his letter in the same issue. Bail demonstrated a remarkable amount of self-restraint and emotional detachment for one so closely allied to such a heated issue. It is exactly this that caused everyone I have spoken to with take his letter seriously.

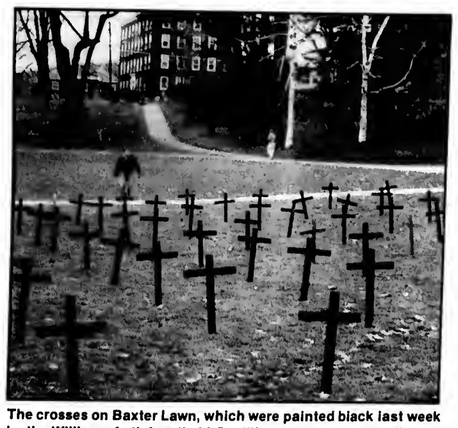
The opposite is true of the Williams letter. His small-minded name calling and petty jabs have been dismissed by everyone with whom I have had the pleasure of discussing them. This example reaffirms that it is essential for one engaged in a discussion to refrain from emotionalism as much as possible, because the calmer, more rational voice will usually, and hopefully, prevail.

Painting the crosses in various "relevant" colors seems to be a half-hearted attempt to maintain interest. I honestly believe if WAAC cannot do better than that, than they should remove their cemetery. I call it s cemetery even though there is a path worn through the crosses. Out of respect, most people avoid walking through a real cemetery.

For Williams sake, I want to shed some light on my motivation behind including the anecdote about the freshmen parent mistaking the crosses for memorials to the Marines killed in Lebanon. I was hoping that Mrs. Sabin (who is neither suffering from "severe learning deficiencies" nor an artifact of my "precious fabrication") might cause some sheepishness among the more moderate members of WAAC. WAAC being fiercely "virtucratic," to coin a term from Joseph Epstein, seemed immune to any outside criticism.

A few more questions: Isn't divestment just a convenient hands-washing of the offending issue? Would not constructive engagement be a more effective, if admittedly more difficult, choice? Is not some form of benign action more "morally responsible" than pulling our hands completely out of the tainted cookie jar? Or, how would WAAC feel if some student were attacked by baseball bat-wielding idiots and the security person who might have been there to protect the student were busy watching those "macabre garden ornaments?" No one except WAAC can take the crosses down, and I think it is their responsibility, and I fervently exhort them to do so.

Martin Illner '87



INT'L OUTLET
SAVINGS TO 70%
The best selection of gifts and housewares in the Berkshires and the best VALUES too!
Your one stop Xmas gift center
Exciting gifts for family and friends
Always something new and unusual old fashioned advent cards • Christmas decorations • toys • crystal brass • wood • kitchen gadgets • dinnerware • cookware placemats • area rugs • candles • wicker • stocking stuffers...
Special: Crystal Champagne flutes from Holland at a special Holiday Price
Box of 6 at $11.95 or $2.00 each
192 STATE STREET, RT. 8, NORTH ADAMS
MON.-SAT. 10-5:30 SUN. 12-5 664-4580

A.M. Hitchcock
NOSTALGIA AND CRAFTS
75 Old hook plates 5 designs $2
Mirror - 35x51" with maple frame $50
1961 Texaco Toy Tanker - batter operated 26" long $50
1890 Boston University School of Medicine Catalog $10
Assorted End Tables/plant stands $25 and up
TUESDAY - SATURDAY 10-5
SUNDAY 11-3 CLOSED MONDAY
115 WATER ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
TEL. 458-2433

tech systems
audio & video
Offering Quality Component Systems Since 1974
170 North Street Bennington, Vermont 05201
Mon - Sat. 10-6 (802) 447-0350

Colonial Pizza
"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

McKinsey & Company, Inc.
• Management Consultants •
PRESENTATION & DISCUSSION
For all 1987 graduating seniors interested in our two-year
BUSINESS ANALYST PROGRAM
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1986
7 P.M.
AT
CAREER COUNSELING

The crosses on Baxter Lawn, which were painted black last week by the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition. (LeBauer)

Crosses—

Continued from Page 1

October 16, the morning that the crosses went up.

Since then, Fix has declined to comment on the subject. He did so again Friday, when asked if the college would request that WAAC remove the crosses if they became a hindrance to others' rights of expression, one of the criteria he mentioned in the statement.

When asked whether, with the crosses remaining up at the beginning of the holiday vacation, the college might ask WAAC to remove them, he said, "I don't know."

Asked what the college might do if the crosses become covered by snow and pose a hidden danger to someone walking across the field, he said, "The physical well-being of students is always our concern."

Chapin—

Continued from Page 7

Inevitably, it is something with which you don't feel as conversant as you should," he said.

'Academic mainstream'

Volz said that former president John Chandler gave him a single charge with his position as custodian, to "put the library into the academic mainstream of the college." He is a little disappointed in the extent to which students and faculty utilize the resources. He said that more could be done with honors theses, for example. But Volz also admits that students need to know what is available before they can fully fit Chapin into their educational plans. Cataloguing thus is very important; there are multiple entries for books and parts of books in a system more extensive than the one used in Sawyer Library.

Volz admits that using the collection takes extra effort at first. Severe procrastinators probably will never be able to use the material fully, for it takes more time to locate relevant material, read different handwriting or print set,and absorb vocabulary. Furthermore, none of the material can be removed from the library.

Volz expressed a belief that the rewards of using the Chapin Library are worth the extra effort. Seeing a document as a whole shows what history has discarded as well as eulogized, he said. A different thinking process is stirred, involving a communication of people and events. Volz said that,"Thomas Jefferson becomes a part of you. He held the same paper in one hand, wrote down his thoughts with the other, then sent it to someone else to read. The experience is not unlike walking in the first snow of the winter."

Montaigne

"If we take care of our sidewalks, we should take care of our books and libraries," Volz asserted, "It is as important to keep bindings in good condition as to paint the President's house, to keep books oiled as to mow lawns."

The present exhibition of Renaissance books and their owners reflects this value of books. Not only are the volumes themselves valuable, but they also contain inscriptions and notes by such people as the Duke of Somerset and Montaigne. The "Subiaco Cicero," which, according to Volz, "epitomizes the commerce in ideas that so characterizes the Renaissance," was the first book printed in Italy and is one of only two copies in America. Speaking of two copies, the Chapin Library is also the only site in America besides the National Archives to have all four founding documents of the nation.

Volz stressed the educational value of Chapin's exhibitions. They are small, and would only take about fifteen minutes to view, but they cover a wide range of material that might complement a certain course or just provide a new appreciation of a subject. "There's always one good piece anybody has to like no matter how crass, uninterested, or unprepared he is," Volz said.

The Renaissance exhibit will continue until Christmas. Library hours are 9:00 A.M. - 12:00 noon and 1:00 - 5:00 P.M., Monday through Friday.

CEP—

Continued from Page 1

senting view in a report to the faculty.

"The real issue here is how to get the faculty to talk about it," said mathematical sciences professor Deborah Bergstrand.

Dean of the College Stephen Fix, an ex-officio member of CEP, suggested the committee listen to the faculty's reaction and then draw up a final report.

"Proposing a minor policy would excite the faculty and instigate discussion amongst the faculty members," Fix said. "This could be the one time in the year that the (CEP) comes up with a really controversial issue."

March 1 to April 4, 1987

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's an unrelenting test of your endurance.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise and Private Island Extravaganza." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more.

It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, go wild...in style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

AQUARIUS TRAVEL CONSULTANTS, LTD.
816 King Street
Rye Brook, New York 10573
(914) 939-2297 or: (800) 248-4141

Parties—

Continued from Page 1

that Williams I.D.'s were requested at the door and that the party attracted a large crowd.

No alternative

"These new regulations will cause some changes and some inconveniences," Fix said. "But I don't see any alternative at the moment."

Kenyatta said that the police involvement at the Bacchus party had speeded up the process of clarifying the rules. "In some ways it has moved faster than we wanted it to," she said.

"It did set a precedent," she added. "It did bring the attention of the police to parties. Had we not gotten their attention, we probably would be going along like we were before."

"We are now under the microscope," she said.

Kenyatta said that the security guard at the Bacchus party probably had little choice but to call the police. "I think that, had the security officer felt that he was in control of the situation, he would not have called the police. You have to remember that our security officers do not have police powers.

All-campus parties

Kenyatta, asked if the Dean's Office wants to see large parties continue, said, "I'm of two minds on that. We would prefer to see more smaller parties rather than big all-campus parties. There's always the potential for something happening when you have that many people together in a place."

"At the same time, I understand the need for all-campus parties," she said.

Fix agreed. "Large and small parties both have roles to play," he said. "At small parties you tend to be with your friends. It may well be that at larger parties you're meeting people from different houses and different classes."

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) will make recommendations on changes in party policy and forward them to the Dean's Office by the end of the month, Kenyatta said. She said that one idea being considered by the CUL is a common security fund which all houses would contribute to.

Football—

Continued from Page 14

more transfer from California was a consistent force all year, providing "an added dimension to our offense," according to Odeli. "He gave us something we lacked before."

In retrospect, the season was a good one, especially in the eyes of Odell: "It was a successful season, despite a 4-4 record. And the healthy thing about it was that the kids displayed a great attitude all year long and that should carry over to next year. We also have a lot of talent at key positions and I really feel good about next year."

Graduating offensive linemen John Madden whom Odeli called "Mr. Steady" echoed his coaches sentiments, "We definitely created a winning attitude here," he said when talking about the team's departing seniors. "In year's past, we'd get behind and maybe give up. Now we have the talent and the character to come back with the belief that we can win."

Faculty—

Continued from Page 4

track, which was higher than that of male faculty at Williams in the 70's, is now the same as that of male faculty.

Speaking on the high attrition rate for minority faculty on the tenure track, McIntire said "the problem feeds on itself in that there simply is a very tiny black community here. It is a very small town. If a minority family wants to raise children, they might not find the community or college congenial."

Reichert added that serving on committees and representing themselves places an extraordinary drain on young minority faculty members who "need the time to work on teaching and scholarship."

Speaking on the incentives departments are given to hire black faculty, Reichert said that departments can bypass normal requests for new hiring and if "they can locate a good candidate, CAP will allow them to have candidates whether they need them or not."

Martin White '87 said that the lack of black faculty is a self-perpetuating process. He said that departments that don't have any black faculty members won't actively search for black candidates and won't exert pressure on the CAP to hire black faculty. As a result, White stated, "it ultimately falls on students to put pressure on departments" and since "black students won't take courses in departments that they feel are hostile to them," the cycle will continue, said White.

White cited the fact that there is only one black professor teaching in Division III, and as a result "there won't be any black Biology majors to push for hiring of new black faculty." He also said that the Psychology department has not been receptive to blacks.

Babies Don't Thrive in Smoke-filled Wombs

When You're Pregnant, Don't Smoke!

Support the March of Dimes Preventing Birth Defects

GRADUATE STUDIES IN BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

Basic Medical Science Department

Active Research Programs

Seeking Qualified Applicants

Tuition and Stipend

Support Available

For Further Information Contact:

Graduate Committee
Department of Physiology
Albany Medical College
Albany, N.Y. 12208
(518-445-5651)

CUSTOMER INFORMATION FROM GENERAL MOTORS

HOW TO HELP SAVE LIVES AND REDUCE INJURIES AUTOMATICALLY

THREE-POINT PASSIVE SAFETY BELT SYSTEMS ARE AN EFFECTIVE COMPLEMENT TO BELT-USE LAWS.

General Motors is equipping 10% of its 1987 model cars with automatic lap/shoulder belt systems for the driver and for the right-hand front seat passenger. It is the first step in meeting a federal requirement to phase in passive restraints.

The automatic systems will be standard equipment on most 1987 models of the Pontiac Grand Am and Bonneville, Buick Somerset, Skylark, and LeSabre, and Oldsmobile Calais and Delta 88. By 1990 we plan to equip all GM cars with passive restraint systems.

The belts in the GM system will be connected to the car at three anchor points—one toward the center of the front seat, and two on the front door.

Three-point automatic lap/shoulder belt systems offer the same advantages as GM's current three-point manual systems. Lap and shoulder belts allow you to "ride down" the crash as the vehicle absorbs the impact. They also help prevent you from being thrown from the car in an accident, where you are more likely to be killed or seriously injured.

Safety belts have proved effective in reducing injuries and fatalities. That's why GM supports belt-use laws. Automatic lap/shoulder belt systems will make it even easier for people to comply with these laws.

Opening the door pulls the belts forward for entry. Closing it brings the belts into their operating position. A single push button at the center anchor point releases the system in an emergency. Retractors pull the released belts into storage positions on the door.

Extra attachment points will be built into cars equipped with these systems so you can secure most child restraint systems with an auxiliary lap belt.

General Motors is pursuing other programs that will help reduce the number and severity of injuries caused by accidents. We are designing energy-absorbing interiors. We are phasing in rear-seat lap/shoulder belts, beginning with some 1987 models—kits will be made available through GM dealers to retrofit most older cars with these systems. And we will be equipping some 1988 model cars with driver-side air bags to supplement safety belts.

General Motors has been a leader in automotive safety because we believe that building safer cars is good for you. And good for us.

This advertisement is part of our continuing effort to give customers useful information about their cars and trucks and the company that builds them.

GM MARK OF EXCELLENCE

Chevrolet • Pontiac
Oldsmobile • Buick
Cadillac • GMC Truck

'Merchant'

Continued from Page 6

lock is as prejudiced and narrow-minded as they are....'"

As far as Epel's intention goes to put the villain back into Shylock, this production falls short. And because it fails to communicate its priority, it falls short in general.

The director's intention runs into difficulties on several fronts. Epel's boldest and most visible thematic choice ultimately thwarts his aim to re-accuse Shylock. His choice involves two usually minor characters, Salerio and Salanio, who, in this production, have been lifted out of their minor roles in order to play a sort of duo master of ceremonies.

Throughout the play, the two "friends" guide the actions of the other characters, who are physically smaller. They are often invisible to the others and seem to be in control of their behavior. They fix mistakes, like dropped knives, and dance in and out of most scenes, sometimes like puppeteers, making sure the plan is followed. At their most powerful they are harlequin embodiments of the "Fates," though they sometimes fade to lower order shadows, observing and commenting. Mark Solan '88 and James Elliot '88 are both smooth and diverse as these characters, bringing to to them the ephemeral quality which the point of view demands.

Chess piece

The controlling presence of these two steals a certain autonomy from the other characters, including Shylock, and not only deprives the more psychologically expository scenes of their integrity, but renders Shylock a chess piece who can hardly be blamed for being moved from one square to another. It is difficult to highlight villainy when the power of choice is removed.

Stephanie Bond '88, who plays Portia, is another reason that Epel's message about Shylock fails to come through, though she cannot be blamed. Her subtle and convincing performance brings a life to Portia that Howard Patlis '88, as Shylock, cannot match. The text of the play and Bond's acting ability allow Portia to sometimes usurp control from the "friends." With struggles like this going on, and the psychiogical complexity of Portia being brought to light, Shylock — an often flat character in Patlis' hands — seems all the more a weak, impotent victim of events. Patlis did much better when Shylock was being light hearted and these were his more solid moments. But the big chance to find the real villainy in Shylock, to create an autonomous, complex human being was lost by both the actor and the director.

Unshirkingly bold

The set and costumes, designed by Arden Fingerhut and Deborah Brothers of the theater department, are, as always, unshirkingly bold and innovative, while remaining sensitive to the intentions of the production. Unfortunately, the actors were confronted with a formidable combination of small irregular spaces and big, billowy costumes; they couldn't quite maneuver the space as well as Epel's flair for movement asked them to. In lieu of the task, though, they did a more than respectable job.

Over all, the actors keep this production moving, and in the latter part of the show things come together a little more, producing some worthy comedy and a few moving moments. Though most of the actors aren't up to the language, they manage to be understood. Bond has the emotional foundation to support the language, is comfortable with it, and she, with the help of the very smooth Salerio and Salanio, make this show much better.

Epel's bold choices, though at odds finally, do provide intriguing and novel moments. If only it were clear what Shylock is and how we're supposed to see him, when he stands ruined in the end, converted to a Christian, behind a pane of smoked plexigiass.

King's Liquors
Purveyors of Strong Waters Since 1946
10% off any cash wine purchase
15% off any cash purchase of Moet & Chandon White Star Champagne
or
Perrier-Jouet Grand Brut Champage
WITH THIS COUPON
ask about case discounts
On Spring Street In Williamstown
458-5948 Open Till 11:00 PM

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

PIZZA HOUSE
"we make our own dough fresh daily"
Hot Oven Grinders
Spaghetti - Greek Salad
664-6279 or 663-3770
14 varieties of Pizza
We deliver four or more pizza orders to Williams College - Just call ahead
117 Main St. (Corner Eagle) North Adams

This holiday season, get the "Write Stuff" at the right price.

Now you can get the competitive edge when classes begin in January. With a Macintosh™ personal computer, and all the write extras.

We call it the Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle. You'll call it a great deal! Because when you buy a Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle before January 9, 1987, you'll receive a bundle of extras—and save $250.

Not only will you get your choice of a Macintosh 512K Enhanced or a Macintosh Plus, you'll also get an Image Writer™ II printer, the perfect solution for producing near letter-quality term papers or reports, complete with graphs, charts, and illustrations.

Plus, you'll get MacLightning, the premier spelling checker containing an 80,000 word dictionary with options for thesaurus, medical or legal dictionaries. Together with your favorite Macintosh word processing software, you can transform your notes into the clearest, most letter perfect papers you ever turned out. And turned in on time.

What's more, there's a Macintosh Support Kit filled with valuable accessories and computer care products from 3M.* Complete with all the things you need to keep your Macintosh running long after you've graduated.

Let us show you how to get through college better, faster, and smarter. Stop in and see us for more information.

*Offer Good While Supplies Last. © 1986 Apple Computer Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. Macintosh and ImageWriter are trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. MacLightning is a trademark of Target Software Inc.

Columbia University
Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation

The Shape of Two Cities: New York/Paris

Special Undergraduate Program A junior year introduction to architecture, urban planning, and historic preservation for students who have completed their sophomore year at an accredited college or university. Students spend the fall semester in New York at the Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation and the spring semester in Paris at Columbia's studio and classroom facility in the historic Marais district.

Application forms and additional information may be obtained from:

Dean of Admissions
Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation
400 Avery Hall
Columbia University
New York, New York 10027
(212) 280-3510

Lady Runners take 10th as Conklin leads team

by Cathy Cocks

Avenging losses to several NESCAC teams at an earlier meet, the Women's cross country raced to an unexpectedly strong 10th place finish at Saturday's Division III New England meet at Southeastern Mass. University. With thirty teams participating, the highly competitive NESCAC schools took six out of the top ten team places and will send several individuals to the Nationals next week.

The Ephwomen were led by senior captain Becky Conklin who ran very well despite back and knee injuries, finishing 49th in a field of over 200 runners. Following Conklin were Anne Knott '88 in 56th, sophomore Anne Thompson '89 in 66th, Sarah Pierce '88 in 81st, and Kate Pugh '87 in 93rd. Rounding out the varsity squad were Cathy Cocks '89 and Sarah Hams '89 placing 94th and 98th respectively.

Times on the flat, grassy 5000 meter course were slower than last year's due to mud and wind, but the Ephwomen ran competitively, forming an impressive pack with only 45 seconds separating Conklin and Hams. Overall, the team turned in its best effort of the year in this final meet of the season.

Soccer takes Little Three

Continued from Page 14

Walker had eight goals and six assists. Weiner, although he played right defensive back all four years, had five also. Von Estorff scored six career goals, most of which were crucial game-winners. John Austin, in his three years on varsity, put in three, and Deveaux, the backbone of the defense, had a goal and three assists.

Defensively, Deveaux and Weiner were extremely solid and intelligent players. Russo said, "Helge has been one of the most consistent performers I've seen. As for Jon, I can't say enough about him."

Brad Bryan has had an impressive career in goal. For two years he waited patiently behind perhaps Williams' best-ever goalkeeper Ted Murphy '85, who set a record with ten shutouts in his final season. After sharing net duties in '85, Bryan asserted himself and provided much leadership for the team. Russo noted, "Brad worked very hard and really came into his own this season."

Captains will be missed

Deveaux and Wright together have been an incredible force in Williams soccer. Wright's effort and intensity will remain legendary, while Deveaux has been perhaps the most solid defensive player for Williams in the past four years. Deveaux bred confidence in the defense and was cause for much frustration by many opponents over the years. Keepers Murphy, Bryan, and Rob Blanck '89 surely rested easier knowing he was there.

Coach Russo had much praise for his captains: "There is no substitute for the competitiveness of a Denny Wright or a Jon Deveaux," he said. "They do not like to lose, and do not accept failure. Their desire to excel became contagious and spread to the entire team. They gave the team so much leadership, confidence, and courage."

Still, Russo sounded hopeful for the future. "This year's freshman class is also very strong," he commented. Indeed starters Dan Calichman, Doug Brooks, Rob Swann and reserves Ambi Stern and Geoff Igharo provide much reason for optimism. Masters, Blanck in goal, and juniors Nachamkin, Kurt Schroeder, and Mike Morris will anchor a younger but very capable team.

The main obstacle next year, according to Russo, will be to sustain the mental climate cultivated by Deveaux and Wright, among others. "We have the physical attributes, but we'll have to work on the intangibles — the mental attributes."

The Ephs' schedule will be tough next year as the overall quality of the teams has improved, and also Bates will be replaced by 9-3-2 Hamilton. Williams has the second-toughest schedule in its league according to a strength-of-index calculation.

Ephmen run to 16th in New England

by Steve Brody

The men's cross-country team ended its season Saturday at the NCAA Division III New England Regional meet in Dartmouth, Mass. The Ephmen ran to a 16th place finish behind Bates — who was ranked 4th nationally — but will not go on to the national meet as a team, however, because of a NESCAC rule prohibiting post-season competition.

The Ephmen were led by senior Dave Grossman's 32nd place finish in 25:45. Jon Fisher '87 ran a strong second on the team to finish in 62nd place. Aside from these two runners no one else ran to form, ending coach Peter Farwell's goal of placing in the top ten.

Dave Glendon '88, Dave Prockop '87, and Tom Fitzgibbon '87 took to the Taconic during men's cross-country action earlier this fall. (LeBauer)

Despite a disappointing end, the season was a highly successful one for Williams. Highlighted by the team's 16th Little Three Championship in the past 17 years and Grossman's individual Little Three Title, the season saw the emergence of a core of five talented seniors that led the team as Grossman, Fisher, Dave Prockop, Mike Coyne, and Mark Gilrain were the impetus behind all Eph victories. Seniors Marco Curnen, John Phay and Billy Gilianders contributed to the varsity and JV teams. Sophomore Gil McCabe improved greatly over last year to become a contributor on the varsity squad.

The Ephmen finished with a 5-2 mark in the dual and tri-meets, losing only to highly ranked MIT and Tufts, and were fifth in the NESCACS. A strong group of newcomers helped the freshman team to win two of its three meets and to lift the JV to the Little Three Championship. The top two freshman, Dale Johnson and Peter Stewart, ran varsity for most of the season with Johnson breaking into the top seven.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST
9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717

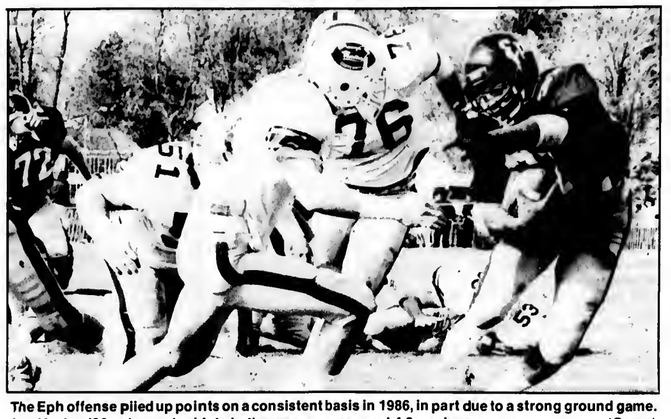
Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE GENUINE
This week's recipients are all the teams that captured Little Three titles. Ephs, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

THE CLIP SHOP
Call for an appointment or just walk in.
Always special discounts for students
49 Spring St. Williamstown, MA 413-458-9167 413-458-8585
125 North St. Bennington, VT 802-442-9823 802-447-2648
122 North St. Pittsfield, MA 413-442-6903 413-447-9576
SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTERS
THE SALONS THAT MAKE THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OK AND EXTRAORDINARY

Little Three split leaves Ephmen with 4-4 mark

by Al Mottur

More than a week now has passed since the football team's season-ending, heartbreaking 10-7 loss to Amherst, ending the season at 4-4. It was a campaign that showed promise for the future as a group of talented freshman and sophomores filled in beyond expectations in key starting positions and utility roles. Unfortunately it was a year that marked the end of the careers of many gifted and hard working seniors.



The campaign commenced in early September as the squad travelled to Middlebury to visit the Panthers. The Ephs racked up a gritty 17-7 win in slippery, muddy conditions. Defensively, it was senior linebacker Dan McCarthy who shone, as he picked off two Panther passes and led the team in tackles for the day.

The next week the team returned home to face a talented Hamilton squad and fell 41-20. Despite the seemingly lopsided loss, the Ephmen amassed a mere 10 yards less than their opponents offensively, displaying a capability to compete with a talented team. The Ephs evoked that ability to the fullest the following week as they stunned a Trinity squad that was ranked 1st in New England by a 27-16 score.

Pivotal Trinity win

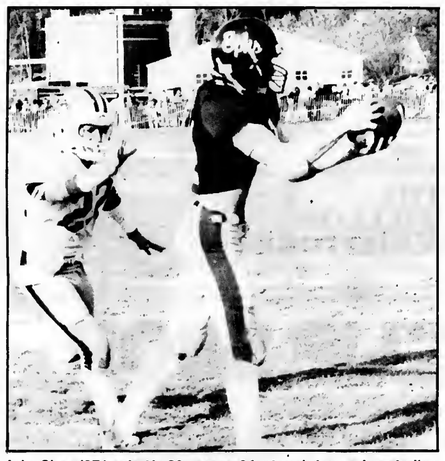
The game was pivotal for the rest of the season: it marked the birth of the strong passing attack that performed well for most of the season under Scott Kennedy '89. The upset established a confident mindset for the Eph players, helping the team in its upcoming contests.

Following the Trinity game, the team embarked on a two game road swing, first taking on Bowdoin and then Tufts. In the Bowdoin game, the team displayed its clear superiority as it rolled up a convincing 28-7 victory.

The Eph offense piled up points on a consistent basis in 1986, in part due to a strong ground game. Jon Horton '90, who peaked late in the season, averaged 4.2 yards per carry. (Camp)

Having risen to 3-1, the team played a game it would rather forget as it was humiliated 33-3 at Tufts. "We were overconfident going into the game and it cost us," said coach Bob Odell. Despite the loss, the team still stood at 3-2 as it entered the key stretch of its schedule: the Union, Wesleyan, and Amherst games.

Against Union, a team that was undefeated and ranked ninth in the nation, Williams played perhaps its best football of the year, losing 29-26. Catching everyone by surprise, the Ephs stood toe-to-toe with the Dutchmen for sixty minutes, threatening to pull off an improbable upset down to the very last play.



The loss, odd as it may sound, gave the squad added confidence heading into the final two games with the Little Three Title on the line. Accordingly, that confidence came through as the Ephs pounded Wesleyan 42-28, delighting a large homecoming crowd and setting up the dramatic but disappointing season finale with the Lord Jeffs at Amherst.

Heartbreaking finale

In the season-ending loss, tailback Jon Horton '90 produced the best game of any Eph runner all year in the worst of conditions. His performance (133 yards on 23 carries), along with the stalwart Eph defensive corps, almost provided an inspiring victory. But it was not to be as Amherst held off a late Williams threat just three yards from the Lord Jeff goal line, preserving the victory and giving Amherst the Little Three title for the fifth straight year.

In reviewing the team's season, the Kennedy-to-John Shaw connection stands out. Shaw, a senior split end, hauled in 30 passes for six TDs as he baffled opponents all year long with his picture perfect patterns and magnificent aerial grabs. And it was no coincidence that it was Kennedy who was throwing to the gifted wideout. The sopho-

Continued on Page 11

John Shaw '87 hauled in 30 passes, 6 for touchdowns, in a sterling cap to his career, as the Ephs went 4-4. (Camp)

Final Football Stats

Scoring

Name	TD	FG	PAT	Total
John Shaw '87	6	0	0	36
John Birgbauer '90	0	4	20	32

Rushing

Name	Att.	Yds.	Avg.	Per. G
Neal Chesley '90	63	215	3.4	72
Jon Horton '90	59	245	4.2	61
Mike McLaughlin '90	70	252	3.6	32

Passing

Name	Att.	Com.	Pct.	Yds.
Scott Kennedy '89	165	84	51	1102
Rob Gotti '89	21	7	33	62

Receiving

Name	No.	Yds.	Avg.	TD
John Shaw '87	30	587	19.6	6
Jim Poulsen '87	20	285	14.3	2

8-4-2 soccer season fails to earn ECAC playoff bid

by Greg Leeds

During the past four years the men's soccer team, under the direction of coach Michael Russo, has compiled an impressive 40-13-7 record, one of the best in New England Division III. They have outscored their opponents by an incredible 119 to 45 margin. They have been consistently ranked in the top ten in New England Division III and have competed in the ECAC tournament for four consecutive seasons prior to this one. This year they finished 8-4-2.

The team won the Little Three title three of the last four years, and during this time never lost to arch rival Amherst, winning three regular season matches, tying one, and also defeating the Lord Jeffs in the playoffs once.

The team in 1986 outscored its opponents by 32-17. Mike Masters '89 was chosen by his teammates as Most Valuable Player and led the team with 8 goals and an assist. Nikolai Nachamkin '88 was selected as next year's team captain and was second in scoring with 4 goals and 4 assists.

The Most Improved Player award went to senior Eric Von Estorff, who had two of his three goals against Amherst in the final and finest game of his career. Finally, the Fox Award, recognizing sportsmanship, leadership, and integrity, was jointly awarded to senior co-captains Denny Wright and Jon Deveaux.

Seniors Helge Weiner and Wright, along with Masters were all named to the New England Intercollegiate All-Star Team and competed on Sunday in the all-star game.

'Best recruiting class'

This year's group of seniors have been largely responsible for Williams' consistent success. The seven seniors on this year's team have proven themselves to be the best recruited group of players from a single class in Williams soccer history. Said Russo, "The class of '87 was the best recruiting class we've had in terms of numbers. They have provided a tremendous amount of leadership and have established a winning mental attitude which has helped this team immeasurably."

These seniors have been responsible for more than one third of the goals scored during the past four years. Wright leads the class with 17 career goals and nine assists. Scott

Continued on Page 13

Aggressive play, as exhibited here by Kurt Schroeder '88, aided the soccer team on its way to a 8-4-2 season. (Camp)

Final Soccer Stats

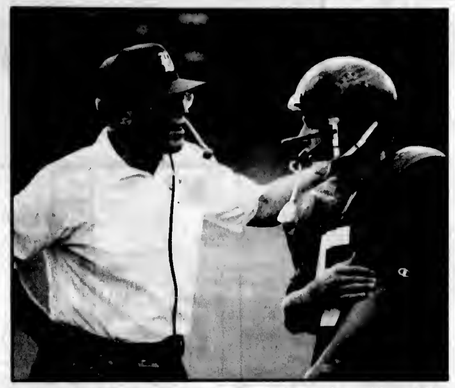
Name	G	A	Pts.
Mike Masters '89	8	1	9
Nikolai Nachmkin '88	4	4	8
Denny Wright '87	5	2	7
Scott Walker '87	3	4	7
Doug Brooks '90	4	2	6

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 10 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE NOVEMBER 25, 1986

Odell fails in bid for 1 more year

by Al Mottur
and Cliff Peale



Football Coach Bob Odell announced his retirement on Friday after 40 years of coaching, 16 of them at Williams. College President Francis Oakley informed Odell Wednesday that his two-year contract which expired this year would not be extended, according to Odell. Oakley refused to comment.

Odell was expected all season long to step down but he reconsidered after the season-ending loss to Amherst on November 8. Following this change of heart, Odell approached Oakley last Monday and requested a one-year renewal of his contract.

"I was really interested in staying for one more fall. I expected next year to be a good year," said Odell. "Usually they just renew that sort of thing. But his (Oakley's) gut reaction was negative."

According to E. Wayne Wilkins, a member of the Board of Trustees, these decisions are normally made through the administration. "I don't know who made the decision," he said, "the Trustees have nothing to do with hiring and firing policy."

Odell added that he did not know "what the precedent was, as to whether he (Oakley) would have to answer to anybody. I was disappointed, but there's no animosity. I don't know how others feel about it and I don't want to know."

During the 1985 season, coach Bob Odell confers with quarterback Tom Goodspeed '86. Odell resigned the coach's job on Friday. (Ruderman)

After Oakley officially told Odell of the decision last Wednesday, November 19, according to Odell, the coach called a special team meeting on Friday afternoon in which he informed his players of his retirement and of the events that had transpired over the previous five days.

Impressive record

As a head coach for 29 years, Odell compiled an impressive record of 136-104-5, previously occupying the helm at both Bucknell College and the University of Pennsylvania. At Williams, his record was 75-49-4, and he was named eastern Small College Coach of the Year in 1975. He earlier had served as an assistant at Yale and Temple and as the nine-year backfield coach at Wisconsin, travelling to the Rose Bowl once.

Odell as a player was a star running back at the University of Pennsylvania in the mid-forties. He won the Maxwell Trophy, awarded to the nation's best player, in 1943. That same year he was runner-up in the Helsman Trophy voting and was named to four separate All-American teams, including the one chosen by the Associated Press.

According to Athletic Director Robert Peck, the school will conduct a traditional search to find a new head coach. Players and coaches expressed the hope that Odell's successor come from within the present staff. Defensive Backfield Coach

Continued on Page 9

At forum, students debate divestment

by Tracey Blankenship

Students and professors debated the college's policies regarding its investments in companies with South African operations — as well as issues such as racism on campus — at a panel discussion Thursday sponsored by the College Council.

The meeting was billed as a debate on whether or not American corporations should remain in South Africa or pull out, but it also served as a forum on racism and the college's policy of disinvestment advocacy.

The 90-minute program filled Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. It concluded with a period of questions from the audience.

"Morally wrenching"

College Provost Neil Grabois, a member of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR), said that the problem of apartheid is "morally wrenching," and that "for us, racism at home has made us particulary sensitive to a country whose policy is racism."

Grabois said that already "the college has sold millions of shares" of stock in companies that have interests in South Africa. Many companies, he continued, had made it "quite clear" that Williams' divestment of interests in their companies would please them so "we would get off their backs."

The college can exercise leverage over American companies actions in South Africa and, despite its relatively small amount of stock, can help to persuade companies to withdraw from the nation.

As an example of the effectiveness of this shareholder activism, Grabois cited an article about Sara Lee, Inc., whose withdrawal from South Africa bore directly on a "barrage of letters from shareholders."

Tom Williams '87, a member of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC), said he was dismayed that Williams would not divest. "Universities have a special responsibility to act on the principles on which they were founded," he said.

"Universities have a responsibility to be leading rather than apologizing, as Williams is doing," Williams added.

He cited Columbia University and University of California as two of sixty colleges and universities that have divested.

Devonya Havis '87, a Williams Black Student Union member, said that the college policy toward South Africa was directly related to the presence of racism at home.

"At the base of this issue is racism," Havis said. "The WBSU views this (college policy) as moral inconsistency — we find this repulsive."

Continued on Page 7

Record's heads roll as party pact is revealed

A major organizational rearrangement has been announced at the Record. In the wake of accusations of complicity with the police in a plot to eliminate parties on campus editors in chief R.P. DeMott '87 and John Schafer '87 have been forced to resign. The scandal also ended the careers of four other editors and a senior member of the business office.

The allegations of wrongdoing were leveled by Record News Editor John McDermott '88 and Features Editor Joe Thorndike '88. They said that a lengthy investigation had turned up documentation of several clandestine meetings between DeMott, Schafer and the Williamstown police. "It became so ludicrously obvious after a while, as if they wanted to get caught," said Thorndike, "I mean how many weeks in a row can you run a quote of the week from Chief Zolto?"

"I just feel so betrayed," said Schafer, a tear in his eye, "I tried to lend editorial direction — that's my job after all — and they turned on me. The Record has been the pouch; it's been my life. I feel so lost now."

"John and I have taken the rap for everyone else's mistakes for a year. I don't understand why this little miscalculation can't be swept under the carpet," said DeMott.

The upshot of all this is that McDermott and Thorndike have named themselves editors in chief. In addition, they fired seniors Joe Ehlers, Tom Ewing, Sue Ann Mervine, Cliff Peale, and Steve Theodore.

Ehlers, who was co-editing the News department with McDermott and had previously edited the Op-ed section, was let go because of questionable allegiances, according to Thorndike. "If there was a chance to make a buck you can bet Joe was in on it. He's a mercenary," said Thorndike.

Thorndike added that Op-ed Editor Ewing and Sports Editor Peale were instigators on the staff. "If there was an opportunity for mischief those two were to be involved." Schafer expressed bitterness that these two supplied the evidenece that doomed him, "I thought they were loyal. I was their mentor. I loved them like sons."

The managing editor, Theodore, and Business Manager Mervine were dismissed for being negligent. McDermott said, "We got suspicious when we never saw them around the office."

Continued on Page 7

Log will serve lunch weekdays

by Jocelyn Shadforth

Beginning next semester, lunch will be served at the Log Monday through Thursday, in an effort to encourage student-faculty communication. Administrators hope the meal program, approved unanimously two weeks ago by the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL), will begin during the Winter Study Period, Dean of the College Stephen Fix said.

Fix said that the Log will not be in competition with restaurants on Spring Street. He encouraged the CUL to set up a subcommittee in order to re-evaluate the plan in mid-April and announced his intention to meet with members of Food Service in order to arrange advertising and publicity for the new meal service.

According to committee member Hans Humes '87, the CUL was concerned about "the definite lack of communication between faculty and students," and views the lunches as "killing two birds with one stone by creating new ways to use the Log."

Humes acknowledged the possibility that students might go by themselves to the Log and said, "It's going to be tough in appraising the success of the idea, but the point is to get out and bring a professor to the Log."

The College hopes to begin serving lunch at the Log Mondays through Thursdays before the beginning of the second semester. (Albright)

Assistant Director of Food Service Karl Kowitz said that a full-time cook and two part-time assistants will be hired to work as the Log, but he said there will be no major remodeling of the Log kitchen.

The major difficulty right now, according to Kowitz, will be setting up an Identicard modem to check student's ID cards.

Kowitz said the menu at the Log will be a reduced version of that served at the regular dining halls, including cold meats, soup, salad, and possibly one hot entree. He said disposable utensils would be used.

Not the same meal

Log Manager David LaMarre said he hoped students "don't get the idea that they can get the same meals that are served at Baxter. We don't have a production kitchen."

The size of the Log is also a consideration. LaMarre said that the maximum lunch capacity will probably run around 120 although, "We (the Log staff) have no idea what turnout will be."

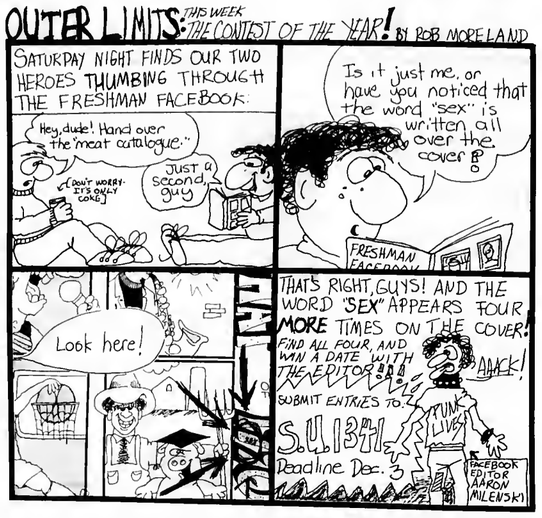
LaMarre said, "We will just have to play it by ear. We don't want to see 20 students here but we also don't want to see 200."

He said he was frustrated by the "dozens of little subcommittees who decide 'This is what the Log needs, we'll revitalize the Log'" without talking to the people at the Log first. LaMarre said that on the average the Log has held one special function a night since the beginning of the semester.

November 25, 1986

Actions speak louder than words

The College Council referendum on divestment gives the student body a chance to debate not only how the college handles companies that do business in South Africa but also how the college handles political debate.



The Record has endorsed divestment, but we also recognize that the issue is not cut and dry. Though there is no debate that apartheid is repugnant, it is not so easy to preach what is best for South Africans. Our position is that the college's disinvestment advocacyis agimmickto shift the onus of divesting from the stockholder to the company. The college admits the slim prospects for success of corporate constructive engagement and has taken the first step towards divestiture by pledging to pressure companies to withdraw operations from South Africa. But without a timetable to divest from recalcitrant companies, divestment advocacy is an empty gesture.

To those of us who advocate one position while still recognizing the validity of some counter-arguments, the acrimonious tone taken by the moral absolutists is unduly divisive. Pro-divestment advocates have called the Record, ostensibly an ally, "reactionary" and stung sympathetic college council officers by using the label "racist." This self-righteous attitude is intolerant and only slightly better than the conduct of the vandals who stole the crosses from Baxter lawn.

The Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition deserves sole credit for making divestment the issue. But at the same time, WAAC deserves the blame for setting the caustic tone of debate. What WAAC must realize — and we know from experience that it rejects even friendly advice — is that much of the campus supports its purported cause. Leaving up their crosses to the point of aggravating everyone, firing off perjoratives like "racist" indiscriminately, and claiming their right to protest supercedes the need for dialogue, WAAC has alienated many potential supporters.

Leading up to the referendum, rational debate must prevail. There are valid arguments on both sides, just as there are offensive tactics by both extremes. No one has a monopoly on morality.

The Record position, for what it's worth, is that because the apartheid regime represents such an affront to so many people, the least an investor can do is remain neutral. By investing in companies that operate in South Africe, thus supporting the status quo, Williams has forfeited that neutrality. The time has come to divest.

Letters

Banks

To the Editor:

For the past few weeks several Mass-PIRG members have been working on a study of the different banking services in Williamstown and on a survey of Williams students and their banking needs. We have found that while there is a variety of services at different rates at the four banks in town, most students apparently assume there is little difference between them and start accounts without first seeing what is available.

This has led many people to hold accounts which cost much more in fees and service charges than others. Our report, to be released on Tuesday, December 2 in Baxter, outlines the different rates and services available, and can help everyone make an informed decision which may well save them money. We urge everyone to check it out.

James McGill '89
Joe Mellusi (EX)

Mailroom

To the Editor:

It seems like the message in my recent letter to the Record (Nov. 18) was wrong, poorly expressed, and showed poor judgement, and I would like to apologize to the mailroom workers and Betty Belding for the trouble I have caused them.

I misrepresenteed the situation, if there is a situation at all. The day the letter was published, I talked to one of the mailroom workers who set me staight on as few things. First, the workers in the room do not read other student's post cards. They wouldn't, because it is illegal and unethical, and even so, it wouldn't be interesting to them, it would have to be their's or a close friend's. To say that they read the mail was equivalent to slander and has caused the college community to form the mistaken opinion that the student workers and their supervisor are crooked. Second, when they are done with their work, they occassionally read the magazines or the catalogs when they come in, but that is hardly what my letter said.

When I "saw" the mail room workers reading the mail, I saw something that wasn't happening. I saw the students looking at the junk mail and the back of the post cards and talking and laughing, and at the same time was told that the mailroom workers read the mail, and I assumed that was what I was seeing. I should have made the more proper assumption that they were checking the mail for box numbers or that they were reading their own mail as they worked.

Furthermore, I should have talked to Ms. Belding, the mailroom supervisor, before I put my allegations in print. I would like to thank her for pointing that out. As I now realize, a letter to the Record was not an appropriate means of expressing my message.

Finally, I would like to thank Ms. Belding and the mailroom workers for being patient. They could have responded by simply publishing their own letter in the Record, but by addressing me personally instead, they showed me by action a better way of handling the situation. I would like to express my thanks and my apologies.

Jennifer Krouse '89

Crosses

To the Editor:

I am but a freshman, and I admit that it is not without some nalve objectivity and passivity that I have watched the Baxter Lawn cross situation develop. As "situation" evolves toward "farce", however, I feel compelled to share my simple, yet not undemanding, solution with the Williams community. I beg the community, in the interest of ending this ever-weirder fiasco, first to return to our most basic facts.

First, the South African government's policy of apartheid legally oppresses the majority of its people on the basis of race alone.

Secondly, hundreds of South African blacks have been murdered, and countless others wounded or imprisoned, by the South African government in the last few years.

Every American citizen has tacitly or otherwise, accepted a Constitution and Declaration of Independence which clearly condemns such governments.

Meanwhile — far, far away — a small liberal arts college squabbles over the intentions and aesthetics involved in maintaining a lawn full of metaphorical crosses.

I, therefore, do hereby suggest the following logical course of action for the Williams community:

A single one hundred-foot flashing neon cross should be erected on Baxter Lawn. The cross would be gold, green, and black and would be visible from both Pittsfield and Bennington. It would be set in a thirty-foot deep cement foundation, thus discouraging the racist hooligans (as they well might be) who are known to seek the destruction of such monuments (As there would now be room to play frisbee and to cross-country ski, however, many such hooligans would likely be placated to the point of dormancy in the first place).

The names of every WAAC member should appear, in neon, somewhere on the cross, along with, if possible, a facial portrait of easy identification with their admittedly noble cause.

Every member of the Williams community who supports our school's divestment, yet who finds the three-ring circus on Baxter Lawn reprehensible, work toward a productive means of communicating the need for divestment,

Continued on Page 7

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... R. P. DeMott and John Schafer
NEWS ..... Joe Ehlers, John McDermott
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley, and Joe Thorndike
OP-ED ..... Tom Ewing
SPORTS ..... Cliff Peale
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright, Mike LeBauer
MANAGING EDITOR ..... Steve Theodore
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Debbie Snyder, Hal Wells
ASSISTANT SPORTS ..... Al Mottur, C. Steward Verdery
ASSISTANT OPED ..... John Canty
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
NEWS WRITERS ..... Peter Balaban, Tracey Blankenship, Scott Blasdell, Karen Costenbader, Alysa Doyle, John Felkner, Craig Gangl, Alexandra Glover, Paul Kwon, Meredith Miller, Dan O'Connor, Jocelyn Shadforth, Sue Silverman, James Spallone, Meg Thomas, Mark Trumbull, Allison Wertheim, Rob Wilmers
FEATURES WRITERS ..... Beth Broadrup, Sunita Duggal, Mike Erard, Marilyn Germano, Chuck Goforth, Jim Hartnett, Caroline Koeppel, Bill O'Brien, Alex Oh, Charles Samuelson, Lisa West
SPORTS WRITERS ..... Sean Brennan, Steve Brody, Cathy Cocks, Steph Jacon, Jim Jordan, Greg Leeds, Marc McDermott, Megan McNeill, Chuck Samuelson
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS ..... Stephanie Brown, Danielle Dixon, Kathy Ryan, Katrina Spragins, Eda Suh
BUSINESS ..... Sue Ann Mervine
CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA, and reentered, at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to Rico Baxter Hall, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Club Bacchus and the Feminist Alliance: an investigation into campus stereotypes Corinna Lamb and Chris Jepson, members of the Feminist Alliance and Club Bacchus respectively, were interested in comparing student views of these two prominent student organizations. In the right column are an assortment of quotes collected during their investigation; below are their own personal views on the other person's organization.

by Corinna Lamb '88

Before starting this article, I was quite critical of Club Bacchus. I knew a little about the club from their all-campus parties, which were rowdy but fun. Besides having parties, I had no idea what their purpose was, except maybe to drink and relate their sexual experiences. There were many rumors about what went on at their meetings, but it was difficult to know whether they were true, since the Happy Hours were for men only.

Last year, I had mistakenly walked in on a Bacchus Happy Hour with another woman, thinking it was rugby beer practice. I quickly realized it was not, as twenty-five large men yelled at us to leave, shouting, "Get out!" and "Stella!" (whatever that means). Feeling threatened, my friend and I left. Afterwards, the president of Bacchus came and apologized four times for their behavior.

Needless to say, this experience did not endear me to the club. To be excluded from a group because of one's sex is unfair, but what was worse was the way my friend and I were treated, being shouted at by otherwise normal Williams men, some of whom were my friends. I wondered how the people I knew and liked as individuals could act so differently in a group.

On the one hand, I can understand the desire of both men and women to be alone with those of their own sex sometimes. Chris Leitz '88, one of the vice-presidents of Bacchus, and other members, explained that Bacchus gave the men a chance to relax with friends without having the pressure of a co-ed environment. Leitz observed that men tend to act differently around women: "People tend to act affected in a co-ed group."

The Feminist Alliance also has an element of exclusivity to it. Although its meetings are co-ed, they have occasional all-women's parties. Their reason for these segregated parties is that they offer women a chance to "let their hair down" and enjoy themselves with other women free from the male-dominated atmosphere of Williams.

Yet I know that some of the men who were turned away from that party said they felt quite upset by the women's hostility, probably very similar to the way my friend and I had felt at Bacchus. I wonder if the women's behavior is any more legitimate than the Bacchus member's behavior? People in a selective group may feel justified in behavior that would not be accepted in another situation.

I was surprised from talking with Leitz how exaggerated some of the rumors about Bacchus meetings were. I had envisioned the men discussing sex and very little else, but

Continued on Page 7

by Chris Jepson '88

I didn't know exactly what to expect about the Feminist Alliance. My only knowledge of the group was that they held all-women parties. I think it was the exclusivity of these parties that made me feel threatened by the organization. I felt that if men aren't allowed, then what are they doing? As I entered Hardy House and headed up the stairs to attend a weekly Feminist Alliance meeting, I expected to be confronted with a large room packed with women, with one woman standing in front inciting the rest.

What I found, however, was just the opposite. The room was smaller than the double-room in which I live, there were only about fifteen women present, and there were two men. Honestly, before the meeting I had envisioned the women asking me where I stood on issues and myself cast in the role of defending my sex. This obviously did not occur. As I sat on the floor next to the front door, the meeting went on without anyone acknowledging my presence. What I discovered, while listening to these women discuss why this year's all-women's party had not encouraged the controversy which last year's party had, is that the Feminist Alliance is not a well-defined group. There appears to be two camps under one heading; a group that stands strongly for feminism and another that views the organization as a chance for women to discuss and resolve the problems that arise from being a woman at Williams College.

As the meeting progressed, I felt more and more comfortable, realizing not that these women felt no hatred toward men but more that they felt strongly toward the concerns of women. The relatively small number of women present puzzled me. Out of the thousand or so women on this campus there would be many who would benefit from the open conversation that I was witnessing.

I now feel that the Feminist Alliance is a legitimate organization as well as an organization for which there exists a need on this campus. Problems with the group, however, do exist. The first and probably the biggest flaw I found was that the Feminist Alliance appears to have no underlying goal. They appear to be torn between being an activist group and a more mainstream organization discussing what it is like to be a woman at Williams. These women are faced with becoming one or the other because as they presently stand I don't feel they possess unification or a strong campus identity. I suggest that a more mainstream approach would be of a greater benefit to Williams women, yet I do sympathize with women with strong feelings towards feminist issues. A possible solution for this "divided" group could be a separation resulting in the two organizations pursuing respective goals.

Quotes

Anne Mallory '88: "Obsessed with being macho, obsessed with beer, but being macho at the expense of women."

William Aprill '89: "They get together and have a group regression ... They do things that are socially unacceptable: the fighting, the breaking of stuff, and they do it in a group that encourages it."

Katie Keasler '88: "The Feminist Alliance is more uptight (than Club Bacchus), many men and women feel turned off by the intellectual elitism of these women. They think that they're angry and spiteful."

Phil Culhane '88: "I think there's a general need for the Feminist Alliance, because it raises important issues."

Kate Macko '88: "I think a lot of women feel uncomfortable with the idea of women being together in a group. There is a lot of competition between women, and they're often driven apart, but after you've been at Williams for a while you see how split up the women's community is, and you begin to see the need for a women's group."

Steve Browning '87: "There should be a group to look after women's issues ... There's nothing productive about a women's party. It serves no end other than further segregating the campus."

Scott Berman '88: "I think the club (Bacchus) is misunderstood. It's a bunch of guys who want to get together and have fun, doing things that they might be uncomfortable doing with girls around. I don't think there's any more violence there than at any other parties. It's exaggerated because of the stereotype."

Helen Curtis '88: "Women's parties give women a chance to interact with each other without having to worry about impressing guys. At a co-ed party you're still really conscious of men."

Andy Lewin '88: "If any guys' organization had an all-guys party, people would scream."

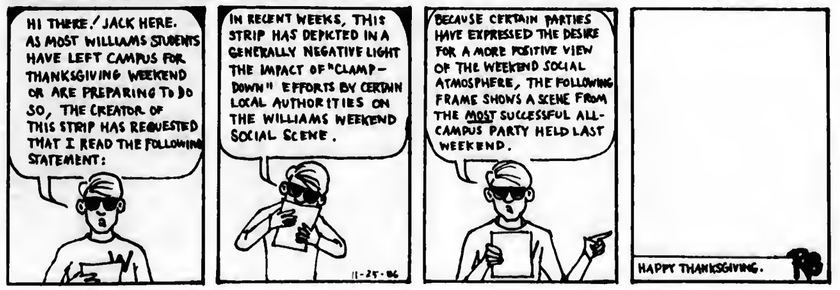
Barton George '87: "I had a great time at Bacchus' last party. It seemed really efficiently run. You go to Bacchus because that's where all the 'cool' people will be. Although for some people it's the exact opposite."

Jim Jordan '87: "If Chief Zoito wanted to bust a women's party, would they let him in?"

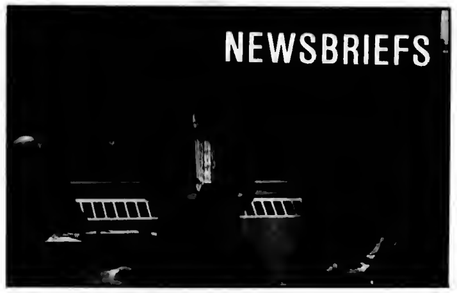
Williams' mark of Cain

by Jeffrey Weinstein '87

The Trustees will be reluctant to allow any progress to be made toward divesting while the campus atmosphere remains one of activism. They realize that divestment has moved from being an "if" to being a "when" issue; that soon the day will come when the South African laager will draw so tightly that the produce of Williams' investment will be directed against rather than for the benefit of the South African majority. They also see that as the corporate pull-out continues, some day the opportunity costs of pulling out will make divesting a far more pleasant process for themselves. Like WAAC, the Trustees see divestment as an imminent reality. The Trustees, however, maintain their anti-divestment stance not as a response to WAAC's arguments, but as a response to WAAC's conception.



The Trustees of Williams College cannot abide by the perceptions that divestment might bow encourage. It would seem that a campus activist group had usurped their own ability to determine specifics of the Williams stock portfolio. So, instead, the Trustees will maintain their position, milking the South African situation, until the fiscal realities of the South African crisis will allow for a withdrawal. When the withdrawal comes it will be portrayed as our corporate imperative—in the best interests of the institution. By doing so, they hope to sap as much symbolism out of the act as possible in order to give a stern warning to the Williams student body and faculty that Williams is an institution which acts out of some sort of business mentality.



The Trustees fail to recognize, however, that even along the terms of the most crass consideration of self-interest, their position against divestment cannot be reconciled with the goals and concerns of the college. One of the biggest problems confronting the college administration is Williams' apparent inability to secure tenured black faculty. Dean Reichert and Ms. Nancy McIntire recently addressed the College Council on this issue. The college's vigorous campaign to round out and diversify the faculty through minority recruitment has simply failed. Factors such as demographics, location, and institutional history conspired against the program, which sought out minority graduate students as well as members of other college faculties. Despite all our wealth and good reputation, Williams remains under a state of de facto interdiction from America's minority intellectual community.

It is when the administration and the Trustees attempt any further solution to this critical problem that they will realize the toll which Williams' foot-dragging approach to divestment will cost. The American intellectual community is developing a harshly critical awareness of South African realities and how American institutions have responded to those realities. For obvious reasons, the vast plurality of the minority members of that community perceive the issues of South African oppression to be both inestimably real and immediate; as a consequence, corporate involvement in South Africa appears even more abhorrent to them than it does to the white students on the Williams campus. Very few of minority intellectual elite that we are trying to withdraw to Williams would associate themselves with an institution tied to the structures of South African racism. As our costly recruitment campaigns continue to be frustrated we will realize how great a blemish the divestment issue will make on our Liberal Arts veneer. To prospective minority candidates, I believe it will be an ugly and repellent blemish, a mark of Cain that will not easily be washed away by high salary offers and friendly smiles. The Deans' Department and the Affirmative Action Office will have many more talks to give to the College Council in coming years.

The Trustees can try to ignore the WAAC and BSU arguements for divestment. They can drop all considerations of how our stance might symbolize allegiance to the struggle of liberalism everywhere. They can even forget the implications that our investments in Botha's future have on how minority students perceive their Williams "home". But can the Trustees, with their corporate mentality, ignore the fact that their position perpetuates a costly financial liability for Williams? Can they abide by the fact that they are depriving Williams of a superior academic environment? Even speaking only in terms of immediate self-interest, the answer is still the same: Williams Must Divest Now!

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM — by Rich Gardella

Goethals to sub for Reichert

The faculty discussed the college's policy on parties and drinking at its monthly meeting Wednesday. Other issues dealt with included peer advising, the honor code and the appointment of an acting dean of the faculty for the next academic year.

Dean of the College Stephen Fix announced that he has formed a task force which will prepare a revision of college party policy during January. Fix said that certain circumstances, — the rise in the drinking age and social liability laws —have made it incumbent upon the college to change its party policy. He added that until now the college has taken an unaggressive stance towards regulating the social life of students.

College President Francis Oakley announced that Professor of Psychology George Goethals has been named acting dean of the faculty for the 1987-88 school year. Goethals was nominated by the college trustees to fill an opening created by the planned sabbatical of John Reichert, dean of the faculty and professor of English.

In a related development, theatre professor Jean-Bernard Bucky has been designated the director of the Williams-in-Oxford program for the 1987-88 academic year, Secretary of the Faculty Meredith Hoppin told the Record. Bucky will replace philosophy professor Daniel O'Connor, who is returning to Williams to teach.

Students support advising

At the meeting, Fix also discussed the new peer advising program, in which seniors will guide sophomores in selecting courses and choosing their majors. He described an "enthusiastic student response," noting that 100 seniors have signed up for the program, which will commence with a training session in January.

James Reicheld '87, president of the Honor Code Committee, assured the faculty that there will be more action involving the honor code in the future, with the minimum penalty for cheating in a course being failure. Reicheld explained that students were required under the code to report other students who have been seen cheating.

Professor Thomas Jorling, chairman of the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP), announced that the committee's status report on the curriculum was being distributed. Jorling explained that the report recommends few changes in the curriculum. He added that in the spring, the CEP would be dealing with such areas as distribution requirements and language and quantitative skills.

— F. Craig Gangi

Aselton is arraigned

Donald Aselton '88 pleaded not guilty last week to charges of selling alcohol without a license, furnishing alcoholic beverages to persons under 21, and procuring by false representation the sale or delivery of alcohol to minors. The plea came at his arraignment Wednesday in Northern Berkshire District Court in North Adams.

Aselton received a summons from police three weeks ago, after the investigation of a Club Bacchus party October 25.

A conference was scheduled for December 17, at which time Aselton's attorney will examine the Commonwealth's evidence against Aselton, who may choose a hearing either with a judge or with a six-person jury. According to Dennis D'Arcangelo, clerk of the court, the trial date will be set for two to three weeks after the conference.

Drive to fund scholars in S. Africa launched

by Paul Kwon

The second year of a fund-raising drive for the South African Scholarship Fund began last week, amid both support and criticism on campus.

The money collected will support graduate study by black South Africans at South African universities, under a program sponsored by the New England Board of Higher Education (NEBHE).

Last year the college agreed to fund one scholarship of $2,800 for a trial period of five years. At the time, College President Francis Oakley asked the community to fund a second scholarship, with the college matching each contribution dollar for dollar.

Jeff Ganz, a student at Tufts University, extolled the scholarship fund in a talk at Williams last Monday. Ganz also described his ten-day trip to South Africa, which was sponsored by NEBHE in connection with the scholarship fund. See related article, P. 8.

Ganz said the scholarship program, which currently supports about 40 students, will provide South Africa with a "critical mass" of educated blacks.

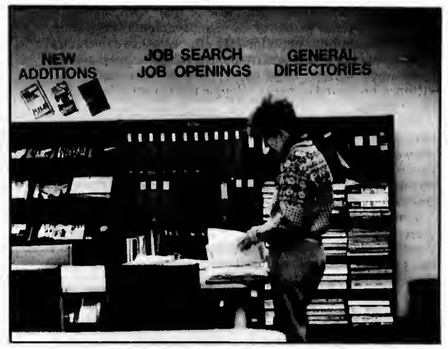
Integration predicted

"The critical mass is the point when the number of blacks reaches a certain percentage and the students become truly integrated," he said. "The scholarship fund, in sending more students to these universities, will help the number of black students approach the critical mass."

Jon Horowitch '87, who is organizing the fund drive at Williams, agreed with Ganz. "When the number of black students reaches a critical mass, they assume a more active role .... by contributing to the program, there would be more students protesting, creating less arrests," he said.

Continued on Page 9

Wall St.'s wiles shape job-hunt



by James Spallone

As members of the Class of 1987 begin to contemplate their futures, it appears that the trend toward increasing numbers of seniors entering the world of business and finance immediately after graduation will continue.

Whether attributable to a shift in values, changes in the economy, or successful recruiting campaigns, there has been a steady increase over the last decade in the number of graduates seeking jobs in finance.

According to the director of the Office of Career Counseling (OCC), Fatma Kassamali, financial consulting appears to be a very popular aspiration among seniors seeking employment immediately after graduation. Like advertising two years ago or investment banking over the last few years, consulting seems to have captured the imagination of seniors aspiring to work in the area of business and finance.

Kassamali said that certain fields enjoy periods of popularity among seniors when "alumni come back and speak enthusiastically about their jobs." She added that advertising has lost its appeal to some extent as opportunities in this area have begun to dwindle. "There are lots of mergers and acquisitions going on among advertising firms. People are losing jobs."

Peggy Williams of the Office of Career Counseling checks career information files for students. Many seniors are attracted to major financial institutions, which are able to recruit heavily on campus. (Albright)

Less investment banking?

It appears that investment banking may no longer be enjoying the mystique that has surrounded the job for the last several years. Matt McCall, a senior economics/history major, said he is interested in finance and would prefer a job in commercial banking or portfolio analysis.

"In investment banking you are required to sell your life off for two years. I have too many outside interests to do that." McCall said that as an investment banker he would have to "work twice the number of hours but not for twice the salary," of a commercial banker, and added that there appeared to be few long-run advantages to investment banking.

McCall said that through commercial banking he would be able to "learn what Wall Street is like, and where I can go," and also obtain desirable credentials for prospective business schools. McCall said he was willing to sacrifice the acceleration offered by investment banking for the less harried life of commercial banking.

Banking, perhaps unjustly, seems to have shaped the reputaion of the OCC. "A great deal of students are saying 'all they do down at OCC is find jobs for bankers,' but that's because the banks are highly visible. They have the money to hold pre-recruiting sessions," said Kassamali.

But the visibility of banks on an isolated campus like Williams may have less obvious residual effects. Sumin Eng, a senior economics/history major, noted that if a student is not pre-med or law school bound the options seem limited.

"Finance is a convenient way to start off," she said. "I'm not sure if finance is for me, but if I get a job in finance, I know it will be over in two or three years. I'll come out with skills that will be applicable in the future."

The convenience of applying to banks seems to be a factor in their popularity, but the banking houses can flatter students, as OCC assistant director Mary Lamb points out. "Some students are attracted by the sophistication and glamour reflected by the recruiters, then they throw in a resume and are called back for an interview. It's very flattering to think a company might want you to work for them."

Continued on Page 9

CUL: advisors should socialize

by Peter Balaban

Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) members last week said the social role of freshman faculty advisors should be expanded, though CUL chairman William Wagner said faculty would "hesitate" to adopt that responsibility because of time constraints.

The comments came at a CUL meeting addressing all forms of advising on campus.

According to coach Jim Briggs, who chairs a CUL subcommittee on advising, the "quantity of advising at Williams looks to be in good shape — we cover the waterfront pretty well."

Members Hans Humes '87 and Hart Murphy '88 said the social role of freshman advisors needs to be emphasized more.

Wagner said that advising freshman, as it stands now, is viewed as an academic role, but if individual faculty members are willing to devote more time to the students, they are encouraged to do so by a $15 per student stipend given to advisors to spend on activities.

Faculty may "hesitate"

"We have to be careful about impinging on faculty time," said Wagner, "because many advisors, if forced to view the program as a non-academic one that would take up more of their time, would probably drop out, leaving ten or twelve students per advisor." According to Wagner, the faculty is very open to the idea of academic advising, but "when you define advising in a social context, people begin to hesitate."

Student members of the committee felt that the role of social contact with faculty advisors should extend beyond that of simple entertainment and should serve to make freshman more comfortable with their advisors and more willing to go to them for advice.

"Advisors must have some sense of the goals, values, and interests of their students," Murphy said. This can be gained from just one or two informal meetings between students and faculty, he added.

Murphy suggested that one way to facilitate contact between freshmen and advisors would be to expand a passage on social contact in the section on academic advising in the student handbook.The section could contain suggestions on how to spend time with advisees, he said.

Briggs said that if students "want to see their faculty advisors at the beginning of their sophomore year, it's O.K."

Major imbalance

The imbalance of major advising from department to department was also touched on at the meeting. Members said they perceived a lack of structured advising in some Division I and II departments, and it was agreed upon that these departments should implement a structured advising system for majors.

Also discussed at the meeting was the role of faculty house associates. There was a consensus among CUL members that this role needs to be defined more clearly, without imposing any mandatory standards of behavior on the associates.

in other IVORY TOWERS

North Adams State

There's nothing like a nice friendly snowball fight to relieve academic pressure when the weather turns cold. But the police in North Adams don't see things the same way as students and arrested six North Adams State students for their involvement in a snowball fight during last Tuesday's snowstorm.

According to the North Adams Beacon, nearly 400 students were involved in a snowball fight that spread across the campus and into nearby residential streets. The police arrived after they received telephone calls complaining about the disturbance. Most of the students arrested were surprised to find themselves in the North Adams jail for playing with snow, and many complained of illegal and unkind treatment by the police involved. One student reported that, "the police sergeant at the station hung up the phone on him when he called to find out the fate of his friend who had been arrested." Still another student reported that, "he was not read his rights by the arresting officer, (and that) when his friends went to bail him out, the officers would not relese him."

Miscellaneous

The following are some of the results of "Student Watch '86," a survey of 4,349 randomly selected college students who answered a 29 page questionnaire about their attitudes on sex, drugs, and life in general: 56% think that sex before marriage is always or sometimes wrong, while 95% think that sex outside of marriage is always or sometimes wrong. 84% think cocaine is harmful, while 62% believe marijuana is also dangerous. Only 10% believe that alcohol has similar risks. Politically, 37% considered themselves Republicans, 31% independents, and only 28% Democrats. The average college student spends most of his/her money on clothes, blowing $187.40 a year to be trendy. Lastly, 55% of all college students own a new or used car, while 78% have their own television.

Boston University

Last week, 350 Boston University students protested the awarding of an honorary doctor of laws degree to South African Zulu Chief Mangosuthu G. Buthelezi by walking out of the awards ceremony and making speeches outside the building where he was speaking. Buthelezi, who leads six million South African Zulus, was criticized by students for being a moderate South African leader who does not favor divestment. Called a "traitor," and "a white South African in black skin" by various protestors, Buthelezi "chuckled" at the students and commented that Americans protest at "the drop of a hat." Buthelezi was invited to receive his honorary degree by the president of the University who is "an outspoken critic of sanctions and divestment."

UNC—Greensboro

The recent surge of American social conservatism has had a serious effect on the curriculum of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. New anti-obscenity laws passed in that state caused the university to remove books on human sexuality from the library, and to remove some nude paintings and drawings from campus display. Strong protest by faculty and students managed to get some of the artworks restored, but nevertheless, "nude models for life drawing will probably disappear after this semester." Most of the trouble seems to have been the result of Christian fundamentalists who pushed hard for the law and the fact that some of the students at the school are minors and hence are "protected" from seeing sexually explict materials.

University of Colorado

Sexual conservatism is not, however, limited to the South. At the University of Colorado in Boulder, sexual activity in dormatories is no longer permitted by the school. According to the student handbook, "visitation does not permit sexual activity such as sleeping together, going to bed with, cohabitating, etc." The rational behind this rule was "to protect the privacy of the host party's roommate." One should also note that premarital sex is illegal in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by ace reporter James Joseph Hartnett IV from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Trivia buffs to pull all-nighter

by Marilyn Germano

There are a number of things at Williams which make it unique among other institutions: Winter Study and a top ranking among liberal arts colleges are just two of the distinctions. There's another that probably doesn't come to mind but nonetheless deserves to be on the list: Trivia Night.

Although no exact date is known for the origin of Trivia Night, it's a pretty safe bet that it has been going on for at least 20 years. There are teams, for example, whose members graduated in the 1970's that still come back to play. Specifically, the Manhattan Skyliners is a team of alumni that have been coming back for about 10 years.

OK, now for the big question: WHAT is Trivia Night? Trivia Night is an event that takes place on the last day of classes each semester. It begins at midnight, and runs until 8 a.m. Saturday morning. Anyone who is interested can play. Great, but what happens? Well, a number of people get together to form a team, give themselves a name (usually something offbeat), and tune into WCFM at about 11:59 Friday night. For the next eight hours, participating teams answer questions about anything and everything: any subject is fair game. Normally, a question is asked, and then a song begins. Players have the length of the song to phone in responses to WCFM. These questions are worth two points: one for the correct answer, and one for the correct identification of the artist and song title.

If this is sounding dull, if the thought of answering questions and naming those tunes for eight hours doesn't appeal to you, don't despair. There is variety. Consider, for example, the hourly action trivia question: any team that wishes to participate sends some of its members to the radio station to perform whatever the question requires. Often, teams are asked to re-enact movie scenes, or perhaps to imitate a heavy metal band. Last semester, there was an action trivia question that called for the re-enactment of a scene from a Star Trek movie that needed three people; one team had a solo member perform it. There are also other hour bonuses, super bonuses (one every four hours), and last semester there was even a giant bonus question that spanned the eight hours (but it should be noted that the giant bonus didn't go over too well, since none of the teams knew the answer).

The team who wins the contest in a particular semester, as well as earning prestige, honor, and a trophy, runs Trivia Night the following semester. This means selecting and asking the questions, selecting music (most teams will recruit a DJ to do this), answering the phones, giving hints to the teams that call in—the whole deal. Really clever teams who run the show will try to match up the questions with songs related to the question topics. "Running it," said Erol Onel '88, a member of the team who was in charge of

Continued on Page 6

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Beth Broadrup; photographs by Jeff Somers.

The Record recently asked students, "What are your thoughts about WCFM's Trivia Night?"

"It's fun. It was the only all-nighter I did last year." — Kate Schiele '89

"I go down to the infirmary and sleep that night. It's a peripheral fact in my life." — Chuck Goodwin '87

"They should ask more questions about comic books, because that's the only thing I know much about." — Wendell Chestnut '88

"Why didn't they tell us about the fun things on campus?" — Jennifer Whichard '90

"If you're into trivia, it's a groovy thing." — Doug Hunt '89

"As far as I am concerned, trivia is the wave of the future, and those of us who get in on the ground floor will rule the world." — Scott Rigby '88

Suderburg solos in Friday concert

by Alex Oh

The Berkshire Symphony performed its second concert of the season on Friday, November 21, at 8:00 P.M. in Chapin Hall. Under the direction of Julius Hegyi, the orchestra performed John Harbison's Symphony No. 1 and Haydn's Symphony No. 69 in C Major. With the addition of vocal soloist Elizabeth Suderberg, they performed Richard Strauss' Four Last Songs and Sibelius' "Luonnotar".

Suderberg, an acclaimed vocalist throughout the United States and Europe, gave an elegant performance despite an inauspicious opening. The Fruhling, the first of the Strauss' Four Last Songs, was marred by a lack of coherence with the orchestra; the vocalist and the orchestra seemed a bit at odds with each other, the orchestra sounding unrehearsed and the vocalist, incomprehensible. Also, Suderberg's rather fragile voice was drowned out by the orchestra; however, as the two parties gradually warmed up to each other, the performance progressed a bit more smoothly.

The September fared a bit better, as Suderberg decidedly substantiated her acclaimed talent, and the orchestra fell into its appropriate place of accompaniment.

The last two songs, Beim Schlafengehen (Time To Sleep) and Im Abendrot (At Dusk), were well performed; Suderberg's gently elegant, yet authoritative singing evoked the subtle and melancholy mood of these songs.

The Sibelius was an even greater success for Suderberg. The "Luonnotar" is a tone poem for soprano and orchestra that is based on a Finnish national epic "Kalevala" which describes the creation of the world. Suderberg appropriately performed the piece as a story, with gestures and motions to indicate the agitation and chaos surrounding the creation of the

Continued on Page 6

Preview

Upcoming music events

The Williams Jazz Ensemble, conducted by David Kechley, will present its Fall Concert on Saturday, December 6, at 8 p.m. in Chapin Hall. Jazz clarinetist and composer Bill Smith of Seattle, will be guest performer and conductor, with a highlight being a performance of one of his works played by the Ensemble assisted by the English Handbell Choir, the Williams Flute Choir, members of the Choral Society, Octet, Ephoria, Brass Ensemble, Polephony, and many others. Also on the program is the premiere performance of Quartality by senior music major Paul Rardin.

Equally at home in jazz and "serious" music, Smith studied composition with Darius Milhaud and Roger Sessions and has won many prestigious awards. Since 1966, he has been the director of the Contemporary Group at the University of Washington. His association with Dave Brubeck began at Mills College, and he has made a number of recordings with Brubeck and others. Of his claworld. The orchestra provided a well-contained background for Suderberg's story-telling, and the two blended well to provide an exquisite performance of this relatively unusual piece.

Continued on Page 6

Symphony

Continued from Page 5

The orchestra opened the concert with Harbison's Symphony No. 1. The Harbison, very contemporary in style and sound, was somewhat unsuited to Berkshire Symphony's capabilities. Although a hearty attempt at modern sound, Hegyl conducted a lethargic and somewhat disillusioned orchestra; the inherent dissonance and odd rhythm of Harbison sounded like misplaced notes and unintended rhythmic flaws with the Berkshire Symphony. Overall, the orchestra failed to comprehend the lyrical quality of this modern piece, and the performance was disjointed, loud, raucous and cacophonic.

The Haydn Symphony, on the other hand, was performed with an unusually subdued attitude. For instance, the light and lyrical opening vivace movement was played without any of the typically Haydn bounce and life. The orchestra seemed almost afraid to insert any of its own life into the piece, and seemed to be hoping that the piece will express its own theme; however, without any sign of life in either the conductor or the orchestra, even Haydn could not evoke any form of emotional response from the audience. Technically, the piece was well-performed, with the exception of few very obvious blunders, but musically, the performance seemed lifeless and rather bland.

Trivia

Continued from Page 5

Trivia first semester last year and also a member of the WCFM staff, "is a great time, but participating is even better. Competition can get pretty fierce." That can certainly be the case. Last semester, one team sent threats of "Don't even bother to come back to the entry," via WCFM, to a traitorous entry-mate who played for another team.

"There are two types of teams that play Trivia," said Onel, "The teams who take it seriously and come complete with reference books, and the teams who use it as a way to celebrate the end of classes. But either way, everyone winds up having a great time." He offers a couple of tips for prospective players. The answer to the first question of Trivia Night is always the name of the team who won the previous semester. It is usually the only question of the evening where teams will not be given hints. And the second tip is for freshmen: "Don't name your team after your entry!" said Onel. Even though there isn't a rule against using an entry name (and by the end of the night everyone knows who you are anyway), he said it's much more fun to come up with a really bizarre name and make other teams speculate on its deep, philosophical significance.

Music

Continued from Page 5

rinet playing, Eric Salzman wrote: "William Smith's clarinet pieces, played by himself, must be heard to believe — double, even triple stops; pure whistling harmonies; tremolo growls and burbles; ghosts of tones, shrill screams of sounds, weird echoes, whispers, and clarinet twitches; the thinnest of thin, pure lines; then veritable avalanches of bubbling, burbling sound. Completely imposible except that it happened."

Admission to the concert is $3.50 (free with a Williams I.D.)

Other upcoming events in the music department include the Traditional Service of Lessons and Chorals, celebrating the Christmas season, with music provided by members of the Williams Choral Society, on Sunday December 7 at 4 and 7 p.m. in Thompson Memorial Chapel; Studio 4, student soloists and ensembles, Monday, December 8 at 4 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall; and Williams Composers' Concert, a combination of student and faculty works, including compositions by Paul Rardin, Nicole Blamonte, and David Kechley, Tuesday, December 9 at 4 p.m. in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. These events are free and open to the public.

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
Coffee House
Thursday, Dec. 4th
Carol Baker 8:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.
76 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN
NOW OPEN TIL 10
MONDAY-SATURDAY 9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
SUNDAY 10-5
Telephone (413)458-5007

St. Pierre's Barber Shop
"Roffler" hair care products for sale: shampoos, conditioners, gels, creams, etc.
413-458-5861 48 Spring Street — Williamstown, Mass. 01267

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
SALE
the Co-op
LEVI'S
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Columbia University
Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation
The Shape of Two Cities: New York/Paris
Special Undergraduate Program A junior year introduction to architecture, urban planning, and historic preservation for students who have completed their sophomore year at an accredited college or university Students spend the fall semester in New York at the Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation and the spring semester in Paris at Columbia's studio and classroom facility in the historic Marais district
Application forms and additional information may be obtained from
Dean of Admissions
Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation
400 Avery Hall
Columbia University
New York, New York 10027
(212) 280-3510

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects
Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, and faux-antique jewelry.
TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
The perfect gift for anyone on your list:
The Ultimate Alphabet Book
($15,000 grand prize)
JOIN US FOR HOLIDAY EVENTS BEGINNING DEC. 4th
Free Gift Wrapping
AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT — ORDER EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS
Literature for every taste
Now open Til 10:00 p.m.
Come visit us soon
Open from 8:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Sunday 10-5
Located next to THE LOG

Divestment Forum

Continued from Page 1

Havis said that non-divestment signified "a refusal to make a genuine commitment to the black community."

BSU "oversight"

Gail Covington '88 of the BSU told the audience that her organization was not invited to the debate. She and other speakers said that after the BSU was apparently overlooked, though she said they had an important role to play in the discussion.

'We invited ourselves," Covington said. "We feel this oversight is inexcusable."

History professor Thomas Spear, who specializes in Africa, said that American corporations do not play a role in ending apartheid.

"The idea that investment (in South Africa) can change things is wrong," he stated, noting that apartheid policies have continued amidst the heavy growth of the economy, contrary to the theories of "classic economic liberalism."

But Grabois contended that selling the college's stock "ends your moral responsibility. We have assumed a responsibility of ownership as owners," he stressed. "(The college's) views are listened to quite seriously."

"No timetable, no effect"

Several speakers criticized the disinvestment advocacy policy currently used by the college. "Because (disinvestment advocacy) has no timetable, it has no effect as well," said Martin White '87.

The level of support for divestment among South African blacks was also discussed. David Kane '88 said, "Blacks are bitterly divided about this issue .... Surveys indicate that a majority of urban South Africans do not support divestment."

College Council President Amy Jeffress said one purpose of the forum was to educate students before they vote in the council-sponsored referendum on divestment, scheduled for the week of December 1.

She said the campus-wide referendum would determine what the consensus of student opinion is on divestment by the college.

The voting will probably occur in dining halls, Jeffress told the Record. Other details were not available at presstime.

On a related note, Grabois said that a report to College President Francis Oakley on the cost of complete divestment by the college would be completed by January 1. A preliminary report has been under review by the ACSR.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

and that every such person begin by writing a personal appeal to President Oakley explaining, in detail, his or her position. I know I have, and I will do more as it becomes necessary. More, however, does not for me include attending a WAAC cross painting party featuring traditional beverages. Why not? Because the crosses have outlived their original intention and because Biko would turn in his grave to hear of such a thing.

I thank you for your attention, and urge each member of the community to stand in support of these three propositions.

James Berkley '90

E-P-P-E-L

To the Editor:

The name of the director of The Merchant of Venice is spelled Eppel. His name is David Eppel. E-P-P-E-L. This is the only comment that is necessary to make about that review. It stands for itself.

P.S. I would like to refer any interested party to consult the reviews of the Advocate and/or the Berkshire Eagle. In those, the play was understood.

Howard Patlis '88

Bacchus

Continued from Page 3

from what I learned the discussion was mostly about sports, their parties and even academics. Clearly, Bacchus is a different type of organization than the Alliance; the former is a social group while the latter is an issue-oriented group. The men are not discussing the problems of being male at Williams.

Interestingly, in talking to many people, I discovered many more men than women thought Bacchus was too exclusive. Several women thought it was sexist, but said they had no desire to be in the club anyway. But most men not in Bacchus vehemently denounced the club as elitist and said it was only catering to the athletes and partiers on campus. They felt they would not be welcome at a Bacchus meeting. There seems to be a mixture of contempt and envy towards the Bacchus members from other men.

I am not sure that Bacchus is as elitist as these men think. It certainly draws many of its members from varsity sports, but not all. Leitz, vice-president of Bacchus, who himself plays no varsity sports, said any guy could join who wanted, as long as he was supportive of Bacchus and wouldn't denounce it. However, the men who join usually have friends already in the club.

There are many questions about Bacchus left unanswered, but it seems Bacchus does have some purpose in encouraging male camaraderie, as well as being a place to drink and be wild.

Party plot

Continued from Page 1

Replacements named

In order to fill the void left by the plethora of firings, several members of the Record staff were promoted. Debbie Snyder '89 will become the news editor. She has worked as an assistant editor in the news department for the last semester and started as a reporter last year.

Al Mottur '89 and Stewart Verdery '89, both of whom have served as sports assistants for the semester, will co-edit the sports department. "Despite the fact that they worked with Peale, they're basically OK," McDermott said.

In the Op-ed department, John Canty '88 will take over the helm. He has assisted Ewing this semester and contributed several opinion pieces to the paper.

To shore up the business office, Shelly Hiatt '89 has taken over the business manager spot. She has been in charge of subscriptions for a year and will continue in this capacity as well. Russ Hollenbeck '90 has been named as advertising manager.

The aftermath

In order to keep the Record running smoothly and to circumvent further problems with the staff, McDermott and Thorndike have appointed junior Hal Wells as the senior editor. "Hal will be our eyes and ears; he's our Gordon Liddy — he'll plug up leaks," Thorndike said.

Anne O'Malley '88, formerly a co-editor with Thorndike, will now have to edit the Features department alone. "I think Joe just didn't want to write anymore headlines," she said.

The Photography department made it through the bloodbath unscathed. Co-editors Katie Albright '89 and Mike LeBauer '88 will continue at their posts. In addition, Layout Editor Sara Hansen '88 will remain at her post.

Holiday Greetings from
THE CLIP SHOP
the salon that makes the difference between OK and extraordinary.
A Gift Certificate
• Haircuts • Highlighting
• Permanents • Frostings • Tints
• Cellophane and the professional products to keep your hair looking great!
for gifts and stocking stuffers
We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-9167 (413) 458-8585
Pittsfield, Mass. (413) 447-9576 (413) 442-6903
Bennington, Vt. (802) 442-9823 (802) 447-2648

A "shocking" S. Africa described

by Paul Kwon

Tufts University junior Jeff Ganz described what he saw on a ten-day trip to South Africa as "shocking" and "eye-opening" in a talk last Monday in Weston Language Center. The trip, sponsored by the New England Board of Higher Education (NEBHE), was designed to give its members a first-hand observation of the situation in South Africa.

"When I left, people told me that I'd see that the situation wasn't as bad as publicized," Ganz said. "I found out that it was much worse."

Ganz said he wrote sixty pages of observations during the trip. He related an incident he witnessed in which a black student was dragged out of a classroom by two security officers, one white and one black.

"What shocked me the most was that the people in the hallways were standing around talking, drinking coffee, as if this was an ordinary occurrence," he said. "I followed the student into a room, where I asked a security officer what was going on. It ends up that he disrupted class. Then the security guard hit him five times, because he didn't stand up, and the other people in the room didn't even flinch."

"Amazing courage"

Ganz described the ways that South African students protest. "The protests couldn't be vocal, they had to be taken in the forms of one-day fasts ... then the students decided that this had to be lengthened to three days to create a bigger effect. The courage of these protesters amazed me."

According to Ganz, the black students attending integrated universities are restricted from campus life. "They're in the classrooms, but it ends there," he said. "The student government is all white, and the blacks didn't get involved in any groups except the Black Union. They also had no social lives."

Ganz said racism is deep-rooted in South-African society. "Once I had to take a train to a rugby match," he said. "When I saw that most of the trains had 'Whites Only' signs, it shocked me. The people in South Africa can't imagine trains without these signs."

Ganz continued, "At the rugby game, I strayed accidentally into a black section looking for a souvenir stand. I was the only white in this section of two to three thousand blacks. Maybe it was my imagination, but I felt extremely self-conscious about the people staring at me and wondering what I was doing there. It was really frightening."

Propaganda trip

Ganz also described the difficulty he experienced in communicating with black students in South Africa. "The whole trip was a propaganda-ish, public relations move. We stayed in the best hotels and had the best meals. Then when we tried to reach out to the black students about their experiences, they replied curtly, 'Look where you're staying. How can you understand the suffering that we go through?'"

During the lecture, Ganz stressed the importance of the South African Student Scholarship Fund, which provides scholarships to black students to attend several integrated universities in South Africa. "It's only a small step towards solving all the injustices there, but it's progress."

Crosses stolen, replaced

by Tracey Blankenship

Approximately 180 new crosses were hammered into the lawn in front of Baxter Hall Sunday afternoon by a group of students, including members of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC). The black crosses replaced other crosses taken from the lawn sometime early Tuesday morning.

Martin White '87, one of the WAAC members who erected the new crosses, said replacing the uprooted crosses didn't require any explanation. "We didn't take the crosses down, and now we're just keeping them up," he told the Record.

"Security did not see this happen (the removal)," Dean of the College Stephen Fix told the faculty at their monthly meeting Wednesday. "The college did not remove them. No student or students are known to be responsible. Individual members of WAAC have said they did not remove the crosses."

According to Fix, WAAC was told by the college that security would keep a watch over the crosses for five days after they were originally erected October 16.

A series of announcements which appeared during the week in the Daily Advisor invited students to a "cross-building party" Saturday at Hardy House.

Members of the organization did not say how long they plan to keep the new crosses on the lawn.

Basketball

Continued from Page 10

to his outstanding quickness. In spite of his lack of playing time in 85-86, Dave Paulsen '87 has a firm knowledge of the offense and may handle the ball in the season's early stages. As the season moves on, freshman Garcia Major, a high school passing sensation, could emerge as the successor to Walsh.

Mike Masters '89 could also see action at point guard, although he is versatile enough to handle the shooting guard and wing forward positions as well. In 85-86, Masters contributed immediately as a freshman, scoring 3.9 ppg while grabbing two rebounds and dishing out 1.5 assists per contest.

Sheehy knows that this year's edition of the Ephs will not be as point-guard dominated. A key test for the contingent of point guards will be handling the ball in the last five minutes of the game, where Walsh was extremely deadly, especially from the line (88%). Defensively, the Ephs should be a somewhat quicker team in 86-87. Rebounding could be a weak area, and the coaching staff will try to distribute playing time to get as many fresh people as possible on the boards.

Two goals for the Ephs in 1986-87 will the retention of the Little Three title and a bid to the ECAC's. We "have players who have been through the Little Three and won it," said Sheehy, and this experience could be crucial in determining the tossup race.

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

Low prices for beer, wine, and soda
$1 off on all cases of beer
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.

INT'L OUTLET
SAVINGS TO 70%
The best selection of gifts and housewares in the Berkshires and the best VALUES too!
Your one stop Christmas Gift Center
Exciting gifts for family and friends
Always something new and unusual old fashioned advent cards • Christmas decorations • toys • crystal brass • wood • kitchen gadgets • dinnerware • cookware placemats • area rugs • candles • wicker • stocking stuffers...
Special: Crystal Champagne flutes from Holland at a special Holiday Price
Box of 6 at $11.00 or $2.00 each
192 STATE STREET, RT. 8, NORTH ADAMS
MON.-SAT. 10-5:30 SUN. 12-5 664-4580

Colonial Pizza
"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Free delivery to Williams campus
8 p.m. - 2 a.m. (last call)
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

This holiday season, get the "Write Stuff" at the right price.

Now you can get the competitive edge when classes begin in January. With a Macintosh™ personal computer, and all the write extras.

We call it the Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle. You'll call it a great deal! Because when you buy a Macintosh "Write Stuff" bundle before January 9, 1987, you'll receive a bundle of extras—and save $250.

Not only will you get your choice of a Macintosh 512K Enhanced or a Macintosh Plus, you'll also get an Image Writer™ II printer, the perfect solution for producing near letter-quality term papers or reports, complete with graphs, charts, and illustrations.

Plus, you'll get MacLightning, the premier spelling checker containing an 80,000 word dictionary with options for thesaurus, medical or legal dictionaries. Together with your favorite Macintosh word processing software, you can transform your notes into the clearest, most letter perfect papers you ever turned out. And turned in on time.

What's more, there's a Macintosh Support Kit filled with valuable accessories and computer care products from 3M.* Complete with all the things you need to keep your Macintosh running long after you've graduated.

Let us show you how to get through college better, faster, and smarter. Stop in and see us for more information.

*Offer Good While Supplies Last. © 1986 Apple Computer Inc. Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. Macintosh and ImageWriter are trademarks of Apple Computer Inc. MacLightning is a trademark of Target Software Inc.

Coach Odell has roamed the sidelines of Weston Field since 1971. Here he is in the earlier years.

Odell

Continued from Page 1

Richard Farley, who has been with the program for fifteen years, is considered by many players to be the leading candidate for the job within the program.

Reactions

Farley expressed disappointment at Odell's retirement, noting that there were several times when he (Farley) had considered leaving but "Odell was the main factor in keeping me here." Farley praised Odell as an "honest and honorable man, one who has an esteemed reputation throughout the coaching ranks. He's always prepared, always thorough, and always has things in perspective."

Farley also said that Odell "had great rapport with the kids. He developed great relationships with them and was constantly concerned about their academic performance, not just their game performance."

Farley said Odell considered football an extension of the academic experience. "Coach just prepared the kids as best as he could each week the same way that a professor prepares a student for an exam." Farley lamented that at times fans and alumni would "get on Bob" for some of the team's results whereas at the same time "no one ever questions a professor when a student fouls up an exam. In a way, its unfair," he said.

Wide receiver coach Alvin Pearman also had much praise for Odell, describing him as a "true inspiration, especially for young coaches. His enthusiasm and basic philosophy of handling his players is just incredible." Pearman elaborated on Odell's theory of coaching, saying that "he knew how to handle people who play football because they want to, not because they have to. Bob Odell may have been of the old school in that he was a tough, hard-nosed coach. But he never forgot that his job was to develop and educate his players, not just win football games."

Many of Odell's players expressed disappointment at his leaving but helplessness as to the situation. "He's going to miss football," said senior linebacker Dan McCarthy, "It's just a shame that he coudn't go out a champion. But that's just the way things are." Captain Brian Nixon '87 added: "I think Odell is an excellent coach; if he wanted to coach one more year, he should have been allowed to."

"I don't even know if he knows (why his contract wasn't renewed)," continued Nixon. Said McCarthy, "Next year I know they're going to win the Little Three. Why not let him stay one more year?"

"Bob came in when the program was struggling and turned it around immediately," said Peck. "He kept the program on an even keel and now is leaving it in good shape."

Jobs

Continued from Page 4

Scott Smith '87, an economics major, feels that many seniors, like himself "attend information sessions to get a feel for what's out there in a general way. The information sessions help me distinguish between all the jobs."

Among some seniors, however, certain personal values tend to outweigh the the temptations of high salaries and the convenience of the financial job search.

"I owe something"

"A lot of people leave Williams feeling that they have earned well paying jobs," says history/English major Lori Jonas, "but I feel I owe something to society. I received an excellent public education. I think I could make a sort of indirect repayment by getting a job which is benificiary to someone besides myself." Jonas is considering working for a lobby group in Washington D.C. for a "cause I believe in."

Stu Weaver '87, a history major, would like to do something "off the beaten track," for a couple of years, "like the Peace Corps or other volunteer work. It would let me relax and get a different perspective after four years of college."

Weaver notes that his decision has been directed by a "sense of social conciousness ... When I do something, I ask myself why I'm doing it," he remarked. "I can't just do something for my own sake."

Fund

Continued from Page 4

Amy Jeffress '87, president of the College Council, expressed the council's support of the scholarship program in a letter to the student body. The letter said that the University of Cape Town decided to award the scholarships "to assist students who do not qualify for government scholarships, to create black leaders who would contribute to the development of Southern Africa as a whole, and to give black undergraduates role models."

"I think the blacks will come to power soon," Jeffress told the Record. "There are inherent positive benefits in the program, and it's a positive thing to educate blacks."

"Completely useless"

Tom Williams '87 questioned the effectiveness of the scholarship program, stating, "The fund is well-intentioned but a completely useless program for Williams to participate in. This shows how the college administration is ignorant to the situation in South Africa."

Williams is a member of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition (WAAC), but said he was not speaking for the organization.

Williams maintained that having blacks study in South Africa does not help them. "The best education these students can receive would be at Williams," he said. "Sending these students to South Africa is like sending Jews to be educated in Nazi Germany. Why would we ever want to educate these students in a constricted atmosphere where free thought and actions are prohibited?"

Horowitch responded to criticism of the program by saying, "People are condemning the program without knowing the facts. The people who sent out the WAAC letter earlier knew nothing of the program."

Ganz said, "We can have an effect on South Africa with our efforts. I really believe that those forty people going to universities in South Africa (under the NEBHE scholarships) are going to do something with their education. If we stop to think of other ways the money could be used, those forty people wouldn't be there."

SKI PACKAGES
ALPINE
Skis, Boots, Bindings
Poles, Mounting
$470.00 Value
Your Cost $295
X-COUNTRY
$188.00 value Your cost $129
"Ski Haus of the Berkshires" only at
Goff's Sports, inc.
15 Spring St.

GENUINE Budweiser KING OF BEERS GENUINE
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
This week's recipient is senior John Schafer, who set a record by playing four years of WUFO while getting absolutely no P.E. credit. Shafes, whither this bud?
thus Buds for you!

McClelland's
STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS
458-4920
36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267
For your Christmas Needs
• Secret Santa Gifts • Boxed Cards
Gift Wrap • Partyware
That Special Christmas Card

Merrill Lynch Capital Markets
Public Finance Group is currently accepting resumes
from
Williams College Seniors
for the two-year
Financial Analyst Program
Please see the Office of Career Services for details.
Merrill Lynch

Hockey gliding toward better year

by Al Mottur

Entering his 33rd season here at Williams, hockey coach Bill McCormick looks to keep his players from repeating last year's 3-17-3 disappointment of a season. As the Eph skaters gear up for what should be a rebuilding year, most indications, including an undefeated preseason, seem to point towards a marked improvement over last year's record.

The key to the team's success this year will be the quality of its defensive play, while goals should not be too hard to come by. According to McCormick, "We played seven freshman last year on a regular basis. And they picked up a lot of valuable experience. So we should be improved offensively. The big thing we have to do is cut down on our goals against. We gave up way too many goals last year." Last year the Ephs gave up 111 goals in only 23 games.

The major force in limiting opponent scores this season will be Eph goalie Mark Morrison '88, who McCormick said is "looking good" through the pre-season practices and scrimmages. Aiding Morrison in guarding the nets is senior Rick Dietz, a bonafide backup who "is really displaying a super attitude and has shown a lot of improvement," according to McCormick.

Offense already set

Offensively, McCormick is not changing much from last year's squad. The team will go with three consistent lines while experimenting with skaters on a fourth until a solid overall chemistry is established. One line will be composed of senior co-captains Craig Cheevers and Denny Wright and sophomore transfer David Sette-Ducati. Cheevers, who will play wing along with Ducati on the line, said that "the team is really excited going into the season and should be a lot better" than last year's squad.

One good reason for Cheever's optimism is that most of last year's leading point producers are back, including the second line of sophomores Wil Putnam, Chris Conway, and Mike Swenson. Putnam, Conway, and Swenson combined for the most points on the team last year and according to McCormick should score even more this season.

Following this sophomore trio onto the ice will be a third line composed of seniors Mike O'Connell and Chris Traggio and Ron Van Bell '90. This line should be interesting to watch as it combines the experience of O'Connell and Traggio with the talent of the freshman Van Bell, a player who could be the best new stick handler on the club. According to Cheevers: "Ron has a magnet for a stick. Once he has a puck its hard to take it away from him.

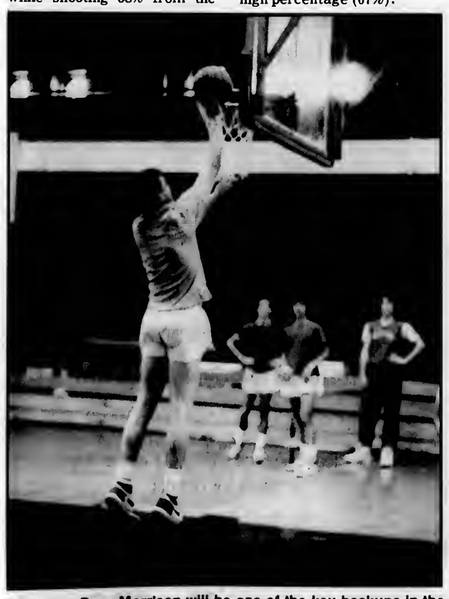
Other offensive contributors will be sophomore Chris Donato, Guy Kurtz '87, and David Caswell '88, a threesome that will probably form the fourth line. Given the squad's favorable offensive outlook and the continued improvement of goaltenders Morrison and Dietz, it appears that the Ephs are ready to eclipse the memory of last year's dismal season. Foremost to the team's success, however, is that the defense stays effective and healthy.

Senior Mike O'Connell slaps a shot into the opposing zone during a scrimmage at Lansing Chapman Rink on Saturday. The Ephs will attempt to improve on last year's 3-17-3 mark. (LeBauer)

Defense buckles down

Several players who hope to keep opposing shots from reaching the Eph net are senior Taylor Watts and sophomore Tim Frechette. Watts and Frechette will make the team's number one shift followed closely by Walter Hoffman '89 and Tim McKone '87. Another shift will be made up of John Booth '87 and Jimmy McNulty '89.

The season thus far for the Ephs has consisted of three scrimmages, all of which Williams has won. Regular play begins this afternoon at Lansing-Chapman Rink when the squad hosts the Bantams of Trinity, reigning Div. III New England Champions.



Ephs look for Little 3, ECAC bid

by Stewart Verdery

In the last season in Lasell Gymnasium, the men's basketball squad is gunning for a fourth consecutive Little Three title under head coach Harry Sheehy '75. Coming off a 12-11 campaign (12-9 in Div. III), the Ephmen return eight players but lose point guard Tim Walsh '86, the school's all-time leading scorer.

The mainstay of the returnees is 6'5" forward Brandt Johnson '87, who "should have been on the All-New England squad," according to Sheehy. The smooth senior poured in 17.6 ppg while shooting 58% from the floor and an excellent 85% from the line. Add in his 8.7 rebounds per game, and one sees why Sheehy calls Johnson the "anchor" of the squad. Tobey Wheelock '88 will spell Johnson at the power forward position.

Joining Johnson on the front line as starters will likely be captain center Greg Lang '87 and wing Bill Melchionni '89. The red-haired 6'5" Lang has "had a great preseason after arriving in great shape" and has shown a take-charge attitude. Coach Sheehy hopes Lang can increase his scoring (4.7 ppg), while continuing to shoot a high percentage (67%).

Freshman Dave Morrison will be one of the key backups in the men's basketball team's frontcourt this year. Teammates watch him here as he sinks a layup during practice. (LeBauer)

David Morrison, a 6'5" freshman from Greenwich, CT, will back up Lang and Johnson in the paint, as the small Eph squad will need to rotate fresh bodies to break even in the rebounding area. Doug Phillips '88, who missed last season with a stress fracture in his foot, could also see time at the center position.

Defense the key

Melchionni opens the 86-87 season at the small forward spot after averaging 4.8 ppg and 2.9 rpg last year. The 6'2" sophomore had a fine rookie season, assuming a starting role at the close of the year. Defense will likely determine playing time at this slot, as Sheehy notes that "at this level of basketball, you tend to see the best athletes concentrated around the small forward position. Whoever steps in at this position will have to play defense." David Shatto '89, "a Division I-caliber shooter," according to Sheehy, will get a chance to give the Ephs a scoring threat from this position.

The men's basketball team started practice this week, and here they demonstrate their expertise at one of coach Harry Sheehy's practice drills. (LeBauer)

Returning off-guard John Ciulla '87 averaged 13.1 ppg in 85-86 while shooting a solid 49% from the floor. Sheehy hopes to have a more aggressive Ciulla this season, in light of the fact that the shooting guard went to the line less than once a game last season. Ciulla will be called on to solidify the backcourt as the team adjusts to the absence of Walsh.

Point guards crucial

A number of players will share the responsibilities of the point guard position. Henry Jones '88 has shown considerable improvement and will be used in the transition game due

Continued on Page 8

Swimmers splash onto national scene

by Kurt Oeler

Revitalized by a promising freshmen class, the men's and women's swimming teams enter the year hoping to improve on last season's performances. Despite successful campaigns, both teams fell short of their capabilities. Coach Carl Samuelson leads an optimistic group into the final season of the Muir Pool era at Williams.

Senior co-captains Chris Kirwan and Dean Pomerleau head a determined men's squad eager to defend its New England title and improve on its disappointing showing at the NCAA meet last year. National qualifiers Beau Everett '87 and Scott Robinson '87 will pace the Ephs against a demanding schedule, including tough Little Three competition.

Distance men Mike O'Malley '89 and Dan Synder '90 and sprinters Dave Brown '89 and Mike Lane '90 make freestyle a strength this year. Close on their heels should be IM-ers Chris Giglio '89 and Rob Benson '90. Chris Cleurzo '90, Scott Healy '88, and Jim Jordan '87 round out the attack.

The women's squad aims to rebound from a disappointing regular season. Co-captains Joan Horgan '87 and Jen Raymond '87, along with the graduated Kathy Kirmayer, led the Ephs to a strong showing at Nationals last year. Freshmen Berne Broudy, Connie Davis, Michelle Freemer, and Lisa Gauthuier raise Samuelson's dual meet expectations.

Katie Anthony '87 and Lani Searfoss '87 lead a talented group of underclassmen swimmers, while Jen Campbell '87 looks to repeat past successes on the diving board. Samuelson's charges appear ready to regain their New England crown after slipping to third last year.

Williams faces the University of Connecticut Huskies November 24, and the Lord Jeffs December 6 in away meets before traveling to Fort Lauderdale for their winter training session.

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 11 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE JANUARY 13, 1987

The College purchased Grundy's Service Center for $280,000 and plans to use it either for studio art space or storage. (Albright)

College plans art space, faculty housing

by Peter Balaban

In a flurry of end-of-the-year buying activity, the College signed a purchase agreement for 200 acres of land off North Hoosac Road and purchased Grundy's garage on Water Street.

The final sale of the North Hoosac plot depends upon approval by the Williamstown Planning Board. If the sale is approved, the College will pay $350,000 for the currently undeveloped land and develop it into approximately 65 lots, administrators said.

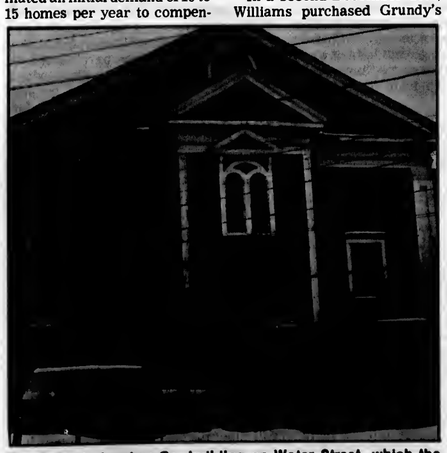
The lots will be sold to faculty members for the building of houses, according to Director of Physical Plant Winthrop Wassenar. Williams previously has used a similar procedure of selling plots of land rather than houses on areas on Forest Road and Cluett Drive.

College Treasurer William Reed said it will be nine months to a year before the property becomes available for purchase by faculty members. He estimated an initial demand of 10 to 15 homes per year to compensate for the backlog, slowing to sales of five or six homes per year after that.

Reed explained that the land was purchased to ease the housing crunch for faculty members who want to buy a house in Williamstown. Junior faculty usually rent one of the college's 100 housing units before receiving tenure, Reed said. Tenured faculty who choose to buy a house often have problems finding houses. Reed said the low availability and high cost of real estate make it difficult for faculty and staff to find houses in Williamstown.

The North Hoosac plot runs up the south face of Pine Cobble and is northeast of the intersection of Cole Avenue and North Hoosac Road. According to Reed, the land will be available for purchase by all faculty and staff members of the college.

"Some sort of agreement will be worked out so that the property will stay within the college family over the long haul," he added.



In a second December deal, Williams purchased Grundy's Service Center, a garage at 26 Water Steet, for $280,000. The transaction was finalized before the end of 1986 in order to avoid the increase in the capital gains tax. According to Wassenar, avoiding the tax increase gave the seller a tax advantage and kept the purchase price down.

Studio art space needed

Wassenar said the college is conducting a study to determine the demands for use of the garage. He said it will either be used for studio art space or as storage for the Buildings and Grounds and Food Service departments.

The college has also made an offer to purchase Taconic Lumber at 27 Water Street, according to Wassenar. He explained that the lumber yard is currently off the market, as Taconic awaits zoning approval from the town for a new site at 837 North Hoosac Road.

Reed said the college would be interested in using the lumber company building, which in the late 1800's was used as an opera house, as studio art space. If the college is unable to acquire the lumber company, the Grundy's building may eventually be used as studio art space, said Wassenar.

The Taconic Lumber Co. building on Weter Street, which the college recently offered to buy, has a checkered history. It has served as a Methodist church, an opere house, a theatre for plays end early films, the town polling place, end the headquerters of the Gale Hose Co., Williamstown's fire department.

New Mass. law means jury duty for students

by Scott Blasdell

Starting this month, Williams students will be called upon to serve jury duty in Pittsfield as part of the new Massachussetts one-trial jury system.

Jury service eligibility has been expanded to include virtually every citizen 18 years of age or older who resides in Massachussetts for at least six months per year, including students from other states.

Under the former jury system, only registered voters were enlisted to serve as jurors, and exemptions from service were easily obtainable, resulting in juries unrepresentative of the population and a month-long burden on jurors.

Because the pool of jurors is now much larger, the burden has been spread out, and service has been reduced to one day or one trial. It is estimated that 95 percent of jurors will complete their duty requirement within three days; 80 percent within one day. Because service obligations have been cut by such a large extent, exemptions for students, professionals, law enforcement officials and others have been eliminated.

According to Assistant Dean Joan Edwards, 18 Williams students have already been called upon to serve before January 29. She estimates that 20 students per month will receive notice in the future. Freshmen are not eligible until the new census figures are out, and seniors who leave the state after graduation will not be eligible because they will not have resided six months in Massachussetts during 1987.

Someone may be put on standby status and never be called to Pittsfield, in which case their jury service requirement will have been satisfied for one year. But if the prospective juror is called to Pittsfield, whether or not he is used on an actual jury, he will not be up for service again for three years.

Transport problems

Edwards said the Deans' Office is looking into the transportation problem. At the moment, she is encouraging students to contact other student jurors who might have cars. The state will reimburse unemployed persons up to $50 per day for transportation and other costs.

Snowman on the quad. (Albright)

18% more applicants

136 accepted early for class of 1991

by Karen Costenbader

The admissions office mailed 136 early decision notifications to applicants for the class of 1991 during the week of December 15. It received 417 applications.

Last year 352 students applied for early decision and 129 were accepted.

Director of Admissions Philip F. Smith commented that this year's early decision applicants exhibited stronger academic qualities. "All of the indices seem to be very strong — academic performance, achievement tests, and recommendations," Smith said.

He said the higher overall quality of the early decision applicant pool was due in part to the publicity which Williams received last year. The College's number one ranking last fall by U.S. News and World Report, and the 15-minute feature about the inner workings of Williams' admissions committee broadcast on PBS's MacNeil-Lehrer Newshour on April 9, 1986, encouraged the increased numbers and higher quality of early decision applications this year, Smith said.

Smith noted three fundamental differences in this group of early decision candidates compared to of previous candidates for early decision: a greater interest in Division III courses, a larger number of financial aid applicants, and a greater diversity of ethnic backgrounds.

Of the 136 newly accepted members of the Class of 1991, four are blacks, six are Asian—Americans, two are Hispanic Americans and five are foreign nationals.

The admissions office has set the goal for the size for the Class of 1991 at 510 members. Regular decision applications are due on January 15, and, so far, these too have been coming in at a faster pace than in previous years. Said Smith, "Each year the decisions become more and more difficult to make. There are just more qualified people applying."

January 13, 1987

Workable Party Policy

The college needs a party policy which will both acknowledge the responsibility of the Williamstown police department to enforce the law, and allow for all-campus parties, which are a necessary aspect of social life at Williams.

A problematic aspect of Williams' most recent party policy emerged last semester: a student was prosecuted on charges of selling alcohol without a license, after he allegedly organized a party where alcohol was served and admission charged.

In November, the college placed a temporary ban on admission charges, seeking to protect students from exposure to this law. The ban will most likely be incorporated in the policy revisions expected to be announced this month.

The practical effect of a permanent ban on admissions would be to make it all but impossible for houses to pay for all-campus parties. This is evident in the fact that, under the interim ban, there have been no large parties so far this Winter Study period.

One solution to the problem is a common fund for parties. The Committee on Undergraduate Life and the house presidents are considering the idea.

Some form of this fund is absolutely necessary. But we have to be careful about what kind of fund we choose. It might well be structured in a way which would do little to fill the void left by lost admission money.

Dean Stephen Fix has said that the common fund could never be used to pay for alcohol. Fix has also said the college might not allow the fund to pay security officers, because that practice could increase college liability for damages in alcohol-related incidents.

What would the fund pay for?

Students must now join the administration in finding creative solutions to fill the holes left by the fund idea. We must either improve the structure of the fund, or supplement it with other measures which would together provide a workable means for students to funds parties. This is not the time to simply accept this fund, or to simply reject it. Rather, it is imperative that it first be put in working order.

Having said that...

We find ourselves at something of a loss. Our front page offers little in the way of controversy this week and editorial topics are somewhat scarce. Of course, we've only been back on campus for little more than a week and Winter Study is, after all, just what Winter Study is (and we hope always will be). Controversy will undoubtedly return soon enough, and — with any luck — enlightened opinions will issue forth from this space on a weekly basis. Until then, though, we're just going to relax for a while and enjoy the snow.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Help us create the Record

Come to a general meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Record Office (Baxter basement). We need new reporters, photographers, graphic artists, layout assistants, and advertising staff.

Letters

Christmas

To the Editor:

The sounds of Christmas have died down; the carols echo dimly in the distance; the Christmas tree has been taken down and the ornaments wrapped up and put away in a chest in the dusty attic; the good wishes exchanged between strangers die a sad death; the warm feeling of Christmas has gone and the land is as it had been before—cold, lonely, and hostile.

It will lie like this till just after the next Thanksgiving and then the shop windows will scream again the arrival of the Christmas season; disk-jockeys will begin to play carols on the radio and people will begin to speak of the "spirit of the season" once more. They will magnanimously forgive those who offend them for is it not the season of good will?

Then, later, the season passes and the sounds of Christmas die down...

I am a Christian—a follower of Jesus Christ. I make this "proclamation" not in order to appear self-righteous but rather so that I might explain the frustration and deep sadness that the Christmas season, as it is observed by many, brings for me.

I was at a "festive gathering" towards the end of last semester. The Christmas carols were playing; the egg-nog was flowing and the mood was just "right". My companions did not share my faith—or at least they had not made any appearance of doing so. As I listened to the words of the songs—"O, Come let us adore him, Christ the Lord" and "Glory to the new-born King"—as the words sank in, my soul responded in joyful rapture and I gave silent thanks that Jesus Christ had been born, that he had died and that, triumphant over death, he was now so much a part of my life. I gave thanks that I was beginning to know and love God, even despite myself—only because of Christ. My heart, bursting with joy, sought to share this with those around me. Then, with a profound sadness, I realized that they would probably think it very strange if I began to speak in such fervent tones of the joy of Christ's salvation and of the gratitude I felt when I considered that this same "babe in the manger" had hung from a cross—for me.

My heart grew heavier as I realized that any critical observer of the celebration of Christmas would probably conclude that Christianity was no more than some sort of anti-depressant—(the "opiate of the masses!") The transformation, after all, is remarkable—people who would cringe at anything religious now sing songs proclaiming the coming of the Lord! They make their way to church for the first and only time of the year—and think nothing of it.

I thought of how mush greater God eally was and how much He was ready to bless those who sought Him. And so, as I prayed in thanksgiving for the gift that God had bestowed upon the world in His son, I also prayed that at least one person for whom Christmas was merely a traditional holiday, might suddenly hear the words they were singing and ask themselves just what it was they were celebrating and consider if the warm feeling of the Christmas season might not be replaced by a deeper, ever-lasting joy.

Dear reader, why wait till next December?

The views expressed in this article are those of the author's. I have not meant to convey the views of anybody else in writing this piece.

Dilip Nair '88

Food project

To the Editor:

The Berkshire Food Project would like to thank everyone who participated in the last meatless meal on Wednesday, January 7. It was a complete success and raised almost eight hundred dollars for the Berkshire Food Project.

The Project is a student-initiated program which provides two free hot lunches each week at the First Congregational Church in North Adams for people who need them. In that community, over 2000 jobs have been lost in the last six years; teenage pregnancy and infant mainutrition remain overwhelming problems. A simple relief project such as this one is greatly needed.

Williams students join in this effort with local church groups, and members of the Williamstown and North Adams communities. The meatless meals at Williams provide essential funds to supplement donations of money and food from the surrounding area. Many thanks must go to the Williams College Food Service for the meatless meals, which will hopefully continue twice a month for the remainder of the school year. Each student's participation is what makes this program possible.

Li Gwatkin '87 Andy Felcher '87

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... John McDermott and Joe Thorndike
NEWS ..... Debbie Snyder
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley
OP-ED ..... John Canty
SPORTS ..... Al Mottur and Stewart Verdery
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright and Mike LeBauer
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
SENIOR EDITOR ..... Hal Wells
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Peter Balaban, Karen Costenbader, Jocelyn Shadforth
ASSISTANT FEATURES ..... Beth Broadrup, Michael Erard, Charles Samuelson
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
LAYOUT STAFF ..... Karl Emsbo, Kirsten Hasenfus
ADVERTISING ..... Russ Hollenbeck
BUSINESS/CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Leaving a cloud of anger within

by Averil Y. Clarke '87

On the second year of the national holiday status of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, I, a twenty-year-old black woman, sit in the number-one liberal arts college in America. To some looking in from outside, this seems to represent a Civil Rights leader's success story. It would if only I were not invisible.

When I say I am invisible, I mean that I am not seen by a white college community that knows nothing about black aesthetics. Pretty here, as well as in most of America, equals stringy hair, skinny noses, thin lips, and, undoubtedly, white skin,. To my fellow students, I am not pretty or ugly; I don't fit and therefore I don't exist. This invisibility becomes a voicelessness when I enter a classroom where people hear from me opinions and ideas grounded in background filled with West Indian anecdotes (something else my fellow students know nothing about) instead of European fairy tales. What I say isn't good or bad—it is incomprehensible and to the great minds at Williams College nothing is incomprehensible; therefore, my opinions cannoit exist for them either.

I believe that I am invisible partly by choice, to the degree that black people in America can "choose." Invisibility to me seems the only alternative to having my views marginalized. The white people here can and will see me, can and will hear me—I will be visible—if I show them or voice to them the little piece of me that they want minus all the other parts in me that come with it. Of this white man's attempt to make me into what he needs I have many examples.

Beginning with this statement for the Record: it is an attempt to marginalize the feelings and views of the blacks on campus as well as to capitalize on the part of me that might gain attention by creating controversy. I was asked as a member of the WBSU to write on black life at Williams but I do not and will not profess this statement to represent any members of the WBSU beside myself. And as far as controversy, I will not rant and rave and make accusations and I don't care how many letters come in respinse to this statement; I will not respond to them. My purpose is not to engage in an argument with any white student about something he or she can know nothing about: namely, black life at Williams.

White people only want me in parts.

White people only want me in parts. Often they want the liberal part of me that makes them feel good about doing some great liberal deed. For example, white classmates have come to me because they have started dating someone black and they want to hear the liberal, freedom-seeking part of me tell them that interracial dating is great. As a matter of fact, I dislike the notion of interrracial dating and I don't dream of a day when whites and blacks are convinced that there is no difference between the two peoples and that they can therefore freely intermarry.

White people here offer me visibility if I tell them how much I like a piece of music by a black artist that they have absolutely fallen in love with. White people at this institution have offered me a voice in return for my being willing to reduce black people to some understandable set of facts that come under headings like "Black Life at Williams," "Black Women at Williams," and "Black Perspectives on Williams." White people have offered me visibility and even the status of being called beautiful if I will emphasize the exotic parts of my physical appearance, those exotic parts possesed by all Third World women.

Most importantly, white people have offered me visibility in return for my pretending that I am not different; for pretending that they can have a conversation with me, can have my friendship, can understand me without my blackness ever being an issue. If I understand that their racist comments were "not meant like that," they offer me visibility. For me they offer visibility if I give that knowing wink and nod of head that says,"No, I don't think you are a racist."

Well, I will not do it. I will not compromise the rich diversity of my people by giving a 400-word essay on what we are all like. My survival and success at Williams has depended on my efforts and ability to know and understand individual white people: whether this professor thought I was innately stupid, or this member of the class thought me an interesting addition to their classroom setting, or this member of the track team thought me a terrific sprinter, having never seen me run. I have, whether by choice or not, made the effort to know white people at Williams individually. And I will not pretend the task is easier for white students and professors to learn about black students individually. I can only say that as white students, you are fortunate that your survival and success at Williams does not depend on your knowledge of me because most of you would not be here.

I also will not sell parts of myself individually wrapped. I spent my freshman year minimizing the difference between myself and my white classmates: selling that part of myself that wanted to believe that we could get past skin color. This part of me was marketable in return for friendship because it made my entrymates and Junior Advisers feel good. I spent my sophomore and most of my junior year selling some radical part of me that is willing to give all the blame for all the problems of my people to rich white males. This part of me was marketable for friendship because it created controversy and provided a spokesperson for white people who felt shafted by the system as well. I have spent the rest of my time and will spend the few months I have left here trying to get back all of those individually wrapped parts I gave out. And, Williams College, you can have your visibility back if it means I cannot be who I am instead of who you need me to be.

Needless to say, I am making tracks out of this place fast.

Somehow I don't see my journey from elementary school to the number-one liberal arts college in America as a Civil Rights leader's success story but as the story of a failure. The cloud of hatred and anger that has grown inside of me since I have been here is so dense that it will take years for me to approach a white person without skepticism. An environment like Williams is not, for me, a chance to grow in—which I believe would be a true success story. It is a chance for me to be restricted to the personification of what a group of white people need in return for an ounce of respect and kindness. Needless to say, I am making tracks out of this place fast.

What destroyed the crosses?

by Chuck Goodwin '87

There's no reason to be afraid of the word racist, even if you are one. Racism, like alcoholism, is a disease. And, again like alcoholism, the first symptom is denial. Unlike alcoholism, racism is contagious. The "germs" which cause racism fester in places in which people are afraid even to use the word or to hear it around them. If you are upset by the word racist, then perhaps there is some part of you that is tainted by racism. Racism can be cured, but the cure is about as pleasant as that for alcoholism. To rid yourself of it, you must be willing to suffer exposure. You must be willing to find those places within your soul which are racist and to destroy them.

The people who stole crosses from Baxter lawn are racist. There are no two ways about it. To be involved in the theft of over two hundred and thirty crosses is not to be involved in a minor college prank. Those crosses stood as a memorial for the black people who have perished in South African violence. To assault the crosses is to denigrate the lives of those people.

There were two nights during which over seventy crosses were stolen between three in the morning and dawn. To commit that kind of act, you have to plan. You need a car, several people, and a place to dispose of the loot. A normal car's trunk will only hold about twenty crosses. So, unless you have a station wagon, you need to make at least two trips. Other people were seen to run them down with automobiles or with mountain bikes.

Mere political disagreement does not motivate that kind of vicious and premeditated behavior. To engage in that kind of behavior, you are a racist and one who cares nothing for the freedom of political speech. You suffer from a disease. It is racism and not simple hooliganism.

The people who destroyed the crosses were filled with an anger which they could not explain. The crosses made them uneasy and took sleep away from them. They felt an ineffable rage. I suppose that the feelings that drove them were something like an intense hunger. They were compelled by a hunger which, until sated, would not quit, despite any efforts they made to quench it otherwise. As you cannot think away hunger, you cannot think away a racist anger. You must satisfy it.

Now, the strange part of it is that these people do not wear horribly distorted expressions and slink around campus wearing white sheets and hoods. In fact, on most occasions, these people are the friendly and open people who surround us. They love those with whom they are close. They will marry, have children, and do their best to raise those children well. They will be respectable people and have satisfying careers. Absolutely nothing about them will tell you that they are racist. But, in small ways, they will create great oppression.

It has been shown that even a mild aversion to people who belong to a minority group can induce strong disadvantages.The aversion—the turning away because you are uncomfortable around people of color—leads to the situation in which people of color can never have the kind of relationship with the white people around them that even the most cantankerous white person could have. Thus, they are excluded from the general community.

The white people who have this aversion will seldom be aware of it. They can live for decades without the slightest notion that they are racist and that what they do hurts others. All these bigots want to do is to avoid being uncomfortable. Each person contributes a snowflake's weight to the overall avalanche of racism.

The people who have stolen crosses from Baxter lawn are racists; but, when you talk to them, they will shout that they are not. They will be offended if you call them racists.

Let me end this with an appeal to destroy the racism which exists on this campus. But, first, one by one, we must admit that there are racist elements inside each of us. I know that I have them. I hve been on a bus filled with white people when a well-dressed black person has come aboard. I tensed up—like everyone else around me— and moved my wallet to my front pocket. That's all it takes. I know that each of you could tell a similar story.

I am a racist. Let us begin the healing.

Preparing a Resume'?
We carry a complete line of
Crane
Resume' Papers with Matching Envelopes
(White, Ecru, Grey, and White Wove)
McClelland's
STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS
458-4920
36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Obituaries

Clarence C. Chaffee

Clarence Chaffee, who coached athletic teams for 33 years at Williams College, died December 13, 1986 at age 85, of apparent heart failure. Chaffee coached varsity and freshman tennis, squash, and soccer at Williams and served as the college's athletic director.

Despite heart trouble, Chaffee became one of the top senior citizen tennis players in the country. Unhindered by the implantation of a pacemaker in 1981, Chaffee came back to win the Grand Slam of Seniors Tennis Championship shortly thereafter, gaining national recognition.

Chaffee won over 40 national senior citizen's titles in his playing career. He entered tournament play at age 55, when a rule change allowing professional coaches to compete made him eligible.

Aside from his tennis play, Chaffee distinguished himself as a successful Williams coach in a career that spanned from 1937 to 1970. His teams all posted cumulative winning records during that time: 175-99-3 in tennis, including no losing seasons; 88-65-13 in soccer; and 141-116 in squash.

He coached Williams to one national title in 1958 in squash, three New England titles in tennis, and two Sampson Cups in soccer. His tennis, soccer, and squash teams combined for over 40 Little Three Championships.

Chaffee served as the coach for the U.S. Junior Davis Cup team in 1959. From 1962 through 1967, he served on the NCAA tennis committee and was the secretary-treasurer of the New England Lawn Tennis Association for 22 years, president of the New England Soccer Association, and secretary-treasurer of the National Intercollegiate Squash Association.

Born in New York City in 1901, he played tennis, football and basketball at Brown University, where he graduated in 1924. After spending the next nine years as a salesman, he began graduate studies at Springfield College in Massachusetts and coached tennis and basketball at Wilbraham Academy.

Chaffee joined the Williams faculty in 1934 and was awarded an honorary master of arts degree upon his retirement in 1970. On May 1, 1970, his retirement was celebrated with a "Hail to the Chafe" day at Williams, referring to a popular nickname.

President Francis Oakley said of Chaffee: "Few members of our faculty have embodied so completely the Williams teaching ideal or established themselves so firmly in the affections of successive generations of students and colleagues. His dedication was unaffected, his achievement extraordinary, his enthusiasm infectious, his friendship most generously bestowed. If we now mourn his passing, we also celebrate the fullness and quality of his living."

Chaffee is survived by his wife, the former Frances Burton of Williamstown, two daughters, one son, six grandchildren, and a sister. In 1972, six new tennis courts and a new tennis house were built in his honor. He is honored by the U.S. Tennis Association, which calls its annual seniors tournament in Florida the "Clarence Chaffee Championships," and the New England Small College Conference names each year the "Clarence C. Chaffee Sportsmanship Award" in tennis.

Kent E. Dawalt

Kent Eric Dawalt, 40, a renowned sculptor and visiting associate professor of art at Williams College, died on December 10, 1986 of meningococcemia. This unusual disease was described by Dr. James T. Corkins, college director of health services as "a particularly virulent and infrequently seen bacterial infection."

In a December 12 letter to the college community, Corkins explained that only immediate family members or intimate contacts were at risk and would require medical attention.

In a statement immediately following Dawalt's death, college President Francis Oakley said, "Although he was at Williams only for a brief period, he had thrown himself with great enthusiasm into the life and work of the College and will be sorely missed."

Dawalt had taught fall semester courses in sculpture and drawing after teaching fine arts at Indiana University since 1977. Noted for his sculpture and ceramics, his work had appeared in more than 50 exhibitions. He received many awards including two faculty research grants and, in 1982, a summer fellowship from Indiana University.

Dawalt's work can be found in many permanent collections, including museums at Indiana State University, Manchester College, the Lannon Foundation collection in Florida, and the Williams Ackland Art Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Before teaching at Indiana University, Dawalt served as a faculty member at Alfred University, the Southwest School Corporation, Central Michigan University, and the University of Michigan for a summer term.

Born in Peru, Indiana, in 1946, Dawalt graduated from Indiana State University in 1969 with a B.S. degree. He received an M.F.A. from the State University of New York College of Ceramics in 1973, where he majored in ceramics, with minors in sculpture and wood design.

Dawalt is survived by his mother, two brothers, and a son, age 8. He was buried at the Grant Memorial Park in Marion, Indiana.

Leonard Watters

Former New England Football Coach of the Year Leonard A. Watters died December 10, 1986 of heart disease at his home in Venice, Florida. He was 88.

Watters, who played football professionally with the Buffalo All-Americans in the 1920s, gained national recognition while coaching at White Plains (N.Y.) High School and Williams College.

During his 16 years at White Plains, Watters had a 114-27 record, won 10 Westchester County titles, and had nine undefeated seasons. Watters assumed the head coaching job at Williams in 1948, after the team had not won a game the year before. He added such innovations as the split-T formation, double practice sessions, and spring training.

At Williams, Watters had a 68-47-4 record and won seven Little Three titles. In 1957 he produced the College's first undefeated team in 40 years, one of only four in Williams's history, and was named the New England Coach of the Year.

Besides serving as head football coach at Williams, Watters was also an assistant professor of physical education and coached freshman baseball.

Watters is survived by his wife, Amy Dunkel Watters of Venice, Florida. Donations in Watters's memory may be made to charity.

GRADUATE STUDIES IN BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

Basic Medical Science Department

Active Research Programs

Seeking Qualified Applicants

Tuition and Stipend

Support Available

For Further Information Contact:

Graduate Committee
Department of Physiology
Albany Medical College
Albany, N.Y. 12208
(518-445-5651)

Winter Study Specials

Swans Australian Beer — Case $13.99 + dep.
Kirin Japanese Beer — Case 14.99 + dep.
Dos Equis Mexican Beer — Case 17.99 + dep.
Pabst Milwaukee Beer — Case 9.98 + dep.
Tuborg Reg. & Dark — Case 11.99 + dep.

2 Litre Pepsi & Diet Pepsi
$1.19 × deposit

Kingsberry Non-Alcoholic — case 10.99 + dep.

PARTY SUPPLIES • VALENTINE CARDS • MEGABUCKS

West Package & Variety Store
Route 2, Between Williamstown & North Adams
663-6081
Proper I.D. Required

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

Also:
a wide and varied selection of greeting cards, desk accessories, picture frames, and faux-antique jewelry.

TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

Winter Study Special

After 6:00 p.m. 40% discount on all salad, crepe, and dinner entrees. Offer extended to all students and faculty of Williams.
Closed Every Monday in January
Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 10 p.m. Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Telephone (413)458-5007

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est 1848 Brass Barbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

Welcome to
Winter Study '87

Bookstore open 'til 10:00 p.m.

Now in Paperback: Margaret Atwood's Handmaid's Tale, Native Son, Brighton Beach Memoirs, Mammoth Hunters, The White House Mess, Crimes of the Heart

Come By and Browse

Dartmouth

Two Dartmouth College sophomores have been suspended for their involvement in a car chase on November 7. The chase began when the two students were spotted driving around Dartmouth's Memorial Field about 4 a.m. and ended when they crashed into and destroyed a Hanover police car. The driver, who had been driving without headlights prior to the collision, was also fined by the Hanover District Court and prohibited from driving for one year, after pleading no contest to charges of aggravated drunken driving and criminal mischief.

Haverford

Non-tri-college students have been the source of a recent outburst of fighting and vandalism on the Haverford, Bryn Mawr and Swarthmore campuses. Underage drinking, fighting, student harassment, and window-breaking have occured when uninvited guests crashed campus parties. The influx of students to the tri-college social life has been attributed to an increase in the number of parties thrown during the past semester. According to Haverford Students' Council co-President Xavier Romeu, "Everybody knows there will be a party at either Haverford or Bryn Mawr." Romeu also identified more rigid drinking policies at neighboring colleges as a factor in the frequent party crashing. Reflecting the prevailing college sentiment, Haverford Deputy Dean Hutchinson commented on "how bizarre this sounds ... people are coming to Haverford for the social life."

Trinity

Hazing at Trinity's Pi Kappa Alpha chapter has resulted in stiff penalties for the fraternity. The college administration has prohibited them from engaging in any activities at their house or on campus through graduation next year. The fraternity will not be allowed to rush pledges this spring, throw alumni parties, or co-sponsor any events. The hazing was not part of the fraternity's initiation and was done independently by a few brothers. On November 14, three pledges incurred minor burns from a hot metal object. After being examined at Hartford Hospital, they were quickly released. Once the president of the fraternity was informed of the hazing, he held a meeting in which the members decided to report the event to officials. According to the administration, the punishment was not as severe as it could have been because of the house's responsible actions. The PKA penalities are the first significant ones at Trinity since Alpha Delta Phi's two years ago, when pledges were fed raw chicken livers and had to be taken to the hospital for food poisoning.

University of Texas

Three students at the University of Texas at Austin have created "The Protection Connection," a student-run birth control service featuring direct delivery. Condoms or contraceptive sponges are taken straight to the lovers' rooms during evening and early morning hours. The founders of the business want to start franchises on other campuses and have been encouraged by the response at their own school — their phone started ringing within half an hour after publicity flyers were posted around campus. (CPS)

Harvard University

Harvard students, on the other hand, had problems with a similar business last year. Six freshmen started "Spermbusters," a condom delivery service whose motto was, "Guaranteed to come before you do." Spermbusters lasted only a few days because the students didn't want to risk disciplinary action after they were advised to disband. "It was deemed to be in bad taste unofficially by the college administrators," said Darius Zoroufy, one of the student organizers, "It was something they didn't want operating on campus." The administration's only comment was that Harvard prohibits students from running businesses out of dorm rooms. (CPS)

Middlebury

The Middlebury dean's office is providing students with warning whistles and campus security and fraternities are offering escort services at night. These recent developments are the result of a series of attempted attacks on women this fall. The most recent incident occurred in late November when a male non-student approached a senior woman on a dark path and tried to kiss her. He was not drunk, she said, nor did he seem to be very dangerous. The victim was unhurt and responded by chasing the man toward the chapel and yelling at him.

More Trinity

Trinity College's Seabury Towers suffered $10,000 worth of damage last semester when a student leaving a party broke a pipe connected to the building's sprinkler system. The pipe was located on the ceiling of the stair landing below the floor where the party was held, and was apparently broken when a student slid down the bannister and grabbed it. Students on the stairwell were soaked with dirty, smelly water from the pipe and one bystander described the resulting flood as "an indoor rainstorm." Members of the Trinity administration are confident that they will be able to identify the perpetrator because they know which students threw the party. The hosts will be held financially liable should the culprit remain anonymous.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Midori Sonoda and Lisa West from material printed in other campus newspapers, unless otherwise noted.

December concert

Jazz Ensemble goes avant-garde

by John McDermott

It's been over a month now since noted clarinetist and composer Bill Smith joined the Williams Jazz Ensemble for a concert. But that concert is still worth talking about because it may signal a welcome change in the direction of jazz performances on campus.

Every jazz concert at Williams is worthy of attention because there are — and, some would say, there can be — so few. This performance marks the first time in recent memory that the campus has hosted any avant-garde jazz, if the 1960's-1970's electronic avant-garde of which Smith is a part can be included in the term.

The December 6 concert was an indication that more diverse jazz performances can happen here, and in more diverse ways, combining college talent with respected outside musicians. It is especially pleasing to note that in this case the college talent was the Ensemble, which has been narrowly rooted in swing and showtunes, avoiding the avant-garde in its recent history.

Bill Smith is a musical experimenter who is probably best known as the clarinetist with the Dave Brubeck Quartets and Octets of the late 1940's. He was reunited with Brubeck on a 1986 quartet album. He is also active as a composer and conductor of jazz, classical, and other music.

As both performer and composer, Smith had a strong night on December 6. The concert included the premiere of his composition Mandala One, a challenging piece which was performed by the Jazz Ensemble and a host of other campus musical groups.

Encircled by music

In preparation for Mandala One, the Ensemble and members of the Williams Flute Choir, the Brass Ensemble, the Handbell Choir, the Gospel Choir, the Student String Quartet, Ephoria, Polephony, and the Springstreeters took places around the Chapin Hall balcony and across the stage, so that the audience was completely encircled by the performers. Ensemble director David Kechley conducted the piece, and Smith sat in the eighth row and listened.

On Kechley's signal, each performer began to play or sing from two pieces of music, but each played the sets of notes at a different speed and interval. Because of this, it sounded like all the musicians were improvising around a single note.

With the exception of one of the voices and some lively riffs from the saxophones, there was no attempt at individuality by any of the performers, and this seems to be what Smith desired. Before Mandala One began, he described it as "a meditative piece."

While Mandala One offered contemplation, a duet in which Smith and Kechley, on bass, improvised to images on videotape may well have been the musical peak of the evening.

In the duet, entitled Dialog for Clarinet and String Bass, Smith used a synthesizer, linked to his clarinet, to electronically extend the one instrument into an orchestra of clarinets, as he put it. The duet had a strong sense of bebop, and Kechley's bass had as important a role in it as did Smith's "orchestra."

Faithful improvisation

Smith spent most of the concert with the New Spring Street Stompers, a sextet whose members also belong to the Ensemble. His solo on the Stompers' playing of Thelonious Monk's 'Round Midnight was both improvisational and, in its emotion and intensity, faithful to the glorious original.

With strong solos on saxophone by Mike Coyne '89 and trumpet by Paul Passaro '89, the Stompers' set moved well. Smith's fluency in the bebop language of Monk, Charlie Parker and Miles Davis shattered any lingering stereotypes of the clarinet as primarily an instrument of swing, played by Benny Goodman.

Another December 6 breakthrough came in the Ensemble's opening set, with the performance of Quartality, an exciting, professional swing piece composed by senior music major Paul Rardin.

The opening set, which did not involve Smith, concentrated on swing pieces by Jerome Kern, George Gershwin and Stephen Sondheim. The high points included the introduction to Gershwin's "It Ain't Necessarily So." On that selection, the alto saxophone of Doug Krehbiel '88 and the trumpet of Carter Zinn '88 combined easily, so that it seemed like one instrument was producing the almost unreal sound.

The band was especially smooth on Gershwin's Fascinating Rhythm, the last tune of the set.

The opening set was generally well performed, but it offered no preparation for what followed: it made no connections with Smith's avant-garde writing or even with the Stompers' set. Admittedly, swing is more easily arranged for a 24-member unit than is the avant-garde, but some "modern jazz," bebop or beyond-bop, would have been appropriate.

Finding unity

But in the final set Smith and the Ensemble came together, both in body and in spirit. The opposing currents of the rest of the concert found a remarkable sense of unity in the final three pieces, taken from Smith's Five for Milan.

The trilogy gingerly combined a bebop theme with bold electronic elements; it also was

Continued on Page 6

Cyclists gear up for second season

by Charles Samuelson

While most Williams students are just beginning to engage in the pursuits of winter, the bicycling team, founded in September by juniors Rob Mecarini and Paul Danielson, is already preparing for the spring season. Although there is currently too much snow and ice on the Berkshire Hills for the team to train outdoors, individual members of the team are preparing for upcoming meets in the comfort of their own dorm rooms. They are training on rollers, a device that lets them pedal without moving.

Buying rollers, getting from meet to meet, fixing broken gears — and buying a racing cycle — can be very expensive propositions, said Danielson. "There's a lot of people who would like to cycle but can't afford to; it's a very expensive sport, probably more expensive than skiing." During the team's first semester, team dues proved inadequate to cover the tremendous financial burden that bicycling entails. Danielson and Mecarini went before the College Council's Finance Committee to receive club status and were promised money for the second semester. Paul Rinehart, owner of the Spoke on Main Street, also offered the team a lot of advice and support.

Mecarini and Danielson both indicated that even if the team becomes eligible for varsity status, it might be in the team's best interest to remain a club so that they can continue to receive support from patrons such as Rinehart. In addition to their efforts to maintain the team's financial status, Danielson and Mecarini also schedule meets and help with practices.

Mecarini said several members of the team were rather inexperienced when it was first formed. "Most of the people had never raced," he noted. The people who tried out had done a lot of touring and wanted to pursue the sport in a slightly different form. As the team logged more and more miles, the many individuals who had come to survive the grueling practices started to feel like a team. Junior Martin Worrall said he feels that the training involved in bicycling engenders the same kind of togetherness that crew does. "It's like rowing crew with scenery," he said.

Team members hope that the comraderie they developed in the fall will help their performance in the spring.

Bicycle racing is divided into three divisions: A, B, and C. Although the team had no A division cyclists in the fall, Mecarini and Danielson are hoping that winter training and the addition of cross country runners and other campus cycling enthusiasts will make them a force to be reckoned with.

Because the team had very few experienced members in the fall, they did not expect to do very well in their only meet, the Yale Bike Race '86. The meet was, however, highlighted by some impressive individual performances, most notably senior Mary Bourne's fifth place finish against nationally ranked competition. The meet at Yale was just the beginning, as the cyclists are now gearing up for their second semester of competition, which will include four meets during the month of April.

Review—

Continued from Page 5

successful in uniting the "big" sound of the Ensemble with the individuality of Smith's clarinet.

There was a technical problem which affected part of the concert. The amplification system, which worked well for most of the instruments and for Smith's synthesizer, did the reverse for the piano. At times, it sounded like it was being phoned in from another city, even to a listener 20 feet from the stage.

The Ensemble's willingness to share the stage with its subset, the Stompers, and with other campus groups is encouraging, one of a number of small breakthroughs which happened December 6. Another was to play with a professional musician and composer, a major challenge to any college unit.

But it has to be noted that the auditorium was half-full, at best, for the event.

Club Hockey splits with Panthers

by Ted Hobart

The first game of 1987, a rematch against Middlebury, a 3-2 Williams' victim before break, ended in a convincing Panther 4-1 win.

At 7:32 of the first period, senior co-captain Leslie Fernandez passed from behind the net to senior Kirsten Rooks, who scored.

Williams' inability to break out of their own zone plagued them in the second period, as they managed only two shots, while Middlebury exploded for three goals. In the third period, play was even, but only Middlebury scored, making the final score 4-1. Williams was outshot 38-14 for the game. The loss dropped the squad's record to 2-2.

In the earlier victory over Middlebury, the first ever over that school, Hagey stopped 51 shots on goal. Co-captain Haley Clifford '87, Jenny Ause '88, and Sarah Shuli '88 tallied goals in the 3-2 road win. Other games before break were a 3-2 win over Skidmore and a 11-1 beating by Bowdoin.

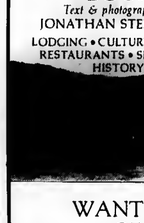
The Ephs take the ice tomorrow on the road at Hamilton and have this weekend off.

W. Hoops—

Continued from Page 8

come in impressive fashion. The team opened its season with a 73-64 victory over North Adams and followed it with a monstrous 79-33 rout of Skidmore. The Ephs ran their win streak to four, destroying Colby Sawyer 83-60 and crushing Middlebury 75-54. Statistically, Hedeman averages around 25 a game and over ten boards while Crouchley pours in 15 a game to go along with her devastating defensive play.

Having coasted through the first part of its schedule without a loss, the Lady Ephs will face two stern tests this week when they travel to Hamilton tomorrow and then to Amherst on Saturday.



COLGATE UNIVERSITY

. . .invites you to consider a career in teaching.

Colgate University offers the Masters of Arts in Teaching degree to liberal arts graduates interested in teaching high school science, mathematics, English, and social studies. Generous financial aid is available to qualified students. For more information write to: George E. De Boer, Chairperson, Department of Education, Colgate University, Hamilton, NY 13346 / Telephone: (315) 824-1000.

Student organization needed for marketing project. Make up to $600 per week.
Call 1-800-592-2121
Ask for Janet

MAKE $10 - $360 PER WEEK
AND MORE mailing commission circulars.
EXCELLENT EXTRA INCOME! No quotas or bosses. FREE details! RUSH self-addressed, stamped envelope to:
Rosemary Productions, 804 Old Thorsby Road, Clanton, AL 35045

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Now starting delivery to Williams College
From 4:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

THE RIGHT PLACE AT THE RIGHT TIME

Prudential Bache Capital Funding, the Investment Banking Division of Prudential Bache Securities Inc. will be interviewing for Analyst positions on Monday, February 2, 1987.

Please submit your resume and pick up our brochure at the Career Planning Center by January 21, 1987.

"A great Christmas gift. The Best guide we've seen on the Berkshire region." NEWSDAY

THE BERKSHIRE BOOK
Text & photographs by JONATHAN STERNFIELD
LODGING • CULTURE • SPORTS
RESTAURANTS • SHOPPING
HISTORY

"Impressively researched, attractively designed, easy to use." BERKSHIRE EAGLE
"A must for every traveler's bookshelf." NEW ENGLAND MONTHLY
BH
$14.95
Bookstores & gift shops or
BERKSHIRE HOUSE
P. O. BOX 28
Gt. Barrington, MA 01230
413-528-3150

WANT TO MAKE THE MOST OF THE BERKSHIRES?
Everything the first time visitor or long time resident needs to know and much more, is in this book: the only complete guide to the pleasures and practicalities of the Berkshires.
"Lives up to its subtitle: A Complete Guide." BOSTON GLOBE

Men's Squash

Williams' nationally ranked squash team demolished West Point 9-0 on Sunday after a layoff that went back to the Williams Invitational on December 5-7. Coach Sean Sloane said that he was especially pleased that his team was able to win several close matches after the team had gone over a month without playing. "It's nice to see that nobody lost a whole lot over that layoff, ...(and) it's encouraging that we won all those close matches, everybody feeds off that."

The team's number two player, Wendell Chestnut '88, cited Pier Friend '88, playing number eight, as exemplifying the rest of the team's performance, playing a very solid and controlled game. "He wasn't sure he could do it and he wound up winning."

Sloane emphasized the role conditioning played in his team's victory over the Cadets.

In order to reinforce the importance of endurance to his team, Coach Sloane called a practice immediately after the match had ended. Although he felt that he might be surprising most of his players, he said that the match with Army had shown his players the importance of conditioning and that he wanted them to "drive hard now."

Coach Sloane is looking for the players' conditioning to carry them to a top eight ranking by the end of the season. In order for the team to accomplish this, they must be able to successfully compete against Dartmouth, Trinity, and Tufts in the upcoming two months. Matches against Harvard and Franklin & Marshall, two of the top three teams in the country, within the next week, will help to prepare the Ephs for their stretch run.

—Chuck Samuelson

W. Squash

The Women's Squash team enjoyed a successful opening week, soundly defeating Bates 9-0 and Middlebury 6-3 while only narrowly losing to powerhouse Dartmouth 6-3.

Senior co-captain Amy Barstad starred with three victories, including a heart-stopping 3-2 win over Middlebury's nationally ranked Cathy Abrams. Coach Renzie Lamb cited Williams' superior depth as the reason for Saturday's poundings. While Barstad and Jeanne Cloppse '88 defeated strong opponents in tight matches, the six through nine racketeers won all eight of their matches without losing a single game.

In the season opener, Dartmouth handed the Ephs a close loss. With Barstad, Allison Buckner '89, and Judy Kellogg '89 defeating their Big Green opponents, the Ephs needed wins from Sarah Fulkerson '90 and Gigi Madore '87 to pull off the upset, but both lost their deciding fifth games by slim margins.

—Marc McDermott

Track

The men's and women's track teams travelled to Clinton, New York, on Friday for a tri-meet against Union and Hamilton. The women's team enjoyed success, winning all but two events on their way to a 97 point finish, well ahead of Union's 53 and Hamilton's 9. The men's team was not as fortunate, losing to Hamilton by 2.5 points, 65.5 to 63, finishing second in the deciding 1600 meter relay. Union was third with 29.5.

The women's team was led by Dawn Macauley '89, who captured the high jump, 55 meter hurdles, and 400 meters. Williams also had two double winners. Susan Northen '89 won the long jump and triple jump, and Joan Davis '88 took first in the 55 meter dash and 200.

The standout for the men was freshman Geoffrey Igharo, who won the long jump, triple jump, and 55 meter dash, and took fourth in the 300 meters as a last-second entry. Other good efforts were turned in by Andre Lopez '87 with a time of 1:56 in the 800 meters and Jon Fisher '87, who ran 4:07 to win the 1500 meters. Lopez looked to anchor the 1600 meter relay team, but, after the third leg, the Ephmen were too far behind to catch Hamilton, and finished second.

The men's team has a home meet on Friday against Springfield and Albany St., while the women travel to the Smith Relays on Saturday.

—Steve Brody

Football

In late December, the 1986 All-New England Small College Athletic Conference Football Team was announced. Paul Foye '87, the outstanding Amherst quarterback, was selected as Offensive Player of the Year. Defensive Player of the Year was Tufts Bob Patz, a senior tackle. Williams, which improved to 4-4 this season, has four players named. Jim Poulsen '87 hauled in 20 passes for the Ephs and was selected at tight end. Brian Nixon '87 was chosen at defensive line after starring for Williams in 1986. Dan McCarthy was picked at a linebacker spot, and Scott Powers '88 got the nod at punter.

Goff Sports Trivia Quiz

1) Which pro football franchise has the best lifetime winning percentage?
2) Which baseball player has had the most seasons with 30 or more home runs and stolen bases?
3) Which franchise is the oldest: Miami Dolphins, Philadelphia 76ers or Atlanta Braves?
4) Which golfer holds the record for most money won in a year without winning a tournament?
5) Who holds the NBA record for most blocks in a game?

Turn in your answers to SU 3099 by Saturday, 10:00 a.m. The person with the most correct answers wins a gift certificate to Goff Sports. In case of a tie a drawing will be held to determine the winner. Good Luck.

Goff's Sports, inc.
15 Spring St.

SUMMER IN EUROPE $239
Lowest scheduled fares to all of Europe from Boston
Call 1-800-325-2222

$59.00
Oakley
Factory Pilot Eyeshade System
THE SPOKE
408 Main St. 458-3456

Capers
412 Main St. Williamstown 458-9180
Jan 16th & 17th at 9:30 p.m.
"The Sharks"
We have been closed for renovations. We will reopen Friday, Jan. 16th at 11:00 a.m. Come in and see what we've done and receive a 20% discount on any food item through the month of February.

THE CLIP SHOP AND YOU
Let's Go Together in Style

An Additional
$2.00 OFF
STUDENT — Wash - Cut - Blow Dry
Regularly $14.00
Good Till: February 28, 1987 For Williams College Students Only!
PLEASE BRING CARD IN WITH YOU.
49 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA
413-458-9167
413-458-8585
125 North St.
Bennington, VT
802-442-9823
122 North St.
Pittsfield, MA
413-442-6903
413-447-9576
We're a Sebastian Artistic Center

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

GENUINE GENUINE
This week's recipient is Freshman Michelle Freemer, who set two meet records on the swim team's trip to Florida. Michelle, this Bud's for you!
This Bud's for you!

The Ephs have demonstrated a potent offense and here they converge on the Continental goalie in a 6-5 overtime loss to Hamilton Wednesday at Lansing Chapman Rink. (Word)

Tough losses belie Hockey improvement

by Al Mottur

On Saturday night the hockey team lost its second consecutive heartbreaker, 6-4 to Holy Cross, and saw its record fall to 2-5-1. The defeat, on the heels of two devastating overtime losses to Hamilton and Canisius puts a damper on what had thus far been a promising season for the Ephs.

The game was physical and emotional, as neither team ever held a convincing advantage in goals or in play. Trailing 3-2 entering the third period, the Ephs rallied on two impressive goals. Freshman defenseman Dave Bakken carried the puck into the zone, eluded a defender, faked the goalie, and slipped the puck into the open net tying the game.

A minute later, senior Mike O'Connell scored his second goal of the night on a diving shot which he fired over the left shoulder of the goalie into the net for a 4-3 lead. Holy Cross, however, converted twice in the next six minutes to grab a lead of 5-4, a lead they would hold until the final horn.

Prior to the loss to the Crusaders the Ephs fell in overtime to Hamilton by a 6-5 score. Similar to the Holy Cross game and an earlier Canisius overtime loss, the Ephs played well and played physical but lost. The defeat marked the second straight start for goalie Rick Dietz '87 who replaced injured Mark Morrison '88 in the North Adams game last Sunday.

Against the Route 2 rivals, Williams avenged an early season 5-2 loss during reading period by pounding the Mohawks 7-2. The game was in the final day of the Williams Invitational as the two teams were playing for third place. The night before Williams and North Adams had lost by identical 4-3 scores to Canisius and Geneseo St. respectively.

The rout of the Mohawks showcased three superb individual efforts by Eph players. Forward Ron Van Belle '90 tallied three goals, earning him the distinction of being named "ECAC rookie of the week." Winger Mike Swenson '89 also pocketed a hat trick as the Ephs set a season mark for shots and goals. Also pivotal to the victory was the play of netminder Dietz who in his first start, stopped 41 of 43 shots on goal.

Prior to the tourney, the Ephs played four games before Christmas break. Besides the loss to North Adams, the team beat a talented Norwich squad 4-3 to gain the season's first win. The victory followed a 5-5 tie with A.I.C. and a 6-4 loss to Trinity.

The team will take to the ice tonight as it travels to Middlebury. As they prepare for the remainder of their schedule the players feel that they are a better team than last year's 3-17-3 squad. And thus far, the team's play seems to indicate that this is true. Those losses that were routs last year are now overtime defeats and the squad has already beaten two quality opponents in Norwich and North Adams. Nonetheless, the squad must start winning the close games to improve on last year's mark and contend for an ECAC playoff berth.

Men's Basketball 2-2, take on Jeffs Saturday

by Stewart Verdery

In three games before Christmas, the men's basketball team unveiled a high-powered offensive attack that averaged 98 points per outing en route to a 2-1 record. However, against Hamilton last Tuesday, the Continentals were the ones who posted the dominating stats, turning a 65-27 halftime lead into a 120-79 romp.

A huge opposition front line led by All-American John Cavanaugh worked over the small Eph frontcourt, and awful first half shooting (11-48) doomed Williams. The Ephs' scoring duo, guard Henry Jones '88 and forward Brandt Johnson '87, were held to 29 points, half their combined average. Freshman guard Garcia Major had a career-high 16, Bill Melchionne '89 tossed in 12, and Mike Masters '89 continued his fine all-around play with six points, five boards and three assists.

Season Opener

On November 25, Skidmore entered Lasell for the season opener and was greeted by an Eph offensive explosion. Johnson kicked off his chase for 1000 career points by pouring in 18 first half points. John Ciulla '87 entered the record books by drilling the first three-point hoop in Eph history, and the team jumped out to a 50-36 halftime lead.

Behind Jeff Jakob (32 points), Skidmore closed the gap early in the second half, but fell victim to an incredible shooting display by Jones. In his first collegiate start, the junior tossed in three point bombs and finger rolls, totalling 30 points in the second half, 40 in all. The final score was 106-86 Williams

Against Norwich, poor defense in the paint was crucial in the 101-94 loss. Williams' 47-41 lead at the break fell prey to a second half Cadet press. Johnson carried the Ephs, scoring 34 and sweeping the glass for 15 rebounds. Jones (28 points) burled four more three-pointers but the rest of the lineup lagged in production.

OT in Lasell

In a game which may spur an intense rivalry, the Ephs escaped with a 93-91 overtime victory against North Adams. The see-saw affair was marked by fine play by Jones (28 points), Johnson (19 plus 13 boards) and solid contributions by Major at the point and Captain Greg Lang '87 inside during the extra period. Captivating the huge crowd, however, was Mohawk freshman Bernard Alexander who had several rejections of Eph shots and flew the friendly skies for a rude slam over Johnson.

A Ciulla layup with 1:30 remaining put the Ephs up 84-82, but a Mohawk steal and two foul shots tied the score. The game went to OT after a Johnson miss at the buzzer. At 1:08 left, Jones gave Williams the lead, 92-91, and North Adams missed three scoring chances, including a Phil Bledsoe jumper with two seconds left. Johnson rebounded and made one foul shot to seal the win, 93-91.

After Saturday's snow postponment against Springfield, the Ephs hope to bounce back from the Hamilton disaster against RPI tonight. The Engineers disciplined style will likely cause the fast-breaking Ephs trouble.

Saturday, Amherst's new gym will welcome the Ephs and their fans at 8:00. The Jeffs lost four starters off last year's squad, but have blended well, rising to a number three ranking in New England.

Swimmers shine in Fla., Freemer nails 2 records

by Kurt Oeler

Strong efforts in the freestyle events carried Williams to decisive wins over Hamilton College Saturday. The men and women won, by scores of 68-44 and 67-46.

Scott Robinson '87 won the 200 and 500 free events and teamed with Dean Pomerleau '87, Dave Brown '89, and Dan Synder '90 to win the 400 free relay. Snyder's freestyle sprinting earned him a win in the 100. Chris Cieurzo '90, Scott Healy '88, Rob Benson '90, and Pomerleau smothered the Continentals in the stroke events. The foursome won the 400 medley relay and Cieurzo, Healy, and Benson each added individual wins to the Eph total.

Michelle Freemer '90 headed a strong freshman performance, turning in winning efforts in the 500 and 1000 free events. Anne Maceachern '90 won the 50 free. Maceachern and Constance Davis '90 combined with Lisa Gauthier '90 and Jen Raymond '87 to win the 400 free relay. Maceachern and Raymond also swam on the Ephs' winning 400 medley relay.

Earlier, the men took their fifteenth consecutive meet from the Lord Jeffs of Amherst, but the women fell to the Lady Jeffs. Chris Cieurzo paced the men's dominating attack while Jen Raymond led the women in their losing effort.

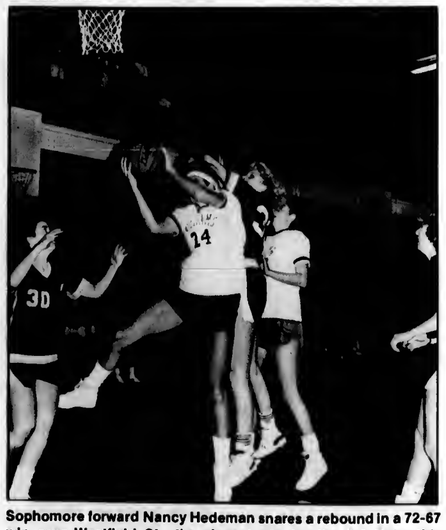
Following the Amherst meet the Ephs headed to Fort Lauderdale for their winter training session. Williams swam to a second place finish in the fifty-first Ed Kennedy Classic swimming meet. Michelle Freemer won the 200- and 800-meter free events, setting meet records in both events. She also added a win in the ocean mile swim.

Scott Robinson won the 200-meter free, setting one of three records established by the men's team. Cieurzo, Chris Gigilo '89, and Beau Everett '87 won the 150-meter back relay in record time, while Evan Davis '89, Tim Shaw '89, and Scott Healy '88 captured the 150-meter breast relay.

The men's dual meet record stands at 2-1 while the women are 1-2. Saturday, the team will face UMass at Muir Pool.

Hedeman, hoopsters destroy foes

by Drew Sawyer



One year ago the Women's b-ball team was floundering in a huge slump, finding it impossible to keep up with their taller and more talented opponents. This year however, the tables have turned and it is the lady Ephs who are pounding the boards and out-playing their opponents. After last Saturday's 68-53 destruction of Middlebury the team has an impeccable record of 6-0.

The victory over Middlebury was the second win by the team over the Panthers this year. The win featured a balanced scoring attack as five players scored in double figures. Nancy Hedeman '89 poured in 18 points and snagged 12 rebounds while sophomore teammate Missy Crouchley added 13. First year coach Nancy Roberts said that the large crowd spurred the team on: "The fan support really helped us on an off day. We didn't play well but we managed to win."

Previous to the Middlebury rout the squad faced its only true test as it edged Division II opponent Westfield St. 72-67. After having fallen behind by as many as 11, the squad rallied to lead 63-62 with two minutes to play. From here on in, the team converted its free throws to seal the win. Leading the way throughout was Hedeman who poured in 30 points and snared 11 rebounds.

Aside from the Westfield St. game the squad has not been hard pressed — all its wins have

Continued on Page 6

Sophomore forward Nancy Hedeman snares a rebound in a 72-67 win over Westfield St., the closest win for the 6-0 Ephs this season. (Gannon)

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 12 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE JANUARY 20, 1987

Student raped at knifepoint

by Debbie Snyder

The Berkshire County District Attorney's Office is investigating the reported rape at knifepoint last Wednesday morning of a Williams student in her room.

The victim did not suffer any other physical injuries, said Director of Public Information James Koiesar.

Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zoito said he was notified of the attack by college officials Thursday afternoon. He said that he then notified the Massachusetts Crime Prevention and Control unit, which sent state trooper Robert Scott to assist the District Attorney's office and local police in the investigation.

The assailant wore a ski mask, and his age and identity are unknown, according to a letter by Dean of the College Stephen Fix. The letter was distributed in college dining halls Thursday evening.

"In the week before this attack, the victim is reported to have received several sexually explicit and threatening phone calls," the letter said. Fix said later that the College was notified of the crime by a third party.

"You can darn well bet she was observed by (the assailant)," Zoito said. "Was it someone in the student body or was it a local resident?"

Fix's letter urged students to take precautionary measures, including locking their doors and notifying authorities about suspicious persons and threatening phone calls.

Zoito agreed with the advice, saying "What harm is there to lock your door at night. It's to your advantage." He said the victim's room was unlocked at the time of the attack.

Assistant Dean Mary Kenyatta said the unlocked door reflects a general sense of security on campus "that is really taken to an extreme."

"When you have a community," she said, "there's always a possibility that someone can be harmed, particularly women."

Fix said in regard to the sense of security at Williams, "The desire for it and the expectation of it isn't misplaced." He added, "People have to take reasonable precautions such as locking your doors at night."

Fix said that the college is considering a public education program on rape in the future. He noted that many local resources exist on this subject.

When construction on the new gym is completed, stores will occupy the part of the building that faces Spring Street. (Ward)

Spring Street merchants await finished construction

by Peter Balaban

The construction of the Chandler Gymnasium has raised the noise level on Spring Street, but most shopkeepers seem to be unconcerned about the noise and looking forward to the completion of the construction in June.

Randy Baker, owner of the Slippery Banana, said "The construction hasn't affected us, although construction as a rule is never a great thing for business — it creates havoc with traffic and ties up parking places." Baker says he wishes the construction was already finished so that things can return to normal.

Administration frustrated

College Treasurer William Reed agreed with Baker. Reed

Continued on Page 7

Oakley proposes 4 divisions

by Peter Balaban

At its meeting last Monday, the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) considered a proposal from President Francis Oakley that would increase the divisions of courses from three to four.

The proposed divisions would be Foreign Languages, Literatures, and Cultures (I); Arts and Humanities (II); Social Sciences (III); and Mathematical and Natural Sciences (IV).

Lab science required

Under Oakley's proposal, each student would be required to take at least two courses in divisions I, II, and III. Three courses in division IV would be required, including a laboratory science.

Professor Thomas Jorling, chairman of the CEP, said that the proposal would serve to correct deficiencies in the present curriculum and to address management concerns such as an equitable distribution of students.

Some CEP members questioned the purpose of expanding the number of divisions and the requirements. History professor Thomas Kohut asked, "Why couldn't we say that our principle purpose is to force students to take coures in departments that are under-enrolled?"

"Practical objectives"

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said that the proposal would fulfill the spirit of educational ideas "but also accomplish our more practical objectives."

Kohut questioned the proposed placement of English and History in the same division, Arts and Humanities. He said each department draws on the other's enrollment. English is currently a division I department and History division II.

Much of the discussion centered on ways of listing courses to insure an equitable spread of students without contradicting the educational goals of the distribution requirement. Most committee members agreed

Continued on Page 8

Senior John Ciulla finds his path impeded by Amherst guard Dickens Mathieu. This action was typical of the game for the Ephs, who lost 88-75 to the scrappy Lord Jeffs. For coverage of the matchup, see page 12. (LeBauer)

148 denied first 4 WSP choices

by F. Craig Gangi

In this year's Winter Study selection process, 148 upperclassmen did not recieve any of their four choices, more than twice the usual number, according to Registrar Charles R. Toomajian.

Toomajian attributed the increase in students who were denied their four choices to class cancellations and the overwhelming popularity of several courses. He said that many students chose several of the more popular courses and increased their chances of being bumped from all of them in the selection process.

Popular courses

Of the 134 regular courses in the Winter Study Program, some of the more popular ones were Chinese Calligraphy, Figure Drawing, Basic Photography, and The Function and Maintenance of Your Automobile, taught by the owner of an auto shop in North Adams.

The Registrar's office does not determine a selection process for Winter Study courses. Toomajian said, "the professors choose who is in the course using whatever criteria they feel are appropriate."

Toomajian said that in the fall, he formed an ad-hoc advisory group of seven or eight students that has been meeting and will continue to meet every week or two. He said that at the meeting this week, the group will discuss what to do to reconcile the problem of the large number of "bumped" students. "I want to look to the students for ideas," he said.

Five choices?

Toomajian said he is considering increasing the number of course choices to five, as well as comparing the reactions of students who received their first choice to students who received another choice.

"There's at least a possibility that many of the students who were put into a course that they didn't want were happy in the end result," said Toomajian.

On the use of computers throughout the course selection process to create uniformity in the selection process, Toomajian remarked "It may lead away from the intimacy that we think we have at Williams."

Senior women first

Professor of Physics C. Ballard Pierce, who sponsored the automobile maintenance and photography courses, said that senior women were the first chosen for the automobile course to insure that the male-female ratio was kept even.

In the photography course, which will not be offered next year, Pierce said that enrollment was restricted to juniors and seniors. Because of the photography course's popularity, first and second choice applicants had to write to Pierce about their goal for the course. Those who did not respond were automatically dropped.

Professor of Geology Markes E. Johnson, Chairman of the Winter Study Committee (WSC), explained that part of the problem has been that the size of the classes was restricted by the WSC to a maximum of 30, with each professor setting the number of students up to that limit.

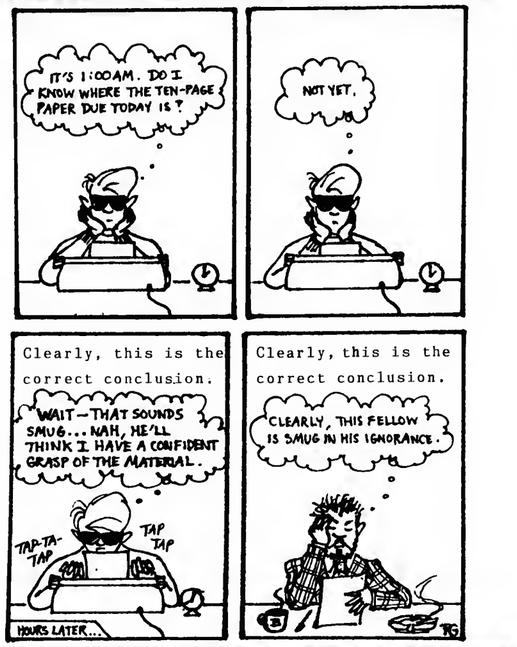
Previously, Johnson said, the number of students in a course was not limited. He explained that that led to competition between the departments with chairmen coercing professors to teach something popular for more department credit and a larger budget for the entire year.

Johnson, defending the size maximum, explained that the reason for it was to spread students into different courses and departments and to keep the class sizes smaller.

A Balanced Education

Williams has long been recognized as a leader in liberal arts education. Just last year, in fact, U.S. News and World Report told us that we attend the best small liberal arts college in the nation. And yet, it is possible to leave Williams after four years without the well-balanced education so central to the liberal arts experience. President Oakley's recent proposal to the Committee on Educational Policy to realign the department divisions and increase the divisional requirements promises to help eliminate this possibility.

By creating a fourth division and maintaining the current requirement of two courses per division, the proposal stiffens curricular requirements considerably. By requiring more courses for graduation, the new requirements would broaden the curricular base of Williams graduates and provide a more comprehensive, liberal education.



The long-term benefits of a broad education are substantial; different disciplines allow students to develop different methods of evaluating problems. In the short run, however, the curricular risks mandated by a broad education can seem less obvious, particularly the night before the first lab practical.

Another significant aspect of the proposal, the requirement of a laboratory science, is also well-founded. Many students avoid the technical area of science by taking courses which do not require lab work.

Some opponents of the proposal argue that increasing the divisional requirements will simultaneously increase the student's desire to find courses within each division which will satisfy the requirements but do not require much work. It will be the departments' job to prevent this. If departments offer interesting but non-gut courses, students will be forced to choose courses by topic, rather than by level of difficulty.

The new requirements presented to the CEP last week would foster a greater liberal arts atmosphere at Williams. Despite the loss of curricular freedom inherent in increased divisional requirements, this proposal promises to improve the balanced nature of a Williams education.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Letters

Sympathy

To the Editor:

I found the notice that all of us received on Thursday regarding the rape of a Williams College student extremely disturbing. The image of a woman stalked down and threatened at knifepoint in her own room into having sex makes me furious and very afraid. I am hoping that the College will be able to engage in some meaningful discourse on the matter of sex, violence, and sexuality here in our tiny Williams world as well as in the greater world at large. I believe people here especially need to open their eyes to the reality that surrounds us.

Williams passes itself off as such an unblemished ivory tower that incidents of violence like this tend to result either in scandal or an embarrassed, muffled silence.

According to a number of different studies, the rape and sexual assault of women in America is a fairly common occurrence. One out of four women will be sexually assaulted (that is, forced into sexual contact) in her lifetime. In a location where we rely so heavily on the trust of our neighbors it is frightening to realize that 60 to 75 percent of all rapes are committed by an aquaintance. These statistics do not mean anything until we begin to reflect on our own life histories and those of the people around us.

Rape terrifies me because it seems to be just one symptom among many of a very widespread social disease which consists in part of an unbelievably disproportionate distribution of power between the sexes and a pervasive, warped attitude towards sexuality in general.

The rape that occurred last week is especially terrifying because of the rapist's starkly deliberate intentions. In many cases the line between rape and desired intercourse are not so clearly delineated. My heart goes all out to the victim, whoever she is.

Eliza Kent '89

Oppression

To the Editor:

In response to Averil Clarke's article in last week's Record, I do not wish to speak on behalf of the white people of Williams College, nor do I wish to speak for the Women, the Gay population, or for any other group beside the one of which I am the only member. I would first off like to say that Clarke's article not only infuriated me for its arrogance, but also saddened me to think that anyone could be so narrow—minded as to assume that she belongs to the only group that faces oppression these days.

Mind you, I'm not saying 'these days at Williams College', but simply 'these days' as it pertains to anywhere and everywhere. She claims to be invisible here, stating that everyone who is not black "knows nothing about black aesthetics." Maybe what we don't understand is other people's aesthetics. Is she claiming that every black person innately understands what another black person goes through in every situation simply by virtue of skin color? Or that I can't understand oppression because I'm white? Give me a break, Averil! She and others may not fully believe me when I say quite frankly that in grammar school and high school where, yes, I did see black people (and just for the record, hispanics, Chinese, and Indian people), I didn't give a damn. That is to say I did give a damn about who they themselves were, but I never even noticed whether a friend of mine was black or what.

All of this changed when I got here. I all of a sudden was hit in the face with people shouting at me "WE ARE BLACK, AND WE ARE DIFFERENT AND WE DON'T WANT TO BE ASSOCIATED WITH THE WHITE COMMUNITY HERE AT WILLIAMS!!" Before, I had never segregated anyone, even in my mind (You skeptics can say what you want.) and all of a sudden people were telling me to segregate them.

Averil Clarke claims she does not want to "compromise the rich diversity of my people by giving a 400—word essay on what we are all like." However, she groups the entire white population into a singular object that "only wants me in parts." I find being reduced to nothing more than a member of a group with those other members I am separate and different from, repulsive and offending.

No, Averil, I have not spent massive amounts of time trying to understand the black race. That would be impossible for anyone to do, black or white. However, I have tried to understand, as much as it is possible, my friends' problems, and I think I have succeeded as much with my white friends as with my friends of other pigmentation. What I am trying to say is that maybe I can't understand Averil, but maybe I can't fully understand anyone but me. If I could, that would be wonderful, but hasn't everyone, at some time, felt misunderstood in one form or another?

What I see here is not the oppression of a particular group, but a general lack of knowledge about those different from ourselves. How are we supposed to acquire that knowledge when people segregate themselves and don't let others TRY to reach them. We'd get a lot further if people allowed others to listen.

Bridget Baird '89

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... John McDermott and Joe Thorndike
NEWS ..... Debbie Snyder
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley
OP-ED ..... John Canty
SPORTS ..... Al Mottur and Stewart Verdery
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright and Mike LeBauer
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
SENIOR EDITOR ..... Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Peter Balaban, Karen Costenbader, Jocelyn Shadforth
ASSISTANT FEATURES .... Beth Broadrup, Michael Erard, Charles Samuelson
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
LAYOUT STAFF ..... Karl Emsbo, Kirsten Hasenluss, Paul Kwon
GRAPHICS ..... Anna Henriques
ADVERTISING ..... Russ Hollenbeck
BUSINESS/CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to the Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

Letters Policy

The Record welcomes letters from all members of the Williamstown community.

Submissions should be concise, preferably 300 words or less, and should be received by The Record, Baxter Hall, by 10 a.m. on the Saturday before publication.

Coming to terms with racial identity: respect is the key

by Don Scott '90

Hey you!! Black boy and black girl!! Whether you're in the company of blacks or whites, take the time to carefully read and think about this message. I'm not a militant black nationalist or a bitter-biled insecure radical. I'm an average black male from an upper-middle class family in Ohio. In my private high school class of eighty-five highly intellectual and well-to-do students, I was one of five blacks. For three years I was the only black in the school's varsity soccer program. Many times at school functions I was the only black person present.

Am I special? Am I different? All I'm sure of is that wherever I was, whoever I was with, whatever the situation may have been, I was black. Whether or not I was with blacks or whites, I was black, and that's the way they saw me whether I liked it or not. No matter how well I played soccer, no matter how I dressed, no matter how articulate my speech was — I was black.

Throughout my elementary and junior high school and high school years, many of my associates, friends, and acquaintances were white. In fact, the majority of my pre-teen and teenage company was white. There was a time during my high school years when my self-identity became blurred. This was a time when I was feeling extra-liked, extra-popular, and extra-special. This was a time when I was considered a "whitewash", or an "oreo." During this time I began to notice an air of resentment from other blacks. I even noticed a certain restraint on the part of some whites as far as my total acceptance into their world. I had seemingly lost all respect. Even the blacks who remained in contact with their blackness were able to cooperate and rationalize with whites in a better fashion than I could. I realized that I had a characteristic that I could not deny and should relate with; if not for the sake of pride, for the sake of everyone else's openess, honesty, and prejudices.

The point I'm trying to make is this: many black people have an identity problem. They have this absurd notion that their surroundings will make a difference on how their skin color is viewed. I think not. Blacks should be proud to be black and whites should be proud to be white. Don't get me wrong; I'm no separatist. Take the company that you desire and lead your life where you will. Whatever you do, don't forget who you are and where you came from. Even though you might think differently, and may have had wonderful experiences in this Utopia known as Williamstown, the real world will not respect any person until he respects himself.

The foot of the mount: a view of the Winter Study lifestyle

by Nat McCormick '88

I'm standing in the haze on top of the mountain. Just me and Bud. Bud Light. Powdery gusts of air swirl around us, and I take a pull. The sky's getting light and I'm feeling lightheaded. The moon—round top of the can beams at me, the dark crack of a smile in its aluminum face. Its crazy mouth shouts something I can't hear above the wind, which has been pushing me toward a cliff—like drop. The next thing I know, Suzy Chapstick bullets past in a cloud of frosty perfume. She is wearing a walkman, turned up very loud. I take another pull on the beer as the girl—next—door disappears. The empty can follows her, the wind pushes, I lose my balance and topple off the edge.

The fall jolts. The first thing I see in my stunnned state is the open window, through which the cold morning air is blasting into my room. I lie on my floor for a moment, staring up at the quilt on my bed, hopelessly beyond reach. The moon—faced clock set on my bureau begins to shriek.

It must be January, the dead of winter. I drag myself to the bureau and paw through the drawers, already too late for a shower. As the clothes fly, a pair of tropical shorts alights on my head, and I wing it to the far side of the room, where it lies in a crumpled heap. From their upsidedown perch, the polyester parrots seem to scold me. I smash the damn clock.

Then another bell rings and I become late for class. Somewhere in between a horizontal and vertical position, clad in not much more than a pair of mis—matched socks and a Bill—the—Cat t—shirt I choose to make the parrots wince, I give up. I'm a Northerner by birth, but staring out through the grey pane of my window, I feel like singing the blues: my roommate's got the flu, I got the Winter Study blues. Take it away, Doc.

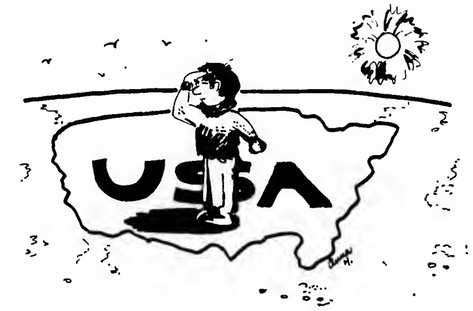
There are only two concepts I don't like about Winter Study: one is winter, and the other study. I may be a Northerner, but what I could tell you about skiing would take less time than an ashtray change at the Ritz. One of the nicer words I've heard to describe the local climate is 'polar,' a word which I think is best followed by 'bear.' This association works well, since hibernation seems to be the only sensible solution to winter. Then there's the study part, which never did come easy to me, fall, winter, spring, or summer. I'm a junior now, and it's taken me three years to figure out things as basic as breakfast: like how to get a glass of ice water without a bath, or why not to retrieve an English muffin from the toaster with a fork. The list goes on, and it's tough to keep up because the freshman gets smarter every year. The

Continued on Page 8

The ills of American cultural naivete: an innocent at home

by Andrew Mayer '88

I won't beat around the bush. Let's face it. In general, Americans are ignorant about the rest of the world. I'm not talking about ignorance of world news and events, but ignorance of cultural differences and languages. And to me, there seems no overwhelming desire to cope with these differences, but more of a desire to shrink back into the isolation of America.



Foreign students and students recently returned from study abroad programs, were invited last Wednesday to view a film made at Boston University called "Cold Water." The film, a documentary, was a montage of interviews with twelve foreign Boston University students, one American, a psychologist, an expert on international cultural differences, and the coordinator of international study at Boston University.

The film dealt with problems the foreign students had when the first arrived in the United States. One overriding theme emerged: Americans are ignorant of other world cultures and tend to think that our culture is the overriding culture of the world. While most of you will admit that, of course, our culture is not the main culture of the world, I still believe most of us are ignorant of the differences.

The students in the film talked of a certain lack of acceptance by Americans. They told of almost not being rented an apartment because 'foreign students tend to be dirty,' or being pushed to the side at Burger King because they didn't understand the phrase 'here or to go.' But even more than that, they explained how Americans fundamentally just do not realize that cultural differences exist.

In a discussion after the film, the Williams foreign students supported the views of the Boston University students. All said their first year here was one of isolation and loneliness and complained that their roommates and friends did not or do not understand. Foreign students may be active in college activities or immersed in classes, but the cultural differences between here and their native country are enough to bring on their isolation. We must understand this and help them deal with it.

It may take a trip abroad to realize it, perhaps to the Soviet Union, where I spent the fall semester. But you don't need to go to the USSR. Germany, Italy, or France will do. Walk into a store and buy something in Munich, Paris, or Rome. More than likely someone there will speak English. If not, go back to your hotel and without a doubt the clerk in the hotel store will speak English.

You see, we don't need to learn a foreign language because everyone, everywhere, speaks English. It's a universal language. Why, even the roadsigns in the USSR are in Russian and English.

And furthermore, while we don't learn foreign languages, why do we not study the difference between Russia and the Soviet Union? Who can pick out a random African country on the map other than Egypt, Ethiopia, Libya, or South Africa?

This article stems from my reaction to the questions asked of me when I returned from Leningrad two weeks ago. People asked, "Are there a lot of commies?" or "How are the Russian babes?" and the ever—popular "How was it?" Those questions are fine as a start, but the absence of follow—up ques-

Continued on Page 8

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

Winter Study Special

After 6:00 p.m. 40% discount on all salad, crepe, and dinner entrees. Offer extended to all students and faculty of Williams.

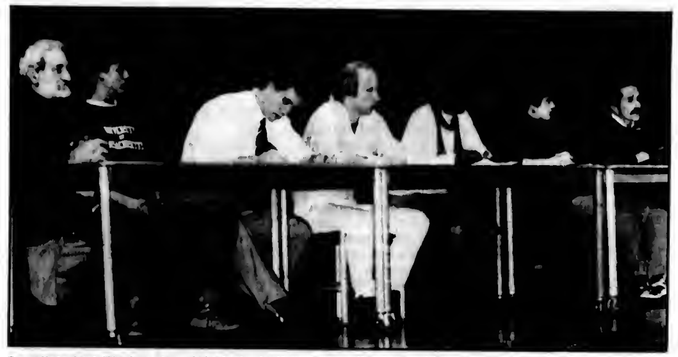
Closed Every Monday in January

Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 8:00 p.m. Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Telephone (413)458-5007



the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
Est. 1944 Betty Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

with this coupon

20% OFF ANY BOOK

We now have back in stock: Jim Shepard's Paper Doll, Stephen Millhauser From the Realm of Morphens,
Dean Crawford's Lay of the Land

Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 8 p.m.
Now open 'til 8:00 p.m.
Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Panelists last Wednesday debated whether intercollegiate athletics complement or conflict with academics. (Kershaw)

Panelists debate scholar-athlete conflict

by Paul Kwon

Six members of the Williams community debated whether or not intercollegiate athletics complement academics last Wednesday in a panel discussion sponsored by the Gargoyle Society.

John Ciolek '87, Coach Peter Farwell '73, Christopher Gascon '88, Gail Henderson '87, Coach Jennifer Perry '86 and Professor Kurt Tauber comprised the panel billed as "Hammerheads vs. Humanities".

Farwell, a cross-country and track coach, maintained that athletics not only complement but also improve a student's academic performance. Farwell noted that he participated in sports the four years he was at Williams, and became a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

"I think that athletics and academics go together," Farwell said. "I don't think that I could have done as well academically without athletics. Athletics gave me a release."

Dichotomy

Ciolek, who plays varsity football, disagreed with Farwell. "There is a dichotomy between academics and athletics," he said. "This dichotomy is unnatural and pernicious." Ciolek cited conflicts between labs and TA sessions and sports practice as an example of this dichotomy.

Political Science Professor Kurt Tauber also maintained that intercollegiate athletics disrupt academics. He advocated the abolishment of intercollegiate athletics in favor of intramural and individual sports. "Intercollegiate athletics pose impossible kinds of training schedules and add none of the benefits that unorganized sports provide," he said.

Tauber also criticized the preference the admissions office may give to an athlete, stating, "When a particular athlete is needed, he may be admitted over a more academically gifted person who loses a place. This is a catatastophe."

Recruiting

Speaking in favor of recruiting athletes, Henderson, a member of the women's varsity

Continued on Page 9

ACSR votes to sell College's $820,000 of Raytheon stock

by John McDermott

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) last week voted to recommend that the College sell $820, 000 worth of stock it holds in Raytheon Co., which has operations in South Africa.

This weekend, the proposal goes before the finance committee of the college Board of Trustees. If it is approved, Raytheon will be the sixth company of which the College has divested itself since the ACSR was founded in 1978, according to College Treasurer William Reed.

The recommendation on Raytheon was approved at the ACSR's January 12 meeting, which was attended only by six ACSR members, according to Reed. He said that the meeting, which is open to the public, was accidentally not listed in the Weekly Calendar.

At the same meeting, in the first test of the college's policy of disinvestment advocacy, the committee supported a shareholder resolution calling on the Black & Decker Corp. to withdraw its South African operations, Reed said.

Reed said he spoke with Charles Mott, chairman of the trustees' finance committee, by telephone and that Mott told him the committee approved of the Black & Decker decision. Reed said the committee would not discuss the recommendation to sell Raytheon stock until this weekend's meeting.

The finance committee has never opposed a recommendation of the ACSR, according to Reed. But he said it is possible that the committee may decide to delay the matter until after a shareholder resolution urging Raytheon to withdraw from South Africa is held in April.

ACSR chairman James Wood confirmed that the committee discussed selling the Raytheon stock and the Black & Decker proxy, but would not discuss the results of the two votes. Wood said it was committee policy that recommendations are made to the turstees in private by the committee.

The college has owned stock in Raytheon for about six months, Reed said. The stock is part of about $26 million of the college endowment which is invested in companies doing business in South Africa.

Wood said that the South African operations of Raytheon consist of two companies. One has one employee, and the other has 40, he said.

Wood said that the primary reason that committee members decided to take a vote on the Raytheon divestment was a dissatisfaction with a form letter and press release sent by the company. He said this was the company's only response to the ACSR's letter informing Raytheon of the college's disinvestment advocacy policy.

Reed cited in particular a

Continued on Page 8

CUL discusses proposal from Gaudino committee

by Sharon Burke

The Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) reviewed a Gaudino Committee proposal that freshman houses be affiliated with upperclass houses at its meeting last Wednesday.

The CUL also reviewed guidelines for residential living and briefly discussed the new Log program.

Gaudino proposal

The Gaudino Committee proposed that each freshman entry become affiliated with an upperclass houses, attending such house functions as parties, pizza nights and poetry readings. CUL member Hart Murphy '88 strongly favored the proposal, saying that Williams students are uncritical in their "intense loyalty to freshman segregation."

Suzanne Blemiller '87 also supported the idea. As an upperclassman, she said, "unless you are immediately involved with freshmen, you just dismiss them." However, Blemiller and several other CUL members in favor of the motion suggested a reworking of the specific terms of the proposal.

Senior Tom Fitzgibbon opposed the Gaudino proposal and said that freshman are segregated for their own benefit. He added that such an affiliation could undermine the Junior Adviser system and strain in-house relationships. Fitzgibbon also noted that the Housing Committee unanimously rejected the Gaudino proposal.

CUL chairman William Wagner proposed that the CUL sponsor an open, all-campus meeting in conjunction with the Gaudino Committee to gain wider student opinion. Wagner also said that the Gaudino Committee does not usually solicit any advice when making a proposal, such as with last year's "fiasco over theme houses."

Housing guidelines

Also considered at great length were the guidelines for residential life. Currently, residential life is self-regulated within each house by mutual consent of the house members. Dean Mary Kenyatta said, however, that the dean's office handles about four complaints weekly regarding housing. "People in the house seem to not know how to respect the rights of those with whom they live," Kenyatta said.

Kenyatta suggested that new mechanisms are needed for dealing with in-house clashes. A change of residence and disciplinary probation are the only solutions that the deans can presently offer to students with serious complaints, she said.

The committee accepted a proposal by Blemiller for the creation of a special student committee that would deal only with residential disputes. Blemiller described it as "a group of peers to talk with people who have problems with each other. Politics in the houses mean that a third party would work better."

Continued on Page 7

Students operate food project

by James Spallone

The Berkshire Food Project sponsored its first community hot lunch at the North Adams Congregational Church last Thursday.

About fifteen area residents showed up for the lunch designed by the project to provide a nutritious meal and a place to gather and learn about community support services in economically depressed North Adams.

"My assesment is that it went really well because basically what you have is a few people who will tell a few more who will tell a few more," said Cheryl Salem '86, coordinator of the Williams student-initiated organization. According to Salem, the organization had no idea how many people would show up for the meal, and provisions had been made for up to fifty.

"In a lot of places, especially in small towns like this, there is a real reluctance (to come). If you show up, you are admitting that you need the food," Salem said.

Representitives of several community support organizations showed up for the lunch, which the project sees as a good sign. These organizations promised to inform potential beneficiaries about the next meal, which was scheduled for yesterday afternoon.

Many of those who showed up for the meal of beef stew, salad, bread, and apple sauce were senior citizens. Salem said this was expected. "This is a very depressed area, and anybody who has any mobility takes off. So the people who stay behind, the older people, have nowhere to turn."

According to project volunteers, the lunch was not aimed at a highly visible problem. Lunch programs, or soup kitchens, are often associated with the visibly homeless or indigent.

"Basically, the biggest problem in the area is that 2000 have lost jobs, so there are a lot of unemployed and underemployed," said Sarah Lawton '87.

"People have lost the benefits they received working at big companies, and now they are in service jobs, like waitressing," said Lawton. "You don't see the poverty because you say 'oh, they have a job,' but it turns out that the job is paying (minimum wage)."

The Project sees the lunch program as a multi-faceted approach. "We want to make this a place where two sides can meet," said senior Andy Feicher, "where people who have something to offer can meet the people who need something. For me, the food isn't the big problem."

The idea of a hot lunch stems from one sponsored last year by the College Council. Project members sought to make the hot lunch a full-time program. Human service organizations agreed that the program was needed and have supported the group's efforts.

The North Adams Congregational Church, and its pastor, Elizabeth Wheeler, responded positively to the group's efforts to secure the Church's facilities for the lunch.

According to Salem, the project hopes to become financially self-sustaining through donations from local businesses and residents. Lasts week's lunch was sponsored largely by the meatless meals organized by the College Council. Eighty-nine cents is contributed to the food project for every meatless meal served, amounting to about $450 per meal.

Director of Food Service Jim Hodgkins expressed some reservations about meatless meals. "To do this kind of service, the soup kitchen, is a good thing, but the meatless meals raise questions about the mission of this department," he said. "Like Housing and Buildings and Grounds, we manage student's money. We try to provide a dining experience which I think is a good one, and to break even. But were not in the business of fund raising."

Salem said the project hopes to run clothing and canned food drives, as well as a hot lunch on Mondays and Thursdays. Salem also said that she hopes to make the organization, which has a campus mailing list of about fifty, self-sustaining by involving North Adams State College students, high school students, and others.

Profile: Whitney Stoddard

by Beth Broadrup

Freshmen know him as the dynamic professor pacing the stage and energetically denouncing the profusion of trees on campus during his annual Freshman Days address, "A Sense of Where You Are." Art 101 students know him as a guest lecturer and, to their surprise, the author of their textbook, Art and Architecture in Medieval France. Regardless of how he is known, Whitney Stoddard is one of Williams' most venerable professors, one whose presence has been felt in the art department since 1938.

Stoddard is a member of a veritable Williams dynasty: his father, uncle, brother, two children, and two grandchildren are Ephs. Stoddard first remembers coming to Williams football games at the age of eight.

Minimum major

In a time when art at Williams was a "minimum major," young Stoddard '35 enrolled in Art 1-2 under Karl Weston founder of the art department. Weston's course instilled in Stoddard a fascination with art, and he eventually did graduate work with his former professor.

After three years at Harvard teaching separate Radcliffe and Harvard sections, Stoddard returned to his alma mater as an art instructor. His first year saw him teaching Oriental Art, a subject about which he knew little, to a class of senior majors. "Needless to say, we took a lot of field trips," he joked. He has been teaching at Williams ever since.

Art professor Whitney Stoddard (LeBauer)

Stoddard's dedicated teaching career was interrupted between 1942 and 1945 when he served an institution much larger than Williams — the United States Navy. He became an officer in Columbus, Ohio, and controlled aircraft from radar. Stoddard said he "never heard a shot fired in anger" during the war, as his sea duty consisted of a trip on the carrier Franklin Delano Roosevelt from the Brooklyn Naval Yards to Bayonne, New Jersey. The huge carrier almost struck the Brooklyn Bridge on its short journey.

Back at Williams

After five years as an instructor and six as an assistant professor, Stoddard became an associate professor of art. He specialized in architecture and sculpture of the Renaissance through Baroque periods.

In addition to teaching, Stoddard earned his doctorate from Harvard in 1941, with a thesis on the west portals of Chartres Cathedral that Harvard published in 1952. Among other honors, he received an advanced research Fulbright scholarship on Romanesque sculpture. In 1966 Art and Architecture in Medieval France was published. Stoddard has written three additional books, one of which, containing his new theories on the unknown sculptors of Chartres' west portals, will be published soon.

During his years at Williams, Stoddard has watched the College Museum of Art grow from a small establishment with a staff of one to a true museum with a staff of fourteen and a blossoming national reputation. Stod-

Continued on Page 6

in other IVORY TOWERS

Wesleyan

Wesleyan University has initiated an investigation of "Uncle Duke Day," an all-campus party held annually at the school's West College. Evidence of violations of university or state regulations could lead to prosecution by the Student Judiciary Board or local authorities. On November 9, the evening before Uncle Duke Day, several hundred students began smoking marijuana during dinner in McConoughy Dining Hall. The joints had been distributed by students at the entrance to the dining hall. One student called Public Safety, but by the time they arrived, the smoking had ended. According to Kevin Sanborn, head resident of West College, the incident, which is being referred to as the "Mocon Smokeout," was not connected to the official organization of Uncle Duke Day, which he asserted is not a drug day. He said, "The smokeout is just individual .... It's not planned at our guidance council meetings."

More Wesleyan

An investigation of a slightly different nature began at Wesleyan when a student complained that his computer files had been tampered with. A junior had broken into students' computer files by using a "password trap" program. The computer center decided not to press charges against the student, Richard Silverman, but some of the students whose files were tampered with are planning to press charges with the Student Judiciary Board. They claim that Silverman invaded the privacy guaranteed them by the computer center. Silverman did confess to illegally accessing student files but said that he did not change any of the files and that someone else must have done so. He said his motive for entering the confidential files was mere curiousity, wanting to see if he could write such a program. It is possible that someone else was responsible for the altering the files. When a user exits the system his or her name and account number remain on the screen, making the program available to anyone. Eugene Lipitz, one of the students whose file contents were changed, said this incident is proof that, "the security of the system sucks."

Amherst

Next year Williams plans to eliminate fall reading period and extend Thanksgiving vacation to a week, while Amherst is considering making the opposite changes in its academic calendar. Reasons for the proposed changes include the uninterrupted fall term — which would be longer than usual if orientation or classes began before Labor Day — the desire to coordinate scheduling with the other Five Colleges, and the amount of time devoted to reading and exam periods. The final decision will be announced by the middle of next semester.

Hamilton

The history of sledding at Hamilton started long before anyone even thought of stealing a plastic cafeteria tray. Sleds built by local blacksmiths were used in the nineteenth century as transportation from campus to boarding house. Most were owned by fraternities, so first year students were given the job of dragging them back up the hill for the next user. One-man sleds reached forty miles per hour, while larger sleds carrying three people traveled even faster, covering seven-tenths of a mile in fifty seconds. The history of sledding has had its tragedies — three deaths have been attributed to sledding accidents, although none have involved the imposing stone arches of a halfway house that lies directly in the path of College Hill Road sledders.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Lisa West and Midori Sonoda from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

A new exhibition, "American Realism: Twentieth-Century Drawings and Watercolors," will be on display at the Williams College Museum of Art through March 8. (Hazen)

New exhibit highlights American realist artists

by Michael Barsanti

On Sunday, January 18, the Williams College Museum of Art opened a comprehensive exhibition of 20th Century American drawings and watercolors, with a related exhibit of still lifes by Harold Reddicliffe, a regional artist and Williams graduate. For the next seven weeks, the 200 paintings of the American Realists will be upstairs in the exhibition galleries, while Reddicliffe's work will hang downstairs, in a smaller room near the museum entrance.

This American realist exhibition was put together by the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art from the collection of Glenn C. Janss. The works cover the span from 1901 to 1985 and are by 150 different artists, including Edward Hopper, Georgia O'Keefe, and Edward Ruscha. In a tour of the works last Saturday, Janss said that her collection had an "educational focus." Instead of picking out the best or the most expensive 20th century realist art, she said, she tried to present the length and breadth of this school.

Seeing and perceiving

In the 240-page catalogue that accompanies the exhibition, Alvin Martin wrote that "seeing and perceiving the appearance of things and then expressing what has been observed are at the heart of the realist approach." A realist painter, then, is concerned with conveying accurately what he per-

Continued on Page 6

Croquets, roquets

Wicketeers bring new sport to Williams

by Charles Samuelson

Williams students are fast approaching that time of year when another snowfall does not cause them to run outside and make snow angels but rather causes them to run inside and think of summer. Lying on the beach or, perhaps, loafing around in a verdant backyard, maybe playing a little croquet are the ideas that come to mind. There are, however, at least five students who will never think of croquet in such relaxed terms. Seniors Wendell Miles and Charles Mahoney and sophomores Bill O'Brien, Steven Fagin, and Tom Robertson are all charter members of Williams croquet team.

Christopher Bergen, a nationally ranked player and Williamstown businessman who lives in Lenox, helped to organize the team by calling a meeting for all interested students in late September. As of now all facilities are supplied by Bergen's club, the Lenox Club. Bergen also taught the players the finer points of the game. Unlike the familiar backyard variety in which any family member from tot to octogenarian can hit the ball through a wicket, the "real" version of the game is quite complicated. For starters, there is only 1/8" on either side of the ball when it passes through the wicket. Team captain Robertson says that there is "a lot of strategy involved." There are roquet shots that hit a single ball, and there are croquet shots in which the player hits his ball into another ball and gets to go again.

After learning the fundamentals of the game from Bergen, the people who were interested formed a team, collected dues, and joined the New Engaland Collegiate Croquet Association. NECCA's members include such schools as Harvard, Yale, Smith, Wellesley.

Hordes of fans

After practicing for less than a month, the inexperienced croqueteers of Williams challanged Smith to a match. The Ephs easily vanquished their first foes and captain Robertson said that he was extraordinarily pleased with his team's dominating style of play. "We manhandled Smith," he said.

The team's next and final

Continued on Page 6

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Erik Burns; photographs by Beth Gannon.

The Record recently asked students, "What is your Winter Study class and what do you think of it?"

"It's 'Paradox of War' and I could take it all year long!" —Shelly Whelpton '90

"I'm finishing my thesis on the Muses. It's tremendous, and I'm on my way to Helicon to see Calliope." — Charles Mahoney '87

"It's 'Dance in Nicaragua,' an exchange program. I love it. It's a lot more work than people think. There's a lecture in the morning and dance classes from 2:30-5:15. It's an experience in itself!" — Tasha Norman '89

" 'The American West.' It meets too much. It's too much work. I like the West. I've always liked the West. I'm from the West. I'm tired." — Sammy Rogers '90

"Independent study with a chemistry professor. It's great. I'm completely self-scheduled so today I'm going skiing instead of going to work." — John Quinn '89

" 'The Invisible World.' Any rumors heard relating to the 'Invisible World' are completely substantiable." — Mike Szalay '90

Exhibit

Continued from Page 5

celves in nature. With this in mind, the exhibition is organized by "what has been observed." Landscapes and nature images, urban scenes, human and animal figures, interiors, portraits and self portraits, and still lifes are all grouped separately. The still lifes are given a room to themselves, and resonate nicely with the Reddicliffe paintings downstairs.

All of these paintings seem at home in the recently reopened museum. A modern American museum should be a good place for modern American works, and the gallery's white walls and airiness provide a quiet place where the watercolors and drawings can speak. Janss described the gallery as a "beautiful space" and praised the installation and arrangement of the works, saying that they make the exhibit "fall together wonderfully."

Painterly realists

Janss' affection for the realist style seems to come out of an admiration for its back-to-basics quality. She respects its concern with technique and "dedication to drawing" that fell deeply out of vogue in the earlier part of this century at the height of abstractionism. Realists are not just archaic photographers, however — there is plenty of room in Janss' definition for emotion and interpretation. On one side are the photo-realists, artists like Richard Estes, whose paintings one has to squint at to make sure that they aren't photographs. On the other are those who Janss called "painterly realists" who express on paper the way an object appears to their imaginations in a less photographic manner.

With this line drawn, Harold Reddicliffe's work downstairs falls neatly near the first side. His still lifes present themselves as attempts to solve "legitimate formal problems" as he described them on Saturday. There are none of his works in the collection upstairs, yet his formal skills, many of which he learned in a basic design course he took while an undergraduate at Williams, are those which Janss espoused. The still lifes themselves take a limited number of objects — silk bags, rookwood pottery, paper bags, and cartons, for example — and explore their possibilities. His exhibition was put together by Deborah Leveton, a student in the Williams College Graduate Program in Art History, and will be on display until March 10.

Wallworks

The American Realists exhibition will leave two days earlier, on March 8. It will then travel to two other museums before coming to rest in the new wing of the Boise Gallery of Art. A new exhibition, entitled "Wallworks," will complement the two displays in the Williams museum with an indoor, three story mural to be painted there by Richard Haas. Haas is a New York artist famous for painting architectural optical illusions on the sides of buildings. His work will begin during the week of February 23.

Profile

Continued from Page 5

dard has served as acting director on several occasions in the director's absence. He recalled that during the museum's low-budget days, he once drove an old station wagon through the snow from Amherst to Williamstown with just himself and a group of early Winslow Homer paintings, now worth $25 million.

You might think that after a year or teaching, an associate professor would want to spend his summer relaxing away from his field. Actually, Stoddard did seek refuge from academic worries years ago. "The best antidote is having a big vegetable garden," he confided.

Stoddard no longer has that vegetable garden, and he now spends his summers as busily as his academic years. He has taught summer programs at both Harvard and Williams. His last fifteen summers have been spent in Southern France with a group of Williams students excavating the French monastery of Psalmodi.

These days, Stoddard is a semi-retired professor. He gives guest lectures twice for the Art 101 class, and he teaches a course for graduate art students.

So what about the trees? Anyone who has seen Stoddard's presentation knows his disgust with the mass of campus trees and their poor placement. Is this distinguished professor really anti-trees? Not at all, he said: "I just think the college overreacted to the loss of elms and planted too many maples."

Croquet

Continued from Page 5

event was a full NECCA tournament hosted by the Lenox Club October 30 through November 1. Despite the hordes of fans that went to the homecoming football game instead of the croquet match, the Ephs actually performed quite well in the 23-team field. Doubles team Miles and Mahoney placed fifth, Fagin and O'Brien placed fourth, and Robertson earned a third place singles finish.

Robertson said that he was spurred on by the pressure of the moment and the roar of the crowd. "When I made a bad shot and needed support, I'd look up and my eyes would meet the eyes of our fan, and I'd tell myself to reach deep down inside for the team and for Williams."

Robertson sees many things that make croquet appealing to potential participants. "To sum it up, croquet is competitive and relaxed at the same time and about as stressful on the cardiovascular system as chess."

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Now starting delivery to Williams College
From 4:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Williams College SAC Presents:
A BERKSHIRE EXCLUSIVE

ARLO GUTHRIE
and his band

Wednesday, January 28th at 8:00 p.m.
CHAPIN HALL
Tickets will be on sale in Baxter Hall
$12.00 or $6.00 with Williams I.D.

Spring Street

Continued from Page 1

said the administration is "frustrated because the construction is six months behind the original estimate." Despite the delay, Reed said that the merchants on Spring Street have a solid relationship with the college and they "have been most understanding."

William Perry and Dick Goodman, owners of the Williams Newsroom and Goodman's Jewelers, respectively, have been promised space by the college on the ground floor of the office building that is under construction alongside the gym.

Perry and Goodman have been renting space from the college in a temporary structure on Spring Street, and both said they were looking forward to moving into the new storefronts, which face Spring Street.

Nica Faulkner '84 and Todd Solomon '84, co-owners of Bette's Life and Times Restaurant, said that the construction itself hasn't been a problem, but they said the college did not take the town into account when it made the plans for the new gymnasium.

Byway to Water Street

Faulkner cited a plan by a Williams environmental studies student to create a byway between Water Street and Spring Street that she said could have helped to bring the Williamstown business district together by increasing accessibility to Water Street shops.

When asked if the college had ever considered the proposal, Reed said it was not aware of the plan, but the college would like to find a way to link both streets. Reed said, "We've gone part of the way by building a plaza between Lawrence Hall and Chandler Gymnasium that goes halfway to Water Street. The other half could be done but the land that is necessary for it is owned by the town.

Town may want Grundy's

In a related development in the college's expansion, Williamstown Selectman Thomas Jorling, who is Director of the Center for Environmental Studies at Williams, is circulating a petition calling for a special town meeting to decide whether the town should rebuild the public works garage on Water Street or sell the existing site and relocate.

The college purchased Grundy's garage, 26 Water Street, in late December, and plans to use the building for either studio art space or storage. Jorling said that if the town decides it needs Grundy's as the new municipal garage, it could enter into negotiations with the college, or if that fails, condemn the property.

When asked about Jorling's position, Reed said that Jorling is "acting in his role as Selectman ... it's up to the town to decide about the garage." Reed said that if the town decided on Grundy's as the new site, Williams would be willing to enter into negotiations.

Slotkin speaks on Buffalo Bill

by Michael Wiedemann

Dozens of freshmen participated in Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, a "revival of American history making," last Thursday. The show featured Indian warriors, American cowboys, Bedouin Arabs, Russian cossacks, "Magyar Gypsy Chicos from the Wild Steppes of Hungary," and "The Only Herd of Buffalo on Exhibition."

Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show was brought to Williamstown by Professor Richard Slotkin, Olin Professor and Director of American Studies at Wesleyan University, in a lecture entitled "Maps of a Closed Frontier: Turner, Roosevelt, and Buffalo Bill at the Columbian Exposition of 1893."

The talk was sponsored in part as a supplement to "The American West", a Winter Study Freshman Seminar. It analyzed the historical "frontier" theses of Frederick Jackson Turner and Theodore Roosevelt in relation to the West's mythologization by Buffalo Bill Cody.

According to Slotkin, in Roosevelt's theory "the heroic action of genetically well-endowed races" won the West and made America great.

While criticizing Roosevelt's racism, Slotkin pointed out that Turner also revealed himself to be a racist. But Turner, according to Slotkin, emphasized "economic and political, not racial, factors." It was the average farmer, not the great man or hero, who was the true pioneer.

Frontier conflict, Turner argued, operated like the "invisible hand" of competition, creating American prosperity through market processes, not racial natural selection.

Turner and Roosevelt also differed in their outlook for the future: Turner saw a new frontier in the cities, Roosevelt an inevitable series of wars against inferior races.

While this debate raged in ther more academic circles, Slotkin explained that the mass of the populace turned away from theory to "see the frontier as it really happened" at Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show. The show was a combination of rodeo and historical re-enactments of important battles and events in Western history.

Despite an effort to obtain authenticity in using real participants such as Sitting Bull, the "historical tableaux" were, "set-piece" acts like TV commercial dramatizations. Slotkin described these as having little accurate historical detail and a touch of racism. They were phenomenally popular, he said, in serving dime novel expectations of the romance of the West.

Buffalo Bill, Slotkin asserted, was "archetype rather than history." Slotkin felt that the showmanship of Buffalo Bill and the mythologization of the West made "Roosevelt's discredited theory" dominant in the popular culture, although Turner's hypothesis was more viable. Despite the charm of Buffalo Bill, conveyed by Slotkin through slides and anecdotes, Slotkin argued that Cody's brand of history was actually myth, "stories carrying the ideology of a class, culture, or group." Slotkin concluded with the sentiment that "when you reduce history to myth or symbol in this way, it becomes almost a joke, a cartoon."

CUL

Continued from Page 4

Other CUL members feared that using a third party group could build resentment and increase in-house tensions. But Wagner said that such a committee could establish a "mediating relationship" and avoid the resentment that would result from an imbalanced relationship.

The new committee will be appointed through the Elections Committee of the College Council and will consist of five people from different classes and houses.

Wagner also noted that the CUL's proposal for a new party policy is presently under examination at a prestigious New York law firm.

THE TRAVEL STORE, INC.
105 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
(413) 458-5786
MASS. TOLL FREE 800-221-3701
OUTSIDE MASS. 800-225-5052

ATTENTION
STUDENTS

Book now for Great rates to the BAHAMAS and the CARIBBEAN for

"SPRING BREAK"

Prices start as low as $359
Including Air, Hotel, Transfers, Taxes & Parties!

CALL NOW FOR DETAILS

Trudy MacLean-Peck
Travel Counselor

Xenophobic

Continued from Page 3

tions shows me a lack of interest in and knowledge of the Soviet Union.

At last count only a handful of Williams students have asked me if I would be willing to talk to them at length about my experience, because they wanted to clear up myths and questions. More often than not, others, finding out where I have been, respond by saying they wouldn't want to go to the Soviet Union, because there are a lot of "commies" there. Maybe I'm expecting too much, but to me, the comments and lack of questions shows an absence of knowledge and a desire to learn about the outside world or, simply, ignorance.

In a roundabout way, all I'm saying is that Americans need to spend more time learning about the world outside of the States. Learning a foreign language is a start, but not the means to the end of the 'ugly American.' A sincere effort to learn about cultures and a sincere effort to understand them is more important. We must remember that life exists without baseball, Big Macs, and Cap'n Crunch.

CEP

Continued from Page 1

that courses should be grouped by department and not on an individual basis.

CEP as "gatekeeper"

Dean of the College Stephen Fix suggested that courses be cross-listed to allow students to fulfill divisional requirements by taking courses in different departments. Fix stressed, "The CEP should act as a gatekeeper to see that cross-listing was not operating to dilute the educational objective we are trying to achieve."

Jorling assigned a subcommittee to formalize rules for course listings, after a prolonged discussion on the subject.

The committee also discussed the proposed laboratory requirement for Division IV courses. Chemistry Professor Lawrence Kaplan questioned the value of labs in certain 101 level science courses. He noted that students already adverse to science might lose all interest in the discipline if compelled to take a lab science. He also cited potential staffing problems and lack of proper facilities as potential difficulties.

"Deficient" in science

"I feel that our science distribution requirement is deficient," Jorling said, calling for a meeting with Division III faculty to determine what the role of science is at a liberal arts college.

CEP member Tom Perkins '87 said the new distribution requirements would force departments to "pitch sexy non-majors courses that would cheapen the curriculum by pitching at the lowest level."

Later in the week, Perkins said that Division III "gee-whiz" science courses and literature in translation courses would fill up rapidly if the new distribution requirement was instituted, putting pressure on departments to create the easiest possible courses.

Perkins said he was opposed to any increase in distribution requirements because "one of the beauties of a liberal arts education is the ability to choose and find out for yourself."

Mountain

Continued from Page 3

other day, I was in the computer center trying to print out last year's term paper. "Beep," said the machine, and wouldn't budge. I was just about to give it the old coke machine treatment when a younger student came up and showed me a few explanatory flow charts on his etch—a—sketch. "Of course," I smiled. After he left, the machine said, "Beep."

At that point, I started wondering whether I really had been admitted as a recruit for the never—founded whiffle ball team, as my old JA's were fond of telling me. Admittedly, I was the hottest whiffler in high school. My batting average made it up to .780, evidently about ten points less than the average SAT section for incoming freshmen year.

I sigh and look beyond my panes, up at the clear slopes of the mountain. I've never made it up, not really. Even people like skiers who do make it up may be oblivious to anything but their walkmans. For now, I remain down around the foot of the mountain, where at least there's room to aspire. There's time to listen to the voices echoing down its slopes. And there's time, I think, to make it to lunch before the gazpacho runs out.

ACSR

Continued from Page 4

statement in the company's correspondence to the college which said that one of its South African operations, a one-person energy consulting firm, would be willing to accept government contracts if they were available.

Wood said the ACSR is especially watchful of companies with energy-related interests.

He added that Raytheon has a rating of 3 under the Sullivan principles, which means that the company "needs to commit more effort." He said the rating contributed to the committee's decision to take the vote.

M. Squash

Continued from Page 12

and won the fifth and deciding game by a 15-11 score, all of the matches were decided in three games.

Earlier in the week the team also went to Boston to take on the top-ranked Harvard team. Despite a performance that McCall called the "upper spectrum of (their) game," the Ephs proved no match for the talented Crimson. Goldfeld and Weeder played the two closest matches, each losing 3-1.

After a week that saw Williams go 1-2, the team is playing Dartmouth today, Yale on Friday, and Tufts on Saturday. McCall says that the team is really looking forward to these matches that will ultimately determine the team's final rank. "This week will make or break the season." They are mentally ready to play Dartmouth and Tufts at home, and McCall says that their superior discipline will really pay off against Tufts. Goldfeld says that Yale is not as tough as they have been in the past. The team is optimistic going into its most critical meet of the year after being challenged by the best competition in the country.

Student organization needed for marketing project. Make up to $600 per week. Call 1-800-592-2121 Ask for Janet

WANTED NOW! Spring Break representatives for Collegiate Tour & Travel. Earn free trips and cash too! Call 1-800-8322, ext. 579.

FOR SALE
Spinet-Console Piano
Bargain
Wanted: Responsible part to take over Low Monthly Peyments on Spinet-Console Pieno. Can be seen locally. Call Mr. White et 1-800-327-3345 ext. 101

SUMMER IN EUROPE
$239
Lowest scheduled fares to all of Europe from Boston. Call 1 (800) 325-2222

Caper's
412 Main St. Williamstown 458-9180
Jan. 23rd & 24th at 9:30 p.m.
Kasyopia
We were closed for renovations. We are now open serving lunch, dinner & Sunday breakfast. Come in and see what we've done and receive a 20% discount on any food item through the month of February.

Winter Study Specials
Swans Australian Beer — Case $13.99 + dep.
Kirin Japanese Beer — Case 14.99 + dep.
Dos Equis Mexican Beer — Case 17.99 + dep.
Pabst Milwaukee Beer — Case 9.98 + dep.
Tuborg Reg. & Dark — Case 11.99 + dep.
2 Litre Pepsi & Diet Pepsi $1.19 × deposit
Kingsberry Non-Alcoholic — case 10.99 + dep.
PARTY SUPPLIES • VALENTINE CARDS • MEGABUCKS
West Package & Variety Store
Route 2, Between Williamstown & North Adams
663-6081
Proper I.D. Required

Creative decision making. It's the rule, not the exception, at Chubb.

The property/casualty insurance business demands an ability to make carefully calculated, creative decisions.
Because it's the element of risk that makes insurance necessary—and exciting. Property and casualty insurance involves the highest sort of risk, and is the least predictable form of insurance.
Why? It has been said that people die more or less "on schedule." But who can predict when—or if—a bridge will collapse, an ocean liner will sink, a trusted employee will embezzle, or a home will be burglarized?
Creative thinkers make successful property/casualty insurance professionals. And we should know. It's been our business for over 100 years.

Chubb's National Recruiting Coordinator

Mike Oppe will be on hand Wednesday, January 21, 1987 for an information meeting beginning at 7:00 p.m. in the Office of Career Counseling. We cordially invite you to stop by and learn more about Chubb, and our innovative way of doing business. If you're a creative thinker, you will be interested to hear what we have to say.

Group of Insurance Companies
Warren, NJ 07066

An Equal Opportunity Employer M/F

Martin Luther King, Jr.

The college community honored Martin Luther King's birthday yesterday with a panel discussion, a memorial service for King and a presentation by the Boston Arts Group entitled "Harlem Renaissance Review."

The panel, "How Far Have We Come Since 1969: Reflections on Williams College and American Society" included Sherman Jones '68, Executive Vice President of Tuskegee Institute; Gordon J. Davis '63, a partner at Lord, Day and Lord; and Edward C. Coaxum Jr. '66, legal counsel to the Reverend Jesse Jackson.

The respondents to the panel were professor David L. Smith, Devonya Havis '87 and Gail Henderson '87.

College Council

The College Council discussed proposals currently before the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) at its weekly meeting Thursday.

Included among the proposals are new distribution requirements (See related story, page 1) and a tutorial system modeled after the British educational system.

The majority of council members opposed the new distribution requirements. Council President Amy Jeffress '87 suggested that an improved advising process could afford students a more diverse course load than new requirements. Several council members expressed concern that more restrictions could diminish a student's enthusiasm if he or she did not want to be in a particular course.

Other council business included the new Soup Kitchen, which Jeffress called a success. She added that the Meatless Meals, the recent showing of "The Graduate," and several donations from outside the college have raised enough money to continue the Soup Kitchen program.

— Tracey Blankenship

Trustees to meet

The college Board of Trustees will review tenure decisions, consider plans for the renovation of Hopkins Hall and approve a preliminary budget for the 1987-88 fiscal year at their meeting this weekend.

Also during the weekend, the board's Finance Committee will consider a recommendation from the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR) that the college divest itself of the Raytheon Company, which has operations in South Africa.

The 22-member board, which meets three times each year, will gather on campus Thursday through Saturday.

Tenure recommendations from the Committee on Appointments and Promotions will be considered by the trustees' Instruction Committee and then by the full board, said College Treasurer William Reed, who serves as secretary to the trustees.

The trustees will also approve working drawings for the renovation of Hopkins Hall being planned by Architectural Resources of Cambridge. According to Reed, current plans include the construction of an addition on the north side of the building.

A preliminary budget for 1987-88 will be approved, including a range for the expected increase in tuition, Reed said. He declined comment on the college's proposal for the tuition level until after the trustees have met.

— John McDermott

Athletics Panel

Continued from Page 4

track team, opposed Tauber's statements. She said that an applicant with a weaker academic performance than other applicants could still enhance the Williams community through his or her athletic contributions.

"I think that recruiting is important on every level," Henderson said. "It shouldn't be thought of as someone more qualified losing a place. An applicant who is less academically qualified than other applicants gets an opportunity to go to Williams and contribute to the school while competing in sports."

Henderson also spoke of problems faced by women athletes at Williams. She maintained that the College and students treat women's sports with less respect than they should, and that women's sports receive less recognition than men's sports.

"Women often have to work twice as hard to be (considered) one-half as good as men," said Henderson. "That's not the case at Williams. Women athletes who work twice as hard as men become only one-fourth as good."

Gascon, a Junior Adviser, discussed another particular problem, that faced by freshmen athletes. He said freshmen who were recognized in high school for excelling in sports come to Williams and are not treated the same as they were in high school.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
9:00 - 5:00 Mon. - Sat.
20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267 PHONE 458 - 5717

EST. 1901 Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
the Co-op
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

THE CLIP SHOP

49 Spring St. Williamstown, MA 413-458-9167 413-458-8585
125 North St. Bennington, VT 802-442-9823
122 North St. Pittsfield, MA 413-442-6903 413-447-9576
WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER.

50's NIGHT
JAN. 22, 1987 5-7 P.M.
BAXTER GREYLOCK + MISSION PARK
DODD AND DRISCOLL ARE CLOSED
50's MUSIC COME IN 50's ATTIRE
MENU
BURGERS + FRIES, ONION RINGS
FOOT LONG HOT DOGS
ROOT BEER FLOATS, ICE CREAM CONES
ICE CREAM SUNDAE'S
SPECIAL PRESENTATION BY BERKSHIRE PUBLIC THEATER THE FOLKS WHO BROUGHT THE MUSICAL PRESENTATION "57 CHEVY" TO THE BERKSHIRES LAST SUMMER
8:00 P.M. CHAPIN HALL - $1.00 FREE IF DRESSED IN 50's ATTIRE

Freshman Ed Anderson managed to avoid this pin but succumbed later by decision against M.I.T. The squad lost despite several fine freshman performances. (McDermott)

Freshmen wrestlers shine in losses to M.I.T. and Norwich

by Marc McDermott

The wrestling team's record dropped to 0-6 as it lost both ends of a tri-meet to Norwich 38-15, and to M.I.T. 35-9 this Saturday in Lasell Gym. The Ephs were hampered by the loss of their best wrestlers due to sophomore Mark Duff's injury and senior co-captain Dan McDonnell's inability to make weight.

Despite the losses, Coach Joe Dalley was pleased with the way his young team wrestled. "Eight of our wrestlers today were freshman. I've seen a lot of improvement from them throughout the season and we can expect better results soon," he said. Some of those results were reaped Saturday as five of the freshman picked up wins. Against Norwich, Ed Anderson '90 shouldered his opponent in 4:32 and classmate Carey Simon fought to a tight 11-7 decision.

Against M.I.T., freshman Scott Brown and John Mackie also gained decisions while 126-pounder Steve Felix battled to a 6-6 tie. Felix led the match at the end of regulation but the M.I.T. wrestler was awarded one point for riding time to force the draw.

In earlier action in the week the Ephs lost to Hunter College 35-15 and to Albany State 39-15. Co-captain Andy Anselmi '87 shone brightest for Williams, as he won two matches by close decisions, 7-4 and 6-5 respectively. Saturday, Anselmi had his Norwich opponent counting the lights by 1:11 in the first period to raise his record to a sparkling 3-0.

Next Saturday, Williams hosts their last home match against traditional Div. II powerhouse SUNY Oneonta and the newly formed Dartmouth team at 1 pm.

M. Hockey

Continued from Page 12

winner on the power play as defenseman Tim Frechette '89 rocketed a slapshot from the left side that careened off both posts and fell into the net for a 6-5 lead. Denny Wright '87 added an empty-netter with four seconds left to seal the win.

Much of the credit for the victory can be given to the team's improved power play. The Ephs' deficiency in this area had led to several defeats. But against Conn College the Williams power play sparkled, scoring twice and thwarting most of the Rough Rider man advantages. Said Swenson "We were real happy to get those key power play goals. They enabled us to pull out a tight game and get back on the winning track."

Head Coach Bill McCormick was similarly pleased with the power play. He also felt that two line changes which "were meant to shake things up a bit" played an instrumental role in the victory. The changes switched the two centers, Conway and Wright. Now, Conway centers seniors Craig Cheevers and Chris Traggio while Wright handles the playmaking chores for Putnam and Swenson.

The win over Conn College came after a less than memorable 7-1 road loss to Middlebury. The loss to the Panthers was the worst performance by the Ephs all year. Yesterday, the team travelled to New England College. Later in the week, hockey fans will get a chance to watch the number-one-ranked Div. III team in the nation, Bowdoin, on Friday. The Ephs will then host Colby the next day at 2:00.

JV SCORES

Men's Hoops 3-3
L Amherst 61-59

Men's Hockey 2-6
W Northfield 11-4

Men's Squash 3-1
W Middlebury 5-2

Women's Squash 1-2
L Taft 6-1

March 1 to April 4, 1987

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's an unrelenting test of your endurance.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise and Private Island Extravaganza." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more.

It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, go wild...in style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

AQUARIUS TRAVEL CONSULTANTS, LTD.
816 King Street
Rye Brook, New York 10573
(914) 939-2297 or: (800) 248-4141

Track

In impressive fashion, the men's track team opened their home schedule in a tri-meet against Albany St. and Springfield Friday at Towne Field House, coming away with a decisive victory. The Ephmen finished with 65 points to Albany's 50 and Springfield's 49.

Williams started strong in the field events. Joe McGinn '88 won the 35 lb. weight throw, while the Ephmen took first and second in the long jump with Kenneth Alleyne '88 winning at 21'3/4", followed by Geoffrey Igharo '90. Igharo won the triple jump with a leap of 42'11".

The running events were started by senior Mark Gilrain's second place finish in the 1500 meters at 4:09. Williams had three winners in running events. The first of these was sophomore Jeff Etemad's 400 meter victory in 52.9 seconds. Igharo continued to shine by winning the 55 meter dash in 6.3 seconds. In the most spectacular race of the day, Andre Lopez '87 battled Albany's Bob Thompson from start to finish in the 800 meters. Lopez had led the entire race before he was passed on the backstretch of the final lap. However, Lopez powered past him on the finshing stretch and crossed the line victorious. His time was an excellent 1:56.4.

The victory wasn't secured until after the mile relay, in which the Ephmen posted a 3:35.3 to defeat Albany by one second with Lopez anchoring. Williams finished the meet with a victory in the two mile relay.

The men's and women's teams will travel to the Boston area next weekend to run at MIT, Tufts, and Harvard.

— Steve Brody

W. Squash

The 4-2 women's squash squad picked up two victories over Hamilton 9-0 and Wellesley 7-2 while losing to defending Ivy League champion Yale 9-0 over the last week of play.

The Hamilton and Yale matches were tightly played contests with radically different results from the Ephs' perspective. Williams dominated the pesky Hamilton squad, crushing them in every match. The Ephs were outclassed by Yale, however, as Allison Buckner '89 and Jeanne Cloppse '88 were the only players to reach a deciding fifth game.

The Wellesley match provided more excitement with tight, well-played games. Notable in defeat was first year player Judy Kellog who had moved up to the five position. Kellog's match was the closest of the affair and the only one to go to five games. The final game was an airtight contest in which Kellog was outstanding but came up two points short. Freshman Sarah Fulkerson played great squash, blowing by her opponent in just 20 minutes.

Coach Renzie Lamb praised the play of his team members and noted that Friday's home match against the University of Pennsylvania will be one of the most important of the season.

— Marc McDermott

W. Hockey

The women's hockey team raised their season record to 3-2 with a win over Hamilton in New York last Wednesday. Playing without the services of senior co-captain Leslie Fernandez and standout goalie Daisy Hagey '88, the Ephwomen eked out a 2-1 overtime win over a much weaker Hamilton squad.

With less than a minute remaining in the first period, senior Michelle Barry fed Sarah Shull '88, who scored to give the Ephs a 1-0 lead which they took into the first intermission. The lead did not last, however, as Hamilton tied the game in the second period on their only goal past Sue Pitcher '90, who stopped 19 shots in her first start of her career. The game remained deadlocked into the third period, and the Ephs faced overtime against a team they should have handled easily.

These worries were dispelled, however, as Shull again found the net to decide the game less than two minutes into the overtime, with the assist again coming from Barry.

The women play both their games away this week, tomorrow at Colgate and Sunday at RPI.

— Ted Hobart

W. Basketball

The Women's b-ball team has just come off its toughest week of the season thus far. The Lady Ephs fought hard but failed to overcome two powerhouses in Hamilton and Amherst. The team fell to Hamilton 75-61 and to Amherst 81-65. The women hoopsters still command an impressive 6-2 record and with the tougher teams in their schedule behind them they have high hopes to improve on that mark as the season progresses.

The loss to Hamilton was a frustrating one. After playing hard all game and holding a tenuous one-point lead with ten minutes remaining, the Ephwomen were decimated by foul trouble. The Continentals consistently nailed their free throws down the stretch while the refs saw no cause to put a single lady Eph at the line for the entire second half. Despite her foul trouble, Nancy Hedeman '89 hit for 24 points and sophomore Julia Beasely continued to be a defensive leader on the court. Said Hedeman of her teammate and classmate, "Julia really hustles and plays smart and she is always aware of what's going on. She is the team's best defensive player."

After the Hamilton game, the squad travelled to Amherst where it lost to a band of strong, experienced upperclassmen. While the Lady Ephs tried to finesse their way to victory with a balanced scoring attack and strong defense, the Jeffwomen bullied their way to victory. Leading scorers for Williams were Missy Crouchley '89 with 20 pts. and Hedeman with 17. The squad will get another crack at Amherst at home on February 21.

The Ephwomen will next pound the boards tonight as they host the Dutchwomen of Union at Lasell at 6:00. The game directly precedes the men's varsity game against Middlebury at 8:00

— Drew Sawyer

Women swimmers miss upset, 57-56

by Kurt Oeler

Overwhelming University of Massachusetts talent defeated a gambling strategy by Eph Swim Coach Cari Samuelson Saturday. The Ephs' Division I foe bested the men by a score of 68-43, while the women suffered a heartbreaking 57-56 loss.

Strong swims by several team members, however, indicate that the squads should be able to repeat their past successes in the upcoming post-season meets. Freshman Chris Cleurzo's performance highlighted the men's meet, as his leadoff leg paced a record setting medley relay swim. Cleurzo, Scott Healy '88, Jim Jordan '87, and Dan Synder '90 set a new standard in sixty-year old Muir Pool with a time of 3:39.11. Later, Cleurzo captured the 200 back in 2:00.72, qualifying him for the Division III national championship meet.

Scott Robinson '87 avenged a rare loss in the 200 free with a sterling performance in the 500. His winning time of 4:48.87, less than five seconds off the team record, places him among New England's premier freestylers again this season. Robinson attributes his quick early times in the 500 this year to mental tenacity. Robinson notes that "this year I'm using mental strategies to intimidate my opponents in the 500."

Rob Benson '90 accounted for Williams' only other win. The youngster clocked a solid 2:00.57 to take the 200 butterfly. The Ephs managed only four of thirteen possible wins in the lineup.

Women nipped

Joan Horgan '87 sparked her undermanned teammates to a near-upset of their in-state opponents. Horgan twice qualified for the national meet in the 100 back, and later swam the 200 IM in 2:16.33 to beat that time standard. The senior's 1:03.29 leadoff medley relay leg targeted Lonnie Searfoss '89, Jen Raymond '87, and Connie Davis '90 to the meet's first upset win. Horgan then teamed with Raymond for a one-two sweep in the 200 IM. In the next event, Jen Campbell '87 won diving to maintain the Ephs' shaky lead.

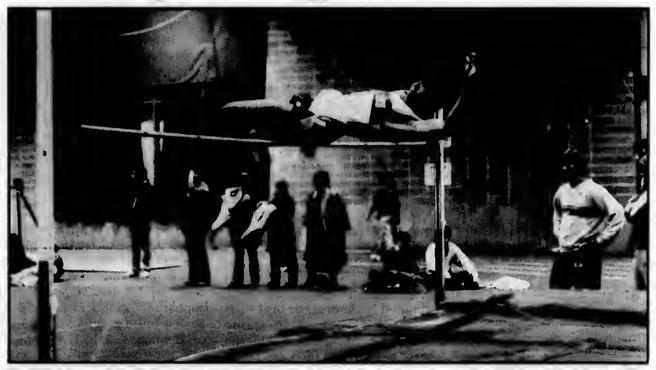
However, the surprise win was not to be, as Williams winning 400 free relay of Horgan, Raymond, Davis, and Michelle Freemer '90 left the Ephs one point shy of victory. Co-captain Raymond commented that "until the last lap we had the swims (in close races) to win the meet." The women captured six firsts and seven seconds, but lost some key finishes that killed their chances.

The women's record dropped to 1-3, while the men's loss to U. Mass.' undefeated men's squad leaves the Ephs at 2-2. The women host upset-minded Smith College on Wednesday, and both teams face surprising Bowdoin on Saturday.

Goff's Trivia Contest

1) Name the two teams which have won two Super Bowls in the 1980's.
2) Name the last tennis player to capture the Grand Slam.
3) Name the team which won the 1986 Stanley Cup.
4) Name the winner of the 1986 NBA Slam Dunk Contest.
5) Name the last baseball team to have 4 20-game winners in the same season.

Turn in your answers to SU 3099 by Saturday, 10:00 AM. The person with the most correct answers wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. In case of a tie, a drawing will be held to determine the winner.



Good luck.

Telemark Ski Package

Rossignol Equipe TRS Ski	$215.00
Fabiano Telemark Boot	$150.00
Skilom 75mm Telemark Binding	$24.95
Scott Metric Pole	$19.95
Mounting	$8.00
reg.	$417.90

similar savings on Alpine & X-Country packages also.

Goff's Sports, inc.
15 Spring St.

Ben Soriano '90 soars over the high jump bar in fine fashion in weekend home action against Albany St. and Springfield. The Ephs pounded the two squads by a score of 60 to 50 to 49. The tracksters look to repeat last year's dominating performances with a talented and diverse squad. See page 11 for details. (Camp)

Men's squash crushes M.I.T. 9-0, falls to F&M

by Chuck Samuelson

On Saturday, the 8-3 men's varsity squash team journeyed to Boston to play against Franklin & Marshall and MIT. The disciplined Eph squad proved no match for an exceptionally talented F&M team and was dominated by a 9-0 score.

The final score against F&M, the number two team in the country, was not indicative of the determination displayed by the Williams squad. Senior co-captain Matt McCall said that the score did not truly reflect the closeness of the match. "While they were better skillwise, we were more disciplined and better coached."

The team's number four player, Dana Weeder '88, played an exceptional game but still wound up losing 3-2. Although the team lost by a wide margin, senior co-captain Keith Goldfeld said that the matches were much closer than they were against Harvard, to whom they had also lost 9-0 earlier in the week.

The match against M.I.T. proved to be an entirely different matter. The Ephs reversed their F&M score and beat the Engineers 9-0. With the exception of number two player, Wendell Chestnut, who played an extremely talented opponent

Continued on Page 8

Hockey upsets Conn. Coll. on Frechette game winner

by Al Mottur

Displaying a newfound tenacity and enthusiasm, the hockey team rallied past Connecticut College on Saturday night with a scintillating 7-5 victory that upped the team's record to 3-6-1. It was the first close game the squad had pulled out since December, and it should provide some needed momentum as the team tries to keep its ECAC playoff hopes alive.

The game started in fine fashion for the Ephs as they flooded the opposing zone and consistently hounded Conn College goalie Lou Schwing. However, Schwing hung tough and it was the Rough Riders who touched twine first; scoring the opening goal at 6:58 of the first period. Connecticut added a second tally three minutes later to go ahead 2-0 and it seemed as if the Ephs were going to be in for another long night.

Coming back with three goals in just under three minutes, Williams exhibited a resiliency it had not shown in weeks, taking a 3-2 lead after one period of play. The rally was sparked by the stellar play of center Ron Van Belle '90 and winger Mike O'Connell '87. Twice, Van Belle assisted on O'Connell goals and the freshman also picked up one of his own.

Third period fireworks

After a slow second period in which only one goal was scored (the equalizer by Conn College) the two teams exploded with a six goal fireworks display in the final stanza, four of which were netted by Eph skaters. The two teams exchanged goals twice and with four minutes left the score was tied at five. The two Williams' scores came from sophomore forwards Wil Putnam and Chris Conway, both assisted by classmate Mike Swenson.

With three minutes to play, the Ephs scored the game

Continued on Page 10

Women capture Carnival at Castleton St.

by Amy Duncombe, Monika Kopp and Christopher Wright

After many weeks of dryland training and several weeks of on-snow training, the ski team got a chance to test their hard work at the first carnival, hosted by Castleton State, at Pico, Vermont. Castleton is the opening carnival and invites New England colleges of all divisions, including the University of Vermont, Middlebury, St. Lawrence, and Williams.

The Alpine women started off strong during the first day as Mari Omland '89 was the high finisher at 3rd overall in the Giant Slalom. Donna MacDonald '87, after a year's absence, placed 8th, Monika Kopp '89 was 9th, and Amy Duncombe '89 11th.

In the Nordic section of the carnival, the women faced a rolling six kilometer course. Junior captain Kathy Wolf led a remarkable first day blitz by placing second. Kirsten Froburg '90 grabbed fourth and the dynamic sophomore duo of Ann Arnason in 7th and Kristen Seemen in 14th rounded out the Eph onslaught, as the Ephwomen garnered first in the opening day.

The men's Alpine team is centered around four veterans: Helge Weiner '87, Rich Georgi '87, Dave Sage '88, Jed Scala '89. However, at Castleton, the newcomers stole the show. Freshman Pat Gilmartin placed sixth after the first run, and classmates J.P. Parisien and Lindon Seed were 11th and 15th, respectively. Weiner finished up in 15th place.

Battling fierce competition, the Eph Nordic skiers were tightly bunched in the standings after the first day. Charismatic Pete Milliken '90 led the charge in sixth place and was followed by Bob Fisher '89, Mac Nash '88, Tod Niedeck '89 and Gray Davis '89 in 7th, 8th, 16th, and 18th places respectively.

The girls team maintained their winning ways on the second day of the carnival. Omland led the Alpine team by placing third on her first run and winning overall. MacDonald followed with a third place finish and Annie Gilbert '87 placed 11th. The other first day placers, Duncombe, Linda Glass '89, and Kopp, had trouble with the conditions and did not place.

However, the Nordic team preserved the win for the women by winning their half of the competition. Wearing the number 1 bib because of their Friday finish, Arnason stupified any would-be competitors in the leadoff leg, and then handed off to Seemen for Round 2. She created a decisive lead for anchorwomen Froburg, who finished out the win.

The men fared less successfully, as most of the downhill skiers fell victim to the slopes. Seed had the best Eph finish in the slalom at fourth. Weiner came in ninth, but Scala, Gilmartin, Perisien, and Scala all were non-factors.

On the cross-country track, Nash and Niedeck took their turns before giving way to Davis. A good run by the sophomore went for naught as a fall led to a broken ski, and a late comeback failed to catch third place Middlebury.

The ski team travels to Bates this weekend for the first NCAA qualifying carnival.

First half dooms Ephmen vs. Amherst

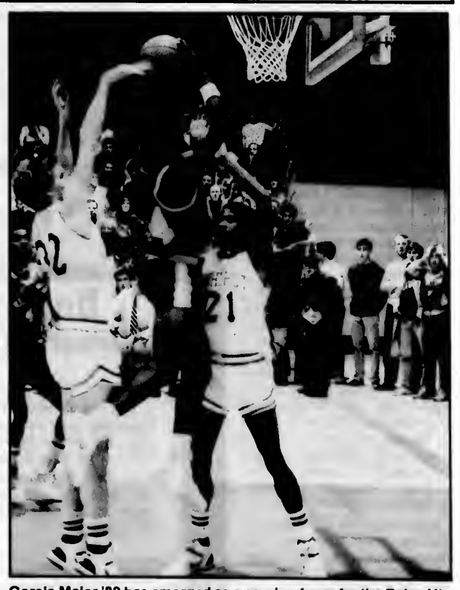
by Stewart Verdery

Showing inexperience which had not surfaced through the early part of the season, the varsity basketball team fell victim to a devastating first half in losing to the Lord Jeffs of Amherst Saturday 88-75. A second half comeback was repelled by the homestanders despite a impressive performance from freshman Garcia Major.

The new LeFrak Gymnasium welcomed the Ephs and their large contingent of fans, but after senior Greg Lang's layin gave the Ephs a 2-1 lead, the Jeffs took control. Cold-as-ice shooting and sloppy inside defense were evident as Amherst jumped to a 17-5 lead. But John Ciulla '87, who had missed three early jumpers, erupted for five quick points closing the Ephs within seven, and when Major stamped a Jeff jumper 'return to sender', a close game looked to be certain.

Amherst was undaunted by the brief flurry, and pulled out to a 41-25 halftime lead. For the half, Williams shot 8-27, a statistic which was due to "shooting from too far, too often, and too quickly," according to Eph coach Harry Sheehy. The half was marked by a lack of scoring by center Brandt Johnson '87 and wingman Henry Jones '88. Averaging over twenty points apiece, Johnson could not get the ball in the paint, and Jones was misfiring as the scoring burden shifted in the second half almost exclusively to Major.

Major demonstrated his potential by pouring in almost all of his 22 points in the half. Unfortunately, his ballhandling (10 turnovers, 2 charges) was exploited by an Amherst press.



The second half rally got as close as 62-55 with 5:25 remaining on two straight Jones' hoops, but a Jeff seven point tear, led by Yram Groff (32 points), effectively ended the affair. The teams traded baskets in the final minutes, the final score resting at 88-75.

One other bright spot for the Ephs was the inspiring play of swingman Mike Masters '89. The sophomore scored 11 points, beat the press, and played tough defense despite foul trouble. He could see increased playing time as the rest of the small forward-off guard contingent, Jones, Ciulla, and Bill Melchionni '89, have been shooting poorly.

RPI victory

The Tuesday 91-79 victory over RPI featured the play of Johnson, who dominated with 27 points and 18 rebounds. Major pumped in 22 to along with his five assists, and Ciulla also hit double digits with 11. A four-point Eph halftime lead was eaten away by the defensive-oriented Engineers, knotting the score at 64 midway through the second period. A defensive shift to a matchup zone at this stage in the game proved to be a key maneuver, as RPI failed to score on 10 straight possessions.

The squad finally returns home this week for a trio of important games. Tonight, Middlebury enters Lasell at 8:00. The Panthers hold a 5-2 record against Division III opponents, and employ a small lineup which will likely force Williams to rotate Jones, Major, Ciulla, Melchionni and Masters in a three guard offense. Colby, ranked sixth in New England, arrives Friday, and Bowdoin ends the homestand Saturday afternoon.

Garcia Major '89 has emerged as a scoring force for the Ephs. His shooting sparked a comeback against Amherst Saturday which fell short, 88-75. (Lebauer)

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 13 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE JANUARY 27, 1987

3 women and 1 man get tenure

by Debbie Snyder

At their meeting on Saturday afternoon, the Board of Trustees granted tenure to four professors, three women and one man, according to College Treasurer William Reed, who serves as secretary to the trustees.

Associate Professor of Theatre Arden Fingerhut and Assistant Professors Timothy Cook of Political Science, Suzanne Graver of English and Anita Sokolsky of English were awarded tenure after the trustees confirmed the nominations submitted to them by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions.

Arden Fingerhut

Timothy Cook

Suzanne Graver

Fingerhut, who holds degrees from New York and Columbia Universities, joined the faculty in 1984. She chairs the theatre department. She specializes in lighting design and has worked extensively in professional production with lighting design and directing.

Cook is a graduate of Pomona College and the University of Wisconsin. His primary areas of interest are mass media in American politics, representation in Congress, political socialization and American political psychology and sociology.

Graver, a graduate of the City University of New York, Queens College, received her doctorate from the University of Massachusetts. She specializes in nineteenth-century fiction and Victorian studies. She is also on the advisory board for Women's Studies and will team-teach Introduction to Feminist Thought next fall with Professor Rosemarie Tong.

Sokolsky is a graduate of Oberlin College and Cornell University. She joined the faculty in 1981. She specializes in twentieth-century British and American literature and nineteenth-century British literature.

Anita Sokolsky

Oakley proposes tutorials for seniors and sophomores

by Peter Balaban

A proposal being considered by the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) would require students to take two "intensive teaching engagements," or tutorials, as part of their regular coursework.

The discussion of the proposal at last week's meeting was part of an ongoing curricular review by the committee.

CEP chairman Thomas Jorling called tutorials "a modest proposal to refresh our curriculum." In a tutorial, according to a draft of the proposal submitted to CEP members, two students meet with a teacher to discuss an essay prepared by one of the students. The students come into the tutorial having read materials the tutor has suggested. One student reads his essay, and "an intense critical discussion follows."

Economics Professor Richard Sabot, one of the framers of the proposal, said at the CEP meeting that the tutorial "does not aim at imparting knowledge but rather at helping the student to think for himself."

Two required tutorials

Under the proposal, each student would be required to take two tutorials out of the 32 semester courses. The first tutorial would be taken in the sophomore year. The second would be taken during the senior year as part of the major. According to the draft of the proposal, the tutorials would be introduced on a phased basis, starting with the senior tutorial in 1988-89 and the sophomore tutorial the following academic year.

At the CEP meeting, it was generally agreed that a tutorial would meet 12 times a semester, and each student would be required to write and present six 8 to 12-page papers. Each week one of the two students in the tutorial would present an essay.

According to the draft, "the net addition to the faculty for two tutorials would be approximately 12." Assistant History Professor Thomas Kohut asked if the funding for the additional faculty might be connected with the upcoming Bicentennial Fund Drive. College President Francis Oakley said the two ideas were not connected.

When questioned later in the week, Oakley said "the full

Continued on Page 8

Richard Farley was named head football coach Monday.

Farley is named new head football coach

by Al Mottur

Richard Farley was selected as Williams' new head football coach yesterday at a 2:00 p.m. meeting by a five-man departmental search committee chaired by Athletic Director Robert Peck.

Yesterday's meeting concludes a selection process that began last December when former Head Football Coach Bob Odell was denied his request to remain in that position for one final season.

According to Peck, Farley immediately accepted the job when told of the choice. "I'm obviously very happy," said the new head coach. "If you had told me fifteen years ago that you thought this would happen, I would have called you crazy."

Farley expressed his admiration for a job that he called "one of the best in the country in terms of the kids you're dealing with. The football situation here at Williams is the way it should be."

He said that he thought the process was a very thorough and fair one but that the lengthiness of the process and the fact that there were several inside finalists might have provided for a slight uneasiness at times. He added, however, that "no hard feelings exist between any of us."

Farley went on to say that he hoped he could continue "in the success that Bob (Odell) left us with. We're headed in the right direction and we made great strides last year." In terms of the team's prospects Farley said that the team "is not that far away (from being successful) but we did lose some talented seniors to graduation. We have a lot of talent returning. It just needs some more experience."

The new coach said that the hardest thing for him to accept in this new role will be his inability to stay on as head track coach as a result of his

Continued on Page 7

Job concerns of faculty spouses

by Karen Costenbader

Motivated by dissatisfaction among faculty spouses with the paucity of employment opportunities in the Williamstown area, the Coalition of Concerned Williams College Faculty Spouses/Partners conducted a survey last fall to assess the affects of this problem on faculty spouses.

In November, the group circulated a questionnaire on educational background and employment experience among 220 Williams faculty and staff spouses and partners.

The coalition's four members are Adrienne Barnes, Vivian Cooke-Buckhoy, Peggy Diggs, and Joan McAuley, all of whom are spouses of faculty members. Said Cooke-Buckhoy, who commutes to Pittsfield where she runs a day-care center, "There had been a lot of talk about the problem and we felt it was time to really find out just what the situation was. Then, we could begin to talk about the things we felt the college could be doing."

Working in cooperation with Richard Bullett, Director of Personnel, and Nancy McIntire, Special Assistant to the President, the four put together a survey comprised of a series of multiple choice questions and a space for comments.

As a potential employer, Williams was not legally able to send out the questionnaire, and so the group produced and mailed the survey at their own expense.

32 percent response

Responses were received from 32 percent of the original mailing list. The data shows that 85 percent of the respondents were currently employed, while 27 percent said they were actively seeking employment, whether they were presently working or not. Of the people looking for jobs, 41 percent said this was because they felt they were underemployed, and 42 percent because there were not job opportunities in their fields.

More than half of the respondents, 54 percent, said they would like some help from the college such as providing job listings in the area, and about one third of the respondents requested individual counseling.

Of the respondents, 43 percent hold a Master's level degree or a Ph.D., and another 30 percent have a college degree. Commented McAuley, "We have a pool of overeducated people. There are a lot of spouses who are educationally at the same level as their spouses." McAuley holds a B.A. in Spanish and International Relations and is now employed as a slide librarian for the Williams College Art Department.

The coalition sent a copy of the survey and its results, along with some specific recommendations, to College Treasurer William Reed.

Among the recommendations are that Williams annually inform faculty spouses of placement services available, compile a list of employers within 60 miles, develop an up-to-date job listing resource book, send job listings to spouses who request them, conduct workshops on resume writing and supply lists of training and graduate programs within a commuting distance.

The study includes several pages of comments from spouses. Most of these expressed support for the coalition's efforts, but many reflected frustration and bitterness about underemployment and the lack of opportunities.

"Underpaid and overqualified"

"Williams College has, for too long, been able to draw from the captive audience of faculty spouses to gain underpaid, overqualified personnel," wrote one respondent. "My husband's continuation at Williams will depend in a large measure on my finding professionally fulfilling work," another commented.

Diggs said the study revealed that "a lot of people are extremely reticent about commuting any farther than North Adams." She said that seminars and discussions with people who are presently commuting to their jobs would help these people to deal with this anxiety.

According to McIntire, in trying to attract top-quality faculty, the lack of appropriate job opportunities for spouses has been a problem in some cases. "We're trying to be imaginative and to think of ways to put them (faculty spouses) in touch with local people," she said.

The organization of the coalition and the initiation of the project took place in September and early October. "We were all unemployed and started talking about what we were going to do," recalled Diggs. "We were calling each other up and telling each other about jobs we'd heard about. We started thinking, 'Wouldn't it be nice if there

Continued on Page 8

January 27, 1987

They came, they went

The college trustees came to campus Thursday evening. They left Saturday, in the early afternoon. During their stay, they had very little contact with students, and did not take part in any event to which the student body was invited. This situation should not be repeated. We hope they are reading.

In a college where the administration says it values student participation in decision-making it is difficult to understand why the trustees do not meet with more students than the handful that they did last weekend.

During the past weekend, the board met with 15 students selected by the College Council, for coffee and dessert; this was one event in an admittedly busy schedule of meetings and meals.

The seclusion of the trustees takes another form. The Record is unable to cover the trustees in person. College Treasurer William Reed, who serves as secretary to the trustees, told the Record that none of the meetings held by the trustees last weekend would be open to students. This is traditional and in general makes sense. The subcommittees of the trustees need some privacy to get business done quickly.

But one result is that information about trustees, even when they are here, is almost always second-hand. Reed acts as spokesman. Instead of asking a trustee why the board made a certain decision, the Record must ask Reed to comment on what the average trustee said he thought about that decision. As a result, our coverage is made more distant.

We have two practical and fairly simple suggestions. One addresses the problem of second-hand information, the other the lack of contact with students on a public level. Both are small enough that they could be fit into the trustees' schedule during their next visit.

The board traditionally holds its general meeting on Saturday morning. On Saturday afternoon, some board members should hold a brief press conference. These members could include Preston S. Parish, chairman of the Executive Committee and Charles H. Mott, who chairs the Finance Committee, as well as president Oakley and secretary Reed. The press conference would be open to the Record, to WCFM if it wished to broadcast it, and to other local media.

The trustees have the unique opportunity of seeing the college from outside and as a whole. And they are able to initiate actions which aren't always preplanned by the student-faculty committees, as shown by the reaction of the ACSR to the Finance Committee's disinvestment advocacy decision last fall.

The press conference would allow the Williams community access to more valuable information about the operations of the college. The trustees could be asked to describe in detail the decisions they made. They could also be asked about their long-range goals and ideas for college.

We also suggest that the trustees hold a longer question-and-answer session, open to the whole campus, each time they meet. There are some precedents for this; the board has held a few such sessions in recent years, some of them dealing specifically with investment issues. We look forward to regular occasions where the trustees will exchange views with an open forum of students, not only with a small group of student leaders picked by other student leaders.

The trustees do have a busy schedule on their trips here. But these two contacts with students would make each trip less a visit and more a meaningful connection.

Fifties Night

Last Thursday's Fifties Night was an example of just how fortunate Williams students are to enjoy the culinary care of our own in-house food service operation. Students at many other schools suffer under the impersonal attention of outside contractors who provide the bare minimum in their meal service. But we have in Food Service a group of dedicated people who often work hard to add variety to our regular meals.

The time and effort that went into planning and putting on Fifties Night were clearly above and beyond the day-to-day requirements that the department must meet. Food Service employees deserve a word of thanks for their efforts.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... John McDermott and Joe Thorndike
NEWS ..... Debbie Snyder
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley
OP-ED ..... John Canty
SPORTS ..... Al Mottur and Stewart Verdery
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright and Mike LeBauer
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
SENIOR EDITOR ..... Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Peter Balaban, Karen Costenbader, Jocelyn Shadforth
ASSISTANT FEATURES ..... Beth Broadrup, Michael Erard, Charles Samuelson
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
LAYOUT STAFF ..... Daniel Boone, Karl Emsbo, Jonna Hooker, and Helen Lee
ADVERTISING ..... Russ Hollenbeck
GRAPHICS ..... Anna Henriques
BUSINESS/CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to the Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Quote of the Week:

"You run with the horses, you are a horse. You run with the dogs, you are a dog."

—Women's Squash Coach Renzie Lamb when explaining the status of his team before they compete in the Div. I section of the House Cup.

Letters

Entertainment

To the Editor:

You know what? I'm broke. Having spent $15,000 on this prime education, and having received no financial aid (Which makes it slightly difficult to obtain some of the more attractive jobs on campus), I find myself at a loss as to how I will fill this vast emptiness in my pocket. I realize that you may not give two hoots about my financial dilemma, but if you're an entertainer or enjoy live entertainment, you may think twice about this problem. My confusion and distress is basically aimed at the Williams College "party policy."

I'm speaking on behalf of enterprising entrepreneurs who seek to augment their financial compensations in the entertainment bracket. In other words, how do disc jockeys, bands, singers, and other entertainers make a quick buck? The "party policy" which disallows the charging of admission fees and the selling of tickets for on—campus parties puts a tremendous strain on the budgets of those who would otherwise hire entertainment. How else can houses and entries pay for entertainment if they don't charge door admission?

I realize that the reasoning behind the policy is to reduce the amount of alcohol available to underage students, but this policy is vastly reducing the social options for party dogs like myself. Whether or not the administration knows it, the policy induces more people to drink having been denied the choice to enjoy good disc jockeys and bands. Yes, I realize that there are a few parties with live entertainment, but not nearly as many as there were during the beginning of the school year. So how about some support — any kind of support! Make some noise! I want to make money as an entertainer just as much as you want entertainment.

Don Scott '90

Sign

To the Editor:

I have always appreciated the liveliness and creativity of Williams College basketball fans. In dozens of other gyms throughout New England, I have never found their equal. At the Middlebury game last week, as I sat with my parents and a friend with her young son, we remarked on a group of students in the balcony. As they enthusiastically supported a classmate's performance on the court, we were caught up in their excitement. In the second half, the same group dropped a banner over the rail. My parent's jaws dropped simultaneously and my friend's son was curious as to the meaning of "You're terminated f-----s." I discovered later that this is a line from a movie, a form of entertainment governed by a rating system. I believe the Williams community comes to Lasell expecting a G—rated evening woth material suitable for all.

I want to thank the young woman in this group whose eye I caught several minutes after the banner was unfurled. She interpreted my gesture correctly, and the banner disappeared. Perhaps she could suddenly imagine what her parents or little brother would be thinking and feeling about her (and her friends) if they were down in the bleachers reading the above-mentioned phrase. Whatever her motivation, I appreciated her sensitivity.

Connie Sheehy

Greater course requirements will uphold academic vitality

by Matthew Kivlin '87

I'd like to take this opportunity to applaud President Oakley's proposal to extend the course distribution requirements.

By introducing a new category for foreign cultures he has reaffirmed the College's commitment to fostering a cosmopolitan perspective among its students, a blessing in a society retracting daily into a shell of self—interest and neurotic "pragmatism." More significantly, his effort to upgrade science requirements indicates a recognition of the interrelatedness of all disciplines — a concept central to the liberal arts ideal. As a senior looking back over his undergraduate years and posing the inevitable question — what does this education mean? — I can't help believing that it means the disposition of theories and information from one sphere to spill over into and color those of fields once perceived as far remote. For this reason the budding humanist cannot afford to remain ignorant, either of the development or the experience of scientific investigation. The great social thinkers and artists of past centuries responded vigorously to the shifting world views wrought by science (Had they not, they would have decayed quickly into irrelevance). We English majors, for instance, are aware of the degree to which the history of English literature is the history of the struggle between traditional religion and the growth of scientific skepticism. It is impossible to talk intelligently about modern poetry and fiction without first discussing Darwin, Marx, and Freud.

Unfortunately, Mr. Oakley's proposal, though a laudable one, will not by itself dismantle the artificially—constructed dichotomy of humanist—scientist. The gulf of Route 2 spread out between the science quad and the humanities buildings has become an alarmingly valid metaphor. What is needed is a change of attitude on the part of those of us engaged in the humanities, a removal of our self—protective blinders which will allow us to realize that ultimately science is not a separate area of inquiry. Therefore, both the administration and the students should work to discourage

Continued on Page 8

Oakley plan deprives student of serious intellectual choices

by Edward Stein '87
and Andrew Seligsohn '89

At a recent Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) meeting, President Oakley proposed to alter the current system of distribution requirements by increasing the number of divisions to four and the number of required courses to nine. Supporters of the proposal offer two justifications for it: the need for more equitable distribution of students among departments, and the importance of rectifying the deficiencies in the educational experience of Williams students. We find these goals incompatible and believe that the proposal is both philosophically unsound and counterproductive.

This proposal would place each of of Williams' departments into one of four divisions: (1) Foreign Languages, Literature, and Culture, (2) Arts and Humanities, (3) Social Sciences, and (4) Mathematical and Natural Sciences. Unfortunately, every department does not neatly fit into a single division. The history department, for example, would be placed in the Arts and Humanities division; all history courses would count only for credit only in that division. Courses such as Modern Japan or Russian History to 1855, which seem to accomplish the goal of introducing students to foreign cultures, would not count toward the Division I requirement. A course like Comparitive Urban History, which takes a social science approach to history, could not be used to fulfill the new division 3 requirement.

The splitting of the curriculum into vague divisions based solely on the department in which the course happens to be listed is completely arbitrary and philosophically indefensible.Moreover, it defeats one of the stated purposes of the proposed change: it prevents the correction of deficiencies, because students will be able to fulfill distribution requirements by taking courses which have been inappropriately placed in a particular division.

Why would President Oakley make such an arbitrary proposal? The answer is that he and other members of the CEP wish to boost enrollments in small departments. Admitting to the charge of philosophical bankruptcy and agreeing to place courses in divisions in a less arbitrary fashion would sacrifice Oakley's goal of "busting" big departments. Hence, the two motivating factors for this proposal are incompatible.

In addition to the philosophical problems of the proposal, there are significant practical ones. By forcing students to take courses which they do not want to take, the proposal gives departments an incentive to offer superficial courses which would allow students to fulfill the requirements painlessly. Evidence for this can be found in the proliferation of simplistic science courses which neither challenge students nor give them an accurate picture of a scientific discipline. Rather than strengthening underenrolled departments, the proposal would divert faculty resources from strong courses with students who are genuinely interested in studying those departments, to weak courses for students who are not interested.

Setting aside, for a moment, the practical and philosophical objections, we believe that the new divisions entail a disturbing and insidious form of deception. This proposal tries to disguise administrative objectives as educational policy. To desecrate educational ideals to solve short-term enrollment problems undermines the raison d'etre of a liberal arts education.

Despite our criticisms, we recognize that the CEP has identified serious prob-

Continued on Page 7

Club Bacchus: social group or stronghold of male privilege?

by Amy Jeffress '87
and Eliza Kent '89

We are wary of responding to the Op—Ed piece of last semester's Record comparing Club Bacchus and the Feminist Alliance, because we believe that it is ridiculous even to mention the two groups together in the same sentence. A comparison of the two groups as examples of single—sex camaraderie ignores the essential power inequality between the sexes which determines the purposes of each group. As the November article stated, "Bacchus is a different type of organization than the (Feminist) Alliance; the former is a social group while the latter is an issue—oriented group." We would say that both are social, but only one is political. Bacchus is not an issue—oriented group because there is no issue: male privilege is still secure in society.

All—male Club Bacchus happy hours reinforce the power structure that legitimates male privilege. What we find threatening is not male friendship, but the institutionalization of the exclusion of women. Corinna Lamb described in her article an incident in which she and a friend who had accidentally walked into a Bacchus meeting were forced out by shouting and intimidation. What is the purpose in excluding women? As Bacchus Vice President Chris Leitz stated, "People tend to act affected in a co—ed group." If the behavior Corinna observed is the unaffected natural state of man, we don't see the necessity to preserve it.

The purpose of the women's parties is entirely different. When Corinna compares her exclusion from Bacchus to the incident when several men tried to crash the women's party last year, she fails to recognize this important difference. A women's party provides a place for women not only to socialize together but to resist normal patterns of male dominance in social situations. As within a women's college, the absence of men at women's parties reduces the ever—present condition of male dominance and allows women to express themselves without having to consider male approval.

Just as the women's parties of the Feminist Alliance resist male supremacy, Club Bacchus reinforces it. Excluding women from them only perpetuates the exclusion that has taken place throughout history. We believe that a smug, male—supremacist attitude also pervades Bacchus parties, which tend to have more than the usual amounts of sexist and generally rude behavior. In our opinion, the difference between Club Bacchus and the Feminist Alliance is not that one is for men and one is for women, but that Club Bacchus has no justifiable purpose whatsoever.

Making sense of snowdrifts: discoveries of a winter sport

by Nat McCormick '88

On the first day of Christmas, Santa gave to me some sunshine in a palm tree. On the 33rd day of Christmas, I phoned him with a plea — the wind chill was negative three.

If you're a powder buff, Santa delivered a bit late this year. But if you prefer buffing yourself with Bain de Soleil rather than lip wax, as I do, all this snow might make you feel like a regular on Santa's knows-you've-been-bad list. I am, but I console myself with the warm thought that Winter Carnival is just around the corner. Sun cream is cheap this time of year.

Whenever I am forced to venture outside, I tend to move like a flounder through the drifts. People have told me that I look like a flounder. I do not think so. It is merely a convenient simile. Anyhow, I was out on an errand the other day, and I happened to flounder past the new gym, which appeared to have been wrapped in cellophane, perhaps as a sort of protest by the anti-sports-at-Williams group, who seem to want, well, a freeze on competitive sports. To me, the building did look like a giant block of ice, just set down by the tong-like pyramid of beams on top. But to me, the structure seemed solid, standing there as if to say: "I'm here to stay, even after Spring strips away my icy coat."

You wouldn't call me a hammerhead (You could, and I might passively disagree), but I am into sports. I throw the javelin, a sport which some people (perhaps hammerheads) argue has been incomplete ever since the defense was filtered out. Although this activity only takes place in the spring, winter sports have played just as important a role in my Williams Experience. Not only mine, but yours as well.

Just this month, for example, I would guess that about 97% of us have participated in a sport. The same sport. I'm talking, of course, about face-planting. For those of you from warmer climates, who may not be as familiar with winter activities such as pulling down snow-covered branches over your companions, I should elaborate.

The hill to the gym was popsicle slick. I was booting down, watching someone else boot up. One moment the unfortunate was on his Beans, and the next he was on his buns. Not a face-plant, but still very funny. As I turned around to laugh, my own treads flew back, tattooing the back of my head as I went down, face-first, and slid until I was stopped by a heavy tree. A Varsity face-plant. The other guy, having recovered, glided over and courteously offered me a hand. A Southerner, I figured. I took his hand, thanked him, and pulled a branch over his head.

Although I've enjoyed winter games from icicle dodging to tray-croquet, one of my favorites dates back to freshman year. This was "Find the Georgian," in which you would spend the morning poking around in snowbanks with a ski pole for your Southern friends who had not made it back from the previous night's party.

As I finished my errand, and was floundering back up the hill to my dorm, I observed a couple of chemistry majors demonstrate an indoor activity outdoors. A big mistake. His lips must have been dry as he bent down to kiss her, because I saw him lick them before they touched. Presto, a new definition of polar bonding. They disappeared, urgently, into a building like a Push-me Pull-you.

I, too, found refuge from the cold. There was a message stuck to my door. Santa, the old elf, had phoned back to tell me that I'd be hearing from the North Pole through April this year. We've got a forecast for twelve inches on the 120th day of Christmas. I've got a one-way ticket South.

Entries may join with houses

by Paul Kwon

The Gaudino Committee recently proposed a plan that would create a partnership between freshmen entries and upperclass houses.

If the proposal were implemented, each residential house would establish a cultural and social partnership with one-half of two Freshmen entries. The intention of this arrangement is to promote increased contact with upperclassmen and among Freshmen from different entries.

The partnership would include joint participation in happenings such as "musical events, special dinners, cookouts, poetry readings, sporting events, museum visits, and events involving faculty members."

The entries and houses would be paired up randomly. According to the proposal, constraints would include ensuring that none of the partnerships would involve residential houses with which the JA's of the two entries are affiliated, that the two entries assigned to each house come from different locations on the campus, that the entry pairing be different each semsester and that entries not be associated with houses that are in their immediate vicinity.

"Much more natural"

Professor Kurt Tauber, chairman of the Gaudino Committee, said that the proposal would help freshmen when they apply for upperclass housing. "It would provide a much more natural and insightful way to get to know the various houses, whereas present freshmen are running around from one house to another in the spring of their freshman year."

Some students have expressed skepticism as to whether this proposal would be met with approval by the upperclass houses. Suzanne Falcone '88, a junior advisor in Morgan West, said "I don't think the program would have much of an impact. With its cultural funds, a house could sponsor maybe three events per semester at the most. I doubt it would evolve into a tight-knit program. It would be hard to get all the upperclass houses to get into it."

Tauber acknowledged the present lack of cultural activity in upperclass houses, but said that the proposal would remedy this. "People are concerned about how often these freshmen would appear at the houses.

Continued on Page 6

President Francis Oakley and most of the Board of Trustees at their meeting Saturday morning. (Rifkin)

Trustees meet with 15 student leaders

by Sharon Burke

The Williams College Board of Trustees held its winter quarter meeting on campus last weekend. The trustees discussed the renovation of Hopkins Hall, considered a recommendation to divest from Raytheon Corporation and met with a group of students.

The weekend's meetings were troubled by unusually poor attendance. Fourteen trustees attended meetings but seven members of the board were unable to attend, according to College Treasurer William Reed. "This was the biggest no-show we've ever had in the history of the board," he said.

Reed said that after discussing the proposed renovation of Hopkins Hall, the trustees authorized the administration to proceed with "working drawings". He said the next step will be for the college to consider bids on the work from various architecntural firms.

The trustees reviewed three different plans for funding the remodelling of Hopkins Hall. The options are borrowing the needed funds, drawing the funds directly from the endowment and initiating a fund-raising drive.

Reed said that the trustees are also considering taking a loan from the endowment as they did for the initial funding of the Williams-in-Oxford program.

Although it did not officially meet, the trustees' Finance Committee considered divesting of stock currently invested in the Raytheon Corporation. Reed said that Charles Mott, chairman of the Finance Committee, told the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility that divesting from Raytheon would be a "routine thing." Reed noted that Mott

Continued on Page 6

Oakley seeks to broaden requirements

by F. Craig Gangl

Acting on his stated desire to increase students' exposure to educational disciplines, Williams President Francis Oakley submitted a proposal to the Commitee on Educational Policy (CEP) to expand the number of course divisions from thre to four, thus increasing the distribution requirements.

In a letter to Professor Thomas Jorling, chairman of the CEP, Oakley outlined his proposal and stated his reasons for proposing the changes. Languages, History, and English will have their own group, called "Foreign Languages, Literature, and Cultures." Other changes would involve requiring three courses in the "Mathematical and Natural Sciences" group, including one lab science course.

"There has been a withdrawal of interest in and involvement in natural sciences nationally," Oakley said Saturday, defending his proposal of a lab course.

The other major change would be to have all students take at least two semester courses focusing on other cultures or languages. "It is important that students have some acquaintance with the world outside our national boundaries," Oakley said.

Oakley noted in his proposal that in the current curriculum there is "a failure to ensure that every one of our students will have had at least some minimum exposure to courses in the areas of foreign languages, literatures and cultures."

Another reason for the increased number of divisions is so "the departments centrally serving those areas will have enrollments large enough to warrant the allocation to them of instructional resources adequate to sustain their subjects," according to the proposal.

Oakley foresees that the new divisions will provide more regulation of students' choices and, thereby, reduce the overstaffing of unpopular areas and the understaffing of areas with perenially large enrollments.

Wendie Rabinowitz during the panel discussion on women's spirituality. (Hazen)

Women discuss issues of their spirituality and religion

by Lisa Nahf

In a lecture entitled "Women and Spirituality" held last Wednesday evening, four women discussed how they and their faiths are addressing the role of women within their religious communities.

Wendie Rabinowitz, a Jew, Renie Smith and Marjorie Goodwin, Roman Catholics, and Julie Wiseman, who is a member of the Women's Alternative Spiritual Movement, each spoke, combining theology with their own personal experiences.

Rabinowitz underscored the importance of the memory of women's history in Judaism. "Without the memory of women's history, we become a silent people. It is with the remembrance of powerful things women did that we become full partners in what is happening now," she said. "We are working to reclaim the female aspect of God, reclaim women's history in the Torah, and go beyond the patriarchal premise."

She noted that within Judaism women are learning the Hebrew language, forming minyans, and entering the rabbinate. "There has been a lot going on in the past 15 years in Judaism to make it come alive."

Smith and Goodwin each spoke on the role of women within the Catholic church, but

Continued on Page 7

Op-Ed

Williams should reform the CAP

by Andrew Mayer

It seems like everyone is talking about tenure these days: College Council, the Gargoyle Society, the trustees, and now me.

After looking into the tenure process last week, I am more satisfied with the level of student participation within departments. However, I still believe that one vital student link is missing: a position on the Committee on Appointments and Promotions (CAP).

Another Word

by Andrew Mayer

But wait. Isn't student opinion already an important part of the tenure process? According to the recent flyer distributed by the College Council, the CAP "relies heavily on student opinion."

As the flyer said and Dean of the Faculty John Reichert, chairman of the CAP, echoed, many departments interview outgoing majors or, perhaps, like the German/Russian department, take random samples of students and interview them directly about professors.

Every department keeps a file for every non-tenured professor and keeps in that file all student letters, results of semester-end student evaluations, and other information pertinent to the future of that professor at Williams. In addition, several departments, including economics, history, and mathematics, consider recommendations of student committees within that department.

So why, if individual departments consider all these forms of student opinion before they make their recommendations to the CAP, and then the CAP also looks at sources of student opinion, is there a great need for a student member — or members — on the CAP?

The CAP makes tenure recommendations, which are, for all practical purposes, the final tenure decisions. Dean Reichert admitted that the trustees review the CAP decisions for "any case that turned out to be unusually difficult" and added that he does not remember a year when the trustees did not support the CAP decisions in full.

Thus, essentially, the final tenure decisions are made by a six-member faculty/administration committee. I believe there should be at least one, preferably two or more, popularly elected student members of the CAP.

If student opinion is important in the tenure process, as Dean Reichert stresses, why is it not also important on the final decision-making level?

I have no doubt that the administration considers student opinion of the utmost importance. After all, there are student members on the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP), which is now considering important changes in the divisional requirements, and on the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL), which in the past has been instrumental in changes in party policy and the Log. Furthermore, an entire Winter Study class is devoting its time to making recommendations on the future of the winter term.

A student member of the CAP would be a direct link between the students and the faculty/administration members of the CAP. He or she would review tenure and promotion recommendations as a full member of the CAP, adding student opinion.

I am not proposing that this student member will report back to the students and gather opinion during the process. That, of course, is infeasible, as the meetings of the CAP, similar to those of the

Continued on Page 6

Review: Holding Patterns

by Jennifer R. Zaentz

On January 23 and 24 the Williams College Department of Theater presented The Talking Band in the DownStage of the Adams Memorial Theater. The Talking Band is a theater ensemble composed of actors and musicians. They performed Holding Patterns, a show of three vignettes written and performed by the members of the company. The sets were sparse with little to distract attention, leaving much to the audience's imagination. Each piece had only one actor on stage, each using his or her resources with incredible energy and versatility.

"Bedroom Suite"

"Bedroom Suite," the first of the three vignettes, is a combination of music and comedy written and performed by Ellen Maddow. It allows the audience to share a housewife's time away from her family. Her co-stars, both onstage and off, are all prerecorded tapes. She is heard dealing with children, animals, and her husband in a running monologue which is as amusing and poignant as it is so very real.

Maddow displayed her versatility as a musical performer by playing cooking pots, the flute, and a child's musical toy. She also danced to her own chanted monologue of gossip and tabloid-type news items. She described a paranoid view of the world obsessed with the disasters which may or may not occur.

"Daily Drill"

As the stage is cleared after "Bedroom Suite," it is invaded by Paul Zimet, whose character is an actuary who has calculated that we will have eight minutes to live from the moment we learn of impending nuclear disaster. He has composed a "Daily Drill" which takes exactly eight minutes and will allow us to relive the most important times of our life in the few minutes before we die.

The drill includes listening to a favorite piece of music, viewing a favorite painting and snapshot, remembering moments and feelings, calling both friends and enemies, eating a favorite food, even striking an impressive pose. The character has worked the timing out so carefully as to allow a moment of incredible despondancy due to the overwhelming emotions evoked by the drill.

The sketch is a change from the usual vision of the post-nuclear holocaust world, because it contemplates death rather than survival. It promises no afterlife, except a null void similar to that from whence we came.

"Home Remedies"

"Home Remedies" was the third and final sketch. Two people are on the stage, but Harry Mann, who composed and performed the music, is literally a piece of the set. He entered wearing a lampshade and carrying a saxophone. After plugging himself in, he remained motionless. When Tina Shepard, the piece's author, entered, she placed him on a stool and switched him on. The lamp was lit, and he began to play. From that point on, no attention is drawn to him.

The dialogue is mainly the reading of dime store erotica and poetic monologue. Even a recipe for cinnamon bread becomes sexual as the character is aroused by the mixing of the ingredients. She is a lonely woman seeking comfort in her books and imagination. The apartment itself is frustrating, with few comforts and a bookshelf which is continually falling over. The humor and action is burlesque with entrances which offer no way out, and exits which lock behind the character. Repetition is used to the point of being funny without becoming annoying.

Holding Patterns is just what its name says it is. The three characters are stuck in a routine, waiting for a chance break away from the day to day monotony of their lives, either through death or companionship. These sketches offer the audience a chance to see the private holding patterns of three different people. The energetic and intuitive performances of The Talking Band made Holding Patterns an enjoyable and thought invoking show.

Dozens killed

Paranoia sets in as KAOS continues

by Michael Erard

At the time this newspaper goes to press, dozens of students on campus have been systematically, mercilessly, and silently hunted down and killed in the midst of their day-to-day activities.

It is less horrible than it sounds, though, because these people were shot by rubber-tipped darts and continued with their daily activities after their "deaths." They knew what was going to happen. These people were playing Killing As An Organized Sport (KAOS), an annual Winter Study game organized by Scott Bender and Mike Best.

Cloak-and-dart

According to Bender, interest in KAOS has wavered in the past five or six years. This year, however, he said that over 100 people participated in the cloak-and-dart gun diversion.

Players are given guns and assigned victims. The game continues in a round-robin fashion, with the slaughtered victim passing on their assignments to their killers. It would seem easy to hunt down one's victim and kill him anywhere, but strict rules regarding brute force and the number of witnesses make players kill more creatively.

In one instance, Bender related, a male KAOS player was led on by a female at a party. His initial suspicion abated when her advances continued, but back in her room, her fellow KAOS player popped out and shot him. Unrequited, he died.

"He was heartbroken," Bender said.

Another tale was the one about the girlfriend who ended up as her boyfriend's killer. Refusing his offers for help, she put off killing him until his birthday. Bender also mentioned kills on the ski slopes, in showers, and in bathroom stalls.

Death Squad

Exempt from these rules is the Death Squad, a special group selected by KAOS Control to keep the game going: inactive killers are hunted down and eliminated. They can be killed anywhere, anytime, with any number of witnesses present. The Death Squad also keeps the game from dragging on until spring, which Bender said has happened before.

"Death Squad gives us something to do," he said. "I'd love to orchestrate a Death Squad car kill. You know, five people pile out of a car and kill someone."

A wide cross-section of students play, representing many different interests and majors. "We get football players and powertools from the physics department," Bender said. A third of those who play are women.

Is the broad interest in KAOS any kind of social statement in favor of socially acceptable murder and violence? Are students eager to knock off and be knocked off? Bender said there are people who say, "If he plays and you let me kill him, I'll play."

Cheap deaths

All in all, though, "It is a follow-up to little kids with guns," Bender said. "KAOS is meant to be a game, meant to be fun. It is at the level of a video game, at the most."

"It is like little kids playing guns, brought to its purest form, played by intelligent, mature people," said Thomas Cunningham, an avid KAOS participant who killed three victims in five days until he was killed by Andy Harris. Harris was killed one week later. Both Cunningham and Harris were heard contending that their deaths were "cheap" — indicating that skill in kills is respected.

People who criticize the game most are not pacifists or sore losers, Bender said but, rather, those who find that the game creates more tension than it releases.

"I'd be fairly inclined to say that if you're too paranoid, then maybe you shouldn't be playing," he added.

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Beth Broadrup; photographs by Marc McDermott

The Record recently asked students, "What have you spent most of your time doing during Winter Study?"

"I've been studying a lot on ski lifts." — Byron Shah '89

"Trying to get my car to start." — Eric Katz '90

"Consuming mass quantities of illegal substances." — John Bellwoar '89

"Composing and decomposing." — Paul Rardin '87

"Trying to think of ways to avoid Chief Zoito." — Seth Burns '89

"Hobbling around campus through the snow." — Scott Freeman '90

Trinity

A conference attended by officials from fourteen New England colleges convened at Trinity College to discuss "substance abuse" — primarily the abuse of alcohol — on New England campuses. Concern for the health of students and an increase in alcohol-related cases of vandalism have recently raised colleges' attention to the problem. The Dartmouth reported a ten percent increase in dorm damages between early 1985 and the same time in 1986. Reported cases of inebriation increased by almost fifty percent in the same period. Despite the increase in the legal drinking age in the states where most of these colleges are located, administrators note that the amount of drinking has probably increased rather than decreased.

Smith

Last week Smith College was saddened by the loss of the famous 200- to 300-year old Smith Elm tree, which surrendered to Dutch Elm disease after a long struggle. The tree was cut down after providing years of shade to the house of Mary Maples Dunn, college president. The college community mourned the death of the 114-foot high elm — the tallest in New England — with songs and poetry readings.

Wesleyan

Wesleyan has encountered more serious difficulties than the death of a tree. At Wesleyan, as at Williams, sexual assault has been recognized as a grave problem; yet Wesleyan students have actively opposed the administration's policy towards sexual assault with behavior that an editorial in the Wesleyan Argus described as "irresponsible" and "destructive." The most publicized student action against sexual assault was the disruption of campus tours by concerned Wesleyan women, many of whom are members of Women Against Rape (WAR). Although some students involved in the action contend that they have approached tour groups only to politely inform them of the issue, the Student Judicial Board brought charges of harassment, abuse, and disruption against six students who interrupted the tours.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Mark Canuel and Midori Sonoda from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Mayer

Continued from Page 4

Honor and Disciplinary Committee, are held in strict confidence between members.

As I stressed earlier, student opinion is already valued highly, not only in the tenure process, but in the majority of administration decisions. Yet, without a student member of the CAP, I am not so sure where student opinion really figures in the on the uppermost echelon of the tenure process.

A letter, an interview, or an evaluation all serve their part in the tenure process, but there is no substitute for direct student representation. The gap on the CAP is there. It is up to the administration to close it.

Entry-house proposal

Continued from Page 4

Clearly, this is largely a function of the cultural events. Fitch-Currier, I'm delighted to say, has a very lively cultural schedule, but not a heck of a lot of other houses have that. This proposal may spruce up the liveliness of various houses in terms of doing interesting things."

"No desire"

A potential problem lies in student interest itself. George Jennings '90 said "Freshmen entries should be self-sufficient and shouldn't have upperclass authority. I think that the JA's provide all the upperclass guidance we need and I have no desire to read poetry with upperclassmen."

Another Freshman, John Jordan, expressed interest in the proposal for a different reason. Jordan said "it could help party problems. The upperclassmen could throw parties for us since they can file party plans and freshmen can't."

Tauber said, however, "Beer bashes are the last thing I would want freshmen in on."

When asked if there were any possible negative effects of the proposal, Tauber said, "Of course not, or else I wouldn't have proposed it." He then added, "Professor Wagner, who is the chairman of the CUL, said that people objected to having freshmen in snacks. Nobody said a damn thing about snacks. Snacks are the last thing in the world I would want to include. Snacks are a business meeting."

CC plans rape information session

by Scott Blasdell

College Council discussed ways to improve safety on campus and the proposal of the Gaudino Committee to affiliate freshmen entries with upperclass houses at its meeting last Thursday.

The call for improved safety arose in response to the rape of a Williams student on January 14. Council president Amy Jeffress '87 began the meeting with the suggestion that the council invite a speaker to address the issue of rape before the college community.

Other members agreed and suggested possible methods to improve campus safety and to speed the response to emergencies. Ideas included improving the lighting of the campus, starting an escort service, hiring more security workers, establishing an emergency phone number, and installing better door locks.

Jeffress said replacing defective door locks is an administrative priority at the moment and that students should call the Buildings and Grounds department if their locks do not work. She commented that while everyone enjoys leaving their doors unlocked, such a habit makes less sense in light of the January 14 incident.

Many council members complained of the lag time between when Security is called and when officers arrive. People expressed disbelief that students are not allowed to call an ambulance directly but that such calls must be processed through Security. The policy is designed to eliminate possible pranks, but the lag time incurred by Security verification of emergency calls led to the suggestion that a phone number meant exclusively for emergencies be established.

In other business, the Council decided that freshman entry affiliation with upperclass houses is a good way to integrate freshmen with the upper classes. Under a Gaudino Committee proposal, freshmen would pay dues to an upper class house in exchange for the right to attend house functions, including parties.

Council member Bob O'Connell '87 maintained that upper class houses cannot afford affiliation with freshmen without freshman money. "A lot of houses that are active can't afford to post 25 or 30 more people," he said.

Some present were doubtful that upperclassmen would be responsive to the idea. Jeffress responded that,indeed, the Housing Committee was not responsive, and cited an argument of a Housing Committee member that upperclassmen within houses do not know each other well enough in the first place to have 25 or 30 freshmen added to house ranks.

For the most part, Council members spoke in favor of the proposal. According to council vice president Suzanne Biemiller '87, "it would be a good way to have freshmen meet upperclassmen with the same interests as themselves. As far as parties go, it would allow all freshmen a legal place to have a party."

Trustees

Continued from Page 4

said he would poll the rest of the Finance Committee before proceeding with the divestiture.

The trustees also attended an informal meeting with a group of fifteen students chosen by College Council President Amy Jeffress '87 and Vice-President Suzanne Biemiller '87. Jeffress said that she selected a diverse group of recognized student leaders.

Some of the students included were Martin White '87 of the Black Student Union, Alec Dawson '87 of the College Council, Hart Murphy '88 of the Committee on Undergraduate Life and Jordan Hampton '87 of the Gargoyle Society.

The key topics that the students discussed with the trustees were the North Adams Hunger Action Project, party policy, student reactions to the recent rape on campus and recruitment of minority and women faculty. Jeffress commented that the trustees were responsive to student concerns.

The trustees will be meeting again in April and at commencement.

It's eleven p.m.
Do you know where your paper is?

Yes.

Let's be real. Compare the equipment she's using to yours. If you were both trying to tunnel through a mountain, she'd have a bulldozer and you'd have a shrimp fork.

Don't despair. Your problem is already half-solved. For a limited time, you can buy an Apple® Macintosh™ Plus or a Macintosh 512K Enhanced computer with Microsoft Works—for less money.

Which is wonderful.

You get a Macintosh, with its speed, ease of use, and graphics capability. Plus, you get a software program that lets you use all this Macintosh power in all your subjects.

Microsoft Works is not just one program, it's four integrated programs: word processing, data-base management, spreadsheet with charting, and communications.

Meaning you can put charts in your history essays. Spreadsheets in your economics papers. Call Dow Jones News/Retrieval at 2:00 A.M. to get the facts for your journalism story due at 8:00 A.M.

So if you're taking more than one subject this semester, you should check out Macintosh and Microsoft Works.

But don't wait till the eleventh hour. This offer will end soon.

And your paper might stay out all night.

Macintosh and Microsoft Works

JESUP HALL COMPUTER CENTER

Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Macintosh is a trademark of Apple Computer, Inc. Dow Jones News/Retrieval is a registered trademark of Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Microsoft is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

Anti-CEP

Continued from Page 3

lems of the proposal, there are significant practical ones. By forcing students to take courses which they do not want to take, the proposal gives departments an incentive to offer superficial courses which would allow students to fulfill the requirements painlessly. Evidence for this can be found in the proliferation of simplistic science courses which neither challenge students nor give them an accurate picture of a scientific discipline. Rather than strengthening underenrolled departments, the proposal would divert faculty resources from strong courses with students who are genuinely interested in studying those departments, to weak courses for students who are not interested.

Setting aside, for a moment, the practical and philosophical objections, we believe that the new divisions entail a disturbing and insidious form of deception. This proposal tries to disguise administrative objectives as educational policy. To desecrate educational ideals to solve short-term enrollment problems undermines the raison d'etre of a liberal arts education.

Despite our criticisms, we recognize that the CEP has identified serious problems facing Williams College. Educational deficiencies and unequal enrollments are real problems, but coercion is not the solution. Deficiencies can be addressed through better advising. The conventional wisdom that "requirements are the strongest form of advising" is fallacious; true advsing implies choice. Good advising, coupled with autonomous students, can begin to solve the problem. Such CEP proposals as the tutorials system and the optional contract minor are steps toward empowering students, allowing each to take control of her own education, ultimately providing a more complete and individually suited liberal arts education.

While inequality in departmental enrollments is a problem, Williams must recognize that some departments will be more popular than others. Even in the face of waning enrollments, the College should keep those programs which are necessary for the preservation of curricular vitality. However, such preservation cannot be achieved by compelling students to take courses that do not intellectually excite them. The sort of compulsion inherent in President Oakley's proposal will ruin the departments which he intends to save by filling them with uninterested students.

Football coach

increased football responsibilities. He maintained a resolve, however, to stay on as an assistant/advisor for the track team.

Farley was chosen after an intricate process which started last December. The job was open to national competition, and over 100 people applied. After the initial applications started coming in, Peck said 20 preliminary interviews were conducted to identify the strongest candidates. After winter vacation, the school narrowed its list of finalists to six, three which came from the preliminary interviews and three current assistant football coaches at Williams.

The three inside finalists were Farley, who has been a member of the Eph coaching staff since 1972 and was the defensive coordinator most recently; offensive line and linebacker coach Joe Dailey who has been at Williams since 1968; and offensive receiver coach Al Pearman, a member of the football staff the past two seasons.

The three finalists from outside Williams were all assistant coaches in the Ivy League with "excellent resumes," according to Peck. They were Cornell defensive coordinator Peter Noyes, Harvard running back coach Larry Story, who earlier was an assistant coach with the New Jersey Generals of the U.S.F.L., and Dartmouth offensive backfield coach Frank Hershey.

The finalists were all interviewed by the Committee on Appointments and Promotion (CAP) and the Admissions Office, "so as to give them (the finalists) a sense of our admissions process," said Peck. Also partaking in the interview process was a student committee comprised of seven current and past football players.

The last group to see the candidates was the five-member search committee which included Peck, Basketball Coach Harry Sheehy, Swim Coach Carl Samuelson, Soccer Coach Gene Russo, and Vice President for Alumni Relations and Development Hodge Markgraf.

In an interview Saturday, Peck said that on Sunday Odell would meet with the search committee to give his appraisals on the three inside finalists. Then yesterday, the seven football players told the search committee their reccomendations over lunch. At 2 p.m. the search committee convened and Farley was chosen, Peck said.

Former head coach Odell said of the selection, "I'm delighted. He's been an excellent coach and an outstanding person. I've given him an incredible amount of resbonsibility and he's done a great job. I think the choice is an excellent one."

The school officially announced the choice of Farley and his acceptance earlier today at a 10:30 AM news conference according to Peck.

Capers

Have your tried our . . .

Chicken Wings or Fingers
Nacho / Best in Town
Guacamole
or
Burgers to your Liking
Philly Steak & Cheese
Bertha's Beef

Everything on Menu is 20% off through end of February.

412 Main 458-9180
Open Tues. - Sat. 11:00 a.m.
Sunday 10:00 a.m.

Winter Study Specials

Swans Australian Beer — Case	$13.99 + dep.
Kirin Japanese Beer — Case	14.99 + dep.
Dos Equis Mexican Beer — Case	17.99 + dep.
Pabst Milwaukee Beer — Case	9.98 + dep.
Tuborg Reg. & Dark — Case	11.99 + dep.

2 Litre Pepsi & Diet Pepsi $1.19 × deposit

Kingsberry Non-Alcoholic — case 10.99 + dep.

PARTY SUPPLIES • VALENTINE CARDS • MEGABUCKS

West Package & Variety Store
Route 2, Between Williamstown & North Adams
663-6081
Proper I.D. Required

Learn to live with someone who's living with cancer. Call us.
AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

WINTER SPRING SUMMER FALL

Scholarships Available for Superior Students to Study and

INTERN in LONDON and WASHINGTON

Students may earn up to six semester credits (three in Summer) in Academic internships with added credits for courses in Politics, Journalism, Economics, Law and International Relations.

Credits are transferred through Hampden-Sydney College, founded in Virginia by James Madison in 1776.

STUDY AT OXFORD

Students may also apply to study for one or two terms at several colleges of Oxford University. Graduate Study is an option.

FOR MORE INFORMATION, PLEASE WRITE TO:

Washington International Studies Center
Room 713A, 901 Sixth Street, S.W.
Washington, DC 20024

EO/AA

WANTED NOW! Spring Break representatives for Collegiate Tour & Travel. Earn free trips and cash too! Call 1-800-8322, ext. 579.

HBS STEREO SYSTEMS

When we recommend a stereo component, you can be assured that there is nothing available that is more musically accurate at a lower cost - period.

We are proud to offer stereo components by:

ACOUSTAT, ADCOM, AIWA, APATURE, B & W, CHICAGO, DENON TAPE, FRIED, HAFLER, JBL, JVC, KENWOOD CAR, KIMBER, PARASOUND, PIONEER, SONOGRAPHE BY CONRAD JOHNSON, SPECTRUM, SPIKO, SUMIKO AND MANY MORE.

SPECIAL TO WILLIAMS COLLEGE!

PRESENT THIS AD AND RECEIVE
$10.00 additional discount on any component over $100, including Merchandise on Sale.

237 FIRST ST. PITTSFIELD, MA
2 Blocks South of Berkshire Med. Ctr. on Rt. 7

TDK SA 90 or Maxell XL1190 cassette tape $1.89

Open 'till 9 Every Evening

Layaways Gladly Accepted

FINANCING AVAILABLE WITH APPROVED CREDIT

Tutorials

Continued from Page 1

scale thing (tutorials) would be a stretch as I see it." He said the Board of Trustees would probably be able to find the necessary resources if the program was deemed to have educational value.

"Intensive teaching engagement"

Oakley said that a tutorial was "an intensive teaching engagement that places the burden of learning on the student."

Dean of the College Stephen Fix said tutorials are desirable because professors are able to "hold a single student to all the consequences of their ideas."

Sabot said that the style of the tutorial depends on the student. "Sometimes as academics we go for the jugular. Not all students respond well to this."

College Registrar Charles Toomajian questioned the wisdom of the sophomore tutorial, pointing out that, in taking courses in their potential majors, students would be adding to the existing distribution imbalance.

Sabot maintained that if the tutorial format is used only in the senior year, the educational institution as a whole will not benefit. He asserted that if sophomore tutorials are implemented, "oral and written skills will be better in subsequent courses. A sophomore is more open to change, and the senior tutorial would be more effective than it otherwise would be."

Toomajian suggested that sophomore tutorials should not count towards fulfilling major requirements. He said that it would discourage students from taking tutorials in heavily enrolled departments.

Not for redistribution

Kohut said that the tutorial program should stand on its merit as an educational tool. "We shouldn't use this as a redistribution method. We compromise the educational value if we use it in a manipulative way."

Dean Fix said tutorials "will take some training of the faculty. We'll all have to learn to be better listeners."

Some committee members questioned how the tutorial system might be used in Division III courses. Tom Perkins '87, who spent his junior year at Oxford in England where the tutorial system is used almost exclusively, said that tutors usually assigned extensive problem sets for science and math tutorials.

Several committee members were concerned about the time demands that teaching tutorials would place on the faculty, and how the faculty would receive the proposal. Oakley said that, as with all major curricular changes, the faculty will vote on it before it is instituted.

Chemistry Professor Larry Kaplan called the tutorial proposal "the most exciting change I've seen at this institution. I'm a little afraid but I'm willing to try it. All these numbers problems will work themselves out."

Pro-CEP

Continued from Page 3

the kind of courses, such as those that go by affectionate names like "Astrogut," "Rocks for Jocks," etc., clearly designed to be non-threatening. Science is itself essentially a threat, both to our shallow egocentricity and to our static notions of an orderly universe.

I know that many will question: where is the "liberal" in a liberal arts which mandates "Thou shalt have science, like it or not" ? Such objections do not have their roots in the contemporary liberal ideology which stresses gradual, guided development toward a free and just society, but in an archaic romanticism, which wrapped itself in misty-eyed, self-indulgent idealizations of "primordial" human nature. We are not born into freedom, we struggle to it. We begin our educational journey as complacent, stubbornly narrow-minded children and, after considerable prodding, come out bewildered, uprooted adults. We come out with a fresh thirst for questioning and, hopefully, a complementary talent for observing and listening.

I remember a particular spring day not long ago. I was thumbing peevishly through volumes of Plato, Aristotle, and Epicurus. What could these crazy outdated Greeks possibly have to say of interest to the modern world? Well, I ended up hanging with that course, and, strangely enough, even picked up an idea or two along the way.

Pretty soon I will be leaving these ivy walls for the last time. I will always be proud to be associated with an institution that strives against the current to bring forth complete, not comfortable, minds.

Faculty

Continued from Page 1

were a bigger forum for this?.'" Diggs has since replaced the late Professor Kent E. Dawalt in the art department and will be teaching three courses there next year as well.

She said that for many spouses seeking employment it is necessary to change careers and to reconsider other skills such as organization or public relations, areas often very different from that of their formal training.

Highest unemployment rate

Bullett said that people's concern about the job market is very realistic, especially when most of today's families are geared to two incomes. "We are in a pocket. Berkshire County has the highest unemployment rate in the state," he said.

"We sat down and really went through some ideas, where the problems were and what could be done to benefit the most people in a way that would accomplish the most," said Bullett. One of the questions that the group addressed was how to define a reasonable commuting distance. They concluded that this area was bounded by Springfield, Greenfield and Albany. A letter from the Personnel Department discussing how to go about the job search in the Williamstown area is to be mailed to spouses twice a year.

The coalition, in conjunction with the Office of Career Counseling and the Personnal Department, is planning a series of talks on topics such as starting a business, writing a resume, and changing careers. The first seminar is scheduled for mid-February and is to be a panel discussion involving people who have commuted, changed careers, or have had experience in relocating people.

Barnes wrote to other colleges sharing the problem of geographic isolation. She asked these schools, Dartmouth, Colgate, Carleton, Reed, Oberlin and Colby, for ideas of the kinds of actions they were taking to help faculty and staff spouses in finding suitable careers. Barnes earned her B.A. in photography, but underwent a career change, and now works as a nurse at the hospital in Bennington.

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert commented, "I know I'm grateful to the coalition for having brought the matter so clearly to attention. It's obvious to me that the coalition is working well with both Bullett and McIntire. I think we're going to make good progress in providing better services for faculty spouses."

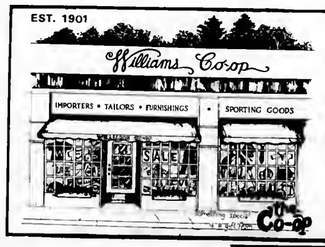
But Reichert added, "I don't think anyone should expect miracles and I don't think anyone is."

THE CLIP SHOP

ATTENTION! ATTENTION! ATTENTION!

We are getting a makeover!

The Clip Shop will be closed February 2nd & 3rd for renovations. After this we will re-open again.



Come by and see our new hair studio!

49 Spring St. Williamstown, MA 413-458-9167 413-458-8585

125 North St. Bennington, VT 802-442-9823

122 North St. Pittsfield, MA 413-442-6903 413-447-9576

WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER.

LEVI'S

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Williams College SAC Presents:

A BERKSHIRE EXCLUSIVE

ARLO GUTHRIE

and his band

Wednesday, January 28th at 8:00 p.m.

CHAPIN HALL

Tickets will be on sale in Baxter Hall

$12.00 or $6.00 with Williams I.D.

Colonial Pizza

"The best in the area (America)"

Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!

Now starting delivery to Williams College

From 4:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.

Fresh dough daily

Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Women icers beaten 5-1; host Wesleyan Saturday

by Ted Hobart

The women's hockey team travelled to Colgate on Wednesday but they might as well have stayed at home, as the Red Raiders handed the Ephs a 5-1 defeat. A second period lapse proved fatal to the Lady Eph cause as Colgate scored four goals to widen their slim 1-0 first period lead.

The second period offensive eruption by the Red Raiders was led by talented freshman Jennie Cook who posted a hat trick. While Colgate found the net on four of six second period shots, Williams could not buy a goal until the third period despite outshooting their opponents by a margin of 32-21.

At 14:13 of the final stanza, the Ephwomen broke the shutout as Kirsten Neuse '89 scored her first goal for the season on an assist from freshman Kara Lynch, a high school teammate of Cook, Colgate's freshman star.

Playing better than in recent games, the Lady Ephs dominated play, as evidenced in shots on goal, but they gave up too many scoring opportunities on breakaways. The team played at R.P.I. this afternoon and travels to Skidmore tomorrow. The squad will host the Cardinals of Wesleyan on Saturday.

Wrestling

Continued from Page 12

period, while Duff clinched the team win with his quick :55 pin. "It's great to come back with a couple of wins, but I still have a long way to go," said Duff.

In the other side of the trimatch, the Ephs lost to SUNY-Oneonta 40-6. Williams' points were supplied by Duff, who won a majority decision (12-2), and by Jeff Steele '89 who overcame a poor start to tie his opponent at six all.

The only dark spots of the day were the shoulder injury to Ben Pearlman, ending his season, and the absence of injured captain Dan MacDonell '87.

The grapplers travel to Trinity Saturday for a tri-match against the homestanding Bantams and Plymouth State.

Track

Continued from Page 12

Colby. Fisher was in impressive form, and appears ready to dominate competition during the remainder of the dual-meet season.

The Ephmen got two good performances in the 3000 meters. Seniors Mark Gilrain and Dave Grossman took second and third in the race with excellent times, Gilrain at 8:51 and Grossman at 8:52. As the two distance runners peak at the end of the season, they should turn in some superior races.

The women's team also ran at Tufts this weekend in the Jumbo Invitational, where it placed fifth in a field of ten. Individually, Dawn Macauley '89 won the 50 yard hurdles in a sizzling 7.7 second time. Also impressive was the 4X400 relay team of Joan Davis '88, Becky Conklin '87, Susan Gray '90, and Macauley which placed second with a time of 4:11.5, a mark which shattered the school record by 11 seconds.

Williams now returns for two home meets, running this weekend against Westfield and Worcester State, and on February 7 against Amherst and Wesleyan.

Women

Continued from Page 4

from different viewpoints.

Smith favored working within the system for change, and she focused on the issue of women and the priesthood. "For all of the Church's problems and sinfulness, that is, the sin of sexism, ordination to the priesthood within the structure is worth working for," she explained. "In the Church, 99 percent of the power is held by ordained men."

"We are doing the best we can to educate and agitate the system. We need to raise the sense of the people that women are waiting to be ministers," she added. Smith has participated in the Women's Ordination Conference, and has picketed in Boston during ordination ceremonies. She said, "This is all we can do in a Church that is not a democracy."

Smith concluded, "We need women in the priesthood, because the Church has a right to the ministry of women, which will be different from the ministry that they can get from men."

Goodwin said that being a woman within the Catholic church was personally irreconciliable. She delineated the theology which, "created a dilemma in being a woman." She noted, "The Church creates two irreconcilable role models for womanhood, Eve and Mary. The two ideals can not coexist."

About her decision to leave the Catholic Church, she said, "I have to give up on the Church. It denies women and minorities full personhood, and maintains that status quo."

Wiseman spoke as a member of the Women's Alternative Spiritual Movement. The group is made up of "women who left the mainstream to create their own values, theology and rituals. They left not only because of discrimination, but also because the values and views of the alternative are positive."

"The movement underscores the oneness of the world, the awareness that everything is sacred and that there are many valid ways of knowing. It stresses the honoring of women and the empowerment of women," she said.

Wiseman concluded that the movement to which she belongs is helping women to get rid of their self-destructive behavior and to remember to love their psychological, emotional, and physical selves.

W. hoops

Continued from Page 11

Union's outside shooting, and forced them to look inside to center Barb Weisinger, where Eph center Megan King '90 responded with 6 blocked shots.

Nancy Hedeman '89 had another strong game with 24 points and 18 rebounds, and Hatch dished out 5 assists. Coach Roberts commented on the lady Ephs' defense saying, "we really shut them down with the 3-2 zone."

Last Thursday, the Ephs downed North Adams State 73-48 for the second time this season. Missy Crouchley '89 led Eph scorers with 18 points. Hedeman hit for 16 and Julia Beasley added 11.

The lady hoopsters hope to continue their 6-0 record at home tomorrow night against an experienced Vassar team. Saturday, Williams completes its homestand against Little Three rival Wesleyan.

Attention
Liberal Arts Graduates

A Career in Information Systems Awaits You.

United States Surgical Corporation is the world's leading manufacturer of Auto Suture® wound closure instruments, and is headquartered in Norwalk, Connecticut. The Company has a progressive Management Information Systems (MIS) Department dedicated to providing for corporate information needs.

Each year the MIS Department brings in new people through a formal training program which provides a unique and exciting opportunity for non-technical college graduates in a highly sophisticated environment.

To qualify, you must have outstanding communication skills backed by creative problem-solving capabilities and a demonstrated ability to learn. Once you've completed the initial training phase, you'll work on programming projects for a variety of areas, such as finance, marketing and manufacturing. As your skill level increases, so will your responsibilities.

ON-CAMPUS INTERVIEWS WILL BE HELD
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1987

This is an extraordinary opportunity to turn your Bachelor's degree into a challenging information systems career. For complete details and to sign up for an interview, contact your career placement office.

UNITED STATES SURGICAL CORPORATION
An Equal Opportunity Employer M/F

Syracuse University

STUDY ABROAD

SUMMER 1987

Consider a 6-credit Program in Austria
England
France
Italy
Spain
Switzerland

Division of International Programs Abroad
119 Euclid Avenue, Syracuse, NY 13244
Tel. 315/423-3471

ARCHITECTURE DESIGN MUSIC EDUCATION LAW SOCIAL SCIENCE
PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS ART HISTORY MANAGEMENT LANGUAGE & LITERATURE

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store

Winter Study Special

After 6:00 p.m. 40% discount on all salad, crepe, and dinner entrees. Offer extended to all students and faculty of Williams.

Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 8:00 p.m. Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Telephone (413) 458-5007

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1868 Betty Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

With This Coupon
20% OFF ANY PURCHASE

New Sidney Sheldon novel, Windmills of the Gods, and William Goldman's sequel to Marathon Man, Brothers

Come visit us soon

Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 8 p.m.

Now open 'til 8:00 p.m.

Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Swimming

Continued from Page 11

last year. Further, his time erased Williams' oldest varsity record, set by Ben Aronson '83 in 1980, and qualified him for nationals.

Rob Benson '90, Jim Jordan '87, and Mike O'Malley '89 also swam well for the Ephs. Benson's win in the challenging 400 IM in 4:16.72 earned him a trip to nationals. Jordan won the 200 fly in a quick 2:00.62 and O'Malley's efforts evidenced emergence from a mid-winter slump.

Wednesday, the women defeated Smith 85-55 in Muir Pool. Freshman Berne Broudy's win in the 100 fly sparked a devasting spurt as Williams won six of seven events in a devasting 49-23 scoring blitz. Freshmen Davis, Freemer, Lisa Gauthler, and Anne Maceachern won the 400 free relay, and the class of '90 accounted for over half of the Ephs' point total.

The womens' wins against Smith and Bowdoin raise their record to .500 after an 0-2 start. The men climb to 3-2, having lost only to Division I opponents. Tommorrow, the women travel to Mount Holyoke, and Saturday both teams face Springfield College in Muir Pool's last dual meet in its sixty-year history.

M. Squash

Continued from Page 11

Earlier in the week, the Ephs easily disposed of Dartmouth 8-1. Unlike matches of years' past when contests against the Big Green had been edge-of-the-seat 5-4 affairs, the home victory this year was most decisive. McCall, Dana Weeder '88, sophomores Lewis Fischer and Doug Gilbert won 3-0, Chestnut, Kimberly, and Pier Friend '88 won 3-1, and Hedeman won 3-2. The sole blemish on the team's record against Dartmouth was Goldfeld's heart-breaking loss in a fifth game tie-breaker.

The team's next match is not until February fourth against Trinity. Sloane said that the home match will most likely determine who becomes the number seven ranked team in the country as the Ephs and Trinity are currently the seventh and eighth best teams in the country.

Men's hoops

Continued from Page 12

tossed in 28, Johnson added 20 to go with his 17 rebounds, and John Ciulla '87 got hot for 12 points in a five-minute span to ice the 102-90 destruction. Captain Lang had a season-best game as he fought for all of his 15 points. Using left-handed inside moves and offensive rebounding, the senior showed that, when not saddled by fouls, he is capable of being a workhorse.

Junior guard Henry Jones also popped in 15, as he emerged from a dreadful four-game shooting slump. The long range bomber added 16 against Bowdoin to keep his average around 19 ppg.

The first victory of the week was a 69-55 affair against Middlebury. After a low-scoring first half, Melchionni lit up the board after the break, finishing with a team-high 16. Major and Johnson also were in double figures.

The team "has finally blended the way we thought it would," said Coach Harry Sheehy. After relying almost solely on Johnson and Jones for scoring early in the year, the Ephs now can rely on at least eight players to contribute. In the up-tempo offense, the depth has provided waves of fresh Ephs to wear down the opponents.

After a road game against Brandeis today, the squad returns to Lasell for a game against a tough 8-4 Union squad. On Saturday, the team travels to Wesleyan. After the earlier loss at Amherst, a win is crucial to keep the Ephs' Little Three chances alive.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.

Report
From Number One Wall Street

If you like challenges, Irving Trust is where your ambitions may become reality.

It's people that set Irving Trust apart in the highly competitive banking world. Today, we serve the diverse financial needs of the largest corporations, governments, emerging companies and successful individuals worldwide.

And to meet tomorrow's even bigger challenges, we're looking for talented people who will learn to manage both traditional and innovative credit and noncredit services by meshing creativity and spirit with professionalism and teamwork. While we're one of the largest banks in the U.S., we recognize and reward individual achievement.

We'll be on campus:

Monday, February 9

See your career planning office for details.
An Equal Opportunity Employer m/f/h/v.

Irving Trust

FOR SALE
Spinet-Console Piano
Bargain
Wented: Responsible pert to take over Low Monthly Peyments on Spinet-Console Pieno. Cen be seen locelly.
Cell Mr. White et 1-800-327-3345 ext. 101

SUMMER IN EUROPE
$239
Lowest scheduled fares to all of Europe from Boston.
Call 1 (800) 325-2222

Winter Carnival Gowns
A large selection of stylish gowns in beautiful colors to fit any budget.
THE WEDDING BELLE BOUTIQUE
57 Main St., North Adams

"A full line in stock Tux Shop for all your formal wear needs."
Rentals . . . $39.00 complete on our in-stock Tuxes
ACCESSORIES TO BUY:
• Cumberbunds and ties
• Shirts
• Tux Pants & Coats

THE TUX SHOP
At The Wedding Belle Boutique
57 MAIN ST 664 9833 NORTH ADAMS
OPEN TUES SAT 10-5 THURSDAY TILL 9 PM

Hockey falters against tough Maine foes

by Al Mottur

Playing two of the best teams the squad will face all year, the hockey team received a double dose of Maine medicine over the weekend in failing to Bowdoin 8-3 and Colby 5-4 in sudden death overtime. The two losses concluded what originally was a promising week for the Ephs who had edged New England College by a 3-2 score Monday night.

Against Colby, the team squandered two early goals and trailed 2-0 midway through the first period. Rallying behind the play of sophomore forward Chris Donato, the squad halved the Mules' margin with just under two minutes to play in the period. Donato, who had three assists to justify his recent increase in ice-time sent a picture perfect pass through the goal mouth to forward Ron Van Belle '90 who only had to touch the puck to deposit it into the net.

The freshman's goal, his first of two for the game, evidenced not only Donato's skill, but Van Belle's increasingly obvious ability for putting the puck in the net. The freshman leads the team with ten goals and seventeen points overall.

As has been their tendency all season, the Ephs played their best hockey during the second period. The only score came on a pretty wrist shot by defenseman Tim Frechette '89, fired from just above the left face-off circle over the goalie's shoulder. As the third period progresed, neither team could score, despite several bonafide opportunities. With only ten minutes to play, the Ephs broke the drought as Van Belle cashed in on yet another Donato assist. The goal gave the Ephs a 3-2 lead.

However, the squad could not hold the margin they had spent over two periods building, as the Mules came back to tie the game at three and again at four. Neither squad could score as time ran out. The ensuing overtime did not last long as a defensive breakdown allowed Mule player Jon Doehler to position himself within feet of the goal mouth from where he converted a pass into the game winning goal.

The day before, the squad fell to an enormously talented Bowdoin team currently ranked number one in the nation in Div. II. And although the Ephs lost by five goals, the final margin of victory does not come close to describing the closeness of the contest. Trailing 3-0 in the first period, Williams stayed close, and with ten minutes to play trailed only 4-3.

At this point, however, a series of costly penalties and a Bowdoin offensive explosion doomed the Ephs to defeat. Head coach Bill McCormick pointed towards the officials calls in the third period as the key factor in the loss. "For two periods they didn't call anything, then all of a sudden they started penalizing our guys."

Four days earlier, the Ephs picked up their fourth victory on the year with their close 3-2 road win over New England College. The victory avenged last year's 11-8 loss to the same team who at the time had not yet won a game.

Tonight, the team will try to break its mini-losing streak as it hosts Division I Army. This traditionally tough game precedes this weekend's crucial matchup at Amherst on Saturday. The Ephs will be trying to regain the Little Three crown that the Lord Jeffs took from them last year.

Number one squash player Keith Goldfeld '87 tries to push the ball back along the wall in a home match this week. The Ephs won two out of three matches in their climb up the rankings ladder.

Men's squash pounds Jumbos, loses to Yale

by Chuck Samuelson

On Saturday the men's squash team returned to Williams and bounced back from a disheartening 9-0 loss to Yale on the previous day by beating Tufts 6-3. The victory upped the team's record to an impressive 10-4. After the match Coach Sean Sloane said that Tufts was "tougher than I thought," but he noted that his team had played well after doing so much travelling, playing seven matches in the last two weeks.

In the highlight of the match, Sophomore Adam Kimberly fought back from an 11-14 deficit in the fifth game to pull off a stunning 17-15 win in the tie-breaker. The team's one and two players, co-captain Keith Goldfeld '87 and Wendell Chestnut '88, both lost tough matches. Chestnut's match against Jon Segal, a McEnroe-like southpaw, elicited a vociferous banter from a crowd that was none too fond of the opponent's style.

On Friday, however, the team was beaten 9-0 by a superior Yale squad. Five matches were shutouts, and only two players, seniors Matt McCall and Rick Hedeman, could go the full five games. Sloane said that the Bulldogs were a very talented team that he did not really expect to beat.

Continued on Page 10

Lose in tourney

Lady cagers beat Union, North Adams St.

by Drew Sawyer

The women's basketball team had its bubble burst by two superior teams at the Connecticut College Invitational. The squad lost on Saturday in the semis to Conn. College 84-54 and on Sunday in the consolation game to Babson by a 74-59 score. The two routs drops the Lady Ephs record to 8-4. Head Coach Nancy Roberts said that the opponents sagged on sophomore Hancy Hedeman inside and the others starters could not provide the necessary scoring help. "We need to improve our ball movement if we're going to get more balanced scoring," she said.

Earlier in the week, the squad trounced Union and North Adams State. Displaying a dominating defense, the lady Ephs, undefeated at home, beat the Dutchmen 67-48 and destroyed Mohawks 73-48.

The Union game was a defensive battle from the start, with Williams in a full court man-to-man press and Union using a 2-2-1 zone press. The ball handling of captain Kim Hatch '88 and Joyce Rogers '88 dissolved Union's press, but the lady Dutchman continued to score against the Eph's pressure defense. It wasn't until Coach Roberts switched to 3-2 zone defense that Union's scoring halted. The move shut off

Continued on Page 9

Records fall in swim meet vs. Polar Bears

by Kurt Oeler

Record-breaking swims highlighted Williams' domination of Bowdoin College Saturday, as the women won 84-55 and the men dominated 88-36. Earlier in the week, the women downed Smith College 85-55.

Four Lady Ephs recorded triple windays. Senior co-captains Joan Horgan and Jen Raymond and freshmen standouts Michelle Freemer and Anne Maceachern displayed talent and versatility in blitzing their outclassed competition. Swimming alumnus Pete Orphanos '84 commented "These girls should lead the women back to their rightful place as New England champions."

Connie Davis '90 and Jen Campbell '87 added two wins each to Williams' total. Davis' win in the 50 came in her first try at the event, while Campbell controlled the diving board.

Evan Davis '89 and Dan Snyder '90 stole the show in the men's meet. Davis eclipsed the four-year old 100 breastroke mark, held by Colgate's Steve Weeks, with a winning time of 1:01.33, just thirty-three hundreths shy of the national qualifying standard.

Snyder followed with a smashing performance in the grueling 1650. The youngster swam sixty-six lengths of Muir Pool in 16:39.07, besting the pool mark set by Colgate's Rob Allen

Continued on Page 10

JV SCORES

Men's Hoops 4-3
W Berkshire CC 84-54
plays Brandeis A Today
Canterbury H Thur.
Wesleyan A Sat.
Men's Hockey 4-2
W Trinity Pawling 4-3
Men's Squash 3-3
L Dartmouth 6-3
L Yale 9-0

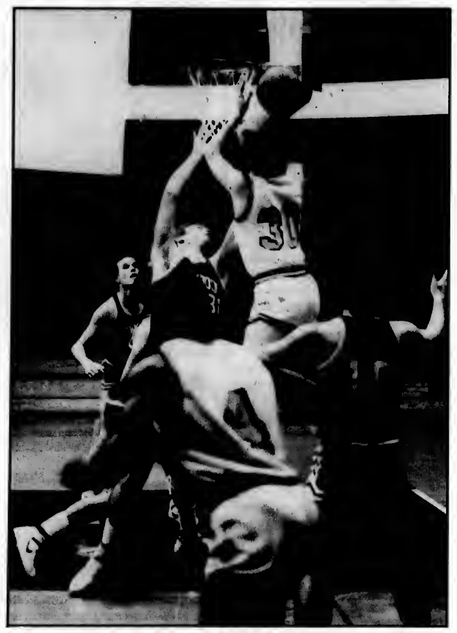
Budweiser
KING OF BEERS
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK
GENUINE
GENUINE
This week's recipient is freshman point guard Garcia Major, who helped the men's basketball team run its record to 6-3 with wins over Middlebury, Colby, and Bowdoin. The playmaker averaged 20 ppg. for the week. Garcia, this Bud's for you!
this Bud's for you!

Goff's Trivia Contest

1) Which baseball pitcher has the most victories in the 1980's?
2) Name the winningest active college basketball coach in the country (percentage-wise).
3) Who holds the record for the longest TD run in Super Bowl history?
4) Name the last American male tennis player to win the French Open.
5) Who is the oldest winner of the Masters Golf Tournament?

Turn in your answers to Stu or Al by Saturday evening or to S.U. 3099 by Sat. 10:00 a.m. The person with the most correct answers wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's sports. In case of a tie, a drawing will be held to determine the winner. Last week's winner was Rob Ward '89. Congratulations H!

SKI SALE
30% off ALL Parkas & Ski Pants
20% off ALL Alpine & X-Country Skis
Goff's Sports, inc.
15 Spring St.



Ephs' record moves to 6-3 behind Major

by Stewart Verdery.

Buoyed by uncharacteristic balance, the Eph basketball squad made great strides this past week towards attaining their season goal of a playoff bid in defeating Middlebury, Colby, and Bowdoin to raise its record to 6-3. While the usual headliners continued to produce, Bill Melchionni '89 (vs. Middlebury), Greg Lang '87 (vs. Colby), and David Morrison '90 (vs. Bowdoin) keyed the victories with their performances.

The Bowdoin win was the toughest, as Williams was sluggish after the previous night's impressive win over Colby. Towards the close of the first half, the Ephs awoke and scored eighteen straight points after trailing 35-26. The last ten opened up the second half, and eight was the closest the Polar Bears got the rest of the way. Subs Morrison and Melchionni led the run, and Brandt Johnson '87 (23 ppg) had three hoops in the outburst.

After a brutal baptism in December (13 fouls in 30 minutes), Morrison has emerged as a defensive force and a scoring option in the pivot. Against Bowdoin, he shut down the visitor's 6'8", 230 lb. center, Joe Williams, after Greg Lang '87 fell into foul trouble. His shot-blocking abilities (3 in one minute vs. Middlebury) and willingness to work hard against larger bodies in the paint give the Ephs another inside dimension.

Mike Masters '89 drives the baseline against Bowdoin's Joe Williams in weekend home action. The Ephs defeated the Polar Bears 91-79. (Chan)

While Morrison has emerged inside, fellow freshman Garcia Major has ruled the perimeter. Meshing his playground moves with a deft passing sense, the freshman's creativeness off the dribble has given the Ephs a relentless fast break that few teams can slow. Able to score (19 ppg) while running the offense, Major is a great remedy for the loss of Tim Walsh '86.

Colby goes down

The first half of the weekend sweep was at the expense of sixth ranked Colby. Major

Continued on Page 10

Squash decisions Penn, Poosanakhom keys win

by Marc McDermott

In their most crucial match this season, the tournament fate of the women's squash team hung in the balance, as the Ephs needed to defeat the University of Pennsylvania to advance to the Howe Cup as a Division I-A school. When captain Amy Barstad '87 lost the fifth game 15-13, the team score stood at 4-4 with only the number eight match still in progress. Thus, the hopes of the entire team fell on the shoulders of Sopit Poosanakhom '88.

Nevertheless, as the crowd gathered around her court to cheer, the junior, not knowing the team score, thought she was simply tied at 3-3 in the fifth game of her own match against Liz Day of UPenn. Poosanakhom then reeled off eight of the next eleven points to pull out to a commanding 11-6 lead.

To the anguish of the Eph crowd, the game took a wicked turn. After winning what seemed to be an endless drop shot rally, Day took advantage of her opponent's mental letdown and captured the next four points by utilizing a powerful serve.

When asked about the bad streak, Poosanakhom said: "I knew I had to try new things. She had a good serve and that long rally had me off-balance. Her serve made me miss a few points, and I lost confidence."

The Eph junior then came through on another long rally with a wicked slice along the wall to go up 13-11. She then took control and coasted to a 15-12 victory. "Liz and I are very comparable," understated Poosanakhom, "but luckily I realized that her backhand was weak, and I managed to hit a few to that side during the key (12-11) point."

Along with the 3-0 whitewashings by Jeanne Cloppse '88 and Sarah Fulkerson '90 and the 3-1 wins by sophomores Judy Kellog and Allison Buckner '89, the Poosanaknom victory provided the five wins neccesary to beat the Quakers and quailfy the Ephs in the highest bracket at the Howe Cup. Coach Renzie Lamb commented on the key match, "anyone of the players could have won it. That's why you have to come ready to go, the first player through the ninth. That's what makes squash interesting in a totally different way from most sports."

When asked about the prospects of competing against powerhouses such as Yale and Harvard, Lamb responded, "of course it will be a lot tougher, but if you run with the horses, you're a horse, and if you run with the dogs, you're a dog."

Barstad summed up the match best, saying "Sopit did a fantastic job. But it's the team that's great. We're closer than any team I've ever been on. Jeanne (Cloppse) is just unbelievable, but it's not like she's the whole team. Because of (the closeness), we have a lot of potential, and I think we'll do real well in the Howe Cup."

The 5-2 Lady Ephs host Vassar tomorrow and go to Dartmouth for the Can Am tourney this weekend.

Mark Duff '89 returned from an injury this weekend to lead the Ephs to their first win of the season against Dartmouth. Here he gains points against his opponents. (Kershaw)

Wrestlers stop losing streak as Duff and Merriam return

by Scott Mozarsky

Inspired by the return of star wrestlers Roger Merriam '87 and Mark Duff '89, the wrestling team beat Dartmouth 32-24 for their first victory of the season. Merriam and Duff were competing in their first matches of the year and each pinned his opponent in shaking off the rust of several months of inactivity. "It felt good to beat Dartmouth, but it's even better to know that those two guys are back in the lineup again," remarked a gleeful Coach Joe Dailey.

The Ephs dominated the lower weight classes in jumping out to a commanding lead. Steve Felix '89 led things off with a 17-0 technical decision, and classmate Ed Anderson decisioned his foe at 14-7. Co-captain Andy Anselmi '87 gained a gritty 17-7 victory, and, according to the 3-1 senior, "It is a refreshing feeling to finally win one. You have got to be proud of those freshman bluechippers."

However, a Dartmouth comeback in the middle weights necessitated the pins by Duff and Merriam. The latter picked up his win at 5:35 of the third

Continued on Page 9

Trackmen fall at Tufts; women fifth

by Steve Brody

Without senior co-captain Andre Lopez, the Williams men's track team travelled to MIT on Friday to run against a powerful MIT squad and a strong Tufts team. The Ephmen, who fell to 3-3, were overmatched, being overwhelmed by MIT's 93 points. Tufts was second with 44 to the Ephmen's 33.

One bright spot was Geoffrey Igharo '90, who continued to shine in both field events and sprints. Igharo and Kenneth Alleyne '88 topped the long jump as they did a week earlier at Williams, with Igharo first at 21'8". He also took second in the triple jump at 44'10", and in the 55 meter dash won at 6.63 seconds to total 13 points for the meet.

Also starring was co-captain Jon Fisher '87. He moved to a shorter distance than in previous meets, and ran in front of the field for the entire race to win in 2:35, qualifying him for the NCAA Division III New England meet on February 21 at

Continued on Page 9

Sophomore winger Wil Putnam tries to dig the puck out from under the skate of linemate Denny Wright '87 near the Colby goalmouth. The squad took it on the chin this weekend as it fell to Bowdoin 8-3 and to Colby 5-4. Earlier, it defeated New England College 3-2. See page 11 for story. (Lebauer)

The Williams Record

VOL. 100, NO. 14 USPA 684-680 WILLIAMS COLLEGE FEBRUARY 10, 1987

Lewis named Pres. of Carleton

Professor Stephen Lewis, who has taught economics at Williams College for more than 20 years, has been named President of Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota.

After an eight-month nationwide search, the Carleton Board of Trustees selected Lewis from a field of 237 candidates. He will become the college's eighth president on July 1.

Lewis, 47, graduated from Williams in 1960, and then spent most of his professional career at the college, beginning as an assistant professor in the economics department in 1966. He earned his Ph.D. from Stanford in 1963, and taught at Stanford and Harvard before coming to Williams. He taught at the University of Nairobi in 1971-72.

Lewis was named Herbert H. Lehman Professor of Economics in 1976, and he served as chairman of the department from 1984 until he went on sabbatical leave last summer. He is spending this academic year as a visiting fellow at the Institute of Development Studies of the University of Sussex in Brighton, England.

An expert on economic policy and planning in developing countries, Lewis has served in long-term advisory capacities in Pakistan, Kenya and Botswana, as well as on frequent shorter consulting projects for various governments and international agencies, including the World Bank, USAID and the Ford Foundation. Last winter, shortly before the elections in the Philippines, he was part of a ten-person mission there to examine medium and long-term economic, social and strategic issues, internally and in terms of U.S.-Philippines relations.

Stephen Lewis

Since 1975, Lewis has been an economic consultant to the Ministry of Finance and Development Planning to the government of Botswana, where he and his family lived in 1977 and again in 1980-82. In 1982, when Botswana's president awarded him the Presidential Order of Meritorious Service, he became the first American to receive that country's highest civilian honor.

"Williams has been my intellectual home for over 30 years, and our family home for over 20," Lewis said. "We have benefitted enormously from all our associations with the college and in the area. I hope we have been able to contribute something in return."

Williams College President Francis Oakley said, "In his many roles at Williams and as an economic adviser abroad, Steve Lewis has established an enviable track-record for energetic, insightful, versatile and dedicated service. By talent, training and temperament he is superbly equipped for his new responsibilities. Carleton is to be congratulated on the wisdom of its choice."

DA halts rape investigation; Victim won't press charges

by Karen Costenbader

The Berkshire County District Attorney's office has put its investigation of a reported rape on the Williams College campus on hold. In a meeting on February 4, the alleged victim of the January 14 attack told authorities that she did not want to press charges, even if the investigation were to determine the identity of the attacker.

In a letter to the Williams community yesterday, Dean of the College Stephen Fix said, "It has not been possible to identify and charge any suspect, and in the judgment of the public authorities, progress toward that end is now unlikely."

According to Frederick A. Lantz, a spokesman for the D.A.'s office, the decision to temporarily suspend the investigation was the outcome of the meeting between the alleged victim, Fix and State Trooper Robert Scott of the Crime Prevention and Control Unit.

The victim's refusal to discuss the incident with the police or to turn over physical evidence stalled the police's investigation, Lantz said. District Attorney Anthony J. Ruberto Jr. has not specified what physical evidence was being withheld, he added.

Lantz said the victim "refused to hand over physical evidence from the time we (the D.A.'s office) first became involved in the case." He explained that without the victim's willingness to press charges, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to prosecute should a suspect be apprehended.

"If any new developments do come to light, however, we will certainly reopen the case," Lantz said.

James Kolesar, public relations director for Williams College, said that despite the D.A.'s position, the college plans to continue its own investigation and to share any new information uncovered with the police and the district attorney.

Lantz said that he was not aware of the college's plans to pursue its own investigation.

Kolesar said the college will

Continued on Page 8

Cuomo appoints Jorling

by Paul Kwon

New York Governor Mario M. Cuomo last Monday nominated Professor of Environmental Sciences Thomas C. Jorling as commissioner of the state's Department of Environmental Conservation.

After accepting the nomination, Jorling said "It is one of the dominant public service positions available. It fits with my idea of what I should be doing with my life — contributing to making the world a better place."

Jorling's appointment is contingent upon the resignation of the current environmental conservation commissioner, Henry Williams. Williams has been named by Cuomo to the State Public Service Commission and is waiting for State Senate confirmation of the appointment before resigning from his present position.

Jorling himself must receive Senate confirmation, which will probably take place in March. Jorling plans to take a two-year leave of absence from Williams if he is confirmed.

"Broad experience"

In his announcement, Cuomo said "Tom Jorling has an intelligent environmental philosophy and the proven competence to turn his ideas into accomplishments. His broad environmental experience makes him extremely well-qualified to lead the men and women to whom we entrust the care of our air, land and water."

From 1977 to 1979, Jorling served as Assistant Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in the Office of Water and Hazardous Materials. In that capacity, he was responsible for the implementation of the Clean Water Act, the Ocean Dumping Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act and the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act.

Thomas Jorling

Jorling first came to Williams College and became director of the Center for Environmental Studies in 1972. From 1969 to 1972, he served as minority counsel to the U.S. Senate Committee on Public Works, and from 1968 to 1969, he was Assistant Counsel to the Smithsonian Institution. He served as Attorney-Advisor of the Solicitors Office of the U.S. Department of the Interior from 1966 to 1968.

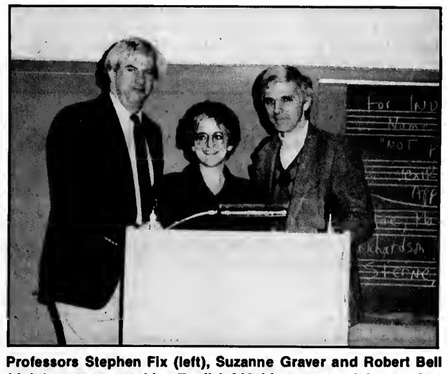
Jorling received a B.S. degree in biology from the University of Notre Dame in 1962. In 1966 he earned a law degree from Boston College. He obtained his M.S. degree in ecology from Washington State University.

In addition to his teaching duties, Jorling is chairman of the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP). He has served one year of a three-year term as a Williamstown selectman. He will resign the post when his appointment is confirmed, but said he plans to keep his home in Williamstown.

Increase in team-teaching reflects growth of interdisciplinary study

by Debbie Snyder

College President Francis Oakley established a program last spring from a presidential discretionary fund to provide for three or four team-taught courses a year. While this fund is intended to increase the number of team-taught courses, it also reflects a previous growth in interest among Williams professors in team-teaching.



Recently introduced programs such as the Freshman Residential Seminar (FRS), the Freshman Winter Study Seminars and much of the Women's Studies concentration all include team-taught courses.

Coordinators of these programs and other professors involved in team-teaching said that the increase in this type of teaching is due largely to a desire among educators to enrich their particular area of study by studying relevant topics in other disciplines.

Women's Studies

Associate Professor Rosemarie Tong, who chairs the Women's Studies program, said that the growth of team-teaching complements the growth of the Women's Studies program, because team-teaching allows a professor interested in teaching a subject learn how by teaching it with a colleague. "We (the Women's Studies advisory committee) see it as a way to get the ball rolling," she said.

Tong said the program will use team-teaching to expose more professors to women's studies courses and thus establish a core of professors able to teach courses in the program. Next fall, Tong will team-teach Introduction to Women's Studies with Assistant Professor of English Suzanne Graver. The following year Assistant Professor Wendy Brown will teach the course with them, Tong said.

Professors Stephen Fix (left), Suzanne Graver and Robert Bell (right) are team-teaching English 216 this semester. It is one of an increasing number of courses being taught by more than one professor. (Rifkin)

First funded course

Tong team-taught with Professor Lawrence Kaplan this year "Reproductive and Genetic Technologies: A Scientific and Philosophical Overview", the first course to be funded by the program established by Oakley.

"I hadn't really anticipated until the course was going on how well we would weave together," Tong said. She said that she and Kaplan made a point of answering questions from each other's disciplines to emphasize the interdisciplinary nature of the course.

Tong said that she and Kaplan had discussed teaching the course before, and they decided to apply for funds from the team-teaching program when the Committee of Appointments and Promotions (CAP) invited the faculty to apply last fall.

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert, a member of the CAP, discussing the reasons for the increase in team-teaching, said, "Disciplines and divisions are in part political and manmade structures. Those structures are giving way to a richer sense that no particular discipline is the exclusive domain of one department."

The program established by Oakley provides money for a department that has a professor team-teaching a course to hire additional teaching staff to teach the course that the profes-

Continued on Page 7

The Williams Record

Wait a minute

The recent proposal to add required tutorials to the curriculum is less than a month old. On January 19, it was introduced by several professors before the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP), whose domain includes reviewing the curriculum. Another proposal, calling for four curricular divisions, is just a few weeks older. By tomorrow, the very short period of consideration given to both proposals may come to an end.

Due to winter break and the high level of activity around the start of a new semester, there has not there has not been enough time for students to learn about either idea and to respond to them with questions or objections.

The tutorial proposal would change Williams in dramatic ways. Twelve new faculty members represent a large increase for this college, and two required tutorials are a major addition to the current course load students face. They also represent a new kind of teaching technique.

Even if one endorses tutorials, believing that a regular, close contact with a professor and another student on one subject would be an intense learning experience, faithful to the liberal arts, there are myriad problems with its implementation which would have to be resolved. During the past two weeks, some members of CEP have noted these difficulties, including the sacrifice of elective courses in some areas, the workload adjustments for faculty members, and the problem of what happens to students when they can't get into their first choice of tutorial.

For the students who are undecided on either of the issues, it must seem like a time for detailed discussion. So far, there has been little discussion outside the confines of the CEP.

And it may be too late to affect the process. The faculty meets tommorow at four o'clock. Both the tutorial issue and the divisional change are scheduled for discussion, and possibly for a vote. The faculty's approval would put the measures into effect.

The college, through the voice of the CEP, has said this year that it is engaged in curricular reform. But reform in an academic institution carries with it an obligation for debate, as the concept of a "free market of ideas" implies. That type of debate has unfortunately not occured, especially with regard to the tutorial idea.

The CEP and the administration probably had no intention to see the proposals move this far toward approval in one month. But there should now be a recognition of the need for student — and faculty — input outside of CEP. Things are moving just a little too quickly.

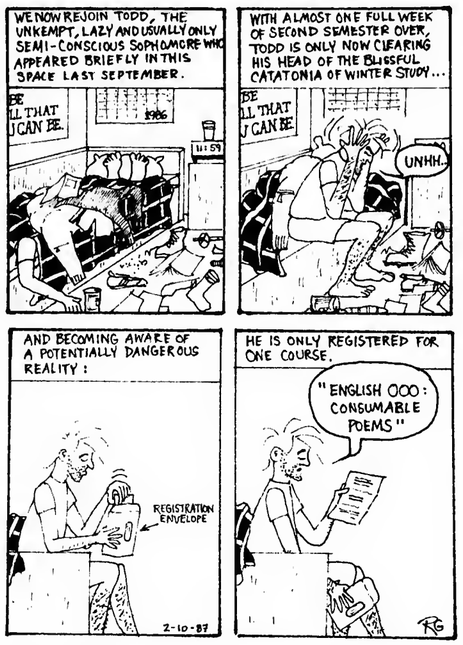
Quotation of the Week

"It fits with my idea of what I should be doing with my life—contributing to making the world a better place."

—Professor Thomas Jorling on his recent nomination as commissioner of the New York Department of Environmental Conservation.

Corrections

A headline in the January 27 Record mistakenly identified College President Francis Oakley as the originator of a proposal before the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) that would add tutorials to the curriculum. Oakley was not a sponsor of the proposals.



The owner of the Williams Newsroom cited in a January 20 article is Aiton (Tony) Perry, not William Perry, as the article stated.

The Record regrets these errors.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF ..... John McDermott and Joe Thorndike
NEWS ..... Debbie Snyder
FEATURES/ARTS ..... Anne O'Malley
OP-ED ..... John Canty
SPORTS ..... Al Mottur and Stewart Verdery
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Katie Albright and Mike LeBauer
LAYOUT ..... Sara Hansen
SENIOR EDITOR ..... Harwell Wells
ASSISTANT NEWS ..... Peter Balaban, Karen Costenbader, Jocelyn Shadforth
ASSISTANT FEATURES ..... Beth Broadrup, Michael Erard, Charles Samuelson
ASSISTANT LAYOUT ..... Mary Iliff
LAYOUT STAFF ..... Daniel Boone, Karl Emsbo, Jon Friedberg, Kirsten Hasenfuss, Jonna Hooker
ADVERTISING ..... Russ Hollenbeck
GRAPHICS ..... Anne Henriques
BUSINESS/CIRCULATION ..... Shelley Hiatt

Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, Ma., and reentered, at Williamstown, Ma., March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second class postage paid at Williamstown, Ma. 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to the Record, Baxter Hall, Williamstown, Ma. 01267.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Letters

Offended

To College President Francis Oakley:

Our son, Michael A. Best, graduated from Williams in June, 1986. Since he has been traveling in the Rockies this Fall, we have been receiving his mail. Therefore, it was our doubtful pleasure to encounter the 1986 Gulielmensian.

We have always been very proud of Mike's attendance at Williams. Our daughter Jan, who is sixteen and a fine student, has been giving Williams serious consideration.

Now, based on our reaction to the yearbook, we feel compelled to ask ourselves whether Williams is an institution of higher learning, or whether it is in actuality a zoo. We find ourselves recalling that Mike used to spend many of his weekends away from campus pursuing his interest in outdoor activities connected with the Williams Outing Club, of which he was a board member. Perhaps we now understand his almost fanatical disgust with campus activities which began during his freshman year. We remember bringing him back from a Christmas holiday or two and finding the dorm steps literally sticky with beer. We overlooked it, chalking it up to high spirits and end—of—vacation parties. Now we're not so sure. Perhaps we were seeing more of the real Williams than we thought.

Let me draw your attention to the color illustration on the "contents" page of your yearbook. We think it displays wincing bad taste, and it will be one of the first pictures a prospective parent may view casually in the Admissions Office while waiting for a son or daughter's interview. While you have the book out, why don't you just glance at pp.'s 16, 40, and 235?

We are not prudes. We ourselves drink in moderation, and certainly have never prevented either one of our children from having a great time. We also know that all yearbooks have a section or two of "goofing off" pictures. However, there was NO sense of sanity or organization in this particular yearbook, and we question the administration's wisdom in allowing it to represent its students' standards.

We would recommend that you not show the yearbook to prospective parents unless they specifically ask for it (as we used to do while taking Mike around on interviews and which we intend to do with Jan). We suggest that the yearbook committee for the coming year remember that their book will represent their class to future generations. Therefore, they should attempt not to make it resemble an issue of Mad magazine.

We will look forward to hearing your thoughts on this matter.

Richard and Wendy Best

Editor's note: A copy of the Bests' letter to President Oakley was received by the Record. Gulielmensian editor Jocelyn Shadforth, who also received a copy, wrote the reply which follows.

Response

To the editors:

The points made by Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Best in their letter concerning the 1986 Gulielmensian were indeed well taken and constructive. They serve as apt reminders of the responsibilities held by the editorial boards of all campus publications, especially a publication such as the yearbook, which has enjoyed a tradition of parent support through book sales and advertising.

As managing editor of last year's book, I regret having offended parents such as the Bests and I also appreciate their comments about the yearbook's role in presenting an image of Williams College. Perhaps in an effort to make the book representative of campus interests shared by a majority of students and not just those specific to the editorial staff, the former interests were misread and over-emphasized. If this was indeed the case, then a mistake as great as the one trying to be avoided was committed. For this I am sorry. A yearbook is a product

Continued on Page 4

The Revenge of the Bacchi: Club members deny sexism

by Sean Brennan '87 and John Shaw '87

The article "Club Bacchus: social group or stronghold of male privilege?" written by Amy Jefress and Eliza Kent, which appeared in last week's Record, was a weakly-argued attempt at attacking a social organization of the school, and seemed somewhat out of line coming from the President of our College Council. In the article, Jeffress and Kent were initially correct in stating that Club Bacchus is a social organization, but then proceeded to accuse the club of consciously reinforcing the power structure that legitimates male privilege, of institutionalizing the exclusion of women, and of having a "smug, male-supremacist attitude." These are quite serious political charges against a social club. Clearly they were not aware of the straightforward purposes of the club when they made their closing statement that "Club Bacchus has no justifiable purpose whatsoever."

Club Bacchus is a social organization of athletically-oriented male students who enjoy getting together to socialize, to support Williams athletics, and to sponsor very successful all-campus parties. The Club Bacchus happy hours provide a place for the members to enjoy themselves in an environment that is free from discussion of classes, exams, papers, and other forms of academic pressure that exist at this college. At these events, Club members also make plans for activities such as boosters for athletic events and coordinations for our all-campus parties. Club Bacchus has also in the past taken part in causes such as the Ethiopian Relief Fund, to which a third of the money made at one all-campus party was donated. Jeffress and Kent seem to have overlooked these purposes of the Club which have nothing to do with the perpetuation of male supremacy.

Perhaps Club Bacchus, being all-male, appears to people as a sexist organization, and perhaps technically it is, but the members of the Club certainly don't consciously maintain a "smug, male-supremacist" attitude. Where do Jeffress and Kent draw the line on blaming Club Bacchus or any organization for abetting "the normal patterns of male dominance" that are evident throughout our society? They don't. They could just as well call for the abolition of Monday Night Football. It would not be truthful to say that Club Bacchus members have never been guilty of rude or sexist behavior, but, at the same time, we are quite sure that the Feminist Alliance wouldn't claim that their members have been completely innocent of the same at their women's parties.

Jeffress and Kent also singled out Club Bacchus in their article for blame because their all-campus parties "tend to have more than the usual amounts of sexist and generally rude behavior." The general behavior at Bacchus parties is no worse than that at any other all-

Continued on Page 4

Winter Study offers unique value to Williams education

by Daniel Boone '90

It's over. The regular semester is once again upon me, and my first winter study is only a memory. And what a memory! I, for one, am a winter study enthusiast.

Unfortunately, not everyne shares my enthusiasm for winter study. I have heard students say that it is a waste of time and money, and some students also complain of boredom. A few students are so discontented that they have begun to advocate the elimination of winter study. This concerns me, because I don't think that they have considered all aspects of the situation.

First and foremost, winter study is a unique educational opportunity. As I understand it, the purpose of winter study is to provide students with the opportunity to pursue a single subject in much greater depth than is normally possible. It is also intended to encourage students to investigate subjects which they might never attempt in a regular course. The combination of these two factors creates an educational atmosphere never attained otherwise, and this alone is sufficient justification for winter study.

There are other justifications. A college education is not just textbooks and lectures; much of the education provided by the college experience is social education. (And we all know people who need one, right?) Winter study provides many opportunities for what I like to call "constructive social inteaction." There are other phrases for it, or course. (Would anyone be so crude as to call it 'partying'? I hope not.) Call it what you will, but I think it is a valid activity, and I appreciate having a winter study period in which to practice it.

There are also a few observations which convince me that the opponents of winter study have not carefully considered the situation. For example, there is the question of what might replace winter study. Some of its detractors feel that their participation is of no educational value, and with an audacity I can only admire they suggest that winter study be replaced with additional vacation time. Others (colorfully referred to as "trolls" by one friend of mine) would rather get their money's worth by increasing the length of the regular semester. Both of these views are shortsighted, because when taken to their logical conclusions there are some severe negative consequences.

For example: Williams College is understandably proud of the geographical diversity of its students. I believe that this diversity would be sharply reduced if winter study were replaced by additional vacation time. As Williams' sole student from Alaska, I speak from experience when I say that vactions are the biggest headache for students from the far corners of the earth. Going home is so expensive that it is often only possible for

Continued on Page 4

Campus groups help students share themselves in diversity

Another Word
by Andrew Mayer

To be perfectly honest, I am getting increasingly fed up with the discussions on campus and op-ed pieces in the Record comparing the Feminist Alliance with Club Bacchus. It's time all this came to an end.

There is a place for both Club Bacchus and the Feminist Alliance at Williams College. My reasoning? If you want to get technical, look up the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. It guarantees to every American the right of free speech and the freedom to assemble. Within the law, any club can exist and do what they want.

Accordingly, I do not object to people expressing opinions against either group. That is their right. But it is ridicuious to declare that a group has "no justifiable purpose whatsoever," as Amy Jeffress and Eliza Kent wrote about Club Bacchus in the January 27 issue of the Record. If a club participates in an activity within the law, as I believe Club Bacchus does, then for the members of the club it serves a purpose.

Let's face it. If, god-forbid, a Klu Kiux Klan chapter wanted to form on campus, the majority of students would oppose it. Yet no one can deny the right of such an organization to exist. We can protest against it, write editorials against it, etc., but we cannot abolish it. To the members of such a group, the club serves a purpose.

With such an extreme example as the KKK, it should be repeated that clubs, while expressing any opinion they want, must stay within the law. Unfortunately, staying within the law means not getting caught. Groups such as the KKK have been accused of many things outside the law, but as long as they are not convicted of a crime, their activities are technically within the law because proof does not exist to say they aren't.

Women have complained that they have been thrown out of Club Bacchus parties and that Club Bacchus institutionalizes the exclusion of women in society, to paraphrase Jeffress' and Kent's words.

What Jeffress and Kent do not admit is that students can form any club with any purpose they desire within the law, ie. Club Bacchus. Technically women are free to join Club Bacchus. Of course women don't, because of Club Bacchus' activities, as decided by its members.

To illustrate that point further, consider how many Democrats are members of the Garfield Club or how many Christians belong to the Jewish Association. Democrats can join the Garfield Club and Christians likewise the Jewish Association. But, like women and Club Bacchus, they choose not to because they do not agree with the theory behind the club.

The Feminist Alliance also serves a purpose on campus, at minimum for those women and men who choose to join. However, in my opinion, their "women's parties" are a form of discrimination.

There would be a huge uproar if a group on campus threw a party open only to whites, to blacks or to gays. It would be called discrimination. I don't believe anyone would dispute that.

When the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Union or the Black Student Union run parties they are open to everyone. However, if the BGLU wants mostly bisexuals, gays, and lesbians at their party or the BSU wants mostly blacks, then they limit the parties to their membership. This assures both groups that the people at their parties are only the ones they want. If other students crash a club's party, that club reserves the right to throw them out.

It would seem fairer if the Feminist Alliance simply limited their "women's parties" to their membership and/or invited guests. Thus men are not discriminated against and the F.A. brings together the people it wants.

Surely the Feminist Alliance will not object to men at their parties who are also members of the Alliance. If they want only women, they can use an all-campus mailing to send out invitations to all or just some of the women on campus. Then they can check invitations at the door. Nobody can object to an invitation-only party.

I do not want to direct all my criticism against the Feminist Alliance. It is simply a good example in most people's recent memory. I would similarly be against any type of "poster-announced" party limited by sex, race, religion, or ethnic background.

You may believe that I'm simply being technical. Yet all I'm doing is reminding us that each group, club or society on campus has the right, as stated in the U.S. Constitution, to exist, as long as their activities are within the law. However, the discrimination of men at past Feminist Alliance "women's parties" is not within the law.

Revenge

Continued from Page 3

campus party; to blame the Club for it is unfair and unjustified.

Jeffress and Kent also stated in their article that seeing Club Bacch[illegible] example of single-sex or[illegible] "ignores the essential power [illegible] between the sexes that determines the purposes of each group." We don't think anyone would deny that there are times when women need to be with women, and men need to be with men, and that single-sex camaraderie is a beneficial experience. Having been members of Club Bacchus for four years, we can honestly say that they are reading too much into the meaning of the Club in order to create a feminist issue. Club Bacchus members do not spend their time discussing ways to "reinforce the power structure that legitimates male privilege." Jeffress and Kent stated that "Bacchus is not an issue-oriented group" and that is correct, the Club's goal is not to confront issues but to create enjoyable social experiences for all students.

Jeffress and Kent wrote their article as an objection to the comparison of Club Bacchus and the Feminist Alliance in a Record article last Fall. They are correct that the two organizations cannot be compared as issue-oriented groups. They are wrong in accusing Club Bacchus of having the purpose of perpetuating male dominance and female exclusion, because that is not a truthful purpose of the Club. If it were, then the Club would be an issue-oriented, political organization. The purpose of this article is neither to comment on feminism, nor to [illegible]unrealistically that Club Bacchus is a perfect organization--obviously the Club is not flawless. Our principal concern is to express the simple fact that Club Bacchus is a completely social organization. Secondly, we wish to question the tact of our College Council President in publicly stating that a social organization of this college has "no justifiable purpose whatsoever." At a time when our social life is deeply threatened by the raised drinking age, and the problems the College faces in forming corresponding policies, it seems that our College Council President would have an interest not in attacking social organizations but in promoting them — whether they are all-male or all-female — and consequently promoting the waning social life at our college. If we are attending a school where a social organization that provides enjoyment for its members and the entire school as well, has "no justifiable purpose" in the eyes of our College Council President, then we hope we would not be alone in our fear that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is a dying philosophy in our Purple Valley.

Winter Study

Continued from Page 3

the long vacations when the dorms close and it becomes necessary. If the increased vacation time is in the form of another long vacation, the increased costs of transportatoin might well make attending Williams a much less attractive prospect. In fact, it would have made it impossible for me!

Of course, there is always the option of lengthening the shorter vacations, when the dorms remain open. Again, this would adversely affect the students from great distances away. For us, the short vacations are not the high points of the Williams experience. As we watch the people from Massachusetts and New York trickle off to their respective homes, we listen to the deadly silence settle over the campus. Occasionally, the silence is punctured by the click of a pool cue, but it soon settles back into the almost inaudible rumble of turning pages and whistling snores. And thus passes a long weekend. The prospect of lengthier periods of such tranquility might well be enough to scare off some prospective students from exotic places as New Mexico or North Dakota.

"Why, then, we should just lengthen the semesters!" We hear now from a portion of the aggregate voices which make up my winter study critic. This idea becomes a nightmare when considered closely. Think about Christmas. If the fall semester were two weeks longer, reading period and finals would come after Christmas vacation. How is anyone with a normal mind going to be able to enjoy Christmas break? After spending a lot of time and effort committing whole realms of information to short-term memory, is it going to be relaxing to sit for three weeks and know that you are forgetting everything? Hardly. The very serious students will study a lot over Christmas, which I am sure they will enjoy; the less serious will worry a lot over Christmas, and then will come back, cram like crazy, and get poorer grades on the finals than they deserve. In either case, there will be a lot of pressure on everyone which is avoided by the present system. Christmas vacation will not truly be a vacation.

All in all, I think the winter study system works quite well. Several independent reasons are each sufficient to justify it. If it were to be abolished, we would lose a unique opportunity. We would probably also lose the interest of a fair number of prospective students, either because of the diminished leisure time or the increased difficulty of coming here from a great distance. Also, we would face increased academic pressure, either from the sharp transition between the Christmas vacation and the regular semester or from the necessity of having finals after vacation. And last but not necessarily least, I for one would have a lot less fun. Some hedonistic trait of mine refrains me from being thrilled at the thought. For all these reasons, I think that winter study is a good idea, and I urge its detractors to consider carefully their complaints. And if you like winter study as much as I do, ignore the complaints and wait for next January.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

of a small and dedicated staff and, as a once-a-year publication, it is often difficult to anticipate potentially troublesome aspects of the book's content. While it is too late to change the 1986 Gulielmensian, I will bear in mind the Bests' remarks and criticisms while completing this year's book.

One final point that I feel must be made, however, is that a yearbook is an exercise in form as well as content. Contrary to the Bests' contention that the yearbook seemed to lack "sanity or organization," I maintain that, relative to previous books, the 1986 Gulielmensian was visually cohesive in terms of layout form and the use of quotes and/or articles on almost every double-page spread. In addition, the unity created between the cover artwork and the divider pages was a vast improvement over previous books, and the color and black-and-white photography throughout was exciting and vivid.

Jocelyn D. Shadforth '88,
Editor-in-chief, 1987 Gulielmensian

It's eleven p.m.
Do you know where your paper is?

Yes.

Let's be real. Compare the equipment she's using to yours. If you were both trying to tunnel through a mountain, she'd have a bulldozer and you'd have a shrimp fork.

Don't despair. Your problem is already half-solved. For a limited time, you can buy an Apple® Macintosh™ Plus or a Macintosh 512K Enhanced computer with Microsoft Works—for less money.

Which is wonderful.

You get a Macintosh, with its speed, ease of use, and graphics capability. Plus, you get a software program that lets you use all this Macintosh power in all your subjects.

Microsoft Works is not just one program, it's four integrated programs: word processing, data-base management, spreadsheet with charting, and communications.

Meaning you can put charts in your history essays. Spreadsheets in your economics papers. Call Dow Jones News/Retrieval at 2:00 A.M. to get the facts for your journalism story due at 8:00 A.M.

So if you're taking more than one subject this semester, you should check out Macintosh and Microsoft Works.

But don't wait till the eleventh hour. This offer will end soon.

And your paper might stay out all night.

Macintosh and Microsoft Works

JESUP HALL COMPUTER CENTER

Apple and the Apple logo are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Macintosh is a trademark of Apple Computer, Inc. Dow Jones News/Retrieval is a registered trademark of Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Microsoft is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

Newsbriefs

Carol Cable

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) informed Williamstown officials last week that Carol Cable Company has eliminated all discharges of pollutants into the Green River, which flows just east of the company's Water Street Plant, the Williamstown Advocate reported.

The discharges were reported in a Record article in October, when town selectmen criticized a now-expired EPA permit which sanctioned the company's practice of letting polluted residue from its cooling system flow into the river.

According to the Advocate, Carol Cable decided to install a self-contained cooling system which does not empty any of its contents into the Green.

Driscoll Break-in

On Saturday night, between $120 and $130 worth of ice cream and several pies were stolen from the Driscoll dining hall, according to its manager, Rob Parkinson-Shutt. This was the third break-in at Driscoll in the 1986-1987 academic year, he said.

Parkinson-Shutt said that, as in the other two incidents, the the burglar gained entry from an unlocked window and then broke a lock on a door to gain access to the kitchen. He said it is thought that a student who ate in Driscoll on Saturday evening committed the crime by unlocking the window during the meal to later gain entry.

Both the Security department and Williamstown Police are investigating the burglary. According to Parkinson-Shutt, Security will be beefing up the inside locks as well as securing the building's windows each night.

The other incidents occurred in October and January, with similar damage.

— F. Craig Gangi

College prepares info. on AIDS

by Jocelyn Shadforth

The college has established a committee which will form a campus policy on dealing with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and will soon distribute an informational pamphlet on the disease to the campus community.

The committee, comprised of Director of Health Services Dr. James Corkins, Assistant Dean Joan Edwards and Assistant to the President Nancy McIntyre, was formed in October to examine the possible effects of AIDS on the campus and college community.

AIDS education programs have been implemented already at Stanford and Columbia universities and the University of Pennsyivania. Nearly 700 cases of AIDS have been recorded among college-age men and women in the U.S.

According to Corkins, local health facilities including Village Ambulance Servce and the North Adams Regional Hospital will be available for the treatment of AIDS patients. In addition, Health Services will offer AIDS testing in accordance with state restrictions on AIDS blood testing.

Continued on Page 9

CEP discusses merits of sophomore tutorials

by Peter Balaban

The Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) revised its original draft of the proposal for sophomore and senior tutorials in preparation for submitting the proposal to the faculty at tomorrow's faculty meeting.

A revised proposal calling for an increase to four curricular divisions will also be submitted to the faculty for approval.

Following extensive discussion on potential problems with sophomore tutorials, the CEP decided that the proposal will still require sophomore tutorials but will call for their introduction in the 1991-1992 academic year, two years after the senior tutorials would be introduced.

Because the sophomore tutorials would depend heavily on student interest and enrollment, committee members discussed the consequences of a sophomore taking a tutorial that was not his first choice or that centered on a subject that did not interest him.

"We are faced with the very serious problem of having students in tutorials that they don't want to be in," said Tom Perkins '87. This problem theoretically would not occur in the major tutorial because students have already expressed interest in the field.

Dean of the College Stephen Fix said that a tutorial need not seem interesting to a student as long as the student felt that the topic was worthwhile. He said that a student is more likely to enroll in a course because of the professor teaching it than because of the content of the course.

Although it considered making the sophomore tutorial optional, the committee decided to leave it as a requirement, partly because of distribution concerns. Professor Thomas Jorling, chairman of CEP, said that departments with fewer majors would offer more sophomore tutorials, and this might influence the selection of majors away from the more heavily enrolled departments by exposing sophomores to different disciplines.

Jorling said that a loss of electives might occur in departments that must offer a large number of tutorials because the professors in that department would be teaching some tutor-

Continued on Page 11

A.M. Hitchcock
NOSTALGIA AND CRAFTS

Telephone Chair/Table	$50
Wooden Clothes Tree	$30
Large Assortment of old costume jewelry	$3 and up
1983 Potogravures 14" x 20"	$4 each

TUESDAY - SATURDAY 10-5
CLOSED SUNDAY AND MONDAY
115 WATER ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
TEL. 458-2433

Colonial Pizza

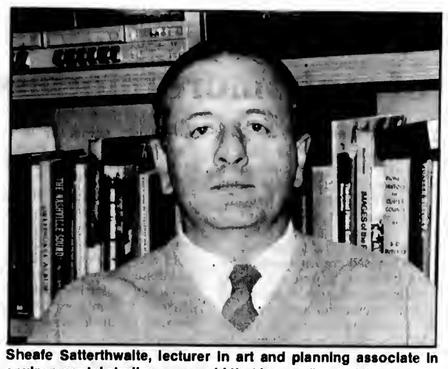
"The best in the area (America)"
Hot oven grinders, salads, spaghettis, and more!
Now starting delivery to Williams College
From 4:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.
Fresh dough daily
Nice atmosphere — Fast service
Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014
hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
PHONE 458 - 5717
9:00 - 5:00
Mon. - Sat.

NOW-WE'LL PAY YOU TO ATTEND MEDICAL SCHOOL

In fact, we'll even pay you more than $600 a month while you attend. That's in addition to paying for your tuition, required books and fees.

It's all part of the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. And here is how it works!



If you're selected for a Physician's Scholarship—from the Army, Navy, or Air Force—you're commissioned as an officer in the Reserves.

While you're in school, you'll serve 45 days a year on active duty, gaining valuable medical experience. After graduation, you will serve three or more years, the length depending on the requirements of the Service selected and years of scholarship assistance received.

As an Armed Forces physician you'll receive officer's pay and benefits, and enjoy the advantages of working regular hours. You'll also see a diversity of patients and have opportunities to use sophisticated medical technology.

But most important, while you're in medical school we'll help pay the bills. For more information, send in this coupon. There is no obligation.

YES! Tell me how the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program can help pay my medical school expenses. I understand there is no obligation.
Mail this coupon to: Armed Forces Scholarships, P.O. Box 2865
Huntington Station, NY 11746-2102 9010
Check up to three: ☐ ARMY ☐ NAVY ☐ AIR FORCE
Please print all information clearly and completely
Name (First, Middle Initial, Last) ☐ Male ☐ Female
Address Apt. #
City State Zip
Phone (Area Code, Number) Soc. Sec. No.
College Birth Date (Mo., Day, Year)
Field of Study Graduation Date (Mo., Year)
The information you voluntarily provide will be used for recruiting purposes only. The more complete it is the better we can respond to your request. (Authority 10 USC 503 and EO 9397)

Sheafe Satterthwaite, lecturer in art and planning associate in environmental studies, once said that he was "sort of like an academic pimp, arranging encounters." (Rifkin)

Profile:

Sheafe Satterthwaite

by Peter W. Dahling and Michael P. O'Malley

"A curious character, this ...." And so begins a new Satterthwaitean tale of another student from whom he has learned something. Sheafe Satterthwaite, lecturer in art and planning associate in environmental studies, is by any measure one of the most intriguing people on the Williams campus. Satterthwaite, however, may be more intrigued by his students than they are by him.

Born and raised in Tenafly, New Jersey, Satterthwaite was sent to boarding school at age 13. He was educated at the Putney School, Choate, and the University of Virginia, where he earned his bachelor's degree in philosophy. After a short stint at North Carolina State, Satterthwaite came to what he refers to as "Mother Williams" in 1968. His courses deal with what he calls the "vernacular expression in built or altered landscape" and include "American Landscapes," "American Transport History" and "Countryside Planning," among others.

Fences and buses

There is some debate as to the relevancy of Satterthwaite's material, which one student described in a course evaluation sheet as "lectures on fences, buses and train stations."

Continued on Page 11

Overland biking: learning can be fun

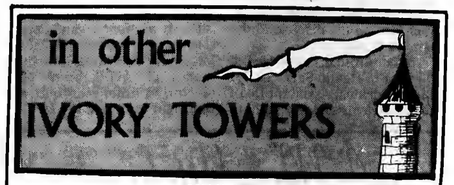
by Lisa West

Biking and hiking trips have become a popular alternative to summer camp for junior and senior high school students. Overland Student Travel, though young and small in comparison to some of the larger, well-known touring organizations, deserves special notice for its emphasis on personal attention and educational travel, as well as for its Williams connections. Directors Tom and Liz Costley are Williams graduates and run the program from their home on Meacham Street in Williamstown.

Overland has its roots in education. Tom Costley taught for several years after graduating from Williams and decided to offer a biking trip for his students in Richmond, Virginia, three summers ago. The initial success of that trip led to the creation of a full-time operation. Overland has expanded to approximately seventy students on several New England tours, an England-France trip, and a Switzerland-France trip.

Educational focus

Learning still remains an essential component, with groups gathering historical and geographical information about the places on their tour. Appreciation for the countryside and the common people is stressed as much as famous sites such as Stratford-on-Avon and the French chateaux, said Mrs. Costley.



The Costleys are planning to make Overland a non-profit organization. Presently, most students come from personal contacts or from local open houses sponsored by parents of students who have participated on past trips. Going non-profit would give the program a source of students outside the existing network, explained Mrs. Costley. For example, scholarship funds from such organizations as ABC would become a possibility, enabling less wealthy students to attend.

While education is one focus of the program, the other is personal attention and growth. "Many of the participants had never done their own laundry or cooked their own meals before," said Mrs. Costley. The experience of participating in a small relaxed group, the excitement of a new discovery, the freedom to spend more time in a favorite place, unpressured by a rigid time schedule, all add to a sense of accomplishment and heightened self-esteem.

Proper placement in the group is another goal. Students are encouraged not to apply with friends from home, and the organization is small but diverse enough to ensure that individuals are placed with others that they can get along with, but who have different backgrounds or experiences.

Mrs. Costley stressed the fact that the two leaders for each trip play an important role in the attainment of each goal. They are asked to send a letter to the parents of each student after the trip as a final personal touch to the experience. "The parents really like to hear how their child has grown on the trip," said Mrs. Costley. Leaders are expected to supervise the group but must also be flexible enough to deal with the myriad of tiny incidents that can turn into disasters or hilarious memories, according to Mrs. Costley.

So far, most of the leaders have come from Williams, since they are almost always personally screened by one of the Costleys. For example, Martin Iliner '87 led two trips last summer. Interest in teenagers and experience in dealing with group ventures are considered more important prerequisites for the leaders than actual biking or camping experience, said Mrs. Costley.

Middlebury

Middlebury College has devised a new method for the on-campus distribution of condoms. The policy change, a result of the heightened campus-wide concern about sexually transmitted diseases, makes it easier for the college community to obtain birth control. Before 1986 gave birth to Baby New Year ('86, you see, did not have easy access to birth control), students who wished to procure condoms were required to have an "educational interview" with a doctor or nurse at the health center. Now condoms have now been placed in a packet with informational folders that can be picked up from a rack at the health center and at other on-campus locations. An earlier proposal to place condom-dispensing machines around campus was rejected. "Putting a condom machine beside a Coke machine might possibly make some people uncomfortable," said Dean of the College John Emerson.

Dartmouth

The ranks of Dartmouth students who once fervently sang their alma mater, "Men of Dartmouth," have been shrinking lately. Dartmouth has obviously seen a lot of changes since its days as an all-male institution, but its alma mater has not changed. The Dartmouth reported that certain groups have recently attacked the song's male-oriented lyrics for failing to reflect today's Dartmouth, which enrolls almost as many women as men. The controversy over this matter has prompted the Alumni Council to consider changes in the traditional lyrics. The most likely solution is the replacement of offending words in the traditional lyrics. Students will no longer be referred to as "men," but as sexless beings. They will be the "ye" or "we" of Dartmouth.

Princeton

A fever of alma mater neutering seems to be sweeping the Ivy League. Princeton's student government voted 24 to three in favor of removing references to "men" and "sons" from the traditional song "Old Nassau." The move is an attempt to combat residual discrimination against women that still lurks around the university. The proposed change is not surrounded by any hotbeds of controversy, as at Dartmouth, yet the question remains whether the proposal will pass when the student body votes on it this month.

More Princeton

Princeton President William G. Bowen will follow in the footsteps of former Williams President John E. Sawyer in a new career move. Bowen announced in January that he will leave Princeton to become president of the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, reported the New York Times. Bowen, an economist, has led Princeton for 15 years and influenced the decision to admit women in 1969. As head of the Mellon Foundation, Bowen will supervise the use of its $1.4 billion endowment, much of which goes in grants to colleges and universities. Sawyer is retiring after 12 years of service to the foundation.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Record reporters Chuck Samuelson and Beth Broadrup from material printed in other campus newspapers unless otherwise noted.

Holy satire: Explaining Sister Mary

by Chuck Goforth

During Winter Study, Cap and Bells presented its first student production of 1987 on the DownStage theatre. With Michael Baratta '89 directing, a cast of nine freshmen and sophomores took a pretty good stab at Christopher Durang's biting and satirical, "Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All for You."

Durang's target is, specifically, the Catholic school, but the caustic jokes and revelations about the self-contradictory Roman Catholic doctrine spare no part of strict Catholicism in the end.

Sister Mary is played by Jennifer Stayton '89, for whom comedy seems to come easily. Mary is a nun at a co-ed Catholic school, and after a feebie but hilarious attempt to answer our questions about Catholic doctrine, she is visited by a group of former students (Mark Barr '89, Melissa Levine '90, Megan Ouchterloney '90 and David Reiss '89).

Camel suit

These four characters, equipped in part with a fantastic camel suit for two (for which Kara Klopfenstein '87 and Carolyn Darrow '89 deserve credit), express their wish to do something nice for Mary and manage to perform for her a short skit about the birth of Jesus Christ. Thanks to Baratta and the comic sense of the four actors, this part of the night was a stunningly accurate and very funny re-creation of all the grade school Christmas assemblies that each of us has sat through and even, c'mon admit it, taken part in.

Cap and Bells presented "Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All for You," a play written by Christopher Durang and directed by Michael Baratta '89, in the DownStage theatre during the last week of Winter Study. (Somers)

Up to this point, the production was good tight comedy and a telling satire. But, and this was not a very good thing, the play went on. After the question answering and the Bethlehem skit, Durang's play, not satisfied with being "just" a comedy, takes a big turn toward the serious and a big turn for the worse.

After the skit, the four visitors shed their first costumes and reveal themselves as depressed, maladjusted adults who have come back to blame everything on Mary's "answers," to avenge themselves and speak their peace. At the finish, after some supposedly heart-wrenching monologues, guns start appearing, and even before little question marks appear over your head, people are dying. Baratta and his cast made a fair attempt at this almost impossible switching of gears, but they couldn't quite do it, and things fell apart.

Head-spinning

It might not be entirely fair to put the whole burden on the playwright. This production should probably have been more ready to acknowledge that Durang's play leans toward the bizarre. If the actors had been

Continued on Page 10

Man on the Quad

Interviews by Jonna Hooker; photographs by Jennifer Wege

The Record recently asked students, "What do you think of the proposal to affiliate freshmen entries with upperclass houses?"

"I think it would be a good idea because it would facilitate interactions between members of different classes. Also, it would be a good excuse to party with freshmen." — Jeff Etemad '89

"I don't think it's a great idea, because it's better for freshmen to form alliances of their own and not have other people choose their friends." — Scott Nabel '90

"I don't think it's a good idea, because different people in the entries will want to be affiliated with different houses. It takes away their freedom of choice." — Walter Hoffman '89

"I don't think they should. Freshmen should get to know their fellow freshmen first, before being overwhelmed with the upperclassmen intelect." — Susan Gray '90

"I think it's a good idea, but I don't think it will be that successful. I can't see freshmen and upperclassmen really going for it. —John Booth '87

"I don't think it's really necessary. I think JA's should introduce freshmen to members of their own houses and the freshmen can meet upperclassmen that way." — Lisa Mandl '88

M. Hockey

Continued from Page 14

Coach Bill McCormick, who argued that the gap between "Division II and III is not that great," said that he hoped his team did not enter Little Three competition with a superiority complex.

McCormick said that it was that same attitude which partially led to the upset over Army. "Its easy to come into a game like Army did with us and underrate us," he said. "That helped us out. We still got a superb effort, especially from goalie Rick Dietz," a senior who stopped 41 of 42 shots on goal.

Without a doubt, this year's team is a better version of last year's 3-17-3 pucksters. Nonetheless, if the Ephs hope to develop a winning tradition they have to start converting their talent into victories.

This week the squad concludes two home and home series as it travels to the Empire State tonight to take on the Hamilton Continentals for the second time this year and hosts Middlebury Friday.

Team

sor would be teaching if he were not team-teaching a course. The program allows for three team-taught courses a year.

FRS program

Professor Kurt Tauber, chairman of the Gaudino Committee, said the committee stipulated that the courses in the experiment be team-taught to introduce the Freshmen in the FRS to an interdisciplinary approach to problems. Also, Tauber said, "We wanted them to see how two thoughtful people interact in an attempt to wrestle with an idea."

Tauber cautioned that the two potential dangers in team-teaching are either that the professors essentially teach two separate courses within the one course or that the professors interact too much and leave students out of the discussion.

Tauber also said he sees an increase in the number of team-taught courses. "You are being encouraged to move outside of your own discipline," he said.

Fall '87 Semester in New York City
Trinity/La Mama
Performing Arts Program
THEATER • DANCE
PERFORMANCE ART
internships • seminar on contemporary theater and dance • participatory performance workshop • performances and meetings with artists • specialty classes with leading teachers
Program Director:
Leonardo Shapiro
For more information:
Theater/Dance Department
Trinity College
Hartford, CT 06106
(203) 527-3151 x250.
Application Deadline March 15

VALENTINES SPECIAL
Bud, Lite, Coors, 12 oz. cans $10.99/case + dep.
Cash & Carry: ½ keg Meister Brau $28.00
½ keg Busch $30.00
All Winter Specials Continued
For that special he/she/it single roses $1.99 — while they last
PARTY SUPPLIES • VALENTINES • MEGABUCKS
West Package & Variety Store
Route 2, between Williamstown and North Adams
663-6081 Proper I.D. Required

THE NEW DANCE EXPERIENCE
The Silo
NOW THURSDAY TOO
at the 1896 HOUSE
1 mile south of Williamstown, Rtes. 7 & 2
10 minutes north of Brodie Mountain
Every Friday & Saturday, 9 to ...
For information and reservations
458-8123

EST. 1901
Williams Co-op
IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS
Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1946 Betsy Burbank
76 Spring Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
Good Through FEB. 28th
With This Coupon
20% OFF ANY PURCHASE
Come visit us soon.
Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 8 p.m.
Now open 'til 8:00 p.m. 458-5007
Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

ERASMUS CAFÉ
at the College Book Store
Winter Special
After 6:00 p.m. 40% discount on all salad, crepe, and dinner entrees. Offer extended to all students and faculty of Williams.
Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. - 8:00 p.m. Sundays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Telephone (413)458-5007

College, Feminist Alliance prepare rape info. session

by Craig Gangi

One month after the alleged rape of a Williams student, administrators and campus organizations are taking steps to improve campus security and to provide information on rape.

A subcommittee of the Committee on Undergraduate Life (CUL) will meet this week to examine campus security. The Dean's office and the Feminist Alliance are preparing for rape information sessions.

The chairman of CUL, professor William Wagner, said the subcommittee, which was formed at the request of Dean Stephen Fix, will examine campus lighting, dorm security and emergency phones. Wagner said the group will discuss security measures such as locking dormitory entrances and placing emergency telephones and more lighting throughout the campus.

Wagner said Fix has set a target date of just before Spring vacation for the committee's final recommendations. The group consists of students, faculty, a representative from the Security department, and a Housing official, probably housing director Robert Fowler, Wagner said.

Open meetings

At the group's first meeting, Wagner said, he will propose having open meetings with the student body, to gain an idea of their view of the present security situation.

"If it appears there is something we can do to protect women from rape, we will do it. I'll have a better idea of the problem when we meet this week," Wagner said.

He expressed concern over not knowing what approach to take. The solution to the security problem, according to Wagner, depends on whether the rape was committed by a student or by an outsider. Wagner said that if it was a student, not even locks on the outside of buildings would have prevented the crime, as students would have access to all the college buildings.

"I think it is a serious problem, because no one knows what the facts are," Wagner said, noting that the alleged victim does not want to press charges.

"Not only will the committee be responding to security against rape, but security on campus in general," Wagner said.

Security changes

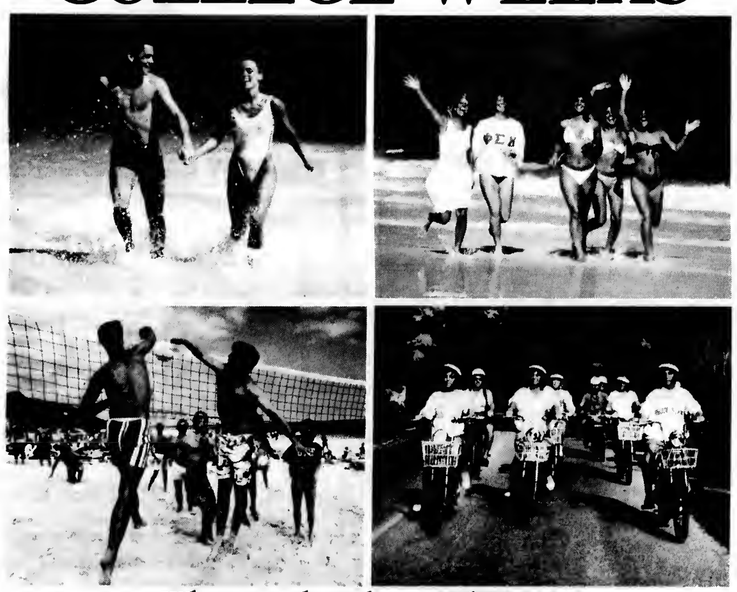
James Kolesar, college director of public information, said that there has been no appreciable changes in campus security. He said one extra security officer and several students were placed on duty for three to four days after the incident. Usually two officers and several students comprise a shift.

Kolesar said that Security will install a phone in the Biology building basement, and they have already done so on the third floor of the Bronfman Science Center library. Lights near the entries to Bronfman will also be kept on all night from now on, according to Kolesar.

Fix said that preparations are being made to inform students about rape. Eliza Kent '89, president of the Feminist Alliance, planned to meet yesterday with Assistant Dean Sheila Spear to prepare for a presentation. The plans call for a speaker from the Pittsfield Rape Crisis Center to discuss defensive measures that can be taken against rapists and, possibly, for a professor to speak on "date rape," which Kent described as the most prevalent form of rape on college campuses.

The week after the rape, the Feminist Alliance distributed, along with literature on rape and its prevention, to Williams students. It also sponsored a candlelight vigil for the victims of rape on January 28. Kent said, "It was an opportunity for people to come together for a moment of reflection."

Rape



Continued from Page 1

continue to urge students to lock their doors, call security if they receive unusual phone calls and use the existing escort service instead of walking home alone at night. Fix, in his letter, reinforced Kolesar's statements.

Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zolto Jr. said that since the victim was the sole witness of the crime, her cooperation with the police and the D.A.'s office was essential to the progress of the investigation.

March 1 to April 4, 1987

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's an unrelenting test of your endurance.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise and Private Island Extravaganza." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more.

It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, go wild . . . in style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

AQUARIUS TRAVEL CONSULTANTS, LTD.
816 King Street
Rye Brook, New York 10573
(914) 939-2297 or: (800) 248-4141

GRADUATE STUDIES IN BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

Basic Medical Science Department

Active Research Programs

Seeking Qualified Applicants

Tuition and Stipend

Support Available

For Further Information Contact:

Graduate Committee
Department of Physiology
Albany Medical College
Albany, N.Y. 12208
(518-445-5851)

THE BUCKBOARD GIFT SHOP
310 State St. Rose Gaspardi
Route 8 Sally Gaspardi
North Adams, MA 01247

FOR SALE
Spinet-Console Piano
Bargain
Wanted: Responsible part to take over Low Monthly Payments on Spinet-Console Piano. Can be seen locally.
Call Mr. White at 1-800-327-3345 ext. 101

Fix sets agenda for Oct. reaccreditation

by Peter Balaban

The college will undergo a self-study in preparation for reaccreditation by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC) later this year. The reaccreditation process is carried out every ten years by a college's accrediting agency.

Next October 4-7, a team of educators appointed by the NEASC will visit the college. The visiting committee will issue a report describing the strengths and weaknesses of the college and will make a recommendation on accreditation in December.

In a presentation to the faculty last October, Dean of the College Stephen Fix listed the 12 areas that all colleges seeking reaccreditation must assess and describe in their report to the visiting committee.

The 12 areas are: a definition of institutional objectives; mechanisms by which current programs are evaluated and plans for future programs; the organization and governance of the college at every level; the curriculum; special activities such as academic conferences, summer programs, and services to the community; faculty; student services; library and learning resources; physical plant facilities; financial resources; ethical practices such as practices to avoid discrimination or to take affirmative action; and publications and advertising practices.

Fix said that for colleges like Williams, "which can be reasonably expected to be reaccredited," the NEASC urges that the self-study report comment only briefly on the twelve required areas and should address "several issues that are of special urgency or concern to the college at the time of accreditation."

Four focus areas

Fix, who will compile the report, said last week that roughly 150 of its 200 pages will be devoted to four focus areas. The focus areas are the curriculum, academic advising, admissions and financial aid, and academic regulations and procedures. Committees made up of faculty; students, and staff members are currently studying each focus area and will submit reports by the end of the school year. An additional committee is studying the institutional mission of the college, and will contribute to the final report.

Fix said that the NEASC will "try to appoint people who are experts in the focus fields" to make up the visiting committee. Aaron Lemonick, Dean of the Faculty at Princeton University, will chair the committee. The remaining members will be chosen in the spring.

The examination of the curriculum did not require the formation of a new committee, since the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP) is in the middle of a two-year curricular review, initiated by College President Francis Oakley. Fix said last week that the final report of the CEP, to be completed in the spring, will be condensed and will serve as one of the focus fields in the report.

Academic advising

The committee examining academic advising, chaired by Dean of Freshmen Robert Kavanaugh, will review all aspects of advising and make practical suggestions for the improving the availability and quality of academic advising at the college. According to Fix, academic advising was chosen as a focus area, because among many students think that it should be improved.

Economics Professor Michael McPherson will chair the committee on admissions and financial aid. Also a focus area in the 1977 self-study, this committee will take stock of "important changes and developments" in college policies over the past decade. Fix pointed out that these policies "are under constant review by the college.

Mathematics Professor Victor Hill will chair the committee examining academic regulations and procedures.

Extreme regulations

In his speech to the faculty, Fix said that college academic regulations are at two extremes. "On the one hand, some of our regulations are more stringent than almost any place: we have no pass/fail options; we do not allow upperclassmen to withdraw from courses without failing after the seventh day of class; we have a relatively short drop/add period. On the other hand, we are very liberal in our policies concerning the use of advanced placement toward the degree, or the courses we'll accept from other institutions to make up deficiencies incurred at Williams." Fix said it will be the role of the committee to examine these apparent contradictions.

The committee on the mission of the college will be chaired by Oakley, and, according to Fix, it will explore questions such as, "In the service of what values, what vision of society, what hope for an individual life, is our institutional excellence and our students' leadership being put?"

AIDS

Continued from Page 5

Last year, interest on campus about the disease was low and, although "there doesn't seem to have been a substantial rise in interest," Corkins emphasized the educational concerns of the committee. Corkins said that a goal of the committee was to "inform and let people know what to do to keep from getting AIDS," and "reduce or eliminate any unreasonable fear." He noted that students have not indicated much interest in the disease.

Edwards said that the chances of a student developing AIDS symptoms while still at college are low, because men and women in the 18-to-22 age group would probably not be sexually active before attending Williams. It is more likely that a member of the faculty or a college employee would develop the disease while here, she said, so the committee is also examining policy for dealing with such an occurrence.

The policy statement will be circulated among the college administration prior to final publication. The pamphlet, which will offer clinical health information, will be published within a week to ten days.

The pamphlet will focus on the low transmissibility of AIDS and the fact that the disease has now become a concern for the general population, not just so-called "high-risk" groups. Health Services will also be available to answer any questions that members of the college community may have about AIDS.

WANTED NOW! Spring Break representatives for Collegiate Tour & Travel. Earn free trips and cash too! Call 1-800-328-8322, ext. 579.

SUMMER IN EUROPE $239
Lowest scheduled fares to all of Europe from Boston
Call 1-800-325-2222

Graduating Students

If you haven't found your career yet, you're probably asking these questions. What can I do with my knowledge and training? Where can I best invest my talents and abilities? Where can I continue to grow in education and experience?

We think we can provide pertinent answers to these questions. That's why we're inviting you to explore joining a small and extraordinarily talented group of American men and women.

They're the professionals of the Central Intelligence Agency . . . operations officers dedicated to obtaining information of vital importance to our country.

Your rewards will be unique . . . superb education and training . . . overseas assignments that call on the deepest resources of your intelligence, knowledge, and responsibility . . . the opportunity to make truly meaningful contributions, for your benefit and the nation's. U.S. citizenship required (self and spouse).

We place high value on your academic training and experience. If you want the facts on a unique career, contact your College Placement Office, or send your resume to:

PERSONNEL REPRESENTATIVE
P.O. Box 1920 – WR
General Mail Facility
Boston, MA 02205

Central Intelligence Agency

The CIA is an Equal Opportunity Employer

Review

Continued from Page 6

more experienced and could have preserved strong characters throughout all the head-spinning switches, and if the direction had been more aware of the play's movement as a whole, this unreal and jolting finish might not have been so disparate, but instead, an effective and integral part of the play, and, perhaps, a powerful ending.

The role of Thomas, broken into four different versions in this production, helped the tenuous continuity to an extent; the four actors who played him (Fausto Espinosa '89, Wayne Kent Fritsche '89, Paul McGreal '89 and William Tulloch '89) all did a good job with the simple-minded student.

The real thrust of the play, however, is obviously supposed to reveal itself in the later section of the work. One never got a sense that a peak was arriving in this play, and it never did.

This performance, though, does not deserve so condemning a final paragraph. Some excellent choices were made, and everyone who saw them was laughing hard for a good portion of the evening; my Catholic friend two rows back was laughing the hardest. Even though parts of this play didn't congeal, some of them were very solid theatre.

NEED SOMETHING FOR THAT SPECIAL VALENTINE?

Come by and see the best selection of cards and gifts on Spring Street.
Inexpensive and thoughtful valentines.

McClelland's

STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS

458-4920

36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267

Swimmers seek Little Three following defeats to Colgate

by Kurt Oeler

Colgate's superior freestyle corps left Williams men's and women's swim teams floundering helplessly in the Red Raiders' wake Saturday. The men fell 138-109 while the women succumbed 141-104.

Jim Jordan '87 paced the men's strong showing in the stroke events with wins in the 100 and 200 butterfly events. Rob Benson '90 added a second in the 200 and Chris Giglio '89 took third in the 100.

Both underclassmen fared well in other events. Benson was second in the 1650, and the determined Giglio's win in the 400 IM gave Williams the lead for the last time at 62-57. The sophomore's time of 4:17.99 missed the national qualifying time by 0:00.03.

Chris Cleurzo '90 and Evan Davis '89 bolstered the Ephs' control of the stroke events. Cleurzo won the 200 back and was second in the 100. Davis won the 100 breast and added a runnerup finish in the 200.

Williams, however, fell to their foe's freestyle firepower, losing 66-34 in the crawl events. The Ephs also lost the diving events 28-0. Jordan noted, "If Brian (Cameron) were healthy, we could have beaten both UMass and Colgate."

Berne Broudy '90 and Joan Horgan '87 controlled the Eph efforts in the fly and back events. Broudy copped the 100 and 200 fly events, while Horgan claimed wins in the 100 and 200 backstroke races. The senior also teamed with Jen Raymond '87, Connie Davis '90 and Michelle Freemer '90 to win the 800 free relay.

Raymond's win in the 400 IM capped the women's early run with a time of 4:57.55. Freemer's effort in the 1650 followed suit in a time of 18:30.66. Both times were just off times needed for a trip to nationals.

Anne MacEachern '90 added a win in the 100 breast and finished second to Horgan in the 200 back. Davis managed the women's lone freestyle win of the meet in the 100.

One week earlier, both teams recorded victories over the Springfield Chiefs in Muir Pool's final dual meet competition. Coach Carl Samuelson noted it was gratifying to end the pool's sixty-year history with wins over his alma mater. The mens' record now stands at 4-3 while the women are 5-4. Both squads travel to Wesleyan Saturday, where the men will try to win an unprecedented fifteenth consective Little Three title.

M. Hoops

Continued from Page 14

early 11-point lead. After shooting 15-28 in the first 20 minutes, the Ephs slumped to 8-34 in the second half. When Major hit a three-pointer with six minutes left the Ephs held a 56-49 lead, Sheehy called a timeout to organize his squad for the close.

The plan backfired when the Ephs were outscored 15-2 to lose 64-58. Misfired three-pointers and two traveling violations negated any comeback efforts, and the Ephs were handed their most disappointing loss of the year.

Earlier in the week, Williams crushed Division II Springfield 90-70. Johnson crossed the 1000 point mark in the first half, the eighth Eph to reach this level. The senior hit 14 of 18 shots from the field en route to a 37-point, 13-rebound night.

During winter break, Wesleyan stopped Williams 68-64 to end the Ephs Little Three hopes. Missed free throws were a factor in the loss.

The squad travels to Trinity tomorrow and to Tufts Saturday.

Hiring Today! Top Pay!
Work at Home.
No Experience Needed.
Write Cottage Industries
1407½ Jenkins, Norman, OK
73069.

Marketing Media Services

Advertising and Public Relations

Software Publishing and Marketing

Research on Media Markets and Audiences

New Product Development in Video, Film, or Sound

Computer Management, Office Automation, and Advanced Technologies

Consider a Career in Communications..

If you are interested in these types of careers, write for the catalogue to the Annenberg School of Communications, University of Southern California. Master's degree in Communications Management; Ph.D. in Communication Theory and Research.

Please send me information regarding graduate programs at the Annenberg School of Communications, USC.

Name

Address

City/State/Zip Telephone

Currently attending

My major is

Mail to:
Annenberg School of Communications
University of Southern California
3502 S. Hoover St.
Los Angeles, CA 90089-0281

Designing Media Campaigns for Politics, Health, and Other Areas

Journalism, Cinema, or Broadcast Management

Communications Law and Policy

Telecommunications Consulting

Organizational Communication

Cable and Satellite

Profile

Continued from Page 6

"When people ask me what Art 201 is about, I always have trouble answering," wrote another student.

In defense of Satterthwaite's subject matter, one of his students wrote that, "What we see in everyday experiences should be very relevant ... it makes more sense to understand this than many mind-bending subjects that are awfully difficult to apply to real life, and may be more irrelevant."

Satterthwaite would agree with such comments, as he has expressed a belief that "the articulation of observation of that which is all around us constantly" is a skill that becomes increasingly more important after a student enters the job market.

Academic pimp

